THE General Convention of the Episcopal Church in the United States has been recently in session in Philadelphia engaged in renewing relations with the Church in the late rebel States. By way of accomplishing that result it decisively rejected a resolution offered by HORACE BINNEY, of Philadelphia, asking the House of Bishops, in appointing a day of Thanksgiving for the return of peace, to request that "especial thanks be offered to Almighty God for the re-establishment of the national authority over our whole country, and for the removal of that great occasion of national dissension and disagreement to which our late troubles were due."

This does not seem a very hard task for loyal Bishops and congregations all over the land. But the resolution was tabled by an immense majority. Let us hope the faithful clergy of the Church will do in their sermons what they are forbidden to do in their prayers.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

CLOSE OF THE THIRTY-FIRST VOLUME.

THE Thirty-first Volume of HARPER'S MAGAZINE closes with the OCTOBER NUMBER. Among the promotional features of this Volume are the Novels by two well-known writers of fiction of the time—CHARLES DICKENS and WILKIE COLLINS; Personal Sketches of the prominent Generals in the Union Army; and descriptions, by MR. J. ROSS BROWNE, of the Mineral Region of the Pacific. The "Monthly Record of Current Events" sustains the character it has won for care and fulness.

Each Number of HARPER'S MAGAZINE contains from fifty to one hundred per cent. more matter than any other American Magazine issued at the same price; and nearly double the quantity contained in the largest British Magazines, such as the "Cornhill," "Temple Bar," and "London Society;" and seventy-five per cent. more than the half-crown British Magazines, such as "Blackwood," "Fraser's," and the "Dublin University."

MR. J. ROSS BROWNE will continue the illustrated narrative of his Journeys and Adventures in Nevada, Idaho, the Lake City, and other parts of the Far West.

Ample arrangements have been made for the ensuing Volume with old and new Contributors for the entertainment of the Magazine. For Terms, etc., see page 687.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

On the 11th of October, President Johnson, by official order, directed the release on their paroles of Alexander H. Stephens, Georgia; George W. Jones, Georgia; John Gill Shorter, Alabama; Charles Clark, of Mississippi—five persons who held prominent positions in the rebel Confederacy, and who have for some time past been confined at different fortresses. They are ordered to remain in their respective States and await any charges that may be brought against them.

President Governor Sharkey, of Mississippi, on the 16th ult. issued a proclamation in regard to the reception of the insurgent soldiers of that State. He declares that any that in all evil or criminal cases in which the rights of the negro are involved, the testimony shall be taken as in the courts of the State, subject to the same rules as govern the taking of the testimony of white persons.

General Grant, October 9, issued an order reducing and disorganizing the entire force of the Army. This order assigns the various regiments of Regular Artillery in Louisiana, Texas, and Missouri to garrison duty in the two of the Southern States. All the volunteer cavalry east of the Mississippi is mustered out.

October 12, the Committee from South Carolina to memorialize the President in behalf of JEFFERSON DAVIS had their interview with Mr. Johnson at the White House. The President said to them, in reply to their request, that the case could not be pardoned at once. The Government did not propose to punish treason, but to vindicate law. He desired to have it made a dogma testimony in her courts. No change, however, would be made in the relations of the late rebel States to the Union.

The election returns from Virginia are not very satisfactory to the Union men. The following members have been elected for members of Congress: Cochs, L. H. Chandler, H. H. Bingham, Robert Ridgway, Wm. G. Brown, Jr., H. H. Stuart, Robert Conrad, and D. H. Hoge. Two of these—Messrs. Conrad—refuse to take the oath. The former during the canvass said that he should despise himself if he did not. Mr. Hoge declines to run on account of the ordinance of secession.

General Lee and his sons say he was installed President of Washington College subscribed to the oath of amnesty, which he solemnly took himself to defend the Union of States under the Constitution.

THE ELECTIONS.

The latest election returns give the Union majorities in their usual but first anticipated. In Ohio the Union majority is 49,346; in Connecticut, 20,000; Rhode Island, 6,000; majority in Iowa amounts to 16,000; the Legislature of that State, in St. Joseph, will be Union by a majority of one. The charter election in Newark, New Jersey, gives a result very similar to that of the State. The Union majority in that city was over 1700.

NEWS ITEMS.

President Johnson is still busy pardoning Southerners who are worth more than $20,000—about 3000 have taken out their pardons. Of this about 50,000 applications have been made. The pen with which the President signed the first pardon is in the possession of Secretary Seward. Blanks have now been made out, to which are affixed the autograph signature of the President and Secretary.

General Banks has been nominated for Congress by the Republican Convention of the Sixth District of Massachusetts.

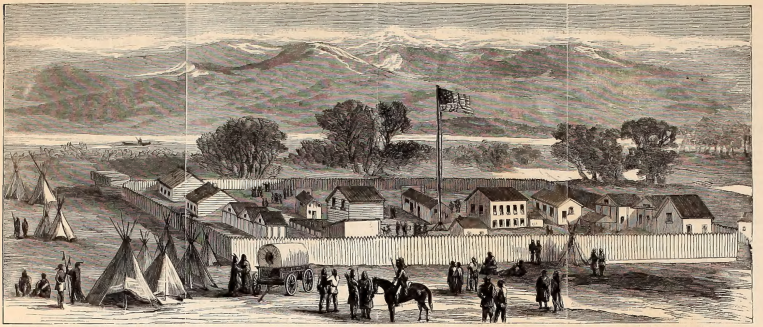
A handsome statue of the late General Berry has been erected there by the citizens of Hamilton, Essex Co., Massachusetts' Corner, Maine. It is in marble, and more than life-size. The figure is that of a soldier in full uniform. It represents the General standing in an attitude of repose, with the right hand resting on a field-glass, the left upon a cannon or post, over which his cloak is thrown.

A great fire occurred in Belfast, Maine, October 12, destroying nearly the entire business portion of the city, between Washington and Cross streets. The fire originated at nearly half a million of dollars. The fire is said to have been caused by incendiarism.

Secretary McCulloch made a speech at Fort Wayne, October 11, advocating a contraction of the currency and a speedy return to specie payments. He made some remarks regarding the President's Reconstruction policy, tending to show that Mr. Johnson is not a patron, and that he will not allow such combinations as the one he had he is determined to steer clear of the ruinous heresy of State sovereignty and State rights.

An express train from Harrisburg for Lancaster, Pennsylvania, October 5th, broke from the train. Meanwhile nine persons were killed and two slightly injured. The accident was by a broken axle.

The boiler of the steamer Yo Semite, on the Sacramento River, California, exploded on the night of the 13th, killing 54 persons, wounding 32 others, and considerably shattering the vessel.



Since the commencement of the current fiscal year there have been 1,000,000 internal revenue stamps issued to one one hundred millions of dollars.

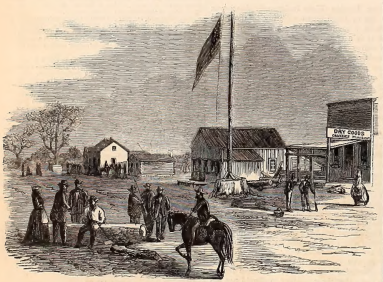
On the 12th there was a grand Democratic parade in Philadelphia. The demonstration was an imposing one. A large number of bands were present from Boston, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Pittsburg, and other cities. There were in procession 20 four horse carriages, 12 horse ones, 14 fire engines, 12 hook and ladder carriages, and 21 ambulances. It is estimated that the line was one mile in length.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE publication in this country of the list of Confederate bondholders, as found in the rebel archives, creates great indignation here. The London Times refuses to let it had any interest in the bonds, as do also the editors of the Morning Post, Mr. Laird, and others.

The total number of Indian arrears announced, at last account, is about 300.

DACOTAH TERRITORY—FORT THOMPSON, ON THE UPPER MISSOURI RIVER, BUILT FOR THE SIOUX AND WINNEBAGO AGENCY.—[SKETCHED BY JOHN NAHN.]



DACOTAH TERRITORY.

WE give on this page some interesting illustrations connected with the Territory of Dacotah. This Territory was organized by an Act of Congress approved March 2, 1861. Its boundaries encontinent, traversed the entire central domain of this Territory, from its icy rills in the Rocky Mountains to the broad, luxuriant meadows and sunny plains of Southern Dacotah, where the great river delivers itself upon the northwest border of Iowa.

The first permanent white settlements in Dacotah tered by the Big Sioux, Vermilion, and James rivers, which are tributaries of the Missouri.

As a consideration for these lands the Government pays to the Yanktons $1,666,000, in annual installments for fifty years. The tribe abandoned the ceded territory in July, 1859, and removed to is beautifully situated on a plat of prairie gradually descending to the river, and surrounded by a bench of high table-land about a mile in the back-ground.

Vermilion is the site of the United States Land Office for Dacotah Territory. It is situated on the Missouri River, thirty miles southeast of Yankton,

MAIN STREET, VERMILION, DACOTAH TERRITORY.—[SKETCHED BY M. K. ARMSTRONG.]

SIOUX FALLS, DACOTAH TERRITORY.—[SKETCHED BY M. K. ARMSTRONG.]

braced all that portion of the United States territory extending from Minnesota on the east to the Rocky Mountains, and from the British Possessions on the north to Iowa and the 43d parallel of latitude. Dacotah, thus determined, was the largest organized Territory in the United States. The Missouri River, one of the largest navigable streams on the were made in 1858-9, at Sioux Falls, Vermilion, and Yankton, soon after the treaty with the Yankton tribe of Dacotah, or Sioux Indians, by the stipulations of which those Indians released to the United States fourteen million acres of the finest lands owned by the Sioux nation, lying in the southeastern extremity of the Territory, and wa- their reserve of 400,000 acres on the Missouri, nearly opposite Fort Randall, in latitude 43°. Yankton, the capital of the Territory, is located on the site of the old Indian village of the head chief of the tribe, which is on the east side of the Missouri River, seven miles above the mouth of the James. The town contains about 100 houses and 500 people, and and about midway between this place and Sioux City, in Iowa, near the mouth of the Big Sioux River. The town contains some 30 houses and 200 inhabitants. The Land Office is in charge of Captain M. MIXER, Register; and J. W. BOYLE, Receiver. Over 100,000 acres of the public domain have been located by settlers at this office since the passage of the Homestead Act, in 1862. This town, as well as all others in the Territory, has been more or less protected by United States soldiers since the Indian outbreak, three years ago.

BROADWAY IN YANKTON, THE CAPITAL OF DACOTAH TERRITORY.—[SKETCHED BY M. K. ARMSTRONG.]

JOHN STUART MILL, M.P.

It is doubtless well known to our readers that General ALFRED SULLY has led three strong military expeditions against the hostile tribes of this Territory since 1863, and that, although in every engagement he has driven the red warriors from the field, yet little has been done toward bringing them to subjection or terms of peace. Even within sight of our towns and military forts farmers have been massacred in their fields, teamsters and stage-drivers robbed and killed upon the highways of the Territory, while 3000 cavalry were in pursuit of the Indians on the plains. There are 34,000 Indians in Dacotah. The Winnebago and Santee tribes of Minnesota have been removed to this Territory since the Indian outbreak, and are located on reserves opposite old Fort Lookout, in latitude 44° North. The Government pays annually to the tribes on the Upper Missouri, in annuities and presents, the sum of $300,814, or over a quarter million of dollars.

Steamboats ascend to Fort Benton, within 180 miles of the Montana mines. Two Government wagon-roads have been opened across the plain, connecting Dacotah with Montana and Idaho, north of the 43d parallel. Thirty-seven large steamers have passed up the Missouri into these Territories since the first of April.

JOHN STUART MILL.

MANY of our readers will look with interest upon the faithful portrait of our English friend, JOHN STUART MILL, engraved on this page. MR. MILL has recently been elected a member of Parliament from Westminster—a fact which is creditable to his constituency, being a proof that an English statesman can, in one instance at least, attain to a high political office without lowering himself to the level of a demagogue or resorting to corrupt means for his elevation. MR. MILL'S success is, however, still more flattering to himself than to his electors, for it is the result of a life of honest endeavor for the popular weal which compels popular appreciation.

JOHN STUART MILL was born in Rodney Street, Pentonville, London, on May 20, 1806. The house in which he first saw the light was that in which his father, JAMES MILL, commenced his famous work on India. MR. JAMES MILL, Senior, became a man of mark among his contemporaries, foremost among whom was JEREMY BENTHAM, who became his teacher and friend. MR. MILL for six weeks occupied the house formerly occupied by JOHN MILTON, the author of "Paradise Lost," No. 1 York Street, Westminster. In 1817 he published the "History of India," which established his literary reputation, and afforded him a moderate competency, as it led to his appointment as Corresponding Secretary of the East India Revenue Department.

JOHN STUART MILL, the son, was at this time in his teens; and ere long—in 1823—he became an assistant to his father in the Correspondence Department. It was a stirring time. The question of Parliamentary Reform was agitating the whole country, and evoking the most powerful utterances that had ever been heard in the country: BROUGHAM, RUSSELL, BOWRING, GROTE, SOUTHWOOD SMITH, HUME, HOBHOUSE, ROMILLY, BENTHAM, Colonel THOMPSON, and many others, being found on the side of the popular party, into whose arms JOHN STUART MILL—the future Bayard of English philosophical literature—unreservedly threw himself from the very first.

In 1843 appeared the famous "System of Logic," which was followed, in 1848, by the "Principles of Political Economy," in which the doctrines of ADAM SMITH, RICARDO, and other leading economists, were interpreted in a broad and enlightened spirit. In this work MR. MILL treats of the laws of production, capital and labor, property, competition, slavery, peasant proprietorship, wages, remedies for low wages, profits, rent, value, money, credit, paper currency, distribution, taxation, etc. But the most remarkable chapters are those in which he describes the probable future of the laboring classes. He is an advocate for education in its fullest and widest extent, the political enfranchisement of women, free trade, industrial co-operation, the extension of the franchise, and of all measures which have for their object the improvement of the social, moral, intellectual, and physical condition of the people.

In his "Essay on Liberty," published in 1859, MR. MILL feelingly alludes to the loss of his wife, who had been the partner and often the guide of his literary labors, and whose death for a long time clouded with sorrow the sunshine of his domestic hearth. But his mind could not long remain unoccupied with its favorite pursuits, and the "Essay on Liberty" was speedily followed by others on "Representative Government" and "Utilitarianism." He has also published a collection of his "Dissertations and Discussions." These works are, however, far from representing the whole of his literary labors.

His work on political economy has been translated into French, German, and Italian; and is said to have been selected as a text-book in the examination of those intended for the diplomatic service of Russia. MR. MILL has been elected a member of many learned societies, and has had various honorary degrees conferred on him; but while appreciating the feelings which prompted the bestowal of these marks of popular approval, he has shown that it is not title or applause which he covets, but the retention of the proud distinction, so laboriously earned by him, of being the foremost exponent of those doctrines which have for their aim "the securing of the greatest happiness of the greatest number. Of course, like all original thinkers, he could not fail to find many differing from the views entertained by him; yet so pure and unblemished is his personal character, that whatever may be the diversity of opinion respecting the soundness of his doctrines, the name of JOHN STUART MILL will always be regarded by every impartial person as that of one whose pen was ever ready on the side of freedom, enlightenment, and progress.

THE CHINESE GIANT.

We give on this page a portrait of the great giant, CHANG, nineteen years of age, born in the city of Fy-Chow, of highly respectable Chinese parentage, and lately arrived in London for the purpose of displaying his wonderful stature to little Englishmen. He is accompanied by his wife, whose name, KING-FOO, signifies "The Fair Lily," and who looks like any other Chinese lady, having the small, compressed feet which belong to her sex and social rank in that country. A dwarf, called CHUNG, who stands but three feet high, and is not so well-proportioned a figure as General TOM THUMB, attends the giant, and enhances the exhibition of his size by contrast. The portraits of this group, in our engraving, are copied from an excellent photograph taken by the London Stereoscopic Company. The height of CHANG is seven feet eight inches; his weight about twenty stone. He has a good slim shape, and a mild, agreeable face, with the prominent cheek-bones and narrow, oblique eyelids of the Mongol race. He wears a brocaded robe of white silk, with a massive string of beads round his neck, a fan in his hand, a cap on his head, and thick white sandals under his feet. He seems to be an intelligent person: has received a literary education, his father, CHANG-TEZNO, being an eminent Confucian scholar; and his autobiography, which he has for sale, expresses a vein of cheerful moral sentiment which does equal credit to the head and heart of its author. He is said to be an affectionate husband, and he is kind to little CHUNG. We are told that CHANG—or, as he is called, on account of his bigness, CHANG-WOO-GOW—had a sister, CHING-YOW-TZU, who was ten inches taller than himself, but who unfortunately died when she had just attained the age of womanhood. His brother, CHANG-SOO-GOW, the brave, is not so tall by six inches as CHANG-WOO-GOW, but is of extraordinary stoutness and strength, weighing 400 pounds; he is an officer in the Imperial army at Foo-Chow. Their father, who died two years ago, was also a giant; but their mother is of the usual size.

THE HORSE "DEXTER."

ON page 681 we give a picture of the remarkable horse DEXTER, who has made probably the fastest time on record. DEXTER was raised by JOSHUA-

CHANG, THE CHINESE GIANT, AND HIS COMPANIONS.

PHAN HAWKINS, near Montgomery, Orange County, New York. He is seven years old, 15 hands 2 inches high, and brown in color, except his feet, which are white, and a white strip on his face. He was sired by RYSDICK'S Hambletonian out of Star Mare. In the race at Fashion Course, Long Island, on the 19th instant, Mr. E. V. W. SUTHERLAND wagered $5000 to $1000 that the horse could not trot a mile in 2 minutes and 15 seconds. Time was allowed three trials, to go and be passed. There were between three and four thousand persons present. The betting was largely against the horse, many persons being offered odds of ten to one that he would not make the required time. Dexter went under saddle, and made his best time on record. The horse won the match, trotting the mile at the first trial in nine minutes eighteen and one-fifth seconds, and making the best time on record. Tom Temple's best time was 2.192 in harness; and Butler made 2.20 under saddle. Every body was surprised at the result. All the old trotters had laughed at the idea of a horse making 2.19 in October. Dexter went to the "quarter" in 34 seconds, to the half mile in 1.06½. The best judges claim that if he had not broken between the "half" and "three-quarter" poles he would have made the mile in 2.16. He is estimated by his owner at from $25,000 to $30,000. Mr. J. HAWKINS, who raised Dexter, has a brother to him, the picture of Dexter—color brown, with four white feet and white strip in face—and same marks as the sire. He has named him Kersaege, and he refused $5000 for him the day Dexter trotted. Mr. RYSDICK last year refused $35,000 for Hambletonian.

SALES OF GOVERNMENT MULES.

THE war over, all that vast and intricate machinery upon which its successful prosecution has depended fells to pieces. The Government not only finds that it has larger armies than it knows what to do with, but also that it has on hand ships, and stores, and animals that are no longer of use. In the process of disbanding and mustering-out of the army the mules have their share. We give on page 669 a Quartermaster's Department sale of these animals which recently came off at the corner of Thirty-fifth Street and Tenth Avenue, in this city. The picture shows by our artist is very characteristic of the real scene represented.

THE FIRE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

SCARCELY had Constantinople been delivered from an epidemic which had decimated the city when it was visited by another scourge, not less destructive. During the night of September 5 a fire broke out in a cafe which destroyed a great portion of Stamboul. The conflagration lasted till the 7th, which spread with a rapidity that defied resistance. The entire neighborhood between the water and the Sea of Marmora formed one vast bonfire, in which, within twenty hours, were involved eight or nine thousand houses, sixteen baths, two mosques, and the Sultan's harem. Three stone caravanseraïs, or hotels, did not escape the fury of the conflagration; their huge domes and lofty minarets were twisted, and all the stores which they contained were burned to cinders.

The terrors of the scene, composing the gorgeous, stimulated by the presence of the Sultan, the Grand Vizier, and many other officers of state, placing themselves with great gallantry, and preserved at least the shipping in the Sublime Porte, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ter-Der-House, or public office kept the archives of the empire and the titles to property, the loss of which would have been a terrible misfortune to the Government.

The Hippodrome, the palace gardens, and the mosques were crowded with thousands of families who had there sought refuge from the fire. The destruction was immense, and, added to the devastation of the cholera, has made many thousand thousand homes in Stamboul. Every effort is being made by the Government and by private citizens to afford relief to those suffering most severely.

FIRE IN THE OIL REGIONS.

WE illustrate on page 685 the great fire which occurred on the 9th instant at "Grant" well, in Pit Hole City, Pennsylvania. There have been great fires at the oil wells before, but none so destructive as this. The "Grant" well, which caught fire first, contained 4000 barrels of oil. From this well the conflagration spread in all directions. Thirteen derricks and engine-houses on the following leases were destroyed: Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, on the "Hoender Farm," and Nos. 2, 4, and 6, on the "Morey Farm," covering a surface of five acres. The total loss is estimated at $150,000.

All of the oil belonged to the owners of the land interest and to the United States Petroleum Company of New York. The tanks, building, and property belonged to the owners of the working interest in the well, and was insured for $25,000 in the Associated Company of New York.

OUR POKER.

"A PAT?" I exclaimed in great astonishment, pausing in the act of helping Nellie to a slice of the steak. We were at breakfast.

"Yes, my dear," said Mrs. Dobb, "a pig. We could keep one if we would in our back yard, and, in spite a little item of saving, when meat is so high."

"Why, Susan, you'd have to buy food for it—corn, and apples, and I don't know what all—it would cost more than it would come to."

"That makes no difference. I was talking with neighbor Jones about it over the fence yesterday, and he said we threw away'swill enough every day to keep ten pig."

"I should like to know what Jones knows about our swill," said I.

"Why, he judged from his own experience, James. He keeps a pig."

"And while we are on the subject, Susan, I'll just take the opportunity to say that I don't approve of your flirting with married men over the fence."

"James, do be serious! Flirting, indeed—with pigs and beef for a basis of conversation. You just want to vex me."

"Oh, pigs are a pretext; any thing will do for a pretext when a woman is determined to flirt. I knew a woman once who tried to use a portrait of her dead grandmother as a pretext for a flirtation; but as for pigs—"

"Now, James, you shall not go in that way before Nellie and Bobby. Let's have a pig."

"Perhaps you'll pretend," I continued, "that Jones didn't bring you a bunch of his Isabellas at the same time."

"Yes, and you ate the best part of them last evening yourself, for I saved them for you, and you know Mr. Jones's grapes are much superior to ours. I'm sure I'm thankful for all he gives me. Will you get a pig for me, James, or won't you?"

"If you ask it as a favor, Susan, of course I will. I'll get you any thing that will be a source of pleasure to you, you know; but if you want a pig for a pet, don't try to pretend it's for economy's sake."

"A pet!" pouted Susan. "How ridiculous you are! I detest pets."

"Then why don't you avoid them, my dear?"

"What are you driving at?" I said.

"Why, you are in one now, Susan. Be calm. The coffee will get cold."

Mrs. Dobb gave me one despairing look, and then poured the coffee. Before I left the house I had promised to see about getting the pig.

Now if there is any estable animal I know less about than I do about another, it is the pig. I remember having seen pigs alive when I was a boy; but since I grew up my knowledge of the species has been confined to the portico corpses I have seen suspended from hooks in market-places, and to the thin works of art in which they have been represented in bas-reliefs. I may remark in passing that I have been a market for live pigs adjoining my studio I could not have selected an available one from the lot, for, though I went to the market on the next day, and the result of my meditations was, that on my homeward way in the afternoon I made a circuit around by the residence of Mr. Van Pegg, a Dutchman whom I employed to take care of my garden, and to do such other hewy work as might be necessary about the house from time to time. In my consultation, I found that Peter was just the man for my business. Peter had a little farm of his own, a farm up in the vicinity of Schrazlenburgh, back of the Palisades, on the Hudson; and Peter said:

"Next week I get some pig. I vill bring you vich the goes along, too, so I brings you a pig home, Mr. Topp."

"Good!" said I. "I'll pay your fare for your trouble, Peter, besides the price of the pig. A good one, now! None of your wizened, pug-eyed fellows, you know. Such intelligent faces, Peter."

"Yah," said Peter.

I left him over the pig cause. I was just leaving the house to go down town when I met Peter with the pig in a bag.

"I got him," Peter remarked—very unnecessarily, however, for the pig announced the fact loudly in his own behalf. Nothing but a pig could have squealed so.

"Where I put him?" asked Peter.

"Oh, just back of the house, Peter. There is a barn attached to our house, but there was nothing in it. Animated by a desire to put the barn to some practical purpose, I rented a cow and kept her the last summer, but she gave no milk after the second week, and so I sold her. I was glad I had another barn for the barn.

But Peter shook his head. That wouldn't do. A barn was no place for a pig. I would have to build a pen. Peter knew how.

"It would hardly do to let him run in the garden, I suppose," I said, musingly. "Can you build a pen, Peter?"

Yah, Peter said he could; and so I sent him off after tools and lumber, leaving the pig tied to a tree by one leg. My family gathered about the new-comer and viewed him with deep interest. He was a little fellow, but healthy, as was proved by the capacity of his lungs.

"Mercy!" cried Susan, "what a noise he makes! He must be hungry, James." Susan's experience with babies encouraged her to this conclusion.

"I know what I'll do," exclaimed Nellie, "that," said my Fred, with a roguish twinkle in his eyes.

"What is it?" I asked, to encourage my son.

"Two cents, papa," said Fred.

When I came home at night the pig was fast asleep in his pen on a heap of straw, and I felt quite a pride in him. Peter had taken care of his own in regard to him, though I did not impart that to Susan. He had sent for some pig-chow, he said. The pen cost about $10 more; and Peter's bill brought the sum total up to $14 83.

I watched over the pig with a fair degree of watchfulness. The swill-pail always stood by the side of the wood-house door, and, though it was not an agreeable object in an esthetic point of view, I could not for some time get over a vexatious kind of curiosity as to its contents. I found some strange things in it occasionally—skewers of articles of food, one of Fred's boots, for instance, or a pair of scissors, and, to my astonishment, I found a silver fork in the swill, I remonstrated with the servant-girl—a stupid German creature, who had succeeded to our intelligent Bridget when the latter got married.

"It is not so much that I care for the silver, Katrine," said I, "but I don't want the poker choked to death in his prime."

My wife discharged Katrine, in an impatient moment, soon after this, because she found her in the swill-pail four quarts of rich cream-covered milk that had been procured with great trouble from the country, to make a prize pudding for a dinner party that I gave to some of my friends. Katrine was pure city-bred, and had never seen such looking milk before in her life; she supposed it spoiled, and into the swill-pail it went.

We had had our poker about a month, and he had grown to be a marvelous celebrity. The condition of affairs in my back garden occupied a very large share of our family talk. Fred, though small, it had been very liberally stocked and diligently cared for, and there was quite a rivalry between my neighbor Jones and myself in this matter. Jones boasted of very superior erudition in these things, and being a gentleman of leisure he had more time to look after them than I had; but I struggled hard not to be distanced. There was no disputing the point of Jones's Isabellas and Catawbas of course, but in most respects I felt myself his peer. September showed our garden rich with abundance of tomatoes, cabbages, beets, beans, and so on, while the apple-tree, the two plum-trees, and the grape-vines hung heavy with their load.

So one day our poker got out of his pen, and went rooting around in the garden with a tumultuous exercise of his sudden freedom. Of course those women never saw him, I was washing-day, I believe. The havoc he hot made by the time I came home at night was positively appalling to witness. Nobody could tell how long he had been out of his pen; but judging by the devastation I witnessed he must have been rooting all morning. Tennyson's verse in "Maud" may give a faint indication of my emotions as I stood in the back-door that evening:

"The roots of my hair were stirred. . . .
And my pulses clored their gate with a shock on my heart."

There was nothing to do now, however, but to put him back in the pen. As he had grown portly, he had assumed a very ugly expression of countenance, and as I looked at him now, with his tusher protruding in a most villainous way, I confess he did not look calculated to excite a timid man. However, I got a big stick and went at him with loud "shoos" and extravagant flourishings of my weapon. He ran down the path that led to his little pen, with whacks of his curly tail defiantly, but I soon found that the way to drive him back to his pen. He dodged me in the most exasperating manner. He doubled and twisted in a way to set at defiance all calculations. I was no match for him. Jones came out while I was exercising myself with the porker, and laughed at me over the fence.

"You don't go at it in the right way, Dobb," said he.

"Perhaps you'd like to try it yourself, Mr. Jones," I said, with some dignity of manner and a very red face.

"Take him by the tail," said Jones calmly, in reply. "Get his nose aimed toward the pen, and then pull his tail. Make sure you pull one way the more he'll pull the other, and he'll be in the pen before you know it."

Susan, who was standing on the back steps looking at me, laughed so heartily at this, that I felt quite good-humored again, and asked Jones to come over and assist me for the benefit of his superior experience.

"Now Dobb," said Jones, "well form a line—you and I and Dobb. Don't use the servant-girl."

"I beg to be excused, Mr. Jones," laughed Susan, with a timid glance at the porker.

"My dear madam," said Jones, gallantly, "there's no danger at all. I am quite in earnest, I assure you. It is a pig's nature to be obstinate in large numbers. We must only to form a line and close down upon him in a sort of a crescent, and he will carry up the nearest end once, as you will see."

So it was undertaken. Porker stood by the fence, eying us with a deep expression of interest. We moved down upon him; he whacked about, snorted, and then made a dive at us, or rather at me, and while I he went right between my legs, knocking me sprawling on the ground most ingracefully. Susan and the servant girl ran screaming into the house, and I was sore and very hot-faced in time.

The result of it was, we sent for Peter. It had now grown somewhat dark, but Peter made short work of the matter. He took a rope, and took in his other hand the big stick I had been flourishing; then he went up to porker, fetched him one tremendous lick on the proboscis, and while porker wiggy was staggering and seeing a million stars, slipped the rope over one of his hind legs, and had him in the pen in a trice.

"Peter," said I after that, "you may come round to-morrow and get engaged, and gain for what's left of the vegetables."

He did so. There was a good deal left, after all. Porker's forays had not made an appearance that in reality. Peter stored the cellar with abundance among other things, with a nice lot of very superior peanuts that he had raised by these odd hours, and worked, and were fit for nothing but swill.

The morning that I left the city, on my returning it went to be of the most affectionate description. Fred, in his turn, greeted me with a hug. Susan was not in the front hall to greet me. I waded through the children into the back part of the house, where Susan was. I fancied she looked at me with a half-frightened air, but I took her fondly to my arms, and was about imprinting a rapturous kiss on her lips when my eye chanced to go out the window, and I suspended the kiss midway of delivery. The door of the pig-pen stood wide open, and there was a peculiar sense of desolation about it.

"Where's our porker?" I asked, postponing the kiss pro tempore.

"Our porker," said Mrs. Dobb, gravely, "is in his grave."

"Good Heavens!" I cried, "dead!" and immediately went out to look at his deserted abode.

I was quite calm by dinner-time, and informed Susan that I was ready to hear the particulars of the sad event.

"Well, James," she commenced, "you know you directed those beans to be fed to the pig."

"Oh, that's it! I thought it would be laid at my door in some manner, notwithstanding the little circumstance that I was over two hundred miles away. Well, proceed."

"So the girl gave his beans for dinner, and beans for supper, and all the cooked meat we went out with some more, and then I heard her scream. And, indeed, there he was—swelled up—oh, dreadfully—twice as large as life, dead and lying on his side and kicking his legs faintly. Neighbor Jones leaned over the fence and asked what the matter was—"

"With a bunch of Isabellas, doubtless."

"And when we told him he came over to see the pig, and said poh, he wish't dead; that he knew he could cure the matter with the pig; blooted some'ch; and then he ran home. Have you got any brandy I said he. Yes, I told him we had, and came in the house and got a bottle."

"What! that S. O. P. brandy?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, dear—of course."

"Good Heavens! And you gave that fifteen-dollar brandy to that miserable two-dollar pig!"

"Yes, dear, but it did no good. Then neighbor Jones blue him—"

"The savage!"

"And he did no good either. So at last we gave it up, and neighbor Jones had his mun bury it in the garden."

"Mrs. Dobb," I asked, "do you mean to tell me that you have buried that dead hog in our garden?"

"Yes, dear—in Mr. Jones's garden."

A sudden idea crossed my mind.

"Well, upon my word!" I responded, "it seems we are not even to have the benefit of the carcass as a fertilizer of the soil. This caps the climax."

"What do you mean, James?"

"Why, Susan, don't you know that dead animals enrich the soil when they are buried in it, decomposing, and evolving ammonia and phosphoric acid and things, that make the vegetables grow big?"

"James, how can you talk such stuff?"

"Stuff! Not a bit of it. Jones knows all about it. That's the way he fertilizes his garden. He's got a dead dog and three dead cats buried at the foot of his asparagus-vines—which accounts for the superiority of his Isabellas, my dear."

"Mr. Dobb, if you don't stop, I shall leave the table," said Susan, in great disgust.

So I stopped, like a dutiful husband. But Susan hasn't eaten a grape from Jones's garden since.

We have had the pig-pen cleaned up nicely for the children, and they use it for a play-house. It makes a very good play-house.

THE HAUNTED BELFRY

GREAT stories and old wives' tales were never looked upon by me with any other feelings than that of contempt and utter incredulity. My nature is wedded to the hard category; it is hard and practical, as my father's was before me. When I was a mere boy I made no more scruple of wandering among the churchyard tombstones of Schnappiff's church at dead of night than I would of going to the well for a pail of water to brush day. I used to think that I should like to see a ghost, and I used to go, with whistling, all in white, come and sit down by me upon old Herr Schnappiff's tomb some cheerful evening in November, and hold a comfortable chat with me on the subject of Demonology; but I had no hope that it would ever come to pass, because I entirely disbelieved in the existence of any thing of the sort. And I may say it never did do it. Our servant-girl, Rebecca, used to tell me with the most solemn earnest when I was very little, and was left alone in her care of an evening; but the only effect of her eloquence was to make me talk herself into such a horrible state of terror that if I said "Pooh!" at the end of it, I was ready to jump out of my skin with such a start that she would immediately put the lust number of the Schnappiffs Advocate on the fire, to make it blaze up cheerfully in the broad kitchen fireplace.

The haunted belfry that upon the roof of a stone building in the Schnappiffs Schoolhouse, on the Gross Haus, which, on its part, stood at the head of the broad street in our village called Little Aleke Avenue—after old Mskeben Schnappf, from Tolstnit, an Rhein, who came to America many, many years ago, and, whistling here, died whistling in the village also. He made eigars for a living in the old country, and having got together a fortune of some thousand dollars in that line of business by the time he was forty years old, Herr Schnappf married him a wife, came to this country, bought a house and land in the woods, built him a log-cabin, and established the basis of an aristocracy which has ever since possessed the village of the Schnappiffs of Schnappiffsin aforesaid. These descendants, however, owing to that disagreeable legend of the haunted belfry (or to some other thing which might not tell so well in behalf of my story, and may therefore be passed by as a profound mystery), have for a very large number of years ceased to occupy the old stone building, although Herr Makebet Schnappf left it to a family numerous, and encouraged it as such for some years. Nor had these descendents even taken pains to keep the Gross Haus in repair. At the earliest time of which I have any recollection of it (which was when I was a very small boy) its windows were all blown out, its chimneys clogged with rubbish, its winding staircases and the boards of its floors half rotted away, and the entire structure tending but up to the lofty front-door also decayed and quite gone, but its sturdy stone-walls stood unshaken, and the old oaken beams of the floors were yet stanch and true.

The steps being rotted away, and the threshold of the principal entrances at both front and rear standing high up from the ground, there was but one way of entrance to the Haus, to wit, through the dark and mouldy basement. Once in, there were ingenious modes by which boys or monkeys could proceed from floor to floor notwithstanding the absence of stairways—even into the tall stone belfry that stood seemingly on the crumbling roof, but really on a solid pile of masonry that reached to the ground itself. This was a breezy look-out over the village, and I have spent many an hour there, climbing up into the narrow loop where the old bell used to hang, and peering out the little stone windows—mistresses of those lower down—into the trunches of the tall sycamore trees in which birds built their nests, or out upon the landscape beyond the village, or into the deep woods at the back of the Haus; or else I would practise a beam of the belfry floor and trying to imagine the storied Margherita Schnapff mouldering dead at my side.

The legend ran in this wise, as our Rebecca used to tell it me in those nights by the kitchen fire: Herr Schnapff had a daughter, Margherita, who lived in the old Haus with him. (He had also, in very truth, a half-score so of other children, either at that time of later, but the legend tells not any such thing at all about them.) When Margherita was a blooming lass of sixteen she had the misfortune to fall, as I suppose lasses of sixteen will, in love with a thriftless young reape-grace named Darbin Deitin, son of a shoemaker in the village. Herr Schnapff treated his daughter to severe parental admonition on the subject, without the desired effect, old Schnapff one day, in a high rage, locked Margherita up in the belfry and gave her a loaf of his ancestral black bread for company. Young Deitin, wandering disconsolate in the woods back of the Haus, on the following Sunday, was amazed at seeing a chicken's head fall at his feet, by which was stuck a note from Margherita in the belfry, praying him to rescue her at any hazard. Young Deitin took the hint, set in hastily-built stages of the ground in a rage, and then went down to the village tavern and got drunk out of hand. That Sunday, he was carried to the Haus, body-snatched the tall steps, rapped at the door with a pocket-knife stuck with which he had provided himself for the occasion, and demanded Margherita. He was shown into the old gentleman's office, and that was the last that ever was known of him. That night Herr Schnapff up in the belfry began to tell dismally, and Herr Schnapff went up in a terrible passion to trounce Margherita for disobedience in slumbers. Margherita had thus poor girl dead, with the loaf of schwartzbrod untouched by her side—save where she had broken off the piece of it she had thrown out to Darbin her lover. She had starved to death. After that, on each Sunday night in the old hall set up to solemnize the Herr Schnapff's distress; and at last, unable to endure it longer, he strode up to the belfry, and, overcome by one of his usual fits, he fell down and threw it to the ground, where it lay half-buried but unbroken, and where I often saw it when I was a boy. You may ask why the Schnapffs have put a belfry on the building he used as a residence; I answer that I do not know why he did it, but that he did do it, very certain, for there it stands to this day, as you may see whenever you come to Schnapff'sh. As for the legend itself, of course I never believed a word of it. Still less did I believe the nonsensical stories about the ghosts of the lovers wandering over the old Haus at night, or waving their arms from the empty belfry.

Years passed, and still the old building remained unbesmirched, and grew more gloomy and dismal with the lapse of time. For a period of ten years I had lived away from Schnapffn, at school, at college, and subsequently at the ecclesiastical seminary where I tried hard to become an orthodox divine of the Missouri Episcopal Church.

When I came back to Schnapffn I was quite wealthy; my family as influential in its way as the aristocratic Schnapffs themselves. It determined to erect a chapel and gather a flock around me. While looking about for a site, I came upon the old Cross Haus—all unoccupied and in a wretched condition. I resolved to buy it and convert it to my uses: and did. I doubted if there were a dozen people in Schnapffn then who would recall the old bugaboo story that Rebecca told me by the kitchen fire except to laugh at it. Accordingly I set to work to have the old Haus repaired. Weeks thereafter carpenters, masons, and painters were at work on the old Haus; partitions were taken down, doors were relaid, the walls were replastered, inside and outside nicely painted, and a lightning rod put up, whose fork pointed heavenward from the peak of the old belfry. The bell was unearthed and hung in its old place, high up in the belfry—so high that it could not be reached without the aid of a ladder.

It seemed, after all, that there were not wanting in Schnapffyn a number of old gossips of both sexes who were horrified at my audacity; not that they believed in the ghost-story, you know—oh, not that—we know there are no such things in these days—but it is so presumptuous in that young Smith to convert that old house, with its dreadful associations, into a place for the preaching of the hated doctrines; and to call it a chapel, as if there were not churches enough in Schnapffyn already! Be it known! Christian, my dear; and to hang up that old bell too!

Nevertheless, I had a full house at the opening of my chapel, and the people looked about the spacious lecture-room with great curiosity and interest. In the evening the congregation was still larger. The Spiritualist fever had at this time begun to spread, and in Schnapffyn it was at its height. I observed large numbers of the Spiritualists in my audience; I have always noticed that these people are very ready to hear the views of their opponents, without being in the least affected by them. On this occasion I attacked their ideas sharply. It is not necessary to give any outline of my argument, for this sketch is not written to make proselytes to a faith which I have since in many ways perverted. I instanced, near the close of my sermon, the kinship these modern spiritualist notions bore to the old ghost-stories that frightened our grandmothers, and by way of illustration rehearsed the legend of the haunted belfry. I had barely concluded it when bound! boom! boom! the old bell overhead began to ring.

Great consternation ensued among my hearers. There was a general rush for the door, amidst which one or two women fainted, and a great many of them shrieked with affright. I closed the Bible before me and proceeded up the side stairway to the belfry gallery, where the bell-rope hung. A dozen men followed me. The rope dropped motionless, and the bell still tolled audibly and solemnly. Taking a lamp from its bracket I led the way to the belfry. The bell hung undisturbed, high up in the gloom overhead. It struck its last note as the light shone into the belfry; and then all was still.

But no mortal hand ever had set the bell-rope in solemn tolling recommenced. My companions at that descended the stairway in a body, some with scattering hints that the whole affair was a hoax, and could conveniently bring to bear on the effort. I returned to the belfry, and found that my supposition was again baffled by the suspension of operations. A gust of wind extinguished the lamp; and then the bell began to toll again with redoubled energy. Shall I confess that for once my nerves were a little shaken? I do confess. I, also, descended the stairway.

The congregation had vacated the chapel, but there was a crowd of people outside whispering, muttering, and looking up at the belfry. Again the bell was still tolling in the darkness, with their mouths open, in many cases, as if they could see their eyes and ears with that organ. The Spiritualists were greatly cheered and encouraged by my discomfiture.

"I wonder if he will dare to preach in the place again," I heard one say, as I passed on my house. I went very much astonished indeed, however, and put out the lights and locked the chapel door.

Next day, provided with a light ladder, I entered the belfry for careful examination for the cause or causes which could have produced the phenomena of the previous night. But nothing could it I laughed heartily over it. After which I destroyed it, and, to remove all possibility of its further operation, I descended the rope in the scuttle firmly in its place. Then I locked the attic door and put the key in my pocket.

The key remained there the chapel was below engaged in the discharge of its duties. I sternly called him to me. He stepped in the room and approached with a terror in his countenance.

"So it was you, was it, Thomas?" I said.

"Eh, Sir? Eh, Sir? I don't know what you was?"

"Very well," said I; "it doesn't matter. I have nailed down the scuttle. Hold your tongue about it, that's all."

"Yes, Sir," said Tom, with such an expression of utter bewilderment in his countenance that I was bewildered myself. I am sure to this day, that he knew nothing at all about the business.

I caused a notice to be inserted in the Schnapffyn Gazette and Observer on the Wednesday, to the effect that the Rev. Henry Smith would again preach in the New Chapel on the following Sabbath, and that at the evening meeting he would explain to his congregation the causes which had led to the mysterious disturbance of the previous Sabbath evening, and at once dispose of the foolish theories which were being set forth by the so-called Spiritualists concerning said disturbance.

You should have seen the crowd that thronged the chapel when Sabbath evening came round. The aisles were literally packed with persons standing, and even the steps leading to the low platform that served as a pulpit were occupied by sitters. The very chair behind me I permitted to be taken by a feeble-looking widow woman of the name of Southey, who had known me when I was a boy, and who had lately become a trance medium, as I had been informed, who removed the chair to a point as remote from the belfry as was possible possibly get it—which was not off the platform, however.

My sermon was a scathing denunciation of Spiritualism. I attacked the idea that spirits from another world should descend to the absurdity of rapping on walls, of sawing and filing, of tipping over tables, of ringing bells, and engaging generally in such tomfoolery as was worthy only of the rudest stage or the grossest of human beings.

"For all the manifestations of the so-called spirits," I remarked, "there is a simple explanation. I may not know in every case exactly precisely what that explanation is; but I know that it exists, and that it is in no way within the realm of the supernatural. In every case the manifestation either produced by certain forces of nature with which we are not yet sufficiently familiarized, but which the onward march of intellectual discovery will ultimately unfold to us, as it has unfolded the mysteries of steam, of gunpowder, of the telegraph and the steam-engine; or they are nothing more than a trick, conceived of roguery, for purposes of gain or amusement. The old-fashioned ghost of the bell over this chapel on last Sunday night has been solved upon the peculiar acoustic principles of this building, and a hobgoblin legend of the early settlement days of this county has been revived to give to the these wholesome and preposterous imaginings of a diseased fancy. But I have examined into the causes of the interruption of last Sunday evening, and have taken measures which will prevent a repetition of the occurrence. I have laid the ghost—I have exorcised the spirit—and I have done it with such simple means as a hammer and nails. If these sounds again disturb you I give my Spiritualist friends permission to ascribe all my beliefs to the highest altitude. But in the mean time—"

Boom! boom! boom!

The bell was tolling again. What could this mean? I paused in momentary consternation. Probably my face paled.

"Glory to God!" cried Mrs. Smuffle, the trance medium, rising and stretching her arms in an agitated congregation, with her eyes upturned in an ecstasy. "I see, I see! The spirit of a beautiful woman is in the belfry! She floats in the air! Her hand rests on the iron tongue of the old bell, and its reverberations answer her touch! Hark! I see another! It is the shadowy form of—"

I heard no more; for slipping out of the church by the private door at the back of the pulpit, I ran to the foot of the old sycamore, and quickly took off my coat and boots. Then I went up into the tree, climbing in silence toward the swaying top.

"Oh! oh! oh!" rang in accents of terror a juvenile voice above among the leaves; "man a-comin'!"

At the same moment the bell ceased tolling.

"Don't be afraid of me, little boys," I said, as I came up to them. But there were three, and they were beginning to crawl out upon the branches, so that I feared they might fall and get hurt. "nobody shall treat you. Come down and do as I tell you, and I will give each of you a silver dollar."

When they got to the foot of the tree, and found that I wanted them to go into the chapel with me, they held back.

"Afore all of them folks!" cried Jo Smuffle; "jings!"

But the money was a tremendous temptation whose force they were not to resisting; the trio followed me into the church, where Mrs. Smuffle (the mother of Jo) had just finished her harangue, and Mr. M'Mull, a clergyman from the village of Hay, was about to follow her in a few remarks.

"The manifestations of the Reverend Henry Smith," he commenced, "who growed up in this village as I may say—"

Here I tapped him on the shoulder, and he retired in good order. Then I produced my boys.

"I make no apology, my friends," said I, "for introducing in this manner the boys you see at my side. The degree of importance that has been attached to the performances for which they are responsible, renders me in producing them. Jo Smuffle, you may tell the ladies and gentlemen what made the bell ring."

"Pull'n' th' string," said Jo, with a broad grin.

"Go on," said I; "tell us all about it."

"Number One previous," said Jo, twisting his cap in his hand, and addressing himself to me in preference to "all them folks"—"mother she took on so about it after that night you's again' to preach yere, an' said how 't she blieved th' spurrits'd ring th' ol' bell, use that there was n' nothing with his rope to his juvenile companions, "laid out for some fun. I got inter the belfury an' tied my kite-string outer th' clapper, an' threw it 'bout half down t' Bes, an' he went up th' tree with it an' tied it outer a limb, an' when night come we went up an' pulled it—didn't we, Iley ?"

Iley nodded assentingly.

"How did you get into the belfry, Joseph?" I asked.

"Shinned it up th' lightnin' rod," grinned Jo.

Then I permitted the boys to depart the way they came, after receiving their promise to meddle with the bell no more, and continued my sermon. Fortified by the case in hand, I proceeded with a line of conviction argument, which, however eloquent, I will refrain from putting into the story. And although it is to be confessed that I did not succeed in converting the Spiritualists of Schnapffyn, who still flourish as of yore, I did completely and satisfactorily lay the ghost of the haunted belfry.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"PUT her a-beep," said Old Meredith to his better half, "that our boy Sammy is crazy: for he's gathered all the pipe, he's grumin' at the bars, and he's grinnin' to himself wherever he goes." "Shut up, man," said his wife, "you don't know nothin'. The critter's got a love-letter."

A dog is a good thing to have in the country. I have one that I have had since I was a pup. He is a good stout fellow, and is a hearty backer of me.

Last night I brought him out with me to a Democratic meeting, but he began to have a strong fight with a dog that he didn't like, and he got his nose all bloody, and he scratched all the dirt up I got in. Then I tied him up at the back of the garden, and he howled so that our neighbors sent us him letter before daybreak. Finally we gave him away, and he came back, and now he is just returning from a fit in which he has torn up a path that has been used for our eating mutilees.

They kill pigs by steam in Chicago. A great iron claw, with five fingers, heats on the pigs' backs, and are quarreling in the pen below, and likewise hogs to a gibbet near by, and then plunges them again into scalding water. By the machine the hogs' bristles are killed, scalded, cleaned, split and hung in rows ready for salting, whalin on hom!

A sailor, in giving his opinion of the religious denominations, said: "I like the Episcopalian best, 'cause when anything's up, they all other churches you must rig more and take the jaw, but in the Episcopal church you can lay back."

"Cry brudin," said a colored preacher, dismissing on the difficulties of his subject; "it is now as dey row a boat over Niagry Falls—dey commences by a row it back again."

"LOOK ON THIS PICTURE AND ON THAT."

Old Gentleman. "DEAR ME, AND IS THAT THE NEW STYLE OF BONNET? WHEN I WAS COURTING MY WIFE THEY WERE VERY DIFFERENT. WHY, I HAD TO GO DOWN A PASSAGE TO KISS HER!!"

[The "Portrait of a Lady" will be observed on the Wall.]

INNOCENT CARETAKER.—An old lady weather that, when the thread of the Atlantic cable was broken, the Great Eastern didn't give a tuck or two, and re-rivet it. Her wonder is all the greater as she was assured they had covered seven seas on board.

A SOCIAL CONTRADICTION.—Our "Juvenile Correspondent" says he can eat no more it out, but he finds that, with most of the acquaintances, he has "fallen out," through having neglected to "call."

An Irishman who had returned from Italy, where he had been with his master, was asked, in the kitchen, "Yes, Jim, they say that you've been to see the sitting about?" "Only a drop of the crater," was Pat's reply.

MARVELLOUS CURE.—A young friend of ours who vecently suffered from the pressure of a sty in one of his eyes derived considerable benefit from the application of cold eggs.

HIBERNIAN WIT.—The Stockton Independent of Sept. 30 says: Yesterday afternoon, as an Irishman was driving a mule toward the race-track, he was met by a man on horseback, as follows: "Will, Paddy, I see you have your brother along with you." To which the witty Hibernian quickly replied: "Yes, and he me sore it's Sunday, and we are to meet our father."

AN IRISH PARADOX.—The Irish Fenians have committed a great absurdity in their illegal drilling. The Fenian "circles" have been endeavoring to form themselves into squares.

It is said that there was never but one man who wasn't spoiled by being knitted—he was a Jew, and his name was Judah.

MORE THEFT, in consequence of a small consideration of $100,000, is going to derive himself to the composition of a new literary work, and, as a natural result, will bid forward, "a long forward," to political life. A profound breaker of words in Paris now could give his address if necessary any time in not less than one hour by many that has heard of the "Vale of Thieves."

A CLUMSY SERVANT.

Oh, Nature! Nature! you're enough
To put a Quaker in a huff!
Or make a meatty grumbler!
Whatever something rich and rare,
On earth, at sea, or in the air,
We fit in your service,
You always let it tumble.

You can't, like other folks, confine
Your talents to the barnyard line,
And break the critter they break!
But, spurning any thing so small,
You take our apples and let them fall!
And every morning—worst of all—
You go and lay the dew twinkle
You drop the rains of early spring,
That set the vale world blossoming!
You drop the beams that mellow
The grain toward the harvest-prime;
You drop, too, at the autumn time,
With breathings from a cooler clime,
The dead leaves, sere and yellow.

You drop and drop; and I've no doubt
You'll go on dropping things about,
Through this and other weather,
Until the day when you shall find
You're growing very old indeed
And then you'll soon make up your mind
To drop—the whole concern.

At a recent coon-meeting, a number of ladies continued standing on the benches, notwithstanding frequent hints from the initiated to sit down, and a crowd of gentlemen, noted for his good humor, once said aloud: "If I'igh, if these ladies would only sit down, we could see their ankles in their stockings; they would sit down." The advice had the desired effect: there was immediate rushing into the seats. A young minister standing behind him, and blushing to the temples, said: "Oh, brother, how could you say that?" "Say that?" said the old gentleman. "It's a fact; if they hadn't holes in their stockings, I'd like to know how they could get them on!"

A CLASSICAL ERROR.—The late lamented Longfellow tells us that Jove was changed into a heifer; but we have lately gleaned from a doctor's prescription the following piece of information regarding the end of Jove: "Jupiter—Heifer Potassæ."

HOW TO DISCOVER YOUR REAL WORTH.—Become suddenly poor.

A SURFEIT COIN.—That of a rattlesnake.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT MULES AT THE CORNER OF THIRTY-FIFTH STREET AND TENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.—[See Page 676.]

"DEXTER," THE FASTEST TROTTING HORSE IN THE WORLD.—Photographed by A. Bogardus, Brooklyn.—[See Page 677.]

THE WINTER OF THE HEART.

THERE is a silent winter of the heart
When all our joys, like fading leaves, decay,
And hopes we nursed, like summer birds, depart;
And we, ourselves, grow weary by the way.

When Life looks dull, like some black landscape where
A solitary figure, through the storm,
Moves on, close wrapped against the frosty air,
With head bent, drooping step and bended form.

In chilly flakes the whirling snow comes down,
Driven in his face it sticks the traveler blind;
High over the grey hills the cold winds frown,
And like a houseless wanderer asks the wind.

Then looks the world to us when from the breast
The genial warmth that filled the heart is fled,
Leaving it like some chamber where the guest
Finds the warm fire they kindled for him dead.

So when our joys, like falling leaves, decay,
When all our hopes, like summer birds, depart,
And Love's bright altar-flame pale fast away,
Then is the silent winter of the heart.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LX

AT SEA.

OLIMPIA had said truly when she averred that Lord Castletowers was the ow'y volunteer whom her father would refuse to enlist in his army. When the young men met him presently at the door of the Trinacria, and he learned that they were about to follow the troops to Melazzo, he used every argument to turn them from the project.

"Think of Lady Castletowers," he said. "Remember how she disapproves of the cause."

"It is nine months since I left her seven years I have pledged myself to serve," replied the Earl.

"But you never pledged yourself to serve it in the field !"

"Because I never intended (through respect for my mother's prejudices) to place myself in a position that should leave me no alternative. I had not the remotest intention of coming here three weeks ago. If Monteverde, Vaughan, or yourself had urged me to take up arms for Sicily, I should have refused. But circumstances have brought me here; and having set my foot upon the soil, I mean to do my duty."

"It is a false view of duty," said Colonna.

"You are peculiarly situated, and you have no right to act thus."

"I must blame fate—not me," replied the Earl.

"And you, Mr. Trefalden, have you asked yourself whether your adopted father would approve of this expedition?"

"My adopted father is a man of peace," replied Saxon, "and he loves me as he loves nothing else on earth, but he would sooner send me to my death than urge me to behave like a coward."

"God forbid that I should urge any man to do that," said Colonna, carelessly. "If the nine miles' guns were drawn up before these windows, I would not counsel you to turn away from them; but I do counsel you not to go fifty miles hence in search of them."

"It is just as disgraceful to turn one's back upon them at fifty miles' distance as at fifty yards," said Saxon, who happened just then to be thinking of Miss Hathertoca's hint about the goose and the golden eggs.

"But you were going to Norway," persisted Signor Colonna. "You only came out of your way to set me down in this place, and, having set me down, why not follow out your former plan?"

"Shall I tell you why, cavo amico ?" said the Earl, gayly. "Because we are young—because we love adventure and danger—and, above all, because we smell gunpowder! There—it is of no use to try discussion. We are a couple of obstinate fellows, and our minds are made up."

And Colonna, seeing that they were made up, wisely said no more.

General Sirtori had been made Pro-Dictator during the absence of Garibaldi; and Colonna, though he declined any recognized ministerial office, remained at Palermo to lead the revolutionary ebullition and supply, as far as he could supplying them for the last five-and-twenty years, the brains of his party. So the young men bade him farewell, and set sail that evening in about eleven o'clock, taking with them a Palermitan pilot who knew the coast.

It was a glorious night, warm and cloudless, and lighted by a moon as golden and gorgeous as that which rises in the Egyptian desert, set by their watch-fires, "on the pass of war." A light but steady breeze filled the sails of the Alfredo, and covered every little wave with a silver ripple. To the left lay the open sea—to the right, the mountainous coast-line, dark and indefinite, with here and there a sparkling cluster of distant lights marking the site of some town beside the sea. Sunday, as they left Palermo farther and farther behind, a vast, mysterious, majestic outline grew gradually above the seaward peaks, shooting, as it were, all the lesser hills down to the sea, the pale profile of a snowy summit against the dark blue of the sky. This was Etna.

The young men passed the night on deck. Unconscious of fatigue, they paced to and fro in the moonlight and talked of things which they had that day seen, and of the stirring times to come. Then, as the profound beauty and stillness of the scene brought closer confidence and graver thoughts, their conversation flowed into deeper channels, and they spoke of life, and love, and death, and that Hope that takes away the victory of the grave.

"And yet," said Saxon, in reply to some observation of his friend, "life is worth having, if only for life's sake. Merely to look upon the sun and feel its warmth—to breathe the morning air—to see the stars at night—to listen to the falling of the avalanches, or the sighing of the wind in the pine forests, are enjoyments and privileges beyond all price. When I hear a man say that he does not care how soon he walks out of the sunshine into his grave, I look at him to whether he has eyes that see and ears that hear like my own."

"And supposing that he is neither blind nor deaf, yet still persists—what then?"

"Then I conclude that he is deceiving himself or me—perhaps both."

"Why not put a more charitable construction upon it and say that he is mad ?" laughed the Earl. "Ah, Saxon, my poor fellow, you talk as one who has never known sorrow. The love of nature is a fine taste—especially when the two friends, and hope to help one in the cultivation of it; but when youth is past and the friends of youth are gone, I am afraid the love of nature is not alone sufficient to make the fag-end of life particularly well worth having. The sunshine is a pleasant thing enough, and the wind makes a grand sort of natural music among the pines; but you may depend that a time will come when the light of a fire, the light of a certain pair of eyes, and 'the sound of a voice that is still,' will be more to you than either."

"I have never denied it," replied Saxon. "I only maintain that life is such a glorious gift, and such a privilege to the human race, that it ought never to seem wholly valueless to any reasoning being."

"That depends on what the reasoning being has left to live for," said the Earl.

"He has life to live for—life, thought, science, the glories of the world, the good of his fellow-men."

"The man who lives for his fellow-men, and the man who lives for science, must both begin early," replied the Earl. "You can not take up either theory or practice at a moment's notice. And as for the glories of the world, my friend, they make a splendid ——— ——— but what is the mise en scène without the drama?"

"By the drama, you mean, I suppose, the human passions and affections."

"Precisely. I mean that without love, and effort, and hope, and, it may be, a spice of hatred, all the splendors of the universe upon earth would fail to make the burden of life tolerable to any man who has a sore place in his body. Your first sorrow will teach you this lesson—or your first illness. For myself, I have a suddenly-risen fear that the first-named prize, life less than I did when—when I believed that I had more to hope from the future."

"I am sorry for it," said Saxon. "For my own part, I should not like to believe that any Neapolitan bullet had its appointed billet in my not-to-be-mourned heart."

"And yet you risk it."

"Just for the excitement of the thing. Fighting is like gambling. No man gambles in the hope of losing, and no man fights in the hope of being killed. It is a shame would be the pleasure of either gambling or fighting if one placed no kind of value on the stakes?"

The Earl smiled and made no reply. Presently Saxon spoke again.

"But I say, Castletowers, a fellow might get killed, you know; mightn't he?"

"If the castle of Melazzo is half so strong a one as I have heard it is, I think a good many fellows will get killed," was the reply.

"Then—then it's my opinion—"

"That the stakes are too precious to be risked?"

"By Jove, no! but that I ought to have made my will."

"You have never made one?"

"Never; and, you see, I have so much money that I ought to do something useful with it, in case of my thing going wrong. Don't you think so?"

"Undoubtedly."

"Can you help me to write it?"

"My dear boy ! Not for the world. We should be only sowing the seeds of a fine Chancery suit between us if I did. Wait till we reach Palermo—there are plenty of lawyers in Garibaldi's army."

"I shall leave some property, Castletowers," said Saxon.

"O king, live for ever! I want neither thy money nor thy life."

Saxon looked at his friend, and his thoughts again reverted to the words that he had heard in his cousin's office one day when the first made acquaintance with Signor Nazari, of Austin Friars.

"Can you give me any idea of what a mortgage is?" he asked, presently.

"No one better," replied the Earl, bitterly. "A mortgage is the poison which a dying man leaves in the cup of his successor. A mortgage is an iron collar which, while he wears it, makes a slave of a free-born man, and, when he earns the right to take it off, leaves him a beggar."

"A terrible stronger."

"I speak from hard experience. A mortgage has left me poor for life, and you know what my poverty has cost me."

"But if means could be taken to pay that mortgage off—"

"It is paid off," interrupted Lord Castletowers. "Every penny of it."

"Would you mind telling me how much it was?" asked Saxon, hesitatingly.

"Not at all. It was a very large sum for me, though it may not sound like a very large sum to you. Twenty-five thousand pounds."

Saxon uttered a half-suppressed exclamation.

"Will you let me ask one more question?" he said. "Did you owe this money to a man named Behrens?"

"How do you know that?"

"Never mind—only tell me."

"Yes. To Oliver Behrens—a London man—the same who bought that outlying corner of our dear old park, and, confound him! had the insolence to build a modern villa on it."

"And you have really paid him?"

"Of course I have paid him."

"How long ago?"

"Two years ago, at the least. Perhaps longer."

Saxon put his hand to his forehead in a bewildered way. A doubt—a dark and terrible doubt that was almost a fear—suddenly started up again in his mind, and assumed for the first time distinct and definite proportions.

"And since you have answered all your questions by the book, I shall expect you to answer mine," said Lord Castletowers.

"Pray do not ask me any," said Saxon, hurriedly.

"But I must do so. I must know where you heard of Oliver Behrens, and how you came to know that he was my father's mortgagee. Did Mr. Trefalden tell you?"

Saxon shook his head.

"And this is not the first time that you have asked me what I owed in debt," urged the Earl. "I remember once before—that day, you know, at home, when Arnold came—you seemed to think I had some money trouble on my mind. Surely it can not be Mr. Trefalden who has given you this information myself."

"No—indeed, no."

"Because he knows my affairs as well or better than I know them myself."

"He has never spoken to me of your affairs, Castletowers—never," said Saxon, earnestly.

"Then—then—has he been doing so? Not Vaughan? Not Colonna?"

But Saxon entreated his friend not to urge any more questions upon him, and with this request, after one or two ineffectual remonstrances, the Earl complied.

And now it was already dawning day. The moon had paled and sunk long since, and a faint mist, always one of the great mysteries of sea-level, ghost-like, with its crown of snow and smoke, had spread itself along the coast. Presently the light in the east grew brighter and wider, and a strong, glorious color—a color compounded, as it were, of rose and gold—suddenly overspread the snow-fields of Etna. For a moment the grand summit seemed to hang as if suspended in the air, glowing and transfigured, like the face of the lawgiver to whom the Lord had spoken as a man speaketh unto his friend. Then, almost as suddenly as it had appeared there, the glory faded off and left only the pure sunshine in its place. At the same moment the mists along the coast began to roll away in vaporous lines about the sides of the mountain; and, by-and-by, as they drifted slowly away to the southward, a long promontory that looked like an island, but was, in fact, connected with the main land by a sandy isthmus, became visible far away at sea.

"Ecco, signore—ecco la rocca di Melazzo !" said the Palermitan pilot.

But this announcement, which would have raised Saxon's pulse to fever heat half an hour before, now scarcely quickened the beating of his heart by a single beat. He was thinking of William Trefalden; vainly regretting the promise by which he had been induced to repeat no word of Mr. Behrens's conversation; and endeavoring in silence the first shock of that vague and terrible suspicion which had now entered into his mind, hereafter to flourish and bear bitter fruit.

CHAPTER LXI.

HEAD-QUARTERS.

THE promontory of Melazzo reaches out about four miles into the sea, curving round to the westward at its farthest point, so as to form a little bay, and terminating in a light-house. Consisting as it does of a mass of rocks varying from a mile to a quarter of a mile in breadth, and rising in places to a height of seven hundred feet, it is almost like a mountain sleeping on something heaving its huge bulk half above the waters. Toward the main land these rocks cut abruptly over against the hill-side on which the town is built; and upon their lower terraces, frowning over the steep roofs and houses, rising by the higher cliffs beyond, the castle stands, commanding land and sea. It is a composite structure of Saracenic, Norman, and ancient Roman tower and a whole world of outlying fortifications. French, English, and Neapolitans have strength-ened and added to it from time to time, till much of the old town, and even the cathedral, has come to be inclosed within their rampart lines. In the year eighteen hundred and sixty this castle of Melazzo mounted forty guns of various sizes; so that the Sicilian commentator, if he had begun by comparing the promontory to a sea-monster, might well have pursued his comparison a step farther, by likening the castle to its head and the bristling bastions to its dangerous jaws.

The town below, looking westward toward Termini and eastward toward Messina, with its pier, its promenade, and those irregularities of house-window which no Italian town could possibly be deemed complete, stands modern Melazzo—a substantial, well-built place, washed on both sides by the sea. Immediately beyond the town gates, reaching up to the spurs of the inland mountains which here approach the shore, opens out a broad angle of level country, some six miles in width by three in depth. It is traversed by the high road and dotted over with three or four tiny hamlets. Here and there a detached farm-house has sheltered within its flat roof above the vineyards and olive groves which cover every foot of available ground between the mountain and the sea. Divided by broad belts of cane-brake, and intersected by ditches and watercourses, these plantations alone form a wide outlying series of natural defenses.

Such is the topography of Melazzo, where Garibaldi fought the hardest and best contested battle of his famous Neapolitan campaign.

Having anchored the little Alfredo in a narrow creek well out of sight and reach of the Neapolitan guns, Saxon and Lord Castletowers landed their rifles and made their way to Meri, a village which lies about two miles inland, backagainst the slopes of the mountains, and cut off from the plain by a broad water-course with a high stone-wall on either side. Here in the village that General Medici had taken up his position while awaiting reinforcements from Palermo; and here the newcomers found assembled the main body of the Garibaldian army.

The City of Abbeville had spirited some hours before the Alfredo and flooded the shore with red-shirts. There were horses and mules feeding on trusses of hay thrown down in the middle of the narrow street; groups of volunteers cleaning their rifles, eating, drinking, smoking, and sleeping; others busily filling up a barricade at the farther end of the village; and some hard at work with mattresses and sand-bags strengthening the upper rooms of those houses that looked toward Melazzo. A strange medley of languages met our ears in every direction. Here stood a knot of Hungarians, there a group of French, a little farther on a company of raw German recruits undergoing the first mercenary course of drill. All was life, movement, expectation. The little hamlet rang with the tramp of men and the neighing of horses, and the very air seemed astir with the promise of war.

Arrived in the midst of this busy scene the friends came to a halt and inquired as to what they should do next. At the same moment a couple of Garibaldi's own English volunteers drew near to laden with provisions. They carried between them a huge stone bottle in a wicker coat with the head of a straw-plait round, plethoric, modern amphore, holding about six gallons, in which the Italian wine-seller delights to store the rich vapors of Vesuvius and Scylla—and besides this divided burden, one was laden with black bread and the other with a couple of fine fresh cheeses at full Gruyère dimensions.

"By Jove!" exclaimed the owner of the hons, "Castletowers and Trefalden!"

It was Major Vaughan.

They shook hands cordially, and he invited them to accompany him to his quarters.

"I am capitally lodged," he said, "at the top of a house belonging yonder. Come and forage-ing, you see, and can give you a splendid supper. You can pluck a fowl, I suppose, upon occasion?"

"I will do my best," laughed the Earl; "but I fear your poultry is no longer in the bloom of youth."

"If for ten days you had eaten nothing but green figs, you would be content with any thing broad or sea-biscuit, you would be superior to all such prejudices," replied the dragoon. "Now it is my opinion that age can not begin before old cest hen that ever laid an egg. Do you see that man on the roof of yonder high house behind the vineyard? He is one of Cosenz's. He has been there all day surveying the ground. We shall have excellent work to-morrow, I think."

"Then you think there will be a battle to-morrow?" said Saxon, eagerly.

"No doubt of it—Medici is about the only good general the Neapolitans have. He is a thorough soldier, and his troops are all picked men, used to fighting."

"If you command a corps I hope you will take us in," said the Earl.

"I do not command a corps—I am on the staff; that is to say, I do any thing that is useful, and am always busy. By the bye, I was in a drill-sergeant—yesterday, when Bosco tried to dislodge our outposts at Corrinlo. I took a turn at the guns. To-morrow perhaps I may get in among that confounded cane-brake down yonder, I may take an axe and do a little pioneering. That is my line of duty—the work here, as you will soon find out for yourselves."

"At all events you must give us something to do."

The dragoon shrugged his shoulders. "You will find plenty to do," said he, "when the time comes. It is too late now to enroll you in any special regiment for to-morrow's work. But we will talk of that after supper. In the mean while here are my quarters."

So they followed him, and helped not only to pluck but to cook the fowl which formed the centre of the trophy, they went round with Vaughan and visited the outposts; and when at length they got back to Meri it was past ten o'clock, and the same glorious moon that had lighted them on their way the night before stood down alike upon castle and sea, vineyard and village, friend and foe, wakeful patrol and sleeping soldier.

CHAPTER LXII

HOW THE BATTLE BEGAN AT MELAZZO.

THE bugle sounded before dawn, and in the first gray of the morning Meri was alive with soldiers. There had been no absolute stillness, as of universal rest, all the night through; but now there was a great wakefulness about the place—a sense of kind of subdued tumult that had in it something very solemn and exciting.

By the whole Garibaldian body was under arms. The village street, the space about the fountain, the open slopes between the houses and the torrent of Santa Lucia, and part of the main road beyond, were literally packed with men. Of these the Cacciatori, bronzed with old campaigns and wearing each his glossy plume of cocks' feathers, looked the most soldierly. For the rest of the troops the scarlet shirt was their only bond of uniformity, and but for the resolute way in which they handled their arms, and the steady composure of their faces, many a well-trained militia regiment might have been proud to smile at their incongruous appearance. There was that about the men, however, at which neither friend nor foe could afford to make merry.

"How many do you number altogether?" asked Saxon, as they passed along the lines in the little party. Major Vaughan nodded to horse and the two others following.

"Taken en masse, Cacciatori, Tuscan, Pied' montese, and Genoese volunteers, about four thousand four hundred fighting men."

"No more?"

"Oh yes, about two thousand more," replied the dragoon, "if you count the Sicilian squads —but they are only shouting men. Look—here comes Garibaldi!"

A prolonged murmur that swelled into a cheer ran from line to line as he Dictator rode slowly into the piazza with his staff. He was smoking a little paper cigarette, and looking carelessly at his big, spirited, piebald, good-humored and weather-beaten, with his gold chain fashioned across the breast of his red shirt, and a black silk handkerchief knotted loosely round his neck.

"That is Medici at his right hand," said Vaughan, springing into the saddle, "and the one now speaking to him is Colonel Dunn. Now the best thing we two Britishers can do will be to keep with the main body, and as near the staff as may be. Then will you see how everyone is best worth seeing, and have the chance of using your rifles as well. By Jove! Malenchini has his eyes open, and is moving off already!"

As he spoke the words the Tuscan general marched by at the head of his battalion, taking the westward road round Santa Lucia, where the Neapolitans had an outpost by the sea.

"One word more," said the dragoon, hurriedly. "If I fall I should wish Miss Colonna to have Gulbaza. She always liked the little Arab, and would be kind to her. Will either of you remember that for me?"

"Both—both!" replied Saxon and the Earl in one breath.

"Thanks—and now fare you well. I don't suppose we shall find ourselves within speaking distance again for the next few hours."

With this he waved his hand, dashed across the piazza, and fell in with the rest of the staff. At the same moment General Avezzana, having orders to conduct the attack upon the Neapolitan left at the head of half the force assumed of his veterans; while Fabrizi and his Sicilians —men bereft impulsive rabble, of whom no leader could depend—were left in reserve behind whether they would fight like demons or run away like children—here off to the extreme right, to watch the Papal Neapolitan reinforcements that might be advancing from Messina. Finally, when right and left were both en route, the main columns under Medici moved in motion, and began defiling in excellent order along the St. Pietro road, leaving Colonel Dunn's regiment to form the reserve.

Following Vaughan's advice, the two young men shouldered their rifles and marched with the centre. It was now about six o'clock. The sun was already gaining power; but a fresh wind was blowing from the sea, and the vines on either side of the road were bright with dew. As they passed over the little bridge beyond the village, and looked down upon the Volturno below, they could see Malenchini's division winding along to the left, and Cosenz's more centre still appearing to the right. Then their own road sloped suddenly downward, and they saw only a continuous line of musket flash and the gleaming rifles. On it rolled to the measured, heavy, hundredfold tramp of resolute feet, never ceasing, never pausing, but only the waving cane-brake on either side, and the blue sky overhead.

In the mean while the enemy's force was known to be drawn up in a great semicircle about half-way between Meri and Melazzo, reaching as far south as the hills that look down to the sea-shore beyond Marina to the left. But not a man was visible. Completely hidden by the cane-brake and the vines, between the flat fiats of the ground, prepared to fall back upon the town if necessary, and, if driven from the town, to take refuge in the castle, they occupied a position little short of impregnable.

Presently, as the Garibaldians descended further and further into the plain, a distant volley was heard in the direction of Santa Marina, and they knew that the Neapolitan's men had come up with the extreme right of the Neapolitan semicircle. An eager murmur ran along the ranks, and a moment later came rolling down the line.

"Silenzio!" said he. "Silenzio!"

It was young Bent. Seeing Saxon and Castle-towers among the outsiders he smiled and nodded, then rose m his stirrups, and reconnoitred ahead.

In the same instant the sharp report of a rifle rang through the canes, and a ball whizzed by. Bent laughed and held up his hat, which was pierced in two places

"Well aimed, first shot!" said he, and rode back again.

And now the plantations on either side of the road seemed all at once to swarm with invisible foes. Ball after ball whistled through the canes, pan after pan opened suddenly in the forward ranks. Birds in the rear flung themselves by hundreds into the vineyards, firing almost at random, and guided only by the smoke of their enemies' rifles, but the front pressed steadily on.

Every moment the balls flew thicker and the men fell faster. A German to whom Saxon had been speaking but the instant before, went down, stone-dead, close against his feet, and Saxon heard the cruel "thud" of the ball as it crashed into his brain. Medici's horse dropped under him; Benì came dashing past again, with a bloody handkerchief bound round his arm; Garibaldi and his officers pressed closer to the front —and still not a single Neapolitan had yet been seen.

Suddenly the whole mass of the centre, quickening its pace in obedience to the word of command, advanced at a run, firing right and left into the cane-brake, and making straight for a point whence the balls had seemed to come thickest. Then came a fierce, deafening volley paces ahead—a rush of smoke—a roar that shook the very earth. The men halted in their confusion. They had been running in the very teeth of a masked battery!

As the smoke cleared the ground was seen to be literally plowed up with grape-shot and strewn with dead and dying.

Confusion being down his rifle, rushed in among the wounded, and dragged first one, then another, into the shelter of the cane-brake.

Saxon dismounted and led his horse across the road, and, heedless of the balls that came pepper-ing round him, began coolly picking off the Neapolitan gunners.

In the mean while Medici's columns had recoiled upon Garibaldi, and the whole mass was thrown into disorder. To add to the confusion, a cry went up that Garibaldi was wounded.

At this time Saxon, who had fired and was yet blocked with men, Major Vaughan came galloping round by the front. Dispatched with orders to the left wing beside Teodoro, he was through, he had chosen this perilous alternative. Flashing among the men with a command of authority and the Garibaldians, he at once became the target of a dozen invisible rifles, was seen to reel in his saddle, was seen to fall within a foot or two of Saxon's olive-tree.

In less than a second the young fellow had leaped down, lifted the dragoon in his strong arms, carried him out of the road, and placed him with his back against the tree.

"Are you much hurt?" he asked, eagerly.

Vaughan beat his hand feebly.

"Take my flask," he said, speaking in broken gasps, and keeping his hand pressed close against his side. "Ride round to the rear—bid Dunn bring up the reserve—and charge the battery—in flank."

"I will; but can you bear to be carried a few yards further?"

"Tell him there's a wall—to the left of the guns—under cover of which—he can bring up his—"

"Yes, yes; but, first of all—"

"Confound you!—go at once—you fool—you idiot!"

Saying which he leaned forward, pointed impatiently to the wall, and fell back in a faint.

Saxon just lifted him, looked at the white face, laid the head gently back, sprang into Colonna's saddle, and rode off to the left at full speed. As he did so he saw that Medici's men had formed again, that Garibaldi was himself directing them, that the guns—and their fiery tongues—had fallen in the advancing columns.

To rush to the rear, deliver his orders, dismount, and tie up the Arab in a place of safety, was the work of but a few minutes. He then returned with Dunn's regiment, threading his way through the vines like the rest, and approaching the battery from the rear by a narrow ditch away to the left, as Vaughan had directed.

Coming up to the battery they found a sharp struggle already in progress, the Garibaldians using their guns at the point of the bayonet—Medici's men swarming gallantly over the entrenchments, and Garibaldi, seen on foot, in the midst of the fray.

The word was given; the reserve charged at a run; and Saxon found himself the next moment inside the battery, driven up against a gun-carriage, and fighting for his life hand to hand with two Neapolitan gunners, both of whom he shot dead with his revolver.

"Drag off the guns!" shouted Colonel Dunn.

The men flung themselves upon the pieces, surrounded, seized, and put them instantly in motion; the Neapolitans fled in confusion out to right and left, and made way for their cavalry.

Then Saxon heard a coming thunder of hoofs; saw a cloud of dragoons, with the glancing of a fortified sabre; was conscious of firing his last cartridge in the face of a dragoon who seemed to be bending over him as he fell—and so struck—and after that remembered nothing more.

THE TREE OF ALL-WORK.

IF trees took rank according to their usefulness, the bamboo would be the first palm in the vegetable kingdom. Tried by the test of utility to man, there is no plant the earth produces worthy to enter into competition with it. Food, clothing, and, truly say, the bamboo is both. Dressed with chillies, its tender young shoots make a favorite summer dish at the Malay; sliced and boiled, they are served at the tables of the wealthiest Japanese; and when salted and pickled, which they usually do, make a pickle ever welcome to the Siamese gourmand. As the plant grows older, a fluid is secreted in its hollow joints which affords a refreshing beverage, and if it is allowed to remain untapped, the valuable medicine tabasheer—said to resist alike fire and acids—is produced. The leaves of the bamboo are reckoned a sovereign remedy for sore throat, as the bark is for fever; against fever, too, are the useful medicaments are obtained from the buds and the roots. Entire houses are constructed out of the bamboo, the smaller parts of which supply ready turned pillars, while the slenderer joints are combined together to form the walls. Split into laths and beaten out, it makes an excellent flooring; and for the roof, the canes are arranged side by side across the building, with their concave sides uppermost to catch the rain; the edges of these are covered with another row with the convex side outward, and thus the roof is rendered perfectly watertight. Should the householder be lucky enough to own the land surrounding his domicile, a bamboo palisade forms his best protection against intruders, whether quadruped or biped. Does he want to bring the waters of the neighboring river into his service for domestic purposes—he has but to take stems of the bamboo he has pipes ready to his hand; pipes easily converted into gutters and spouts to get rid of the water when it runs to waste. Then should a bamboo house will be found chairs to sit upon, benches to recline upon, mattresses to lie upon, pillows to rest the head upon, and mats to put the feet upon, all and each of the same material as the tube through which the traveler inhales the fragrant weed at home, and the cane he leans upon, as he takes his walks abroad, with a bamboo basket on his arm, a bamboo hat upon his head, and possibly bamboo splints at his finger-ends to protect his long uncut nails.

John Chinaman would be an ungrateful rascal if he did not love and admire his tree of all-work; but he has proved his admiration in a way it will not be flattering. The bamboo is the be-all and end-all of the Chinese code of justice, and as such may fairly be said to be the most popular instrument in the world. Chinese law recognizes two degrees of punishment: in the first and least severe the number of lives of which the offender carries from four to twenty, that being considered discipline sufficient for a transgressor entertain a sense of shame for his past misconduct, and a resolve for future as to his future conduct. The second class of punishments includes the infliction of a serious nature, and the law allows as many as a hundred blows to be awarded, but in practice forty is the limit. Two different instruments are used, one being a bamboo five feet eight inches long, two inches and three-quarters broad, weighing nearly three pounds; the other is of similar dimensions, falling short of two pounds in weight. Women are not exempt from the bamboo discipline, but in the case of gallantry, are permitted to wear a single upper garment during the infliction of the punishment.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

INTERESTING PHASE OF INSANITY.—"Carry, dear, will you please lend me your reviewer? I find George will not be free to-day, and I promised to go to Hurlingham." "Why, Emma! I'm sorry! I've just lent my reviewer to Mary, as she has found a lover's quarrel on hand, and wants to read Byron; but, dear, I can let you have my ivory-handled stiletto with much pleasure."

Insanity stalks abroad in strange and curious forms nowadays. Crime of deepest dye is excused on the plea of "insanity." Lately, "Jones, what was your motive for that dodge so?" A New England son slaughters his mother and sisters in cold blood, and from his supreme indifference to the matter it would appear that Mother, mourner, and all, he gloried, kills his wife, and smothers his three children, and instantly the cry goes forth, "Insane! insane!" Constance Kent steals, cat-like, down stairs, in the depth of night, and cuts the throat of her little brother as he sleeps sound. As he did so he saw that Medici's men had formed again, that Garibaldi was himself directing them, that the guns—and their fiery tongues—had fallen in the advancing columns.

To rush to the rear, deliver his orders, dismount, and tie up the Arab in a place of safety, was the work of but a few minutes. He then returned with Dunn's regiment, threading his way through the vines like the rest, and approaching the battery from the rear by a narrow ditch away to the left, as Vaughan had directed.

Coming up to the battery they found a sharp struggle already in progress, the Garibaldians using their guns at the point of the bayonet—Medici's men swarming gallantly over the entrenchments, and Garibaldi, seen on foot, in the midst of the fray.

The word was given; the reserve charged at a run; and Saxon found himself the next moment inside the battery, driven up against a gun-carriage, and fighting for his life hand to hand with two Neapolitan gunners, both of whom he shot dead with his revolver.

"Drag off the guns!" shouted Colonel Dunn.

The men flung themselves upon the pieces, surrounded, seized, and put them instantly in motion; the Neapolitans fled in confusion out to right and left, and made way for their cavalry.

Then Saxon heard a coming thunder of hoofs; saw a cloud of dragoons, with the glancing of a fortified sabre; was conscious of firing his last cartridge in the face of a dragoon who seemed to be bending over him as he fell—and so struck—and after that remembered nothing more.

THE TREE OF ALL-WORK.

IF trees took rank according to their usefulness, the bamboo would be the first palm in the vegetable kingdom. Tried by the test of utility to man, there is no plant the earth produces worthy to enter into competition with it. Food, clothing, and, truly say, the bamboo is both. Dressed with chillies, its tender young shoots make a favorite summer dish at the Malay; sliced and boiled, they are served at the tables of the wealthiest Japanese; and when salted and pickled, which they usually do, make a pickle ever welcome to the Siamese gourmand. As the plant grows older, a fluid is secreted in its hollow joints which affords a refreshing beverage, and if it is allowed to remain untapped, the valuable medicine tabasheer—said to resist alike fire and acids—is produced. The leaves of the bamboo are reckoned a sovereign remedy for sore throat, as the bark is for fever; against fever, too, are the useful medicaments are obtained from the buds and the roots. Entire houses are constructed out of the bamboo, the smaller parts of which supply ready turned pillars, while the slenderer joints are combined together to form the walls. Split into laths and beaten out, it makes an excellent flooring; and for the roof, the canes are arranged side by side across the building, with their concave sides uppermost to catch the rain; the edges of these are covered with another row with the convex side outward, and thus the roof is rendered perfectly watertight. Should the householder be lucky enough to own the land surrounding his domicile, a bamboo palisade forms his best protection against intruders, whether quadruped or biped. Does he want to bring the waters of the neighboring river into his service for domestic purposes—he has but to take stems of the bamboo he has pipes ready to his hand; pipes easily converted into gutters and spouts to get rid of the water when it runs to waste. Then should a bamboo house will be found chairs to sit upon, benches to recline upon, mattresses to lie upon, pillows to rest the head upon, and mats to put the feet upon, all and each of the same material as the tube through which the traveler inhales the fragrant weed at home, and the cane he leans upon, as he takes his walks abroad, with a bamboo basket on his arm, a bamboo hat upon his head, and possibly bamboo splints at his finger-ends to protect his long uncut nails.

John Chinaman would be an ungrateful rascal if he did not love and admire his tree of all-work; but he has proved his admiration in a way it will not be flattering. The bamboo is the be-all and end-all of the Chinese code of justice, and as such may fairly be said to be the most popular instrument in the world. Chinese law recognizes two degrees of punishment: in the first and least severe the number of lives of which the offender carries from four to twenty, that being considered discipline sufficient for a transgressor entertain a sense of shame for his past misconduct, and a resolve for future as to his future conduct. The second class of punishments includes the infliction of a serious nature, and the law allows as many as a hundred blows to be awarded, but in practice forty is the limit. Two different instruments are used, one being a bamboo five feet eight inches long, two inches and three-quarters broad, weighing nearly three pounds; the other is of similar dimensions, falling short of two pounds in weight. Women are not exempt from the bamboo discipline, but in the case of gallantry, are permitted to wear a single upper garment during the infliction of the punishment.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

INTERESTING PHASE OF INSANITY.—"Carry, dear, will you please lend me your reviewer? I find George will not be free to-day, and I promised to go to Hurlingham." "Why, Emma! I'm so sorry! I've just lent my reviewer to Mary, as she has found a lover's quarrel on hand, and wants to read Byron; but, dear, I can let you have my ivory-handled stiletto with much pleasure."

Insanity stalks abroad in strange and curious forms nowadays. Crime of deepest dye is excused on the plea of "insanity." Lately, "Jones, what was your motive for that dodge so?" A New England son slaughters his mother and sisters in cold blood, and from his supreme indifference to the matter it would appear that Mother, mourner, and all, he gloried, kills his wife, and smothers his three children, and instantly the cry goes forth, "Insane! insane!" Constance Kent steals, cat-like, down stairs, in the depth of night, and cuts the throat of her little brother as he sleeps sound. As he did so he saw that Medici's men had formed again, that Garibaldi was himself directing them, that the guns—and their fiery tongues—had fallen in the advancing columns.

To rush to the rear, deliver his orders, dismount, and tie up the Arab in a place of safety, was the work of but a few minutes. He then returned with Dunn's regiment, threading his way through the vines like the rest, and approaching the battery from the rear by a narrow ditch away to the left, as Vaughan had directed.

Coming up to the battery they found a sharp struggle already in progress, the Garibaldians using their guns at the point of the bayonet—Medici's men swarming gallantly over the entrenchments, and Garibaldi, seen on foot, in the midst of the fray.

The word was given; the reserve charged at a run; and Saxon found himself the next moment inside the battery, driven up against a gun-carriage, and fighting for his life hand to hand with two Neapolitan gunners, both of whom he shot dead with his revolver.

"Drag off the guns!" shouted Colonel Dunn.

The men flung themselves upon the pieces, surrounded, seized, and put them instantly in motion; the Neapolitans fled in confusion out to right and left, and made way for their cavalry.

Then Saxon heard a coming thunder of hoofs; saw a cloud of dragoons, with the glancing of a fortified sabre; was conscious of firing his last cartridge in the face of a dragoon who seemed to be bending over him as he fell—and so struck—and after that remembered nothing more.

THE TREE OF ALL-WORK.

IF trees took rank according to their usefulness, the bamboo would be the first palm in the vegetable kingdom. Tried by the test of utility to man, there is no plant the earth produces worthy to enter into competition with it. Food, clothing, and, truly say, the bamboo is both. Dressed with chillies, its tender young shoots make a favorite summer dish at the Malay; sliced and boiled, they are served at the tables of the wealthiest Japanese; and when salted and pickled, which they usually do, make a pickle ever welcome to the Siamese gourmand. As the plant grows older, a fluid is secreted in its hollow joints which affords a refreshing beverage, and if it is allowed to remain untapped, the valuable medicine tabasheer—said to resist alike fire and acids—is produced. The leaves of the bamboo are reckoned a sovereign remedy for sore throat, as the bark is for fever; against fever, too, are the useful medicaments are obtained from the buds and the roots. Entire houses are constructed out of the bamboo, the smaller parts of which supply ready turned pillars, while the slenderer joints are

Not long since a couple of ladies, who were out in the habit of shopping for "fun," who knew what they would and had decided to get it, saw the dress material they desired displayed in a window of one of our large Broadway shops. (We forbear to mention names, since we believe that the proprietor of said establishment is a gentleman, and would not knowingly retain any but gentlemen in his employ.) They entered the shop, made their way to the proper counter, and asked for the goods.

CLERK (briskly, warming his hand toward the counter). "Here they are."

LADY (after examining the silks). "These are of the quality, but not the color or pattern we wish. Will you have no more patterns and prices, Jack, as I told you to do?"

CLERK (unfolding the goods on the counter). "These are just the same—just the same thing."

LADY. "Yes, Jack, but they are altogether different in color."

CLERK. "Well, they are just as good."

LADY. "Yes, Jack may be, but every one has preferences. Will you be kind enough to show us what is in the window?"

CLERK. "These were all sold long ago."

LADY. "Sold, and yet exhibited!"

CLERK. "Yes, sold."

This ladies rather thought they were cajoled with the silks in the window, and really wanted to purchase. They consulted with each other, the clerk meanwhile paying no attention to them. Suddenly, turning to the shelves, he took down a piece of the goods.

"This has just come in."

LADY No. 2 (interrupting). "This is just what I want. I would like a dress pattern."

LADY No. 1 (to the clerk). "Will you not let me have a piece of this style in brown? there is a piece of it in the window."

CLERK (impatiently). "Those goods have been sold over and over again!"

LADY (ironically). "Indeed! then I will buy again, if they can be sold so many times!"

CLERK. "We never take goods out of the windows for any body. It is a day's work to put them back again."

The ladies, thus rebuked, purchased, and were invited then, though tempted to leave the shop instantly. Before the dress pattern was sent home, the clerk received the impress of falsehood on the very face of it. On what way and how he imparted it cannot be known, but that the goods in the window were not sold, and that it was a common trick of the establishment to exhibit them as recent; and they were referred to the proprietor for strictures. The lady returned home in much trouble, vexed, and were leaving, when the faulty clerk, discerning from his mien that they were not pleased, politely bowed them, hastily toward the door, and addressing the ladies inquired, "Shall I—"

"No you are trying to get me into trouble with the firm? I guess I'll not buy any more of you." And down the steps departed Jack.

The ladies vouchsafed no reply.

"Carry (reverently), what the deuce!." Now what can it you wanted?"

LADY. Jack forbore. "It is of no consequence, Sir."

"I guess it isn't," muttered the man, as the ladies escaped from his sight, into which they did not care if he will not soon again set foot. Suffice it to say, that they returned safely to their comfortable quarters in the Bronx, and obtained just what they wanted, with the agreeable addition of a polite attendant.

A few items in regard to Paris fashions will be of practical interest to the ladies:

Several leading Parisian modern have quite decided on an attempt to shorten the dresses this winter; those destined for promenade will be made to clear the ankle, and will barely touch the ground. The success of their enterprise will greatly depend on whether these new costumes among the leaders of fashion. The large square cuffs which were introduced last winter are also said to be will definitely be worn this winter, and in anticipation of this event new importations are arriving of very broad lace cuffs in the reticulated style. The mode-veil, which has quite vanished from the fashionable world during the last day, and obtained just what they wanted, with the agreeable addition of a polite attendant.

A few items in regard to Paris fashions will be of practical interest to the ladies:

Several leading Parisian modern have quite decided on an attempt to shorten the dresses this winter; those destined for promenade will be made to clear the ankle, and will barely touch the ground. The success of their enterprise will greatly depend on whether these new costumes among the leaders of fashion. The large square cuffs which were introduced last winter are also said to be will definitely be worn this winter, and in anticipation of this event new importations are arriving of very broad lace cuffs in the reticulated style. The mode-veil, which has quite vanished from the fashionable world during the last day; even the Empress is never to be seen in one; her Majesty wears a variety of silk petticoats, but blue and white appear to be her favorite mixture.

Our Journals are filled with the doings of the Fenians. We extract the following from the minutes of

THE FENIAN SISTERHOOD.

1. The Fenian Sisterhood is an organized body of ladies, whose object is the attainment of the full enfranchisement for Ireland.

2. Ladies, both by birth or descent, are admitted as members of this organization.

3. Each member must be regular in her attendance at meetings, and obedient to the regulations.

4. Each member shall solemnly take the following pledge, viz.: I solemnly pledge my sacred word of honor and Christian conscience of life and eternal salvation, to be patriotic and honest motives; that I will faithfully fulfill the duties of membership in the Fenian Sisterhood; and sentiments and interested love of country among men and women.

The remaining by-laws have reference to the various meetings which are held, and to the general manner of conducting the business pertaining to them.

Queen Victoria's visit to Scotland, by special train and all the regal accompaniments, has begun on her usual journey. Her Majesty's traveling expenses to and from Scotland this year will be £60,000 sterling. This is the figure which the Queen travels by and her Majesty pays her own charges; but by the by, the Queen pays for her journey through the Admiralty department.

A Paris paper gives the following good story:

A newly-made doctor, practicing in the environs of Paris, was called in by a small shop-keeper to see her child, who was very ill. The doctor, full of his own importance, went away, and called again two days after. "Well, how is the child?" asked he. "Oh, sir," replied the woman, "he has been dead two days." "How is your child?" "Dead." was the agonized answer. "Dead! what will?" "Yes, sir," said the weeping woman, "he died of the fever." "Astounded the doctor." "I watched woman, you have killed your child. If you had called in time, I think the measures I could have prescribed for it directly."

Charles Dickens is in the habit of walking ten or twelve miles every day when in London. This, no doubt, is the secret of his bodily health and freshness of spirit. But while preparing his English home under the shadows of the Tuileries, in Paris, in August, he received a sunstroke. For some hours he was quite unconscious, and greatly prostrated.

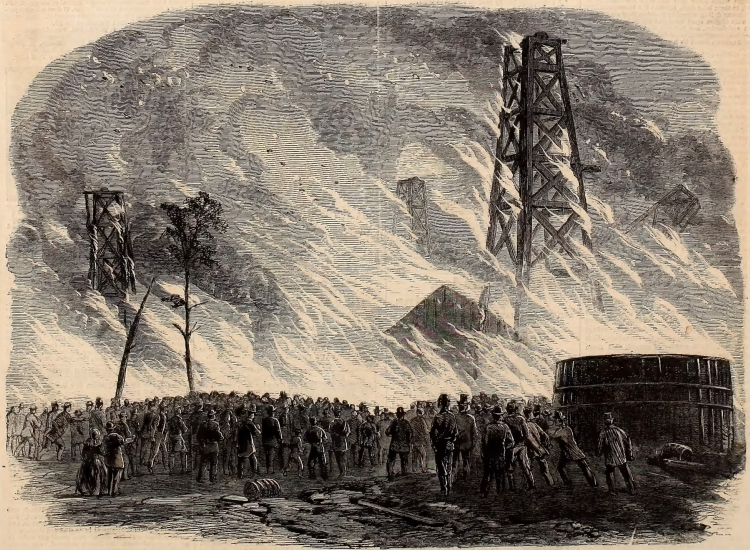
During September the best in Paris was extreme, as the following extract from a Paris letter shows:

The heat during the last three days has been equal to any thing we have known this year. A burning sun has poured upon the rows of trees in the Champs Elysées and the gardens of the Tuileries; the cabmen go to sleep while driving; the omnibus horses stand still in the hot streets, unless the children play about them; people sit outside the cafés and drink ices, as if we were in the West Indies; and fish is impossible.

A couple days ago a toll of the French novelist Alexandre Dumas:

At the Theatre Historique a rich tradesman—one of the shareholders of the theatre—solicited the honor of an introduction to him. On the favor being granted, he thus addressed Dumas: "You're a mulatto, are you not?" "Oh yes," said the novelist, wondering what was to come next. "Then your father was a negro?" "Of course he was!" replied Dumas, proudly. "Then your father—I beg your grandfather—(hesitating)—your grandfather—" "Was an ape!" interrupted Dumas. "Ah!" "There is no 'ah' in the matter," continued Dumas; "my father, my grandfather, and I, are all apes." The man took upon him amidst roars of laughter the withdrawal.

THE LATE GREAT FIRE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.—[SEE PAGE 676.]



PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER, 1865.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

There is just now a dead calm in all that concerns the Parisian fashions and modes, and we have scarcely any thing new to communicate, unless it be the continued diminution in the size of the bonnets, which are reduced to the smallest possible semblance of the ordinary chapeau. We have certainly reached the extreme of littleness for bonnets, which must be particularly profitable to the French modistes, who, notwithstanding the constant diminution in the size of their products, have never thought of diminishing their prices; yet ten or fifteen dollars for a baby-bonnet must be considered rather dear. However, people who love to be à la mode are not generally too apt to regard the cost of their innocent passion. These observations, of course, apply only to the bonnet worn with the toilette de ville. For the country the round hat with feathers is more becoming in every respect, and may be worn by persons of all ages.

Ladies' dresses have undergone no change in their form since our last notice of the Paris fashions; but we have to signalize a decided decrease in the amount of their ornamentation. Where ornament is still desired it is usually produced by different applications of the material of the robe itself; this interaction is more particularly remarked in the dresses of what may strictly be regarded as the beau monde, and is in reality a healthy sign.

FIRE AT "GRANT" WELL, PIF HOLE CITY, IN THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA.—Sketched by J. P. Hoffman.—[See Page 678.]

For evening costume white corsages ornamented with lace, and worn either with white muslin skirts or skirts of any other color or material, are very elegant. We have seen cotton families dressed in this agreeable manner, from the young mother with a certain age down to the pretty demoiselle not yet arrived at her teens.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Dress for the Country.—The robe and paletot of this new and graceful costume are in striped white and gray foulard. The cuffs, waistband, and cravat are all in plain dark-blue silk, and the bonnet is of the same color. Tuscan hat, with white feathers and veil. Yellow gloves.

Fig. 2. Walking Dress.—White muslin robe, ornamented on the skirt (which is terminated by a rather wide tucking) with embroidered grecques edged with valenciennes lace. Scarf-casaque paletot, dotted with black spots and trimmed with black guipure. White crape bonnet, ornamented with scarlet ribbon, velvet, and black lace. Long white gauze veil.

Fig. 3. Evening Dress.—Pale pink moire robe. The casaque is of white cashmere, bordered with black lace insertion and deep Thibet fringe. The bonnet is decorated with black insertion without fringe. Straw-hat satchel.

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY.

(From the Home Journal.)

We have often remarked the taste which is constantly growing for fanciful needlework and beautiful embroidery on articles both for household use and for ladies' and children's garments. One of the most morning-wrappers worn by ladies at the watering-places this year have been noticeable for their display of elaborate and tasteful work, and the correspondents have particularly dwelt on this topic when writing about dress. A writer in the present Magazine tells us "how it is done." We copy the interesting items, which, we believe, are from the pen of "Jennie Jane," the celebrated fashion writer. She says:

"The growing appreciation of elegant embroidery, as a means of securing pure and enriching ornament to fabrics, is an evidence of increasing refinement in taste which all lo ers of the natural, as developed in the artistic, must rejoice to see. Not a little of this interest and appreciation is owing to the new methods of embroidering by machine, rendering it infinitely more effective, as well as greatly abridging the toilsomeness of the work. A few years ago embroidery was never seen, except upon a few articles out of doors, in household and personal adornings to the wealthy. Ladies could not even afford to hire it done, so costly was it, on account of the length of time consumed in its production. What their own industry and skill could not achieve in the art of ornamental needlework they were obliged to do without; but so highly prized were the comparatively few results of the rich and dainty fingers, that the most valued gift a lady could bestow on her lover or a scarf embroidered with her own hands. Could the bright eyes that grew dim during the months, and even years, that were frequently required in weaving scarlet-grotesque roses and most alarming leaves on silk or wool, have seen the brilliant and rapid shops which grow into life with the rapidity of thought, in these latter days, through the instrumentality of the GROVER & BAKER Sewing Machine, they would have looked with delight upon what had before been the work of such estimation, and believed that the magic of the gnat had been transferred to the tiniest, and, instead of the lamp of Aladdin, found its home in the modern sewing machine.

"The facility with which the most difficult and the most intricate patterns are executed by this machine, added to the exquisite beauty of the work-stitch, has made it the favorite with ladies of taste, who not only for children's garments and household purposes, but for dresses of the finest order of carriage and opera cloaks. The fashionable ladies in Florence at present are displayed every day in her rides in Hyde Park, is embroidered in white silk in the Grover & Baker stitch, which, according to the Queen and other English fashion journals, is exciting a furore abroad. A great advantage in this stitch is the union of strength and elasticity, for which the sewing of the Grover & Baker machine has long been famous, and which renders it smooth, even, and perfect, without liability or inability to rip. Altogether, the Grover & Baker embroidery promises to take a distinguished place in ornamental or commanding work of a new and home, and must greatly add to the esteem in which this favorite machine has always been held."

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the disappointment and vexation lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORRISON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

FIRST PREMIUM.—By reference to the list which we publish elsewhere it will be seen that the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine (both family and manufacturing) carry off the first premiums from the State Fair which closes to-day. It is worthy of remark that these machines are rarely seen at fairs, and the SINGER Company have not entered into the general scramble for premiums which has characterized the past few years. The agents in this city say that, however, to come out on this occasion in force; and, notwithstanding the competition was sharp—the WHEELER & WILSON, GROVER & BAKER, &c., &c., joining in the contest—it was plain to be seen, when the practical tests were applied, that the "plumes" must be handed over to the SINGER machines.—Utica Daily Observer.

ADVERTISEMENTS

FOR SALE.

A Drum Cylinder Printing-Press.

Size of Bed.....39 by 54 Inches.

Four Rollers; Table Distributing.

Has been used till Oct. 1st to print HARPER'S WEEKLY. Price $2000. Address

HARPER & BROTHERS,
329-335 Pearl Street, New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
(ESTABLISHED 1850).

100,000 Watches, Clocks, Silver Articles, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE FAIR FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
200 Ladies' and Gents' Watches	40 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
100 Invisible Gold Watches	$125 00 to 150 00
1000 Drinking-Cups	7 00 to 15 00
1000 Gold and Silver Thimbles	5 00 to 10 00
1000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 18 00
1000 Sets Jewelry, consisting of Pin, Ear-Rings, and Sleeve Buttons	5 00 to 8 00
3,000 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, in Gold-Mounted Holders	5 00 to 8 00
100.0 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
1000 Sets Jewelry, consisting of Breast-Pin and Ear-Rings	4 00 to 10 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz.	14 00 to 30 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
3000 Soup Ladles, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
21000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mix d, and, when ordered, one of these will be sent regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and have the article sent you. Or three articles will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 50 for $5; 60 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to latge and gents to act as agents. Send for circular. Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Beautiful False Mustaches, 50 cents and $1 each. Goatees, 50 cents. Circulars mailed free. J. MCCLELLAN & CO., Box 5065, New York.

Constipation of the Bowels.

How many of our citizens are suffering from this disease, and expecting to be cured by the use of violent purgatives, which debilitate the system and cause a return of the disease with increased violence! It is far better to have a remedy that will cure by giving strength and vigor to the bowels, enabling them to perform their functions in a natural manner? Such a remedy is "HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS." It will give you, this, by its great invigorating and tonic properties, will give you health in the place of disease, by enabling it to do its functions in a vigorous and natural manner. For sale by all druggists. Remember, these Bitters are a pure tonic, without alcohol. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York, Agent.

To a talented number of enterprising men, to engage in a business that will pay them from $200 to $500 monthly. Address VAN ALLEN, 184 Washington Street, New York.

PART 50 REBELLION RECORD.

Being the 5th part of VOL. VIII. Illustrated with portraits of

MAJOR-GENERAL E. R. S. CANBY

AND

MAJOR-GENERAL D. M. COUCH.

112 pages, large octavo.

Price 75 cents.

For sale by D. VAN NOSTRAND, PUBLISHER,
192 Broadway.

* Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

Envelopes and Writing-Paper.

Ladies write for our Silver-Note Paper, 10 cents.
White Envelopes to match, $6 a thousand.
Any Name and Letter Envelope, 25 cents a hundred.
Send free of carriage to any part of the U. S. on receipt of $1. Sample for stamp. Send for a full description of paper and envelopes. Sample sent by mail on receipt of stamps to pay postage.
HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman St., New York.

NOTHING can be more wonderful than the operation of the GREAT AMERICAN TEETHING POWDER. It CERTAINLY CASES OF COSTIVENESS; for it is a mild and genial laxative, as well as a thorough alterative.

Look, Look, Look! My Golden Compound will force the beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Handsome Illustrated Circulars sent free. Sample, 25 cents; 3 for $1. Address DR. FRANKLIN, Cahoun, Ill.

GOLDEN HAIR.

That will grow in the most stubborn hair into wavy ringlets, and will last 6 months. Price $1 by mail.
Address DR. FRANKLIN, Cahoun, Ill.

PRESTIDIGITATION

Or, MAGIC MADE EASY.—A New Book, just out. The most complete book on Legerdemain, Slight of Hand, &c., ever published. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail, postage free, for that price in postage stamps. Every one should send for it and be a conjurer in self. Address, DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 13 Frankfort Street, New York.

Window Shades, Curtains,

AND CURTAIN MATERIALS OF ALL KINDS, at
KELTY'S, 359 Broadway.

Spring Rocking-Horses.
Children's Carriages.
Baby-Tenders.
Hobby-Horses.
Children's Carriages.
Chairs, Sleds, and Toys.
LEWIS TIBBALS,
61 Canal Street,
Opposite St. Nicholas Hotel.
* * * Send for Circular.
Propellers on hand and made to order.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, will be sent by EXPRESS, C. O. D. Address No. 65 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

SOMETHING NEW,

Of Interest to all. Inclose three 3-cent stamps, and send for Circular, to H. S. GREEN, Artist,
46 John Street, New York.

Savage & Company,

Manufacturers of Lanterns and Burners, 276 Greenwich Street, New York. Fifty varieties of the latest styles always on hand. Dr. Lanterns also Patentees of the Celebrated Savage & Co. Rotary Burner. Agents wanted immediately. Send for Circular.
SAVAGE & CO., 280 Greenwich St., New York.

GREAT SALE OF
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

$1,000,000 Worth

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive:

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....each $125 00
200 Silver Watches.....each 20 00 to 25 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases.....5 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description.

The method of disposing of these goods at ONE DOLLAR EACH must be follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of ONE DOLLAR. On receiving it you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and have the article sent you. Or three articles will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 50 for $5; 60 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to large and gents to act as agents. Send for circular. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Beautiful False Mustaches, 50 cents and $1 each. Goatees, 50 cents. Circulars mailed free. J. MCCLELLAN & CO., Box 5065, New York.

Constipation of the Bowels.

How many of our citizens are suffering from this disease, and expecting to be cured by the use of violent purgatives, which debilitate the system and cause a return of the disease with increased violence! It is far better to have a remedy that will cure by giving strength and vigor to the bowels, enabling them to perform their functions in a natural manner? Such a remedy is "HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS." It will give you, this, by its great invigorating and tonic properties, will give you health in the place of disease, by enabling it to do its functions in a vigorous and natural manner. For sale by all druggists. Remember, these Bitters are a pure tonic, without alcohol. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York, Agent.

To a talented number of enterprising men, to engage in a business that will pay them from $200 to $500 monthly. Address VAN ALLEN, 184 Washington Street, New York.

PART 50 REBELLION RECORD.

Being the 5th part of VOL. VIII. Illustrated with portraits of

MAJOR-GENERAL E. R. S. CANBY

AND

MAJOR-GENERAL D. M. COUCH.

112 pages, large octavo.

Price 75 cents.

For sale by D. VAN NOSTRAND, PUBLISHER,
192 Broadway.

* Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

Envelopes and Writing-Paper.

Ladies write for our Silver-Note Paper, 10 cents.
White Envelopes to match, $6 a thousand.
Any Name and Letter Envelope, 25 cents a hundred.
Send free of carriage to any part of the U. S. on receipt of $1. Sample for stamp. Send for a full description of paper and envelopes. Sample sent by mail on receipt of stamps to pay postage.
HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman St., New York.

NOTHING can be more wonderful than the operation of the GREAT AMERICAN TEETHING POWDER. It CERTAINLY CASES OF COSTIVENESS; for it is a mild and genial laxative, as well as a thorough alterative.

Look, Look, Look! My Golden Compound will force the beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Handsome Illustrated Circulars sent free. Sample, 25 cents; 3 for $1. Address DR. FRANKLIN, Cahoun, Ill.

GOLDEN HAIR.

That will grow in the most stubborn hair into wavy ringlets, and will last 6 months. Price $1 by mail.
Address DR. FRANKLIN, Cahoun, Ill.

PRESTIDIGITATION

Or, MAGIC MADE EASY.—A New Book, just out. The most complete book on Legerdemain, Slight of Hand, &c., ever published. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail, postage free, for that price in postage stamps. Every one should send for it and be a conjurer in self. Address, DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 13 Frankfort Street, New York.

Window Shades, Curtains,

AND CURTAIN MATERIALS OF ALL KINDS, at
KELTY'S, 359 Broadway.

Spring Rocking-Horses.
Children's Carriages.
Baby-Tenders.
Hobby-Horses.
Children's Carriages.
Chairs, Sleds, and Toys.
LEWIS TIBBALS,
61 Canal Street,
Opposite St. Nicholas Hotel.
* * * Send for Circular.
Propellers on hand and made to order.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, will be sent by EXPRESS, C. O. D. Address No. 65 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

SOMETHING NEW,

Of Interest to all. Inclose three 3-cent stamps, and send for Circular, to H. S. GREEN, Artist,
46 John Street, New York.

Savage & Company,

Manufacturers of Lanterns and Burners, 276 Greenwich Street, New York. Fifty varieties of the latest styles always on hand. Dr. Lanterns also Patentees of the Celebrated Savage & Co. Rotary Burner. Agents wanted immediately. Send for Circular.
SAVAGE & CO., 280 Greenwich St., New York.

GREAT SALE OF
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

$1,000,000 Worth

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive:

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....each $125 00
200 Silver Watches.....each 20 00 to 25 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases.....5 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description.

The method of disposing of these goods at ONE DOLLAR EACH must be follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of ONE DOLLAR. On receiving it you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and have the article sent you. Or three articles will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 50 for $5; 60 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to large and gents to act as agents. Send for circular. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

GREENBACKS are GOOD—ROBACKS are BETTER.

The best taste and age preventive in the world. 50,000 bottles sold monthly. Sold by dealers every where. Depot, Barnes & Co., Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Robach, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

1,000,000 Purchasers Wanted. Articles to be given away. Circulars sent free. Inclose stamp and address. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent in a sealed letter envelope for Ten Postage Stamps.
Address Mrs. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE.

THE BEST MACHINE IN THE WORLD.
They have the Reversible Feed Motion.
They have a perfect self-adjusting Shuttle Tension.
They make the most separate and distinct stitches on one and the same machine.
They have many advantages over all others.
FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
505 Broadway, New York.

A GIFT FOR YOU
At the Philadelphia Gift Book
ESTABLISHMENT.
THE ELEVENTH YEAR OF THE ENTERPRISE.
NEW BOOKS AND NEW GIFTS.
A GIFT WITH EVERY BOOK.

A new classified catalogue of books just issued, of over 50 pages, of books in every department of literature, with full instructions for obtaining a GIFT WITH EACH.

The best place in the world to buy books is at the

* * * Evans' Original 10ct Book Sale.

Catalogues sent free on receipt of stamp. Address
G. G. EVANS, 630 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

Hawkes Improved Fountain Pen. One filling writes 24 hours. Also other styles of pens. Sent by mail. Send stamp for circular. G. F. HAWKES, Patentee and Sole Manufacturer, 44 Nassau St., New York.

PAUL FRY MAGAZINE Out. Price 3 cts. Address PAUL FRY, 66 John Street, New York.

PAPER BAGS—ALL KINDS.
The Cheapest House to Make the Best, and sell
Cheaper than any others.
Send for Price-List.
WOOD & CLAFLIN,
19 VESEY STREET,
New York.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.

These CELEBRATED MACHINES by six thousand to the public, combining as they do all the IMPROVEMENTS which EXPERIENCE has proved to be requisite in the perfection of Sewing Machines. We invite all interested to call and examine THE ELLIPTIC before purchasing. Salesrooms, 657 Broadway, New York.

DOOR OF RECEIPTS, 40 pages, with new catalogue, mailed free. Pitman address Bickle & Co., 713 Broadway, N. Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money is the J. Johnson Pen—warranted for one year—14 carats fine. Also, every style of Fancy and Staple Goods. Send for pictorial on receipt of 50 cts. Pens sent by mail. Send for Circular. J. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office No. 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 20, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for the poor man. A perfect little unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to keep correct time. And with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. More truthful than the most costly and elaborate time-keeper of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. It requires no KEY or winding up; never gets out of order, and never can be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is accused by ROYAL LETTERS PATENT. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in neat silver pin case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Also, a beautiful Watch, with only one REGULATOR PRETENDS from infringement, all persons are cautioned from making or offering for sale any IMITATION, under no matter what ALTERATION or NAME, as they will be held to the full extent of the LAW. Address all orders and inquiries, which imitate this advertisement. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DYLAND & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 204-206 Broadway, New York.

MATILDA TOOTS.

NEW COMIC SONG. With picture, colored..... 50c.
I'LL NOT PUT YOU IN OUR SONGS..... 35c.
SUNLIGHT WITHIN MY HEART..... 35c.
HAVE YOU SEEN HER LATELY? (comic)..... 35c.
SWEETEST LITTLE ROSEBUD, (ballad)..... 35c.
IF WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE..... 35c.
Mailed postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME,
208 Bowery, New York.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S HELLEBUCUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer restores gray hair.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer makes the glossy on bald heads.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer stops the hair from falling out.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer kills the worst headache.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer is all that can be desired as a dressing
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer possesses all the merits claimed for it. A single trial convinces the most skeptical of its worth. And after a thorough trial of two bottles, it does not give perfect satisfaction, the money will be refunded. Sold every where at $1 per bottle; six bottles for $5.
Dr. F. B. CLOCK, Proprietor,
Manchester, N. H.
H. T. HELMBOLD,
Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway,
Agents, New York City.

$1. Whiskers. $1.

For One Dollar I will send, sealed and postpaid, the Recipe which made my beard grow profusely, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in three weeks, or money back. It works, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given, or money cheerfully refunded. Directions accompany the Recipe. Address F. L. SHULTZ, P. O. Box 216, Lexington, N. Y.

AGENTS!!!

$10 per day made selling the Sketches entitled "SCENES IN THE PRISONS OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF VIRGINIA," "SCENES FROM LIFE AS PRISONERS OF WAR," with Key to Ciphers explanation. It is destined to be the best and most essential historical work that has ever been presented to the public. Agents wanted in every county. Send for circular, and see how to agents on receipt of $1. Sells at from $3 to $5.
Call on, or address, J. C. McCURDY & CO., Philadelphia, HOPKINS & CO., No. 74 Bleecker Street, New York.

PRINTING-PRESSES FOR SALE.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51.
One Taylor Drum, four Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 33x51.
The above Presses are in good working order, and are offered for sale in consequence of the increased circulation of HARPER'S WEEKLY requiring the "Lightning Press." Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS,
329 Pearl Street, New York.

Make your own Soap
WITH B. T. BABBITT'S
Pure Concentrated Potash,
OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 4 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 10 pounds of Hard or 20 pounds Soft Soap. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.
B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

SELL NO BRASS OR SO-CALLED PLATED JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD OR NO SALE.

Headquarters, 558 and 560 Broadway, NEW YORK.

HAVE ALSO LOCATED IMMENSE

GOLD JEWELRY BAZAARS

At 83, 85 & 87 Madison St., Chicago, Ill., and 36 South Fourth St. Corner Olive, Saint Louis, Mo.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, conducted on a one-price system, and that not a single article of brass or plated JEWELRY is included in the above immense stock.

This association has been organized on an original and peculiarly attractive system, and upon such a scale as to challenge with their immense resources the competition of the world—offering for sale at the one average PRICE of two dollars for each and every article, without regard to value.

500,000

Pianos, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of Jewelry, Fine Gold Jewelry, Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000.

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH, AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU WILL RECEIVE: —thus offering the people throughout the whole country, for as well as near, an opportunity never before offered to one of the most liberal distribution, and thus obtain the finest of Jewelry, richest of Silverware, and the choicest of Diamond and Fancy Goods, a Gold or Silver Watch, or even a Piano, for the insignificant sum of Two Dollars, or any other privilege of the fifth (the least one), and to convince the most skeptical that such is the fact, we refer to our many customers, in this or any change for the least article they may get for $2, a specimen of rarity valued at exactly one dollar in Gold or Greenback, fine plate, valued at $10, or an elegant morocco Stereoscope Photograph Album, valued at $5.

The Plan of Sale.

SEALED ASSORTMENTS describing every article and its value in words and figures, and given without regard to choice to our customers. Popular songs and valuable receipts, worth many times the price of the whole, sent to the Association, or sent by mail with added advertisement to any address, post-paid, for 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT TWO DOLLARS EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE.

On receipt of the advertisement you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to pay two dollars, and take it, or not. Thus you have the privilege of thus obtain a gold watch, diamond ring, piano, or any article of jewelry you may fancy, warranted gold or no sale, in no case can they get less than two dollars' worth; for, if not satisfied, after they have received the article, they still admon, silver better-dish, or castor, worth from $6 to $10, in exchange for any article, as before stated. A FINE 97 PER CENT GOLD SAID HUNTER AND SONG PACKET ONLY 50 CTS. each: 5 for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $15; and desired advertisements cost free with each packet.

Agents wanted. Send stamp for circular and catalogue of articles. Address CALKINS & CO., Managers, 553 and 555 Broadway, New York.

ALL WORKS ON PHOTOGRAPHY, HYDROPATHY, PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, ELOCUTION, MESMERISM, ASTROLOGY, ANATOMY, MINERALOGY, AGRICULTURE, EDUCATION, &c., supplied by FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y. York. See our SPECIAL LIST of Private Medical Works. AGENTS WANTED.

A NEW LIBRARY OF MESMERISM AND PSYCHOLOGY, in 2 vols., containing Philosophy of Mesmerism, Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Fascination, and Science of the Soul.

"All and half parts of one stupendous whole.
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

This work will command modern inquiry, as it furnishes a key to that which is beyond the reach of sense, even into the realms of spirits. Price, in Cloth, $4. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

Brandreth's Pills.

They expel the poisons which threaten life. Every time a sick person is purged by this vegetable remedy he has less vitiated humors, and more life and vigor, as any one can prove by taking a single dose. Sometimes a dose or two is quite flesh and strength while using them. Every time we visit a few days or weeks from the purgation we make new drafts from food, which replaces the waste—one that the Pills have caused to be evacuated. Each time we repeat this process we expel further quantities of impurities, which are again replaced by fluids less and less impure; so that, in a short time, by continuing this treatment, we bring back the vitality and purity of our blood more to that state of purity which constitutes health; for Brandreth's Pills only take away humors which are unwanted. Sold by all respectable dealers in medicines.

THE MILLER, &c. A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to B. Arp, P. O., New York.

COUSIN LIZZIE'S

NOVELTY. Illustrated. Something new. Best thing out. Good profit at a low price. Don't fail to send for a Prospectus Monthly. Ask any newsdealer for it. Trade supplied at $3 with Wholesale Rate. CLUB RATES. Sample will be sent six months on trial for 25 cents. Don't lose this opportunity. Address COUSIN LIZZIE, 19 Nassau St., N. Y.

SUNARD OF IMITATION

AMERICAN LEVER POCKET TIME-KEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

The most novel and useful two-dollar article of the age. Combines in the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to run more accurately with greater accuracy than the most expensive gold stem-wind repeater, while the low price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every one. It is emphatically the timekeeper for each of every man, and warranted perfectly correct for one year at least of order. No one should be without it. Price, with white enameled dial in gold or silver gilt case, $1. It may be sent by mail to any part of the world for 25 cents. This invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any imitations, under no matter what name or style. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!

Wholesale and Retail.

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

87 and 89 Bowery, and 65 Christy St.,

Have the best assorted Stock of Parlor, Dining-Room, and Bed-Room Furniture, Spring Beds, and Bedding, in the Union.

Our Facilities for manufacturing at Low Prices defy Competition.

FIRST PREMIUM IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 11, 1861; Improvement patented July 5, 1864. The only genuine FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with elevating attachment, a most wonderful and elegantly-constructed machine, and, in point of operation, one that will please the most fastidious. It will DO EVERY KIND of work, the same as the running-stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, with extraordinary rapidity, making seamless strength to each revolution of the Wheel. With a thread, needle, screw-driver, and set of directions, &c., &c.; requires no change of stitch; IS NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a lifetime. It is put up in a neat and elegant case, and is not liable to get out of order. It has taken the premium at seven Fairs, and received the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have tried them.

"For the domestic purposes of a family, for the household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"It uses a common needle, is not liable to get out of order, and is easily understood that a child can use it."—Independent.

"With single or double thread, is silently and very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing full description, sent free.

Address FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, Office 193 Nassau Street, New York.

EMPLOYMENT

FOR

Returned Soldiers and all Others.

AGENTS WANTED.

Great Sale of Jewelry and Silverware

The Arcadia Great Gift Appropriation.

Our Agents are making from Five to Twenty Dollars per day, and we still need more. We are the invoices from Europe we have received a large and splendid assortment of Watches, Rings, Ladies' and Gentlemen's Jewelry and Silverware, which we propose to sell at the low price of $1 each. Send 25 cents for a certificate, which will name the article and you will receive what you are entitled to; or send a 3 cent stamp for our terms to Agents, and a list of articles. Agents' Outfit and Agency presented with watches free in addition to commission. Now is your time! Address ARCADIA SALE & CO.,

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes without injury to the skin, by the ARCADIA DEPILATORY POWDER. Mailed to any address for $1. JB. by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Freckles, Tan, and Pimples

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S FRECKLE, TAN, AND PIMPLE LOTION." Mailed to any address for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, &c., &c., who wish to print neatly, quickly, and economically. Circular sent free. GOLDING & CO., 63 Clinton Street. ADAMS PRESS CO., 59 Ann Street, New York.

WHISKER & MUSTACHES

AND

MUSTACHES

Forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by the use of Dr. Spaulding's

RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE,

The most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Hair and Hair Roots in a manner unknown before now. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success.

Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1.50. Circulars sent free. Testimonials sent on receipt of stamp.

Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists,

Post-Office Drawer 21, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for U. S.

BEAUTY !

Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of Prof. De Brau's

FRISER LE CHEVEUX.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into the most ringlets and flowy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with unbounded success. Sent to any address on receipt of price by mail, safely and securely, $1 00. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists,

Post-Office Drawer 21, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for U. S.

$6 ELEGANT WATCH. $8

Fine imported watches for the retail trade at greatly reduced prices. A SEMI-TYPE, silver double-case watch, small size, EXCELLENT TIMEKEEPER, with GOOD LEVER CHAIN, KEY, &c., to each. Per case of half dozen, $30. Sample one for $6 50.

AN ELEGANT gold-plated engraved double-case watch, THE UNTHINKABLE. Gold ticket, vest chain, key, &c., to each. Per case of half dozen, $42. Sample one, $8.

SILVER HUNTING-CASE WATCHES, MADE EXPRESSLY FOR THE RETAIL TRADE, at half dozen, $60. Sample, $12.

FINE SILVER HUNTING LEVERS, warranted. Per case of half dozen, $72. Sample, $15.

FINE SILVER ENGLISH HUNTING-LEVERS. Superior, jewelled, in silver hunting-cases. Per half dozen, $90. Samples, $24.

ENGLISH HALF-PLATE WATCHES. Fancy movements. Extra silver hunting-cases, large bevel. Warranted. Per case of half dozen, $104. Sample, $25.

The genuine DETECTIVE WATCH, a wonderful article, superior timekeeper, with THERMOMETER, COMPASS, and Secret Attachment for Concealing Letters, &c. Per case of half dozen, $90. Sample, $28.

Fine gold and silver watches of every description. Catalogues for the trade mailed free. CAPTAIN BROTHERS, Importers, 102 Nassau St., New York. (Established 1853.)

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

AND DEALERS IN STEREOSCOPES,

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we have always on hand a full assortment of Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Of these we have an extensive assortment, including

VIEWS OF THE WAR,

Obtained at great expense and comprising a complete PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF THE GREAT REBELLION

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,
Yorktown,	Pontoon Trains.
Gettysburgh,	Bridge Destruction.
Fair Oaks,	Lookout Mountain,
Savage Station,	Chattanooga,
Fredericksburgh,	City Point.
Fairfax,	Nashville,
Richmond,	Petersburgh,
Deep Bottom,	Bolio Plain,
Malvern,	Chattanooga,
Fort Morgan,	Atlanta,
Charleston,	Dalton,
Florida,	Strawberry Plains,
	&c. &c.

Arsenals and Foreign Cities and Localities, Groups, Statuary, &c., &c., &c., Stereoscopic Landscapes, Scriptural Subjects, &c. Our Catalogues will be sent to any dealer on receipt of stamp.

Photographic Albums.

We were the first to introduce them into the United States and are manufacturers (since competition in great variety, regarding price and quality, has arisen) of the largest line of the very best styles of beautiful and durability to any other—

EIGHT DIFFERENT STYLES TO SELECT FROM.

The Trade will find our Albums the most Saleable they can buy.

ALSO PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over Five Thousand different subjects, and comprises the most complete assortment of Stereoscopic Materials in the World.

100 Slip-Gems	100 Lincoln Cards	400 Statesmen,
100 Imps	50 Gem Albums,	120 Diplomas,
144 Cabinets,	24 Navy Officers,	192 Architects,
48 Artists	192 Actresses,	192 Miscellaneous Women.

3,200 Copies of Works of Art.

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Statuary, Paintings, &c., &c., in the collections of the Old World. Catalogues of these sent free to the trade. Will be filled on receipt of $1.00, and sent by mail, post-paid. Photographers and Galleries of U. S. will please remit twenty-five per cent. of the amount with their order.

$2 For Cash and a list of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

AGENTS, LOOK AT THIS!

A sample and catalogue of articles every body wants, free for 25c. Address

H. RIVINGTON & CO., 609 Broadway, New York.

Ist. To the Military Men, Pastor and even the Civilian, these "novel protections" are of the utmost importance, being a service of time long experienced, and now manufactured on such principles as to render them almost entirely obsolete.

2d. The Ladies will find them a most valuable article to the neck of the waist, and as for Gentlemen, they will find them a most valuable and serviceable adjunct to the appearance of their linen, especially when it is remembered that they are rendering them a most desirable article for the Summer season, as well as the Cheapest Collar ever Manufactured.

Perfectly Impervious to Perspiration,

Sold by all Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods Stores throughout the United States.

WANTED.—OLD CANVASSERS, DISABLED SOLDIERS, Clergymen, and others, seeking profitable employment, to canvass every city and county in the United States for the "most remarkable work of art ever published." The publications of this Association meet with ready sale; large inducements to agents. Circulars are offered to any city or town in the country.

NO BOOKS REGARDED FOR COUNTY RIGHTS.

An energetic party can clear $25 00 a day. Specify the county, city, and state in which you wish to solicit circular. Address

ART PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,

Box 2615, Philadelphia, Pa.

Office, 606 North 10th St.

Use PERRY'S Moth & Freckle Lotion, which is promptly, infallible & harmless. For sale by druggists. Depot No. 49, 37 Bond St., New York; also in Brooklyn and Boston. $3 a bottle. Send for Circular

THE GREAT GIFT SALE.

BY MRS. A. J. D.

Oh, say, have you been to the Gift Sale to-day?
Have you seen all the things they are giving away?
From the grand gift piano in splendid rose-case,
To a ring which the tiniest finger might grace.
There are tea sets of silver and watches of gold,
Bracelets, brooches, and ear-drops in numbers untold;

And beautiful ornaments made for the hair,
For the matron, the belle, and the miss in her wear,
And glittering diamonds unharmedly bright,
Forever reflecting the beautiful light.
There are sewing machines, with their fingers of steel,
That stand ever at the turn of the wheel,

And the pale, worry seamstress is weary no more,
When you hear its glad song as you enter her door.
But perhaps you are thinking, "All this is quite nice
For those who are able to pay them their price."
That's correct. "My dear friend, they are given away;
For each article only One Dollar to pay.

The poorest may now with the wealthiest share,
If only to them it's known they have gone for a prize.
Or address through the mail, if they live far away,
C. H. Jones & Co., for full particulars in Broadway.

☞ Circulars 25 cents each; 5 for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $15. Send stamp for circular.

THE MODEL PARLOR MAGAZINE OF AMERICA.

DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE contains more original matter, more elegant illustrations, fine and original stories and poems, including the most attractive range of new fashions, together with valuable fill-size patterns, household matters, architecture, and other valuable matter, rendering it in a magazine in the world of other country. This unequaled magazine must be seen to be appreciated. Only $1 00 per year, with a valuable premium. Single, 25 cents. Now is the time to subscribe. Specimens sent free. Agents wanted. Dec. No. of the present year, together with the whole of the year 1865, to be offered for $3 00, for November and December Nos. for $2 00 with the premium. Address

W. JENNINGS DEMOREST,

No. 473 Broadway, New York.

FUN.—Jeff Davis, his Life and Adventures. "Going and Coming" and Comic Songs. Price 10 cents. Only 5c.—10 for $1. Address Hunter & Co., Hinsdale, N. H.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are composed of several different metals combined, rolled together, and manufactured by dashing an exact imitation of 18-carat gold, called Arcanus. They are so beautiful as to defy detection, even assisted at one-eighth the cost. The cases are beautifully designed, and the movements are of the best quality, including Hunting Levers, and as exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. The movements are manufactured by the well-known St. Jimer Watch Company of Europe, and are superbly finished in every part, with all the late improvements, bridge, adjusting regulator, fine dial, and skeleton hands. There will be put up in all Hunting Cases, and in sizes, the smallest being for Ladies. A case of six will be sent by Mail or Express, C. O. D., to any address, for a handsome case for $25. They will readily sell for three times their cost. Also, an imported silver-plated hunting and elegant watch which we can sell for $20 each, or $120 per case of six. It is a splendid watch for Ladies or Gentlemen and Gentlemen. We are sole agents for this Watch in the United States, and orders are promptly filled at our Retail Store, 207 Broadway, New York. Persons ordering watches, C.O.D., will please remit $1 00 to cover express charges on each order. Orders for any kind of watches promptly and faithfully fulfilled. Address, ARCANA WATCH CO., 207 Broadway, cor. 4th St., New York City, Importers and Dealers in Watches of every description.

Successors to Girard W. Devaugh & Co.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an article which has acquired universal popularity. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c that retails easily for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 161 Fulton Street, New York.

ASTHMA CURED.

RELIEF GUARANTEED IN TEN MINUTES, and a permanent cure effected by using DR. HAYES' CELEBRATED ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years' standing have come to us for relief, and in no case has it failed. Sent postpaid to any address by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. Price, one dollar per box.

$25 A DAY. AGENTS WANTED to sell a new and wonderful SEWING MACHINE, the only one licensed by Howe. Address

SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH. AGENTS WANTED for the best selling articles in the world. Address O. T. GAREY, City Building, Biddeford, Maine.

NATIONAL TOY for old and young. Parlor Amusement for Winter Evenings. Imitates motions of a living negro. Widely popular. Sells rapidly. Sample sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 cents. Dealers also supplied by BERGEN & CO., 102 Beekman St., N. Y.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER, 1865.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers at $3 00 each, or 6 Copies for $15 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $9 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of Responsible Advertisements for the Magazine, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; half a page, each Number, $125. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding . . . . . $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco 10 00

Each Volume contains Fifty-two Numbers for One Year.

☞ Cases for Binding Volumes.—One Dollar per Case for either, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per Box for outside Wrapper, sent postage paid.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

DEFACING THE BEAUTIES OF NATURE.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 502 Broadway, near 40th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

OLD EYES MADE NEW
Without spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed, free, on receipt of ten cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCHU,
CURES diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, &c. PRICE ONE DOLLAR. Sold by D. HAYES & CO. and P. C. WELLS & CO., New York. BURTON & BOARDS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL...$1,000,000. SURPLUS...$1,200,000.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on favorable terms. J. L. WORTH, Cashier.
NEW YORK, August 31, 1865.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
BOSWELL & WARNER'S COLORIFIC colors beautifully and natural. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 3 Dey St., N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
PIANO-FORTES,
90 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie Crust, eaten with impunity, and no fear of the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PERRY'S YEAST POWDER. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 180 Front St., N. Y.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street.
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.
TERMS: $2 50 a year; 3 copies for $6; 5 copies, or 1 to getter-up of club, $10. Single Numbers 25 cts. by News Agents throughout the United States. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. Address
T. S. ARTHUR & CO.
323 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York,
BANKERS AND BROKERS, AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.
DE WITT C. LAWRENCE. CYRUS J. LAWRENCE.
SIMEON BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HALSTED.

SAFETY LAMP.
No smoke, no chimney. Portable; not dangerous; free from smell; and has all the advantages of gas without the expense. A great Light, all for a penny, for six hours. Sold for full description. For sale, wholesale and retail, by the Lig-ho-ine Fluid and Lamp Company, 13 Gold St.

Dispense with the Laundry.
Patent Self-fastening Steel Collars, 75 cents each; the American do., 50 cents; Steel Bosoms, 75 cents; Steel Wristes, 75 cents. Samples mailed free on receipt of price by OTTO ERNST, Patentee, 62 Bowery, New York.

MAGEE'S PORTABLE AND BRICK
FURNACES
Will consume less fuel, give a purer atmosphere, are more easily and perfectly controlled, than any other in the market. WARRANTED to GIVE SATISFACTION.
MAGEE'S ELEVATED OVEN
RANGES
Are unequaled in economy, convenience, and operation. Both ovens will roast or bake. Either oven can be tested separately. Fire passes equally under the six boiling places. Warranted perfect in their operation, and to do more work with the same amount of fuel than any other patent. Also COOKING STOVES, FIRE PLACE HEATERS, FLAT TOP RANGES, PARLOR STOVES, &c.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.
Office, Wholesale and Retail, 370 Canal St., New York.
JOHN SUMNER.

THE WEBER PIANO
Is considered by the leading Musicians, by the National Piano-Forte Association, the Conservatory of Music, and other Musical Schools, the Best Piano-Forte Manufactured,
because of their GREAT POWER, SYMPATHETIC and BRILLIANT TONE, PERFECT EQUALITY, ELASTIC TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.
Warerooms, 429 Broome St., New York.

Decalcomanie, a Novel and Beautiful Art.
The simplest process to ornament and embellish Porcelain, Glass, Wood, Silk, Leather, etc. Can be practised by every body. F. VALGRAVE, Paterson, 91 Broadway.

$20. G. & S. CRYSTAL D. P. $20.
A year can be realized guilding and painting on the Crystal Dotd Plate. Agents wanted. Stock, Tools, and Instructions sent for $20. L. TODD & CO.,
33 Nassau Street, New York.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & C°
CHAMPAGNE
Is imported from EPERNAY, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in FRANCE. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and consumers acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold in bond or duty paid by A. IV. NITSCH, 55 Beaver St., N.Y.

The Best Juvenile Magazine
NOW PUBLISHED IS
Our Young Folks
Published at Two Dollars a year, 20 cents a single Number, by TICKNOR & FIELDS, 124 Tremont St., Boston.
It is filled with the best literature and the most attractive pictures. In the year 1865 it has reached a circulation of FIFTY THOUSAND COPIES. Send 20 cents for a specimen Number, and you will be sure to subscribe for it for your children.

JEFFERS
ON DECK STILL AT
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

STRASBURGER & NUHN,
65 Maiden Lane,
CORNER OF WILLIAM STREET,
HAVING IMPORTED THE LARGEST ASSORTMENT OF TOYS,
CHINA FANCY GOODS,
BEADS,
NOW OFFER TO BUYERS SUPERIOR INDUCEMENTS FROM AN ENTIRELY NEW AND MOST CAREFULLY-SELECTED STOCK BOUGHT FOR CASH,
At the Lowest Prices.

The Wide World.
One of the best family papers Stories complete. Single copy, 7 cents. Sold at all periodical depots.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer
Has proved itself to be the most perfect preparation for the hair ever offered to the public.
It is a vegetable compound, and contains no injurious properties whatever.
IT WILL RESTORE GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.
It will keep the hair from falling out.
It cleanses the scalp, and makes the hair soft, lustrous, and silken.
It is a splendid hair dressing.
No person, old or young, should fail to use it.
IT IS RECOMMENDED AND SEALED BY THE FIRST MEDICAL AUTHORITY.
Ask for Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, and take no other. R. P. HALL & CO.,
Nashua, N. H., Proprietors.
DEMAS BARNES & CO., Wholesale Agents.
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
469 Broadway (adj. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.

TO KEEP CIDER SWEET use the Siphonic Faucet, to be had at most hardware stores. Manufactured by WM. CLEVELAND, Orange, New Jersey.

Boots—Boots—Boots.
RICHMOND is now prepared to manufacture to measure a superior quality of Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers of every variety for Ladies, Gents, Misses, Boys, and Children. An immense stock of ready-made goods on hand, all of reasonable prices.
C. C. RICHMOND, No. 159 Fulton St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU
HOTTENTOTS

Seen gathering Buchu Leaves at the Cape of Good Hope for
H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist,
594 Broadway, New York.

At the Cape of Good Hope the Hottentots have long used Buchu for a variety of diseases; it was borrowed from those rude practitioners by the English and Dutch physicians on whom recommendation it was employed in Europe, and has now come into general use. It is given chiefly in gravel, chronic catarrh of the bladder, morbid irritation of the bladder and urethra, for female weakness and debility, for prolapsus and bearing down, or prolapsus uteri, diseases of the prostate gland, retention or incontinence of urine, and all diseases requiring the aid of a diuretic arising from a loss of tone in the parts concerned in its evacuation. It is also recommended in cases of dyspepsia, chronic rheumatism, cutaneous affections, and dropsy. To cure these diseases we must bring into action the muscles which are engaged in their various functions. To neglect them, however slight may be the attack, it is sure to affect the bodily health and mental powers. Our flesh and blood are supported from these sources. Persons at every period of life, from infancy to old age, and in every state of health, are liable to be subjects of these diseases. The causes in many instances are unknown. The patient has, however, an admirable remedy in "HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU," and when taken in early stages of the disease none suffer to any extent. It allays pain and inflammation, is free from all injurious properties, pleasant in its taste and odor, and immediate in its action. It is the anchor of hope to the physician, and was always so esteemed by the late eminent Dr. Physic. The proprietor, with upwards of thirty thousand unsolicited certificates, and hundreds of thousands of living witnesses of its curative properties accumulated within fifteen years, has not been in the habit of resorting to their publication. He does not do this from the fact that his remedies rank as a standard; they do not need to be propped up by certificates. The science of medicine, like the Dario column, should stand simple, pure, and majestic, having fact for its base, induction for its pillar, and truth alone for its capital. His Solid and Fluid Extracts embody the full strength of the ingredients of which they are named. They are left to the inspection of all. A ready and conclusive test of their properties will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory. These remedies are prepared by H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist of sixteen years' experience, and we believe them to be reliable—in fact, we have never known an article lacking merit to meet with a permanent success, and Mr. HELMBOLD'S success is certainly prima facia evidence. His Drug and Chemical Warehouse is the oldest in New York in point excelled, if equaled, by any in this country, and we would invite our readers when visiting that city to give him a call and judge for themselves.—N. Y. Weekly Courier, 8, 1864.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 462.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

MEETING OF THE FENIAN CONGRESS IN THE ASSEMBLY BUILDING, PHILADELPHIA.—[SEE PAGE 694.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1865.

REORGANIZATION.

THE Daily Transcript, of Augusta, Georgia, in commenting upon some recent remarks of ours, and with more bitterness than the occasion seems to justify, says that we seriously insist "upon the acceptance of the trite and exploded maxim, borrowed from LOCKE, that all monarchists, red, and black—are born free and equal, when any body who knows any thing of the family relation never saw a child born into a state of equality or found any equality among the little circle who acknowledge the same parentage."

The Transcript is mistaken in supposing that the doctrine of the natural rights of man is borrowed from LOCKE, or is exploded, or is any the less true because KEITH CHANDLER called it a glittering generality. JEFFERSON in the Declaration of Independence, and all the fathers of this country, and with perfect accuracy, declared it self-evident truth. But the equality asserted by them is not an equality of condition or of capacity, any more than of height or weight. The fathers defined the natural rights of which they spoke. They were the equal rights of every man to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They declared the very object of government to be the protection of these rights, and that experience had proved the best system to be that which gave a participation to all the people, not of a class, nor of a family, nor of a race. This was what they meant by saying that governments justly derive their consent of the governed; for experience also proves that the rule of one man, or of one family, or of one class, or of one race, is, in the long run, unjust and oppressive. If the Transcript denies it, it must settle its account with history and human nature. Government exists for man. The maintenance of natural rights inevitably plunges society into war. The practical question, therefore, always is, how shall those rights be best secured?

The Transcript speaks of "Government making laws for its citizens," as if governments were ethereal abstractions. But they are not. They are human devices. The Transcript may think that a monarchy or an oligarchy is the best device. We do not. We believe that we are to be the best which springs from the consent of the governed; and we hold that every political community being morally bound to defend all the natural rights of its individual members should impose no qualification for an equal voice in the government which excludes any great number of them or which does not fairly and readily attained by all. Hence nothing was unsounder or more un-American than Mr. DOUGLAS'S doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty, which was nothing but an assertion of the right of a numerical majority to deprive a minority of their natural rights. He certainly could not be with right. But as good morals and good policy are at last identical, the government which most fully secures the natural rights of every citizen will be the most permanent, the most peaceful, and the most prosperous.

The Transcript further says: "It is needfully mean to urge on a war for the sake of the Union, as HARPER'S man has done; and then when the defeated States are returning, in the observance of all the conditions required by the Executive, to attempt to keep them out of the Union by jeers and innuendoes and affectations of panic terror." This language is again misleading. We have no more desire to keep any State out of the Union than the President has. We wish merely to take care that the Union shall be restored, surely, as it likely to be swiftly, restored. It is a real Union at which we aim, not impeded by distracting elements. In the second sense of the word we have spoken of a sepd speaks of the Union as "the ancient league." In a late letter to the editor of Harper's Magazine General BUTLER also speaks of the measures of the late rebel leaders as "our national affairs," and of JEFFERSON DAVIS as "our chief magistrate." We do not think that persons who hold such views of the late rebellion and of the character of the United States Government are safe depositaries of the honor of that Government. Men who hold the Union to be "a League," and the late conspiracy a "national government, will not be likely to vote taxes to pay for the expense of compelling them to remain in the League or for the cost of overthrowing that "nation." We cannot but fear that when we say that we do not believe the Union would be secure if such were the views of Congress. Will the Transcript tell us why the votes of men should be treated as sincerely favorable to the Union, whose arms, yesterday raised to destroy it, were no laid down, but were overpowered by superior force, while the men themselves profess the same opinions as those which led them to raise their arms?

Our view is that the United States Government is morally bound to require every thing of its lately rebellious citizens which it deems essential to the security of the Union, which it has maintained by so long and terrible a struggle. Certainly those who saved that Government are equally bound not to insult their baffled fellow-citizens. But they are also not less bound to treat with contempt the charge that they are hostile to reunion, because they are averse to haste, and value the utmost care, and prudence, and sagacity in the work of reorganization.

THE PRESIDENT SPEAKS.

In the report of a conversation between the President and Mr. SEWARD, which the President has approved, he expresses himself so that no man can mistake his meaning.

He is glad that the Democratic party professes to agree with his views, and remarks that it is not the first time that he has known a man pretend to differ from another claim the opinions of his antagonist as his own when he came up to them.

He holds, and all this every loyal and sensible citizen agrees with him, that it is better the work of reorganization should be done by the action of the States themselves; "for," he says, "if they are not, the power is in our hands, and we can check them at any stage to the end."

He declares himself equally opposed to State sovereignty and to consolidation.

He holds that no State is out of the Union, and that it is a mere figure of speech to call voting to each one, subject to national control if they go wrong.

If he were in Tennessee he would as a citizen of the State favor negro suffrage upon certain conditions. But universal suffrage in the late rebel States he thinks would produce grave difficulties.

And he declares that for many years he has favored the policy of apportioning representatives to qualified voters; which is the purport of General SCHENK'S proposed amendment to the Constitution. The President is of opinion that this result might be reached in 1872. This, of course, would offer the most stringent argument to the reorganizing States to establish impartial suffrage.

The record of this remarkable conversation will be read with the utmost pleasure and satisfaction by those who revere the Union and the man who has most doubted his fidelity to the principles upon which he was elected, and who have, consequently, never faltered in their support of him. It is the true view of the duty of the Union reorganized upon the fundamental American principle of equal rights, and that no man shall be excluded from a voice in the government by reason of his color; but as he knows such a principle is unpalatable to the whites of the rebel States, he wishes to "give them time to understand their new position."

The great question before us, as MR. LINCOLN said in, How shall we restore the proper constitutional relations in the Union? The President's action is to be judged by its results; and we see no reason to doubt that he and Congress will work harmoniously, and successfully accomplish the work.

MR. ROBINSON'S LETTER.

MR. LUCIUS ROBINSON has written a letter accepting the Albany guests the speciator in Five-Twenty bonds or Seven-Thirty notes. There are over $600,000,000 of the former, and over $800,000,000 of the latter: therefore, if but twenty-enough in Wall Street to corner either of them. And though they will not fluctuate, as the railway shares have done, with the ebb and flow of internal trade, they will naturally be sensitive to changes in the money market, and will probably feel the effect of political events. But they are not marked Grant. What proportion of the Five-Twenty bonds have found a permanent home either in Europe or here can not accurately be determined. It is safe to assume, however, that quite a large amount are still in first hands, and are hypothecated with banks and brokers—that the Five-Twenties by far the greater part are held by national banks and private bankers, who have loaned money on them. All of these securities will be thrown into the market by a continued stringency in money, and the price will naturally fall until it reaches a point at which capitalists will find their present investments to buy them. At 75, for instance, the political prospect being fair, many people would sell their bank stocks and railway bonds—unless they, too, should have declined in proportion—to buy Seven-Thirty notes and Five-Twenty bonds; but if MR. MCCULLOCH persists in attempting to contract the currency, it is hardly likely that the national banks could dispose of the notes they have on hand without putting down the price in the neighborhood.

It seems, of course, a rather alarming prospect, in view of the fact that quite a large proportion of the National bank notes which are current as money are only secured by deposits of Five-Twenty and other United States bonds at 90 cents on the dollar. But after all, Five-Twenty bonds are now selling at about 70 cents on the dollar in gold; and no one, it is to be hoped, expects gold to remain at par at a premium of 46. As gold declines it must be expected that they, like every thing else, will decline likewise, though probably not to a like extent. The prospect is so clear that the event should take no one by surprise.

In England and France public stocks fluctuate with every breath of political news—the inauguration of a ministry, a foreign complication, a rumored conspiracy, and even the bowel complaint of a Prime Minister. It is hardly likely that our public securities will prove equally sensitive to such influences, for the reason that our Government rests upon a more solid basis than the European monarchies, and that here revolutions are not to be dreaded. Still our Government securities will naturally be affected by changes in our foreign relations. Misunderstandings with foreign governments, which may possibly lead to war, will naturally depress them, and the settlement of such difficulties will in like manner cause them to react.

It must be expected, too, that for some years to come difficulties will occur in the collection of taxes, and the valuery of the public creditor will be mooted even in Congress. Thus far no person whose words are worth attention has even hinted at repudiation. But by-and-by, as the pressure of the taxes becomes more severe, during the period preceding the resumption of specie payments, it may be taken for granted that knaves will try to curry favor with tax-payers by advocating at least a reduction of the rate of interest on our securities. It is pretty certain that no such rascally scheme will succeed, but pending its discussion fluctuations in the price of the securities concerned will be inevitable. The Government bonds will fall when the Democratic member from the city of New York denounces the holder of Seven-Thirty notes as a "bloated capitalist;" and will rise again when the Union Secretary of the Treasury demonstrates the necessity of keeping faith with the public creditor.

Pending the war the New York Stock Exchange—one of the most honorable and loyal bodies in the country—made considerable sheer sales of Government bonds. Nothing which looked like an attempt to depreciate the public credit could be endured by its members. But now that the war is over these securities must stand or fall on their own merits, and people who believe they are going to decline will be able to sell them for the best without exposing themselves to the charge of disloyalty. The most inveterate Englishman occasionally sells bonds for the account of the best Frenchmen sell Rentes for the fin prochain; nobody thinks of accusing the sellers of a want of patriotism. They merely think, as our friend MR. RUSSELL said, "as if they had heard bad news."

In the long-run there are very few investments in this country which will pay as handsome and as safe an income as United States securities. They are incomparably superior to those of mercantile and railroad stocks in which men have been accustomed to invest their money. But before the $5,000,000,000 now afloat, are to be floated peaceably, find a permanent resting-place in the pocket-book or trunk of men who have paid for them out-right, and without regard to causes of anxiety or loss and fluctuations in Wall Street, it is on the cards that they must rise and fall very materially many, many times, and that great fortunes will be made and lost in them by speculators.

MR. PHILLIPS'S ORATION.

MEASURED by the great model of Christian character the oration of MR. PHILLIPS is small. The preacher who describes the divine attributes justly calls all men unclean. But there are still some humble pious souls who struggle on, though all the good they can do is to pray, and perhaps deserving of unsparing censure than JAMES IGNATIUS.

America (to actual) is sadly wanting. Measured by the advances we hope and mean to make our present condition is not the million of miles. Measurable there is not a single body of citizens steadily and faithfully striving to secure fair play for every man as fast as practicable, and who may be cheerfully trusted if they feel that some progress has been made.

Yet as we gladly hear the preacher who sends us all to hell because we know that his good will be run and we do only by those who are spurred up to it, and by constantly holding before our eyes the Christian ideal, so we willingly and gratefully listen to the orator who tells us he declares what ought to be done, sneers at those who are busily doing it, as contemptible drones and do-nothings. "Let justice be done," says the orator. Very well, the Union men of the country are securing justice more and more every day. "Let justice be done though the heavens fall," they are assassinating it. Their President is three-fourths rebel, and there is no such thing as a Union party. There is only a ghastly spectre of that name. Liberty is betrayed."

It is no more true than that the house is burning down because some one sees a thief in the road and cries fire from the window. The cry is meant to rouse the neighborhood and frighten the thief away. And these declamations are but a highly metaphorical way of say-

[Illegible] WEED." But has he any more faith in a party controlled and used by VALLANDIGHAM in Ohio, by WOODWARD and REED in Pennsylvania, by THOMAS SEYMOUR and DOCEY in Connecticut, and by HORATIO SEYMOUR and JOHN A. GREEN in New York? There are bad men, he says, in all parties. Does he think there are fewer corrupt leaders in the Democratic than in the Union party?

Besides, MR. ROBINSON was willing to work with MR. WEED in 1856 to secure equal suffrage. Will working with FERNANDO WOOD and JOHN VAN BUREN be more likely to lead to the same result? He speaks of the government of the State as being placed in the hands of MR. WEED, MR. BOOKSTAVER must surely be aware that whatever may be MR. WEED'S "lobby operations," and however adroit a politician he may be, the great body of Union men in the State of New York are with him because he supports their general policy. But he does not determine that policy. And even if he did, if this election also became, what it is not, a mere question of men, would the great principles which are no less dear to us than to MR. ROBINSON be more secure in the hands of HORATIO SEYMOUR or the Albany leaders, with the Copperheads behind them, than in those of THURLOW WEED and the Syracuse leaders, with the great Union party of the last four years behind them?

At this juncture to encourage the political friends with whom we most vital purpose he sympathizes, and to strive to throw the settlement of the Union into the power of those who a year ago declared the war a failure, and who now throw the blame of the war upon loyal men, and to do this because of distrust of one man among many, is a step which would seem to us deplorable in any man, but is profoundly painful in a man like LUCIUS ROBINSON.

SPECULATION IN GOVERNMENTS.

IN an article published in these columns three weeks since, on the subject of speculation in Wall Street, it was explained that at the present time "stocks" mean "railway stocks," and that the speculation means buying or selling Erie or Rock Island. With the exception of the operations of foreign bankers based on variations of price between the Paris and foreign markets, there has been thus far no speculation worth mentioning in Government securities. It is evident, however, that before many months elapse the public will supersede railway stocks as instruments of gambling, and as in England stock speculation means operating in the Funds and in Five-Twenty Bonds, so here within a corresponding brief period Wall Street speculators will confine their dealings to Five-Twenty bonds and Seven-Thirty notes. Sound dividend paying railway shares are rapidly passing into the hands of permanent investors; and as the dollar value of railroads, whose value is uncertain, the experience of the past two or three years has proved that they can be sold short with any degree of safety, as they may be covered by any rise, and it dozens of great operators. They answered the purpose well enough when an operator who bought 5000 shares was considered speculating heavily, but now that single individuals buy or sell 50,000 shares they are dangerous material to speculate in.

The best illustration of the speculator in Five-Twenty bonds or Seven-Thirty notes. There are over $600,000,000 of the former, and over $800,000,000 of the latter: therefore, if but twenty-enough in Wall Street to corner either of them. And though they will not fluctuate, as the railway shares have done, with the ebb and flow of internal trade, they will naturally be sensitive to changes in the money market, and will probably feel the effect of political events. But they are not marked Grant. What proportion of the Five-Twenty bonds have found a permanent home either in Europe or here can not accurately be determined. It is safe to assume, however, that quite a large amount are still in first hands, and are hypothecated with banks and brokers—that the Five-Twenties by far the greater part are held by national banks and private bankers, who have loaned money on them. All of these securities will be thrown into the market by a continued stringency in money, and the price will naturally fall until it reaches a point at which capitalists will find their present investments to buy them. At 75, for instance, the political prospect being fair, many people would sell their bank stocks and railway bonds—unless they, too, should have declined in proportion—to buy Seven-Thirty notes and Five-Twenty bonds; but if MR. MCCULLOCH persists in attempting to contract the currency, it is hardly likely that the national banks could dispose of the notes they have on hand without putting down the price in the neighborhood.

It seems, of course, a rather alarming prospect, in view of the fact that quite a large proportion of the National bank notes which are current as money are only secured by deposits of Five-Twenty and other United States bonds at 90 cents on the dollar. But after all, Five-Twenty bonds are now selling at about 70 cents on the dollar in gold; and no one, it is to be hoped, expects gold to remain at par at a premium of 46. As gold declines it must be ing that we must not tire of well-doing, but secure all that the genius of American institutions promises.

It is in this way, after some wincing, that we accepted MR. WENDELL PHILLIPS's assaults upon PRESIDENT LINCOLN, and that we receive the censure of PRESIDENT JOHNSON. MR. PHILLIPS spares no consideration of policy and means. He cries aloud, "Make the path straight!" whether we are making it straight or not, and whether or not we have any tools to use or hands to use them with. His position is that nothing is done while any thing remains to be done.

The good service of such a man is unquestionable. We do not agree indeed with his estimate of men and affairs. We think it a folly to insist that liberty and mankind have gained nothing by the war. But it is not disgraceable to hear an earnest voice declaring that very thing is not because every thing is not at once gained, for we know that such a voice will keep the victors from sleeping. In this country our fear is not apathy. The rule of progress should be prudence and wisdom. We thank Heaven for the skirmishers, whose shots show us where the battle is to be.

OUR ACCOUNT WITH ENGLAND.

IT now appears that MR. ADAMS did present our little bill to John Bull last April, and that MR. Bull declined to pay or to have the matter left to arbitration, but suggested a "Commission" to settle the question. What the exact difference may be between an arbitration by commissioners and a commission of arbitration we do not know, but MR. ADAMS replied that he doubted if the proposition would be agreeable to his Government.

The British Government gave the rebels belligerent rights before it had heard of the blockade: the British Prime Minister, the British Foreign Minister, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the British Solicitor-General, all virtually sneered at the effort of the United States Government to maintain its existence; and one of them publicly declared the rebellion to be successful in the famous phrase that JEFFERSON DAVIS had "created a nation." Rebel ships of war were openly built in British dock-yards by members of the British Parliament, and, notwithstanding their knowledge of information furnished by the United States Minister, the British Government did not prevent their sailing. British material in the war was not an honest neutrality. Great Britain now refuses to have that question entertained; and the same Government, in the midst of the war, undertook to lecture us upon American internal law, now announces that Great Britain is the best judge of British internal law.

The general position taken by LORD RUSSELL can not be maintained. We have always regarded, and do still regard, serious difficulty between the two countries, if rising into war, as a misfortune for mankind. But surely no sensible Englishman can suppose that, in the record of such real grievances in its hand, the Government of the United States will consent to be shown to the door and kicked down the steps without a word of explanation. If the Commission be substantially an arbitration all may be well. But if Great Britain will not pay, nor submit to arbitration, nor explain, we certainly can not be held responsible for the consequences, however disagreeable they may be.

A DIFFERENCE.

MR. MONTGOMERY BLAIR, the chief orator of the Democratic reconstruction meeting in York, says that the two races in this country can not live together, and that the emancipated slaves must be sent away to colonize upon the border.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON says: "If I were in Tennessee I should try to introduce negro suffrage gradually: first those who had served in the army, those who could read and write, and perhaps a property qualification for others, say $200 or $250."

The President is in favor of not depopulating the country, but of making every honest man a voter in his State. MR. BLAIR, the Postmaster-General, and we believe all true men are of their opinion.

THE OATH.

IN July, 1863, Congress passed a law requiring the following oath of every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or emolument civil, military, or naval, or any other department of the national service, except the President of the United States. The members of the new Congress, therefore, must take this oath:

"I solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto; and I do further swear that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States," etc.

If Congress should be asked to relax the stringency of the oath, it would inevitably and properly say, that whenever it was convinced that the danger has passed away against which the oath is directed, it would cheerfully do so, but that while the danger is still threatening, it must still maintain every defense against it.

This whole matter of reorganization may be settled by the people of the States most vitally concerned. What the country wants of those who make oaths is not oaths, but acts. All the rebel chiefs, from DAVIS and LEE down, had taken enough and broken them. What it wants is an indication of honest intention and fidelity to the Government. It does not want men in Congress who will try to do there what they failed to do on the battlefield. Such a policy is not unreasonable. It springs from no hostility to the rebel States but from love of the Union, and the resolution not to imperil it needlessly.

"DISTINGUISHED STATESMANSHIP."

THE rich fields of the Southern States are waiting for laborers. The laborers are there, the most docile, kind, and tractable in the capable of work and accustomed to the care of the staples, needing only, as the President says, an impartial protection, and by the same security of wages, property, and personal rights that all other people in the country have. Thereupon that "distinguished statesman" MR. MONTGOMERY BLAIR, whom MR. LINCOLN asked to accommodate him and the country by leaving his Cabinet, proposes that the old policies of wealth, is worthy of a man who endeavors at this time to excite sectional animosity.

MR. BLAIR is in great fear of amalgamation. But if there be so insuperable an antipathy of races why should he fear it? Indeed the antipathy is so hopelessly insuperable may be judged from the fact that three-fourths of the lately emancipated population are composed of mulattoes, quadroons, octoroons, octoroons, and still lighter mixtures. They are, as a shrewd observer says, Anglo-African. While the "distinguished statesman" is in the very heat of his argument that the races could not live together it was a cruel question that one of his auditors put to him: "What did JEFFERSON mulatto son say about that?"

Statesmen should try to clear their minds of cant, MR. BLAIR, and then they will be much more "distinguished."

CONFIDENCE MEN.

THE gentlemen who last year at Chicago denounced the war as a failure are the same who this year at Albany hail it as a success. They loudly declare that no kind of interference shall be allowed in the Republic of Mexico. But these are the same men, the Democratic leaders in the State of New York, who three years ago waited upon the British Minister, in the city of New York, to see whether England would not interfere in the Republic of the United States.

The voters of New York will look twice at the credentials of well-known Confidence Men before trusting them.

THE PRESIDENT'S "FRIENDS."

MR. JOHN VAN BUREN, the merry gentleman who leaped from the Buffalo anti-Slavery platform of 1848 to the Cincinnati Democratic party platform of 1864; who in the autumn of 1862 demanded that "the erring sisters" should be allowed to go in the spring of 1863; who declared that they should be compelled to stay; and in the summer of 1864 declared that it was impossible to do so, and who, in the autumn, broke with the autumn of 1864 announced that ANDREW JOHNSON was a bold usurper who violated the Constitution, and in the autumn of 1865 informs us that the only public that he looks upon MR. JOHNSON as patriotic, wise, and prudent.

The World, also, the chief organ of the Chicago "Conservatism" of last year, now takes the President under its special patronage. The World is perhaps the best friend he has, are the only friends he can safely trust. What said this faithful friend of the President eight months ago on the 7th of March, 1865? Only this:

"God bless and spare ABRAHAM LINCOLN! Should this ANDREW JOHNSON become his successor, the decline and fall of the American Republic would smell as rank in history as that of the Roman empire under such atrocious monsters in human shape as NERO and CALIGULA."

Of course the President will desert his old friends of the war for these honest and fair-spoken gentlemen, especially after the result of the elections in all the States that have voted. The new performance of this kind in Chicago company, we trust, serves to amuse the Chief Magistrate and lighten the cares of office. KING CHARLEMAGNE had their jesters. Why should not the President have his merry men?

LEFT-HAND WRITING.

WE recently saw a multitude of specimens of left-hand writing from Union soldiers who have been disabled in the war, and who have been invited by MR. WILLIAM O. BOERNE, editor of the Soldier's Friend, to compete for liberal prizes.

The writing is generally what is called "backhanded," but the neatness of the manuscripts and their legibility, with the good sense and interest of the narrations and observations, are delightful and unexpected. It is really astonishing to see how rapidly a man may learn to write admirably with his left hand. The specimens come from every part of the country, and indicate a deep interest in the thoughtful and generous proposition of MR. BOERNE, which has undoubtedly stimulated many a man to accomplish himself for clerkly occupation. The publicity given to the proposal for competition has been somewhat limited, and the time is extended to the 1st of January. Let every left-handed soldier write a brief sketch, of some three or four hundred words, describing experience, as nearly and legibly as he can, roll it smoothly upon wood, and send it to WM. O. BOERNE, editor of the Soldier's Friend, New York.

HOPELESS LOVE.

TWO lovers sat beside the sea,
The summer moonlight shining down;
She leaned against his breast, and he Smiled at the pride of softened trust;
But with wild look and haggard men
A wretched watcher gazed, unseen.

To tell his love he had not right
Gone four long years, and found in their sight;
And it was thus she met his sight!
He longed to fly—he could not stir—
A fascination held him there,
He staid to watch his death despair.

On them the moon looked down and smiled.
The timid stars gleamed with delight.
The wind stood still, and like a child
The tired sea slept, wrapped in their sight;
But black and wild and weird and dim
Were sky and sea and moon to him.

The voice of her he loved in low
And tender accents reached his ear—
The sweetest music on earth; but oh!
They were not meant for him to hear.
It was unutterable pain
To see, and not another gain.

He looked down on the quiet sea,
And up into the tranquil sky,
And thought for such a wretch as he
How cruel was it that they were so die.
He smiled; he knew a nobler cure
Of grief—to patiently endure.

These quenchless stars, he thought, above,
This sea's illimitable plain,
Show me all of life to love,
Nor all of death to love in vain:
Perhaps in His eternal plan
Grief is the common lot of man.

She laughed a merry laugh, and bent
Her head to meet her lover's kiss,
And he who watched her was content—
He saw that she felt perfect bliss;
He could not forget for grief or ill,
For she he loved was happy still.

He stole a last and lingering look,
He breathed one silent, earnest prayer,
And then like some lost spirit he took
And left her with her lover there;
Wished 't a tear, without a groan,
He was led away, unloved, alone.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

IT never rains but it pours. A short time since and nothing seemed so indefinite and vague as President Johnson's policy and the reconstruction of the Southern States. But now certainly we are not left in the dark as to what the President's policy is. In the first place we have Secretary SEWARD's Auburn speech, from which the most ignorant person can infer that the President and his Cabinet, as also between the present and the last administration. Secretary SEWARD claims for PRESIDENT JOHNSON that he is without partisanship, that he has only the welfare of the country at heart. His policy is conciliatory from the necessities of the case. We must live in the States where the rebellion was, we must show that our position toward them is friendly. "We must trust each other."

Essentially similar views as to the President's policy were expressed by Governor Brownlow in his address on the evening of October 23.

Besides these, MR. SEWARD, the substance of President Johnson's remarks on the subject of reconstruction, and Governor BROWNLOW, during a recent private interview with him, is given, with the President's approval, by Major George L. Stearns, of Massachusetts. We give elsewhere an abstract of the opinions expressed by the President in that interview.

The North Carolina Convention adjourned October 18. At an early stage of the Convention a proposition to repudiate the rebel debt of the State had been tabled. The Convention adopted the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution. This was in accordance with President Johnson's recommendation. It is also understood that the President has had the rebel debt question under consideration, and that every thing of the rebel debt must be repudiated.

The working-men of Boston held a meeting on October 16, at which they adopted an address to their fellow-citizens and nominated Wade Hampton for Governor. In their address they express their belief that the destruction of slavery will ultimately prove a great benefit to all the people of the State, and especially to the working-man, as it will tend to free him from the monopolies of capitalists and dignity labor.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The following twenty-four States have ratified the Constitutional amendment abolishing slavery:

Illinois, Feb. 1, 1865.	Indiana, Feb. 13, 1865.
Rhode Island, Feb. 2, 1865.	Nevada, Feb. 16, 1865.
Maryland, Feb. 3, 1865.	Louisiana, Feb. 17, 1865.
Massachusetts, Feb. 3, 1865.	Maine, Feb. 24, 1865.
New York, Feb. 3, 1865.	Wisconsin, Feb. 24, 1865.
Pennsylvania, Feb. 3, 1865.	Vermont, Mar. 9, 1865.
West Virginia, Feb. 3, 1865.	Tennessee, April 5, 1865.
Michigan, Feb. 3, 1865.	Arkansas, April 14, 1865.
Maine, Feb. 7, 1865.	Connecticut, May 4, 1865.
Ohio, Feb. 10, 1865.	Iowa, June 30, 1865.
Kansas, Feb. 8, 1865.	New Hampshire, June 30, 1865.
Minnesota, Feb. 8, 1865.

East Virginia, Feb. 9, 1865.

It has been in force three years by Delaware, Feb. 8, 1865; by Kentucky, Feb. 23, 1865; and by New Jersey, March 1, 1865. Four States, California, Oregon, and Florida the amendment. North Carolina has embodied the amendment as a part of her State Constitution, and it will be ratified by the Southern States themselves, previous to the 1st of December next.

NEWS ITEMS.

Among the delegates sent to the Georgia State Constitutional reconstruction Convention are Edward C. Anderson, formerly of the Topographical Bureau of General Artillery, and the defender of Fort M'Allister when captured by Sherman; and the venerable JOHNS. HILL, formerly United States Senator.

Under date of November 4th, 1864, MR. SEWARD conveyed a pointed but polite rebuke to our Minister in Denmark, MR. DAYTON, for having exchanged visits with the "envoy of the so-called Imperial Government" of MEXICO.

On the 20th of May, 1864, Mr. Seward assured the Spanish Government very emphatically that the United States would not regard with indifference the attempt to conquer and reannex the territory of Peru.

The notorious guerrilla Champ Ferguson was hanged at Nashville October 20, in accordance with the sentence of the court-martial by which he was tried. Another guerrilla, named Henry G. Magruder, was also executed by hanging at Columbia on the same day.

The late Edward Everett's residence, in Summer Street, Boston, and his entire library is now in course of sale at auction October 18. The house and adjoining grounds brought $50,000, and the library $20,000.

A disastrous fire took place in Charleston, South Carolina, October 18, by which three Blocks, "Thirty-four properties were buried beneath the ruins and fifteen or twenty killed."

During the month of May, 1865, the Secret service of Police arrested 15,818 invalid soldiers in Tennessee, and 24,716 citizens, deserters, and stragglers. The amount to them pensioners will amount to $3,704,487.

The Board of Claims for Kentucky, created by the Legislature, has been adjusted. Nevallotments to the amount of a million and a half have thereby been created, to which a twenty-four million debenzed for paymasters' outrages.

The second session of the Thirty-ninth Congress, this time between the ratifies Prince and Henriette, was decided on Tuesday, October 17, the Secretary of State declared victorious.

Mr. Moses Pets and party, accompanied by Hon. Robert J. Walker and others, visited the Executive mansion October 16, by appointment, to present to President Johnson. The interview was of an interesting character.

Major-General Wilson, the late Superintendent of the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad, has

Jno Davis, brother of Jeff, has made a peremptory demand for the restoration of the Lake Providence property to both of them, and intimates that he will break no delay, but will take possession of the property whether he receives a permit from the military authorities or not.

Major Lewis of Norfolk, who commanded Fort Fisher when it was taken by our forces, has been in Providence, Rhode Island, for several days. The Major will but his record in his hip during the struggle at Fort Fisher has been extracted by a surgeon of the city.

Ex-President Frank Pierce has purchased a snug little place of 40 acres, in Concord, New Hampshire, for Livingston, New Hampshire, north side of Little Bowie Head, and shows a small portion of the Atlantic Ocean.

A railway collision, resulting in the death of one passenger and the serious injury of a large number of persons, took place, on the night of October 23, on the New Haven road. Although of orders is said to have been the cause of the disaster.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE news from South America is favorable to the Brazilians and their allies. Then, instead of the Paraguayans, on the Uruguay, under Duarte, have finally been annihilated near Montevideo, October 19, by the allied Brazilians and Argentines, under Generals Flores and Paunero. The battle took place at Yatay on the right or Corrientes bank of the Uruguay, about three leagues from the Paraguay River. The allies were commanded in chief by President Venancio Flores. Paraguayan ex-President Lopez was shot by Brazilian troops on the 1st of August, while endeavoring to escape to Bolivia. On the other hand, the Brazilian fleet has suffered considerable injury and loss in the passage of Curupaity, protected by the Paraguayans on the heights of Cuevas to prevent the Brazilians from passing right through, and seem to prefer death to laying down their arms. This occurred on the 22d of September. Curupaity is but a phrase of one of the generals opposed to the Paraguayans in the battle, Duarte, the Uruguayan chief, was killed.

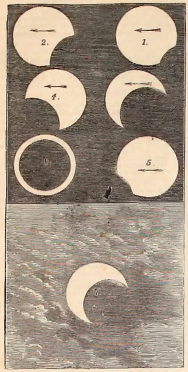
Considerable excitement has been caused in England by the publication there of an abstract of the correspondence between Secretary Seward and Russell on the subject of the depredations of the Shenandoah and other rebel cruisers. The correspondence is understood to be under dispute to the arbitration of neutrals. This Lord Russell declines, pretending to submit the case to a commission. MR. ADAMS doubted the expediency of such a reference, and the rebuke was dropped. It will be remembered that MR. SEWARD, in his recent speech at Auburn, said that President Fredericksburgh would conduct this part of our affairs in such a manner as to yield and reserve nothing that belongs to the honor and consequence of the national dignity and honor. According to MR. SEWARD, the President's message is quite very satisfactory. As the matter at present stands, a portion of the Alabama claims remains unsettled, and a few of the cruisers with the country.

England appears to be afflicted or threatened with every sort of epidemic. They have the yellow-fever at Gibraltar; the cholera has commenced its ravages at Southampton, and a new form of disease has broken out among the cattle, called the Sinderpest.

The cholera has appeared in Paris.

The Emperor of Brazil, with South America, has been threatened by Spain with the loss of the country nearly damaged by the hostility with Peru in her late difficulty.

The Emperor of Austria has issued a proclamation on October 2 announcing the departure of Austria from Mexican affairs. The proclamation contains a severe rebuke to those who persevere in the maintenance of republicanism.



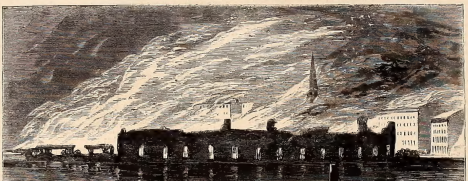


Fig. 1. 9 A.M.
Fig. 2. 9.40 A.M.
Fig. 3. 10.10 A.M.
Fig. 4. 11.15 A.M.
Fig. 5. 12 M.
Fig. 6. Annular eclipse.
Fig. 7. View as seen at 10.30 A.M. in New York.

LOOKING AT THE ECLIPSE, OCTOBER 19, 1865.

THE ECLIPSE.

THE moon, although a very small item in the astral world as compared with the sun, sometimes quite or completely overshadows the latter by her advantages of position relatively to the earth. An illustration of this was given on Thursday, October 19, when the centre of the moon's shadow passed over North America, causing in some of the United States a central, or annular, eclipse of the sun. The path of the central eclipse over the United States will be well represented by nearly a straight line drawn on a map from a point about ten miles north-northeast of Olympia to Jefferson, Missouri, and thence about eight miles northeast of Nashville and of Charleston to the Atlantic: and two other lines drawn parallel thereto, toward the northeast and southwest, and distant therefrom about eighty-five geographical or one hundred English miles, will include all that portion of our country in which the eclipse was annular, or the whole of the moon was seen on the sun; but under the central line only was the ring of uniform width throughout. Within these limits were included St. Louis, Cairo, Savannah, Charleston, Nashville, etc.

BURNING OF THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL FREIGHT DEPOT AT DETROIT, MICHIGAN, OCTOBER 18, 1865. [SKETCHED BY L. T. IVES.]

The eclipse was nearly annular at Chicago, Richmond, Raleigh, and other places.

In this city, at the time of the greatest obscuration (10.30 A.M.) about $\frac{7}{8}$ths of the sun was covered by the shadow. Our readers will remember that on May 26, 1854, there was a similar eclipse, which was completely annular in the Northern States.

The eclipse of last week occasioned great interest, although in this locality the clouds only allowed of an occasional glimpse at the sun.

BURNING OF THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL DEPOT.

THE most destructive conflagration which ever occurred in Detroit took place on the night of October 18. The freight depôt and shed of the Michigan Central Railroad, stored with valuable commodities, and representing property in all portions of the country, were totally destroyed, crippling severely one of the most enterprising of Western railroad corporations.

The fire broke out in a train of cars which was being loaded with freight in a section of the depôt. A barrel of varnish had been broken and its contents were spreading over one of the cars when a light in the hand of one of the workmen coming in contact with the varnish the whole car burst into flames. The fire spread rapidly, all efforts to stay its progress proving futile. In the excitement of the moment the burning car, with those ahead of it on the track, was run from where it was being loaded—near the Third Street end of the depôt—to the westerly end of the structure into the open air. The burning material dropped from the car as it passed, thus firing the building at numerous points at once. Several trains of cars in the vicinity were also burned. The total loss by the fire is estimated at one million of dollars, the loss in freight alone amounting to one-half that sum. It is feared that three men were burned to death, as they have been missing since the fire.

SHIPWRECKED PASSENGERS AND CREW OF THE BRIG "TITANIA."—SKETCHED BY CAPTAIN FRAHER.—[SEE PAGE 693.]

WRECK OF THE "TITANIA."

THE brig Titania, Captain G. W. FRAME, which left Philadelphia on the morning of the 9th October, with a cargo of coal and hay, for Mobile, encountered a severe gale on the night of Friday, October 13, which caused her to spring a leak not long afterward. Both pumps were at once manned; but it was discovered that, despite every effort, the water was gaining steadily. To lighten her as much as possible the cargo on deck was thrown overboard; but on sounding the pumps again five feet of water was found in the hold.

Two days passed in incessant labor at the pumps, and the water rose to eleven feet. In this situation the vessel was liable to sink at any moment, and it was therefore determined to abandon her. A raft, ten feet square, was constructed and launched, and on the 16th the crew and passengers, ten persons in all, embarked upon it. Our illustration on page 692 shows the scene which was presented just before the Titania went down, which was two hours after she had been abandoned. The party consisted of nine men and one woman, the latter being placed on a cask, as the weight of the crew bore down the raft under a foot of water. The story which Captain FRAME tells us of the horrible situation in which he and his companions were placed is very interesting. He says that in this wretched state, without food or water, they floated about twenty-four hours, until, on the 17th, in latitude 32° 20′, and longitude 74°, they were discovered by the United States gunboat Florida, and taken on board. What is most curious in the Captain's story is the fact that all the while they were on the raft an uncommonly large whale floated alongside, "so near that a lady could have reached him with her handkerchief," and only left them on the approarance of the Florida. This whale was about 100 feet long, and as it lay alongside, towering eight feet above the water, it was a source of terrible anxiety and alarm to the unfortunate occupants of the raft. Strange to tell, the whale, through the entire twenty-four hours they were held in suspense, staid beside the raft, doing them no harm, and as soon as the Florida came in sight plunged downward into the sea. The group on the raft were now in greater alarm than before, apprehending that the whale upon returning to the surface might destroy their frail bark. How glad was their surprise, therefore, when they saw arising in the distance a spout of water, and knew that their alarm was groundless! Still more rejoiced were they when just beyond the spout—as if that had been meant for a sign to them—they discerned the Florida. The Captain says also that, although so far out at sea, land-birds continually hovered about them—a circumstance which gave them great comfort, impressing them with the fact that they were the comforting messengers of Him who directs the storm, and who, they trusted, would save them from death.

THE LATE FRANCIS WAYLAND, D.D.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY MANCHESTER BROTHERS AND ANGELL, PROVIDENCE, R. I.]

The officers and crew of the Florida raised the sum of $361, which was presented to the shipwrecked voyagers, one-third being given to the female passenger and the remainder to the crew.

DR. FRANCIS WAYLAND.

THE late Dr. FRANCIS WAYLAND, formerly a President of Brown University, and a well-known writer on Ethical subjects, was born in this city March 11, 1796, and at the time of his death was sixty-nine years of age. In early life he was a tutor at Union College, and subsequently a pastor of the First Baptist Church in Boston.

After five years of faithful ministerial labor Dr. WAYLAND was elected to the Professorship of Mathematics and Natural History at Union College. But soon afterward he was chosen President of Brown University, and in February, 1827, entered upon the duties of that office in which he was to spend the most important portion of his life. He was then just entering upon the thirty-second year of his age. He was in the fullness of his vigor and strength. Few men possessed such a capacity for labor. He threw himself into his work with an energy and an enthusiasm which insured success. During his presidency large additions were made to the philosophical and the chemical apparatus; the library fund, which has secured one of the choicest collections of books in the country, was established; Manning Hall, centaining the spacious chapel and the fine library room, and Rhode Island Hall with its lecture rooms were erected; the college grounds were laid out tastefully, and the President's mansion was built. Dr. WAYLAND served the college as Professor and President for twenty-eight years.

EXAMINATION OF FENIANS BEFORE THE POLICE MAGISTRATE AT DUBLIN, IRELAND.—[SEE PAGE 694.]

DR. WAYLAND is chiefly known by his works, especially his text-books on Political Economy and Moral Science, and his biographies of ADONIRAM and CHALMERS. It has been granted to few men in our generation to achieve as much for education and Christianity as has been accomplished by DR. WAYLAND.

THE FENIAN CONGRESS.

THE exciting topic in our foreign intelligence is still the Fenian movement, its doings and its sufferings. There is a curious and almost indifferent feature connected with the subject, in the fact that while the Fenians in this country, where they can be of no practical benefit to the cause, are rampant and unbridled, on the other side of the Atlantic, where their real field of operation lies, they are quite completely overwhelmed, being opposed by every element both of power and respectability.

An engraving on our first page represents the Assembly Building on Tenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, in which the Fenian Congress was recently convened. At an informal meeting on October 16, an hundred delegates were present from various parts of the country. This was open to the public. Colonel JOHN O'MAHONY, of the Nineteenth New York, was chosen the Head Centre of the order, was present, though originally not in favor of the meeting. He had an address which he published to the presence with them of a special envoy from the Irish Republican Brotherhood who would report for action such detail concerning organizing news. He said the persecution of the body by the English Government was only an acknowledgment of the power of the Fenian Order. Ireland Britain was now satisfied that the movement was no sham. The subsequent action of the Congress was with closed doors, JOHN O'MAHONY being President.

On the night of the 18th the President of the Central Council, Col. JAMES R. ROBERTS, held a telegraphic dispatch received by Mr. GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN from Secretary SEWARD "denouncing the calumny of the English press." The Convention then adjourned and proceeded to the Academy of Music to hear an address from Mr. TRAIN. The oration was characteristic of the orator, which is perhaps all that need be said on the subject.

But, as we have already intimated, the Fenians in this country, though they are here most powerful, and have here full license of speech and intercourse, are here in the service in the main of those they uphold. Indeed, while they give apparent encouragement to their brethren in Ireland, it is an encouragement which is to the latter deceptive and ruinous.

In Ireland there is no reason for the Fenians to hope for success. Our illustration on page 699 represents the trial before a Dublin magistrate of six Fenian prisoners. They were the leading spirits implicated in the authorship and publication of the Irish People. It will go hard with the accused. They are charged with an intention to subvert the government and establish an independent republic. The law-officer of the Crown declares that a part of agrarianism forms no small part of the policy of these Fenians. The lower classes were taught by them to expect that they might have a share of the property, real and personal, of the country; that the leases, by which one man held more property than another, were unjust, and that the donations of the revolution were to be commenced by an indiscriminate massacre. The charges that the Fenians had received large sums of money from America. JOHN STEPHENS, the principal agent of the conspiracy, had escaped. He was arrested by the law officer that a connection could be traced between Ireland (one of the prisoners, now under sentence of the Irish People, and Colonel JOHN O'MAHONY, the American "Head Centre" of the Order.

Since the arrest of the Irish People, its successor, the Connaught Patriot, has been seized, and its editor, O'BRENNAN, and the printer have been arrested and committed for trial.

FIRE AT BELFAST, MAINE.

ON page 700 we give a sketch of a terrible conflagration that occurred at Belfast, Maine, on the night of October 14, by which a large portion of the city was destroyed. Belfast is a city of about eight thousand inhabitants, situated on Penobscot Bay, and is one of the most beautiful and flourishing towns in Maine. The fire, which is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, broke out in a shop on one of the wharves about eleven o clock in the evening, and was not subdued until seven o'clock the next morning. In this time one hundred and thirty buildings were consumed, twenty of the principal business establishments of the city destroyed, and nearly one hundred families made homeless. The estimated loss is three hundred thousand dollars.

Our sketch was taken on the spot by Mr. WILLIAM M. HALL, an artist of Belfast, and is not only a perfect representation of the conflagration while at its height, but also a correct and striking view of the lower part of the city.

THE ORIGIN OF ROAST PIG.

MANNERS, says a Chinese manuscript, which my friend M. was obliging enough to read and explain to me, for the first seventy thousand ages she their meat raw, clawing it or biting it from the living animal, just as they do in Abyssinia to this day.

This period is not obscurely hinted at by their great Confucius, in the second chapter of his Mundane Mutations, where he designates a kind of goldon age by the term Ou-fong. Literally the Cook's Holiday. The manuscript goes on to say that the art of roasting, or rather broiling (which I take to be the elder brother), was accidentally discovered in the manner following:

The swine-herd, Ho-ti, having gone out into the wood one morning, as his manner was, to collect food for his hogs, left his cottage in the care of his eldest son, Bo-bo, a great lubbody boy, who, being fond of playing with fire, as younkers of his age commonly are, let some sparks escape into a bundle of straw, which, kindling quickly, spread the conflagration over every part of their poor mansion, till it was reduced to ashes. Bo-bo burned within the (a sorry antediluvian makeshift of a building you may think, but what was of more importance, there was litter of new-farrowed pigs, no less than nine in number, perished. China pigs have been estimated to be the most delicate feeders in the universal periods that we read of. Bo-bo was in the utmost consternation, as you may think, not so much for the sake of the tenement, which his father, as he could easily build up again with a few dry bunches and the labor of an hour or two at any time, as for the loss of the pigs.

While he was thinking what he should say to his father, and wringing his hands over the smoking remnants of one of those untimely sufferers, an odor assailed his nostrils unlike any scent which he had before experienced. Where could it proceed from? Not from the burned cottage—he had smelled that smell before: indeed, this was by no means the first accident of the kind which had unwittingly brought the negligence of this unwieldy young fire-brand—much to his ill peace of his father, and his mother, wood, or flower. A premonitory moistening at the same time overflowed his nether lip. He knew not what to make of these symptoms. He felt like to die, if there were any signs of life in it. He burned his fingers, and to cool them he applied them, in his hurry, to his bottom, to his ears, and to the scratches of the scorched skin had come away with his fingers, and for the first time in his life he was unable to tell, indeed, for before him no man had known it) he tasted—cooking! Again he felt and fumbled at the pig, and burned his fingers more than ever. He licked his fingers from a sort of habit. The truth at length broke into his slow understanding that it was the pig that smelled and tasted so good, and so delicious; and surrendering himself up to the new-born pleasure, he fell to, like a Christian, to the licking of the scorched skin with the flesh next it, and was cramming it down his throat in his beastly fashion, when his father entered, and, seeing the smoking rafters, armed with retributory cudgel; and finding how affairs stood, began to rain blows upon the young cook's head and shoulders, in which exercise which Bo-bo heeded not any more than if they had been flies. The tickling pleasure which he experienced in his lower regions so much obscured his senses as to allow him to receive, without hardly appreciating, the application to his shoulders. He could not beat him from his pig till he had fairly made an end of it; when, becoming a little more sensible of the pain inflicted upon him, the following dialogue ensued:

"You grievous whelp, what have you got there, devouring? Is it not enough that you have burned me down three houses with your dog's tricks, and be hanged to you? What have you got there, I say? I know not what? What have you got there, I say?"

"Oh, father, the pig—the pig!" Do come and taste how nice the pig is!"

The ears of Ho-ti tingled with horror. He cursed his son, and he cursed himself that ever he should have begot a son that should eat pig.

Bo-bo, whose scent was wonderfully sharpened since morning, soon rubbed out another pig, and fairly reading his father's mind, began, with a most significance into the fists of Ho-ti, still shouting out, "Eat, eat, eat the burned pig, father; eat, eat, eat!"

Ho-ti with sudden fierce ejaculations, cramming all the while as if he would choke.

Then a trembling fit came upon him. He grasped the abominable thing, wavering whether he should not put his son to death for an unnatural young monster, which, nevertheless, common fingers as it had done his son's, and applying the same remedy to them, he in his turn tasted some of its flavor, which proved so delectable, that he would for a pretense, proved not altogether displeasing to him. In conclusion (for the philosophy of this little tedious) both father and son fairly sat down to the mess, and never left off till they had dispatched all that remained of the litter.

Bo-bo was strictly enjoined not to let the secret escape, for the neighbors would certainly have stoned them for a couple of abominable wretches, who could think of improving upon the good meat which God had sent them. Nevertheless strange stories got about. It was observed that Ho-ti's cottage was burned down now more frequently than ever. Nothing else from the time forward, in fact, would break out in broad day, others in the night-time. As often as the sow farrowed, so sure was the house to be burned. Ho-ti was accused of "burning," which was the more remarkable, instead of snatching his son, seemed to grow more indulgent to him than ever. At length, after a great many houses had been burned down now more frequently than ever. Nothing else from the time forward, in fact, would break out in broad day, others in the night-time. As often as the sow farrowed, so sure was the house to be burned. Ho-ti was accused of "burning," which was the more remarkable, instead of snatching his son, seemed to grow more indulgent to him than ever. At length, after a great many houses had been burned down, and many people burned in the flames, Ho-ti and his son were brought before the tribunal of the country, and put on their trial. Evidence was given, the obnoxious food itself produced in court, and verdict about to be pronounced, when the culprits' counsel arose, and submitted that some of the burned pig, of which the culprits stood accused, might be handed into the box. He handed it to the learned judge, who, after turning their fingers as Bo-bo and his father had done before them, and smacking promptly to each of them the same remedy, against the face of all the facts, and the clearest charge which judge had ever given—to the surprise of the whole Court, counsellors, strangers, reporters, and all present—without leaving the box, or any manner of consultation whatever, they brought in a simultaneous verdict of Not Guilty.

The judge, who was a shrewd fellow, winked at the manifest iniquity of the decision; and, when the Court was dismissed, went privily and bought up all the pigs that could be had for love or money. In a few days he had collected a great many, and set to be on fire. The thing took wing, and now there was nothing to be seen but fires in every direction. Fuel and pigs grew enormously dear all over the district. The insurance offices one and all shut up shop. People built slighter and slighter every day, until it was feared that the very science of architecture would in no long time be lost to the world. Thus this custom of firing houses continued, till, in process of time, says the manuscript, a sage arose, like our Locke, who made a discovery that the flesh of swine, or indeed of any other animal, might be cooked (burned, as they called it) without the necessity of consuming the house to dress it in. That first began the rude form of a gridiron. Roasting by the string was a matter of a century or two later —I forget in whose dynasty. By such slow degrees, concludes the manuscript, do the most useful and astonishing of the most obvious arts make their way among mankind.

Without placing too implicit faith on the account thus given, it may be observed, that if a worthy contexture so dangerous an experiment as setting houses on fire (especially in those days) could be assigned in favor of any culinary object, that powerful and excuse might be found in ROAST PIG.

THE PERSIAN FORTUNE-TELLER.

A PERSIAN girl would know her fate:
Her lover was afar,
She breathed no spell of awful weight;
Her only charm was sorcerer's guile;
Dark secrets to unbar.

But high and low would be her own rose bower.
To read her doom in an opening flower.

Her lover to the war had gone:
And then to the rose she spoke her errand:
She kissed of her rose-buds the fairest one
And hushed, lest the rose heard by none
Whispering the name she loved:
She must watch that flower the livelong day.
To mark if the leaves should wither away.

Ere noontide passed the flower she chose
Had withered at the core!
Yet she sat there through the day's bright close,
And the moon's pale reign, till the small stars rose,
And her rose-bud was no more.

Still she sat—her white hand pillowed her head,
She seemed to gaze—but her soul had fled!

ALL-HALLOW EVE.

I HAD just one year of pure, bright happiness given to me by the Lord when I was a young fellow of twenty-one. Then it's away again when life saw fit—maybe I didn't deserve it: but I'm sure it made me none the worse while it lasted, for it has made me best in the thinking of it, ever since.

Somehow the angels put in my way the dearest, brightest girl that ever was, and I married her, no matter how I ever brought her to like me; and yet who did love me about as I loved her. She lived to wear the wedding-ring I put upon her finger, to sleep a few nights in my bosom, and then God took her. They said she wasn't meant to live a long life any more than I was meant to live—the violets she grew on, or any but just the girl she was—with fair color curling hair, and blue eyes and with dimples in them like a baby's—oh! little hands, that turned cold in my own as I held them!

I was not a boy then. I was either beg or work. Every one couldn't take me down to the begging point; and I wouldn't go on either at my old place, taking my lower money night to my mother's house, or passing it to sleep at mother's, as she wanted me to. I'd work for her, and to myself, that I'd lose my senses that way, and die a maniac. So I found something to do that took me away travelling over the North and South, and often as far back as the Mississippi. Always moving, always busy, never forgetting her, but never giving myself time to think of my memory.

Once a year, or so—maybe at Christmas, or Thanksgiving—I'd go home—Liverpool—and on my way back to the old folks, and then my room was always ready and mother waiting for me. I wouldn't stay long, often tried to, but couldn't take, but it was no use. I'd go to the grave-yard and find the little stone, with rose and dew-plant all about it, and the grass was there, and yet I couldn't get it out of my head that if I could but go into out little house I should find her there, bright and beautiful. And in the walks by the river and through the woods I've felt my heart beat as if it would burst out at sound of a footfall, or a round bird and the dress—as though there were a chance of coming across her.

Couldn't, you see—I had to go again. It was always so. I didn't talk much about it—hasn't to any one, I reckon, since. One year I had not been home at all: until October came, and I saw all the trees on the old place were all turning to red and gold, and that the pumpkins were ripening in the leaves, and in the sweet, misty October afternoons mother sat knitting on the porch, thinking of Jem fun. I asked my mother if Nell had been absent for any time, and she declared not one had left the room. I took Nell herself aside and asked her, seriously and angrily, what she meant by sending some one after me to mock and startle me when she knew why I visited the grave-yard. I spoke to her so strongly that I brought tears into her eyes, and for once she answered seriously. I believed when I left her that she told the truth and knew nothing of the circumstance.

Then who was in the grave-yard? No one who lived in the village. I knew every child in the quiet place by sight; and when I asked mother, describing her as a person I had met, who the woman was, she said at once, "I know of no one who looks in the least like that in Stratton."

Well, I kept my own counsel and told what I had seen to no one, after a while the restless feeling came upon me and I left home once more. Traveling with a few sample of handsome goods on my business—over the States, and keeping busy and growing more serious and quiet and middle-aged looking every day of my life, I was ten years older in looks and feelings than any man of my age I ever met.

I went home off and on, and whenever I found myself in the old house I thought of my Halloweve vision. But I never saw the face again except in my dreams. Sometimes I did dream of the face, and I never forgot it—it was too peculiar for that. When the war broke out Nell was married, and my uncle died. Mother thought I had done a terrible thing, and cried over me in her sublime old fashion, but I was sound and firm. But it was the best thing I could have done in every sense. It made a man of me again. The camp life, the marching, the long marches, the midnight watches, the privations and exertions, were better than the best tonics. I grew strong in mind and body. I did my best. A private soldier can not do much to distinguish himself, but no one can say that I was a coward. I never tried to fling my life away, but it was not so precious that I was willing to lose some for it. I was wounded and I was sick, but I was always slightly, and, the war over, found myself, with all my limbs and senses, ready to fling my cap up with the best and cry, "Hurrah!" But the old Union?" and somehow the Southern soil had a charm for me, and I didn't care to leave it.

I used to be thinking about with my rifle on my shoulder alone, sometimes, for whole days together. Once I came to places where whole and family mansions had been burned down, and there were but tottering walls and crumbled mortar and charred beams left, and sit and wonder who had lived there and what their fate had been. And sometimes I had long talks with colored folks who had been slaves, or with men who had been rich and were poor as beggars now.

Mother—let me see—"to be sure," she wrote, "that I was safe;" and I meant to go soon, but kept putting off the journey from day to day, as though one obtained one.

It was five years, nearly six, since I had been to Stratton. There had been changes there, and Cousin Nell was married. A child or two had been laid through the village, absolutely cutting away one end of father's farm, which was almost the only land I had ever seen to the west of the old place. I should hardly know it, said mother. Altogether it seemed a lifetime since I had left, and I dread my rifle. Time always seems long when many events and many changes crowd close together.

Wandering at last into one dim little church which stood upon a little elevation amidst a group of trees not far from Richmond. There had been no burning there, but the place looked fearfully neglected. The windows had been beaten in, the porch and shutters broken. There were bits of broken furniture scattered about, and fragments of elegant curtains at the windows. Not a sign of life any where, but it seemed plain that a well-to-do family had lived there not long ago. The place interested me, and I was seized with a fancy for entering and seeing the inside of it.

If I had been a poet I think I could have written a poem then. You never saw a place so suggestive of past household happiness. The pews, the parlor, were portraits hanging on the wall still and slashed. A piece, beaten, as if in sport, of frolic, was broken down. A work-table shivered and smashed amidst soiled worsted and rusty knitting-needles. A thousand things of home comfort telling the same tale. Doubtless it was a rebel's home, and I, you know, had fought those rebels and sent a ball to the heart of one or two of them, so felt the tears come into my eyes as I looked around.

In one room was a great chair that I knew at once it might have been "grandfather's" or "grandmother's chair," and to that I sat down at last.

I had been walking all day. I was very tired and very drowsy. In ten minutes I fell asleep. How long I slept I do not know. When I opened my eyes I was through the broken window, and was setting behind the dark trees that bordered the prospect. It was late. I had a long way yet to walk before I could reach the place where I intended to sleep that night; and I started up in haste to find myself face to face with a woman.

A young woman, dressed in black, with straight features and a slender form—with eyes black as night, and a mass of flaxen hair that framed her face—with a mole upon her neck, and hanging over her breast a golden cross suspended from a chain. The woman, a creation of a moment, and one that I met in the Stratton church-yard!

I start involuntarily. Unless you have seen or fancied a ghost you'll never know how I felt, until I heard her cry out and beg me not to harm her, and knew she was quite human. Then my senses returned to me.

I bowed—apologized for having given her alarm—told her that I had believed the place untenanted, and so felt at liberty to rest there, and departed.

All the while receiving no answer from her, I think her terror was too great to allow her to speak. I made my way down the broken steps and out into the tangled garden. I believed that I was mad. The one realization of my vision would be left behind me as that had been. But, as though Fate had some hand in the matter, at the very gate my rifle, carelessly held, caught in some creepers and went off, sending the charge into my side. The blood poured out in a stream. I tried to stagger on, but was too weak in a moment.

The next thing I knew I was outstretched upon the grass, and over me bent that girl with the fair hair and black eyes, and an old negro.

"He is hurt?" I heard her ask.

"Mighty bad, Missee."

"We must not let him die for want of care. He is our enemy; but we should forgive our enemies, you know, Pomp."

She spoke coldly, as to an enemy, but with some womanly pity in her eyes nevertheless.

When I thanked her she bowed and answered courteously that she had done very little.

"Nobody knows what I have done more if I could," she said. "I have always been taught to return good for evil if I had the opportunity."

Short speech hurt me. I was the enemy of all rebels and traitors, but I did not wish to be hers, though she was a rebel's daughter.

I suppose stranger feelings never fell to any man's share than those I had when I looked at that girl, and knew that she was my enemy. And that is why I was her face I had seen on Hallow Eve. And why did I see it, and how? What was she to be to me in the future? Was I to see her five years less before? It was more than I could answer.

Nobody but the old negro knew that she was a rebel family—mad, hot-blooded Southerners. The father had been a colonel in the rebel army, and the son had fought under him. Both were killed in the same battle, and the wife and mother died of grief. Only this girl was left, and she had come back to the ruined home to live—because she had no other place to live.

"I don't suppose all gone," said Scip; "but it only a-gwine to leave Miss Grace. I stays to protect her, I does. Laws, I tored her when she was a baby, she was so high. Laws, Missee, Old Uncle Scip can't leave Miss Grace nohow."

I asked one other question: "Has your mistress never spoken of me, she will be likely to marry, now this war is over?"

And Scip answered:

"No, Massa, dere ain't nobody but Scip, nowhere."

Well, there I was, and there I staid longer than I expected to, for the wound inflamed and a fever set in, and I had a chance of trying what the next world was like. Sometimes I think that some of the distresses nursed me through it, and when I was at last able to walk about, I never think of any woman as a wife. I had meant it. Of any other I never should, but that vision of her had its effect. It was a mystery, but I was bewitched with it. I was sent to love and cherish her. It was not my seeking; Fate had done it all. So I let Love in and he grew strong. It was not to be resisted. She was not to be the enemy of her people—hard to pull down the barrier between "North" and "South" that was built between us; but I did it at last, and she promised to be my wife, and go home with me to the old place, where mother was living, and be a Northerner. And though I had not forgotten Amy, I was happy in a sober, quiet way, and very proud and fond of her.

I had never told her my story of Hallow Eve. I was not sure that I should. I thought that, when I had found her and for our marriage, we were walking in the ruined, choked-up garden, when Grace put her head and arm upon my breast.

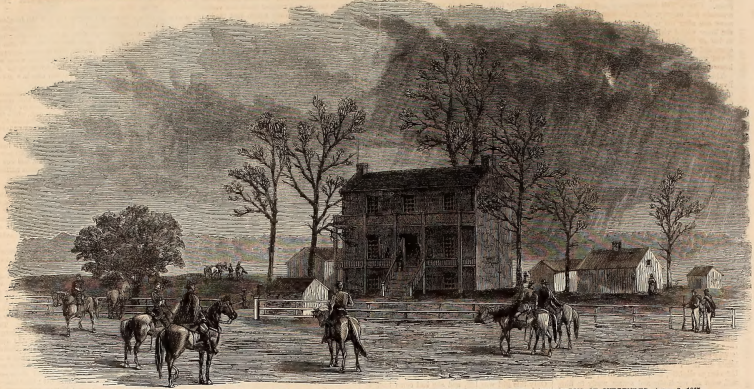
"Jem, are you superstitious?" she said.

"No—yes—I don't know."

"I wish you were not, for I want to tell you something I shall never dare to else."

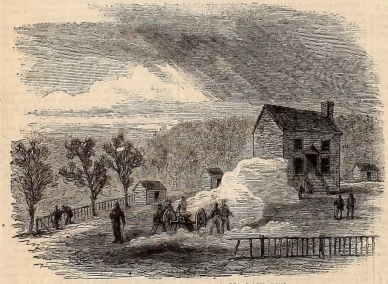
"Say I an then."

"I saw you on your wraith long before we ever met," said Grace. "Don't laugh. Did you ever hear of All-Hallow Eve? Or even, as it is called in rural Devon. You know the odd superstition about seeing one's future lover?"



What was I going to say? I could only make a sign in the affirmative and listen.

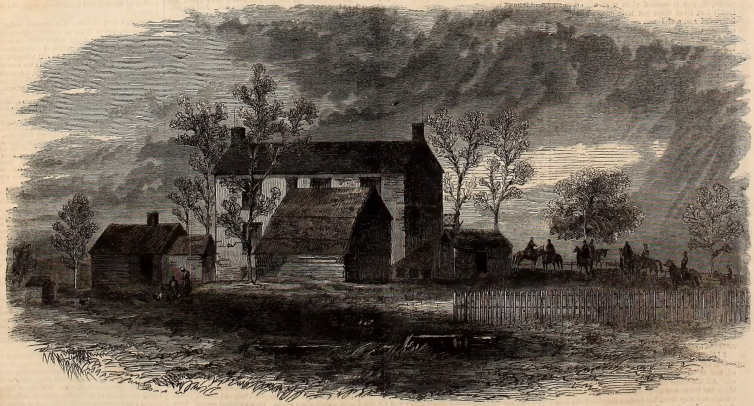
Only for what I am going to tell you I never could have guessed at it," she said; "and Grace.



"It seemed so wrong that I should like an acknowledged enemy of my kindred at first. But I did—I did—Hallow Eve. I got out in it so plainly I saw that was useless. It was so strange a thing. Five years ago, nearly. I was on a visit to my cousin States with mother.

We passed through a place called Stratton, and staid with a cousin of mine there a day or two. It was the day after All-Hallow Eve. We had never taken any notice of it, and it was fun to me to see how some of the girls believed in the result of their charms. Some declared were afraid to try others at all. I was only seventeen, and was more than half a drop of coward's blood in my veins, nor until that day an ounce of superstition. So when they dared me to go into the haunted church-yard at midnight and walk seven times around the church three times, I went, meaning to frighten them by a fearful story when I came back. It was the brightest night I ever saw, just like day. I ran about the building twice without adventure, but the third time, exactly as the last seed dropped

SURRENDER OF GEN. LEE'S ARMY, APRIL 9, 1865.—FROM SKETCHES BY COL. BATTERSBY OF THE 1ST NEW YORK CAVALRY.—[SEE PAGE 698.]



FRONT VIEW OF MR. W. M'LEAN'S HOUSE, AT APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE, VIRGINIA, IN WHICH GENERAL LEE SIGNED THE TERMS OF SURRENDER, APRIL 9, 1865.

GENERAL LEE'S ARMY FIRING ITS LAST GUN.

MAJOR HOWE'S GRAVE, AT THE CHURCH NEAR APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE.

REAR VIEW OF MR. W. M'LEAN'S HOUSE, APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE, VIRGINIA.

THE REBEL ARMY AS IT LAY ON CONNER'S FARM, AT APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE, VIRGINIA, AT THE MOMENT GENERAL LEE ANNOUNCED THE TERMS OF SURRENDER, APRIL 9, 1865.—SKETCHED BY COL. BATTERSBY.—[SEE PAGE 698.]

SURRENDER OF LEE'S ARMY.

We give on pages 696 and 697 several illustrations of the most interesting event of the war—General Lee's Surrender at Appomattox Court House, April 9, 1865. The artist, Colonel BATTERSBY, of the First New York Cavalry, gives the following description of the leading events illustrated:

On the 8th of April Lee was pressed sorely to the wall, and his surrounding doom was known as well to his army as the other.

About this time before sunset, as the third brigade of Crook's Division moved up toward Appomattox station, still pushing into the enemy's left flank, Lee's artillery, and all the artillery he could spare at Appomattox Station, and the wagon train of the army reached the little village, a cavalcade style and mode of warfare, Lee opined that the last gun of the war had been fired, the last shot exchanged, round shot and shell, which recognized no truce, no parley but unconditional surrender, and that long after the fifteen minutes eighty-five minutes might elapse before the order would reach the front to cease the onward progress of General Custer and his followers.

Custer's division rode on to the station, and just after sunset, while the gallant Howe 5th Regulars, the 1st Michigan, and the first brigade of Devin's division were pressing on the left flank of the rear guard,

About half a mile from the Station, and on the left hand side of the road leading to it, there is a church. This building was immediately converted into a hospital, and long before dark there was gathering in and around it no small throng of wounded and dying of both blue and gray. Two third brigade, which was composed of the First, Second, and Third Virginia, and First and Second New Jersey Cavalry regiments, and had been in the advance at Dinwiddie Court House, Sailor's Creek, and Five Forks, was in the advance on this occasion. A squadron of the First West Virginia Cavalry, under Major Hall of that regiment, was passed forward to the Station just before dark, and this is where the gallant Howe 5th Regulars, Colonel Lord, and was carried by some of his faithful men to the church, where in the scanty shrubbery which fringed the building he was buried, rolled up in his cloak, without formality, in one of the shallow graves scooped out by the shells.

In the death of Howe his regiment lost a most valuable officer, and a man admired and respected by all of the division. Major Howe was the last of a noble family of five brothers, all of whom have laid down their lives in the war.

The scenes at the Station and in its vicinity are indescribable. What if the scenes were grand and awful? The flight, the rout, the pursuit, the spiking of the burning guns, the hasty and unconcerned manner in which the rebel officers and men left the field in rushing the fearless enemy to desperation or victory or death, the wild cheers of the victors and howls plunging in their fence and ditch, their mad strife and struggle into every conceivable road and the terrain death; the panting, quick and tremulous, and silent and rapid breathing of the pursuers, the wild hurrah, as the sound of death rose 60? No description can give an idea of these or do full conception. Long after dusk and when the very nerves are strained to feel and comprehend the distance nearby.

There was a long train of cars bound for Danville and filled with the most valuable commissary stores of the army got aboard away in any train. The advanced squadrons headed off the train just at the station, and the rear guard came coming up attacked the rear, setting fire to the engine (which was in position and ready) and to some of the mules and horses in the wagon-train and cutting every thing loose, and leaving general havoc in the rear. Some of what was brought to a stand from a wild and headlong career.

When the wagon-train was attacked the drivers ran away or were shot, the four leading mules in the teams swung around on the wheel mules, and in this position they were cut and hacked one on top of the other, the dying and lying themselves up in the harness like so many lions in a den. That day, some fifteen miles from the Station, while streams of blood ran over the ground; and to render the scene more awful and terrible, the wagons and ambulances were fired, and in a short time some of these poor animals were entirely roasted alive. Custer's and Crook's well-defended field-battery was nothing to it—the fire more of the lesser evil.

During the evening of the 8th General Ferraro's head-quarters were driven by four cannon-shots from the front, driven by the shrunn hospital, and the General's entire command was in position and waiting the order to attack the enemy's left flank. A short fight took place on the morning of the 9th, but it was only a feint, to hold the division to make our line around the enemy complete.

Through the night and early morning the rebels kept moving up to the front by brigades. They were welcome, for the enemy had lost heavily, and his numbers were completely changed order. One hundred and fifty pieces of artillery were brought up to the front as skirmishers.

Sporadic firing set in. The line is kept up and down, and nobody is hit, and each man has some story or more matter-of-fact, unadorned narrative, about wounds, or rifles, which can be fired off as rapidly as a man can draw the trigger.

The rebels were driven pell-mell through the town of Appomattox, but whenever willing that the fight in front is weak, and the poor dragged-out cavalry horse is spared the labor of charging on human flesh. Custer rode all along the road by scattered carriage-boxes, hysterics, funerals, baby-cots, and tent furniture, by broken down stocks, and in fact every thing that a soldier had to fight with or leave away.

For ages to come our posterity will take no small degree of interest in this little, obscure village of Appomattox. On entering the town from the station, which is about three miles off, the first house on the left is a small cottage with a well-built double brick house, with a small green lawn in front. In the year 1861 Wilmer McLEAN lived here, but in the summer of 1861 lived at Bull Run and owned the farm on which the first and famous battle of Manassas was fought, and in consequence of the disturbed state of the country and the proximity of the house to the scene of battle abandoned his place and took refuge in the distant town of Appomattox, where the famous house now stands (April 6-9). He purchased some land and settled quietly down, and in the year 1865 was living in the house at the corner of the road, the Lynchburg and Petersburg road, which the house of Egypt swept and devoured every day before the Lord. He followed him; for on the 9th day of April four years after he left the Bull Run farm, the Southern army was surrendered at Appomattox, and Wilmer McLEAN as well as the first was fought on his farm.

Mr. McLEAN is a man of the South-side, and a courteous gentleman, and although no doubt proud of having his house used as the headquarters of the two leading Generals GRANT and LEE made of it, he was not a little annoyed at being forced to keep the chairs and table on which GRANT and LEE on this ever-memorable and august occasion.

The widow of Mr. McLEAN's household, as the story went, all while GRANT and LEE were inside, repaired to the left front and right rear of the establishments, and when the surrender took place early in the season there is no foliage represented on the bottom-land immediately in front, but the apple and peach trees were in full bloom.

A ——— Southern officer is represented as an apple-orchard on the right of the house, waiting to accompany General Lee's party. General Lee's party is represented on the extreme right of the group from the front of the house.

The second house to the left is the centre of the town. At the farther end of the town from the station is the home of Mr. PEARE. This house is situated close by the road leading to where the Southern army was drawn up during the negotiations, and occupies the highest position in town. It was in the yard of this house that the last shot of the war was fired. It was a 20-pound howitzer, and when Mr. PEARE saw the danger he was in, he took his family in a wood in the rear of the house, and there until the Federal cavalry advanced and forced the withdrawal of the gun.

This was the gun that fired the last shot on this occasion, at the close of the war. It fired over the heads of the gun out of danger the gunners left their horses standing there, and this action and that remained with the gun, but that was fired by Lee's army is now in my possession.

The large engraving on page 697 represents the position of the rebel army as General Lee rode back from the Appomattox to announce the news of the surrender. The figures in the fore-ground are those of Union officers and soldiers holding an advanced position in the enemy's front. Between the two armies, though not visible in the illustration, flows the Appomattox River.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXIII.

MR. TREFALDEN.

MR. TREFALDEN was, undeniably, a very gentlemanly man. His manners were courteous his exterior was prepossessing; and there was an air of self-possession about him that he said and did which made his society very agreeable. He talked well about what he had read and seen; and if even his knowledge of things lying beyond the radius of his own profession was somewhat superficial, he knew, at all events, how to turn it to the best account. At the same time there was nothing of the brilliant raconteur about him. He never liked to monopolize, never indulged in flashes of sarcasm, nor condescended to make puns, like many men whose abilities were inferior to his own. He was a man of quiet tastes, a vein of subdued pleasantry running through his conversation which, although it was not witty, was very well-bred.

Most people liked him; and it was a noticeable fact, that, within the wide circle of his business acquaintances, the best bred people were those whose disposition toward him was the most friendly. Lord Cashlemere thought very highly of him. Viscount Esher, whose legal affairs he had transacted for the last ten years, was accustomed to speak of him in terms which were particularly flattering upon the lips of that stately gentleman of the old school. The Rev. Mr. Bloomsbury, the Rector of Ipswich, and other noblemen of equal standing, looked upon him as quite a desirable person to know. Indeed, he was approved of William Trefalden to a degree that was almost cordial, and made a point of accosting him very graciously whenever he went down into Surrey.

By mere men of business—such men, for instance, as Laurence Greatorex—he was by no means so favorably regarded. They could not appreciate his manner. It was too finished, too elaborate. His manner was precisely the one thing they most of all disliked and mistrusted. They could never trust his words nor believe in his looks. Longer gain the smallest insight into his opinions and character. They acknowledged that he was a lawyer; but they would have added, by adding that he was "too clever by half." In short, William Trefalden's popularity lay, for the most part, to the credit of his profession.

Gifted, then, with a manner which was in itself a passport to favor, it is not to be wondered at prising that the lawyer made a favorable impression upon the ladies in Bridesmell Terrace. He united him to the Greatorex family as a friend of his own, and he chose that of Forsyth; so they knew him as Mr. Forsyth, and that was all. Rosalind, Agnes, and Mrs. Rivière, therefore, regarded no pains, and hesitated before no means whereby to gain the favor of Mr. Forsyth, and unscrupulously on their love for the husband and father whom they had lost; and, skillfully following up the clue which their own nature would, in their regard by professing to have known Edgar Rivière in the days of his youth than by lavishing upon Sydenham the most delicate attentions which had served to open to him the doors of their home.

And this admirable idea had been wholly unprecedicated. It came to him like a flash of inspiration; and he immediately and unhesitatingly acted upon it, developed it with the tact of a master. Careful not to overact the part, he spoke of the patient with the deepest interest. He always desired to know more intimately had he continued to reside in England, whose character interested him, and whose beauty he had learned to admiration. He evinced an eager but respectful desire to see every detail of his after-career. He bought up the whole dreary stock of nymphs and dryads with assiduous liberality, carrying away with him, on every occasion of his visit. Nothing was too large, too small, or too sketchy for him.

An investigation conducted in this fashion was not difficult of cultivation. The munificent and courteous patron soon glided into the sympathetic attitude of friend. He encouraged prolonged conversations, unobtrusive attentions, and confidences. He became a frequent visitor at their faith. Strange to English life, ignorant of the world, poor and in trouble, they stood terribly in need of a friend, and they found one when they accepted his opinions and followed his advice implicitly. Before long he came to pass that every her established himself upon precisely that footing which was most favorable to his designs, and that every member of the family was in his power, but the skillful arbiter of all their actions. Thus, also, it came to pass that at the very time when Saxon Trefalden believed them to be already dwelling upon the shores of the Mediterranean, Mrs. and Miss Rivière were still in England, and temporarily settled in very pleasant apartments in the neighborhood of Sydenham.

Hither their friend and friend frequently to call upon them; and it so happened that he paid them a visit on the evening of the very day on which Sir Jasper died.

He went down to Sydenham in an extremely pleasant frame of mind. Ignorant of their sudden change of plans, he still believed that his cousin and the Earl were on their way to Norway; and it was a belief from which he derived considerable satisfaction. It fell in charmingly with his present arrangements; and those arrangements were now so carefully matured, and so thoroughly en train, that it seemed impossible they should fail of success in any particular. Perhaps, had he known how the little Ariadne was tossing in the Channel the wind in the direction of the Channel Islands, instead of tacking painfully about in the straits of Dover, Mr. Trefalden would not have arrived at Mrs. Rivière's apartments in so complacent a mood.

It was delightful to be welcomed as he was welcomed. It was delightful to see the book and the embroidery laid aside as he came in—to meet such looks of confidence and gladness—to be listened to when he spoke, as if all his words were wisdom—to sit by the open window, breathing the perfume of the flowers, listening to Rosa's gentle voice, and dreaming delicious dreams of days to come. For William Trefalden was more than ever in love—more than ever resolved to compass the future that he had set before him.

"Can we do anything for you, my dear friend Mr. Forsyth," said Mrs. Rivière, when the first greetings had been exchanged. "We were sayings but a few moments before you came to the gate."

"A Londoner is glad to escape from the smoke and fatigue of town on a delicious evening," replied Mr. Trefalden, "even though it be at the risk of intruding too often upon his subordinates. What can be more delightful than we have in England some too often?"

"Much as I may wish it to be so, I fear the case is not quite an impossible one."

"Mamma has been out to-day in a Bath-chair, Mr. Forsyth," said Rosa. "Do you not think she is looking better?"

"I am quite sure of it," replied the lawyer.

"I feel better, indeed, than I did yesterday. "I feel that I gain strength daily."

"That is well to hear."

"And Dr. Fisher says that I am improving."

"I attach more value, my dear madam, to your own impressions on that point than to the opinion of any physician, however skillful," observed Mr. Trefalden.

"He is a very great faith in Doctor Fisher," said Mrs. Rivière.

"And I have great faith in this pure Sydenham air. I am not tell you how rejoiced I am that you consented to remove from Camberwell."

"Mrs. Rivière looked."

"Do you not think I might soon go back to Italy?" she asked.

"It is the very subject which I have chiefly come down this evening to discuss," replied the lawyer.

The lady's pale face lighted up at this reply.

"I am so anxious to go," she said, eagerly. "I feel as if there were life for me in Italy."

"She pronounced the dear language better than you are strong enough to encounter the fatigue for so long a journey."

"I am sure that mamma is not nearly strong enough," said Miss Rivière, quickly.

"I might travel very slowly."

"To travel slowly is not enough," said Mr. Trefalden. "You should travel without suffering. I mean, you should be accompanied by some person who could make all the rough places smooth and the crooked paths straight for you throughout the journey."

"I should be unwilling to incur the expense of employing a courier if I could possibly avoid it," said Mrs. Rivière.

"No doubt; for a courier is not only a costly but a very troublesome and disagreeable encumbrance. He is both your servant and your master. Might it not, however, be possible for you to join a party going abroad in the same route?"

"You forgot that we know no one in this country."

"Nay, those things are frequently arranged even with strangers."

"Besides, you would care to be burdened with two helpless women? No stranger would accept the responsibility."

Mr. Trefalden paused a moment before replying.

"Given an equally suitable climate," he said, "I presume you are not absolutely wedded to Italy as a place of residence?"

"I love it better than any other country in the world."

"Yet I think I have heard you say that you are not acquainted with the southern coast?"

"True; we always lived in Florence."

"Then neither Bluestone nor Nice would possess any charm of novelty for you?"

"Only the association of language and climate."

"And of these two conditions, that of climate can alone be pronounced essential; but I should say that you are entitled to more favorable choice than either. Has it never occurred to you that the air of Egypt or Madeira might be worth a trial, if only for a season?"

"Mamma has been advised to try both," said Miss Rivière.

"But I prefer Italy," said the invalid. "The happiest years of my life were spent under an Italian sky."

"Pardon me; but should you, my dear madam, allow yourself to be influenced by preference in such a case as this?" asked Mr. Trefalden, very deferentially.

"I can offer a better reason, then—poverty. It is possible to live in Italy for very, very little, when one knows the people and the country so well as we do; but I should fear I could not afford to live in Madeira or Egypt."

"The journey to Madeira is easy, and not very expensive," said Mr. Trefalden.

Mrs. Rivière shook her head.

"I should not dare to undertake it," she replied. "But with a careful escort?"

"Nay, if even that were my only difficulty, where should I find one?"

"In myself."

The mother and daughter looked up with astonishment.

"In you, Mr. Forsyth?" they exclaimed, simultaneously.

Mr. Trefalden smiled.

"You need not let that astonish you," he said; "it is my intention to spend all my future winters abroad, and I am greatly tempted by much that I have heard and read lately about Madeira. I am a free man, however, and if Mrs. Rivière preferred to accompany Egypt, I would quite willingly exchange Funchel for the Nile."

"This is too much goodness."

"And, if you will not think that I take an unwarrantable liberty in saying so, I have not the question of expense must not be allowed to enter into your calculations."

"Sir!"

"One moment, my dear madam," interrupted the lawyer, hastily. "Pray do not suppose that I am presuming to offer you pecuniary assistance. Nothing of the kind. I am simply offering to advance you whatever sums you may require upon the remainder of Mr. Rivière's paintings and sketches; or, if you prefer it, I will at once purchase the whole collection."

"In order that I may have the means of going to Italy or Madeira?" said Mrs. Rivière, very painfully. "No, my kind friend; I began to understand you now. It can not be."

"I fear I have unhappily contrived to misunderstand me," replied Mr. Trefalden, with grave earnestness. "If you were even right—if I were only desirous to assist the widow of one whose memory and genius I deeply revere, I do not think you ought to feel wounded by the manner in which I have chosen to offer that such is not my prevailing reason."

"Do you mean that you really wish to possess—"

"Every picture from which you are willing to part."

"But you would then have from twenty-five to thirty paintings from the same brush—many of them quite large subjects."

"So much the better."

"Yet, it seems unconceivable that—"

"That I should desire to make a Rivière collection? Such, nevertheless, is my ambition."

"Then you must have a glorious gallery?"

Mr. Trefalden shook his head.

"I have no gallery," he said; "at present. Some day I may have one. Until then I will be contented drawn, I may settle abroad, and build a house and gallery in some beautiful spot; but that is still a subject, and the details of projects are uncertain."

"What can you do?" What do you mean?" faltered Mrs. Rivière.

"I scarcely know yet. I thought at one time that it would be well to exhibit them in some public room; but I have other plans which have advantages. The most direct course would be, I suppose, to have a sale down in the country."

The mother and daughter looked at each other in speechless emotion. Their eyes were full of tears, and their hearts full of gratitude and wonder.

"But, in any case," continued Mr. Trefalden, "the pictures need cleansing and framing. Nothing could be done with them in their present state, and they must be mine before even that amount of progress can be made."

"Mine!" echoed the mother and daughter.

"Mine, yours from this moment, most generous friend and benefactor," sobbed the widow.

"But Mr. Trefalden will not be under any obligation to you for this," said Rosa.

But Mr. Trefalden would not suffer the ladies to express their thanks. He was proud to be regarded by them as a friend, and he was happy proud to be the humble instrument by means of which a great name might be rescued from undeserved obscurity, and a widow and daughter made easy in their benefactor. He then adverted, with much delicacy, to the question of the sale, and said that he had every confidence in a certain sum at a certain bank to Mrs. Rivière's credit; touched again upon the subject of Madeira and Egypt, and of course carried his point, rose, by-and-by, to take his leave.

"Rosa, my dear madam, I am to have the honor of escorting you to Funchal in the course of some three or four weeks from the present time," he said, pressing her hand.

"If Mr. Forsyth will consent to be so burdened—"

"I think myself very happy in being permitted to accompany you," replied Mr. Trefalden; "and if I have any influence with him—"

"Nay, a day hence would scarcely be too soon for me," said Miss Rivière. "My heart aches for the sunny south."

To which the lawyer replied by a courteous assurance that his own arrangements should be hastened as much as possible, and took his departure.

Mr. Forsyth has quite what our aunt, old Lady Glastonbury, used to call the 'grand air,' said Mrs. Rivière, as Mr. Trefalden took off his hat to them at the gate. "And he is handsome."

"I do not think him handsome," replied her daughter; "but he is the most liberal of men."

"Mercifully liberal. He must be very rich too; and I am sure he is very good. Let me see; there was a Forsyth, I think, who married a daughter of Lord Inglebrough in the same year that Alethea became Lady Castletowers. I should like to ask whether he belongs to that family."

"Nay, darling, why put the question? Our Mr. Forsyth may come of some humbler stock, and then—"

"You are right, Helen; and he can afford to dispense with mere nobility. You know, my child, I have sometimes thought of late—"

"What have you thought, my own dear mother?"

"That he—that Mr. Forsyth is inclined to admire my little Helen very much."

The young girl drew back suddenly, and the smile vanished from her lips.

"Oh, mamma," she said, "I hope not."

"Why so, my child? Mr. Forsyth is rich, kind, good, and a gentleman. His wife would be a very happy woman."

"But I do not love him."

"Of course you do not love him. We do not even know whether he loves you; but the time may come—"

"Heaven forbid it!" said Miss Helen, in a low voice.

"And I say, Heaven grant it," rejoined her mother, earnestly. "I would die to-morrow, thankfully, if I but knew that my child would not be left alone in the wide world when I was gone."

The girl flung her arms passionately round her mother's neck, and burst into tears.

"Hush, hush!" she cried; "not a word of death, my darling. You must live for me. Oh, how glad—how glad I am that you are going to Madeira!"

The invalid shook her head and leaned back wearily.

"Ah," she sighed again, "I had rather have gone to Italy."

CHAPTER LXIV.

THE BARRICADE IN THE VIA LOMBARDI.

DISAGREEABLY conscious of being roused, as it were, against her will from something deeper than sleep, of a painful struggle for breath, and of a sudden deluge of cold water, Saxon opened his eyes, and found Lord Castletowers leaning over him.

"Where am I?" he asked, staring round in a bewildered way. "What is the matter with me?"

"Nothing, I hope, my dear fellow," replied his friend. "Five minutes ago I pulled you out from under a man and a horse, and made certain you were dead; but when Bellew had fetched a little water and brought you round and being, moreover, unable to find any holes in your armor, I am inclined to hope that no damage has been done. Do you think you can get up?"

Saxon took the Earl's hand and rose without much difficulty. His head ached, and he felt dizzy; but was all.

"I suppose I have been stunned," he said, looking round at the empty battery. "Is the battle over and done?"

The guns were gone, and the ground was plowed with their heavy wheel-tracks. Dark pools of blood and heaps of slain showed where the struggle had been fiercest; and close against Saxon's feet lay the bodies of a cuirassier and two Neapolitan gunners. At the sight of these last he shuddered and turned away, for he knew that he had three times been shot at from behind.

"Why, no; the battle is not over," replied the Earl; "neither can I say that it is won, but the fight is more than half won. We have taken the guns, and the Neapolitans have retreated into the town; and now a halt has been sounded, and the troops are taking a rest before the rest. The bridge over the Nocito, and all the open country up to the very gates of Malazzo, are ours."

"There has been sharp fighting here," said Saxon.

"The sharpest we have seen to-day," replied the Earl. "Their cavalry retook the guns, and drove Bellew's men out of the battery; but the fellows divided on each side of the road, received them between two fires, and when they tried to charge back again, barred the road and shot the leaders down. It was splendidly done; but Garibaldi was in imminent danger for a few moments, and, I believe, shot one trooper with his own hand. After that the Neapolitans broke through and escaped, leaving the guns and battery in our hands."

"And you saw it all?"

"Ay, I did, among those who barred the road, and was close behind Garibaldi the whole time. And now, as you seem to be tolerably steady on your legs again, I propose that we go down to some more sheltered place, and get something to eat. This Sicilian sunshine on the fierce enough to melt the brains in one's skull; and fighting makes men hungry."

Some logs were found ashore and barns had been broken open for the accommodation of the troops, and shelter for the friends and a little food and refreshment. Lying in the shelter of a shed beside the Nocito, they ate their luncheon of bread and fruit, smoked their cigarettes, and listened to the pleasant sound of the torrent hurrying to the sea. All around and about, in the shade of every bush and the shelter of every shed, lay the tired soldiers—a motley, dusty, war-stained throng, some eating, some sleeping, some smoking, some bathing their hot feet in the running stream, some, "in genuine Italian thoughtlessness, playing at mora," as they lay side by side on the green sward, gesticulating as eagerly and laughing as gayly as though the reign of battle and bloodshed had passed away from the earth. Now and then a wounded man was carried past on a temporary litter; now and then a Neapolitan prisoner was brought in; now and then a baseless gun was fired from the fortress. Thus the hot noon wear by, and for two brief hours peace prevailed.

"Poor Vaughan!" said the Earl, now hearing of his death for the first time. "He had surely some presentiment of his end this morning. What has become of the horse?"

Saxon explained that he had sent it to the rear, with others that it should be conveyed back to Meri, and carefully attended to."

"I do not forget," he added, "what we are the repositories of his will, and that Guiseppe is now a legacy. I think it will be wise to send it to Palermo for the present, to the care of Signor Colonna."

"Undoubtedly. Do you know, Trefalden, I have more than suspected at times that—that he loved Miss Colonna."

"I should not wonder if he did," replied Saxon, gloomily.

Well, he died a soldier's death, and to-morrow, if I live, I will see that he has a soldier's burial. A braver fellow never entered the service."

And now, the allotted time having expired, the troops were again assembled, and the columns formed for action. Garibaldi went on board the Tuckery, a Neapolitan steam-frigate that had gone over to him with men, arms, and ammunition complete, at an early stage of the war, and was now lying off Malazzo with the fleet in front of the promontory. Hence, with no other object than to direct the fire of the guns, he could be directed a rapid fire on the fortress, while his army advanced in three divisions to the assault of the town.

Medici took the westward beach; Cosenz the road to the Messina gate; and Malecchini the Porta di Palermo. The latter, with his band of volunteers marched with the Cacciator under General Cosenz.

By one o'clock they found themselves under the walls of Malazzo. The garrison had by this time learned the order of the attacking columns. First one shell, then another, then half a dozen together, came soaring like meteors over the heads of the besiegers, and fell within the city, more eagerly to the assault, and battered the more desperately against the gate. A shot or two from an old battery on the promontory at down presently with a crash; the Garibaldians poured through it, and, in another hour, the town was almost without knowing how they came there, Saxon and Castletowers found themselves inside the walls, face to face with a battalion of Neapolitan infantry.

Both bodies fired. The Neapolitans having delivered their volley, retreated up the street. The Garibaldians followed. Presently the Neapolitans turned, fired another volley, and retreated. They repeated this manœuvre several times, the Garibaldians always firing and following, till they came to the market-place in the centre of the town. Here they found Colonel Dunn's regiment in occupation of one side of the quadrangle, and the Guardia Civile of Malazzo, with troops on the other. The air was full of smoke, and the ground scattered over with those who lay killed and wounded. As the smoke cleared they could see the Neapolitans on the one hand, steadily loading and firing—on the other, Dunn's men running tumultuously to and fro, keeping up a rapid but irregular fire.

No sooner, however, had the new-comers emerged upon the scene, than a mounted officer came galloping toward them through the thick of the fight.

"Send round a detachment to the Via Lombardi," he said, hurriedly. "The enemy threaten to barricade there, which must be taken!"

The mention of a barricade was enough for Saxon and Castletowers. They were the combatants in the market-place to fight the fight out for themselves, they started with the detachment, and made their way over a labyrinth of dead deserted by-streets at the back of the piazza.

A shot was presently fired down upon them from a neighboring roof—they advanced at a run—turned the angle of the next street—were received with a cross-fire simultaneous from right, left, and centre, and found themselves in the teeth of the barricade. It was a mere pile of carts, palings, and wreckage, and stretched from about eight feet in height; but, being manned with trained riflemen, and protected by the houses on each side, every shot which it vomited forth gun-barrels, it proved more formidable than it looked.

The detachment, which consisted mainly of Palermitan recruits, fell back in disorder, returning shot for shot, confused and feeble fire, and leaving some four or five of their number on the ground.

"Avanti!" cried the officer in command.

But not a man stirred.

At that moment the Neapolitans poured in another destructive volley, whereupon the front ranks fairly turned, and tried to escape to the rear.

"Peltroni!" shouted their captain, striking right and left with the flat of his sword, and running after them to the front himself.

At the same moment Castletowers knocked down one defaulter with the butt-end of his rifle, and Saxon seized another by the collar, dragged him back to the front, drew his revolver from his belt with one hand, and with the other carried the man boldly up against the barricade.

It was a simple act of strength and daring, but it turned the tide as nothing else could have done. Impulsive as savages, and transported in a moment from one extreme of feeling to another, the Garibaldians forgot their flight, rallied, and flung themselves at the barricade like tigers.

The Neapolitans might pour in their deadly fire now from hoseston and window, might intrench themselves behind a hedge of bayonets, might thrust the dead back upon the living, and defend every inch of their position as desperately as they pleased, but nothing could daunt the courage of their assailants. The men who were running away but a moment before were now rushing recklessly upon death. Shot down by scores, they yet pressed on, clambering over the bodies of their fallen comrades, shouting "Viva Garibaldi!" under the muzzles of the Neapolitan rifles, and seizing the very bayonets that were pointed against them.

The struggle was short and bloody. It had lasted scarcely three minutes when the Palermitans poured in with irresistible wave, and the Neapolitans fled precipitately into the piazza beyond.

The victors at once planted a tricolor on the summit of the barricade, manned it with some forty of their best riflemen, and prepared anew to dislodge such of the enemy as yet retained possession of the houses on either side.

In the mean time the Garibaldian officer ran up to Saxon with open arms, and thanked him enthusiastically.

"Gallant Englese!" he said, "but for you our flag would not be flying here at this moment."

To whom Saxon, pale as death and pointing down to the pile of fallen men at the foot of the barricade, replied—

"Signor Capitano, I miss my friend. For God's sake grant me the assistance of a couple of your soldiers to search for his body!"

It was a ghastly task.

The Neapolitans had escaped as soon as they found their position untenable; but the loss of the attacking party was very great. Most of the men immediately under the barricade had been cruelly bayonetted. The dead wore a terrible expression of agony on their colorless faces; but many yet breathed, and those who were conscious plunged piteously to be put out of their sufferings. One by one the dead were flung aside, and the wounded carried down to the shade of the houses. One by one Saxon Trefalden looked on the man's face, hoping tenderly to carry the wounded, and reverently to dispose the limbs of the dead, and watching every moment for the finding of his friend.

At length the last poor corpse was lifted—the search completed—the frightful headfield told over. Thirty-two were dead; five dying, eleven wounded; but among all these the Earl of Castletowers had not found. Saxon could scarcely believe it. Again and again he went the round of dead and dying; and at last, with bloodstained hands and clothes, and anxious heart, sat down at the foot of the barricade, and asked himself what he should do next.

THE RAIN

A WONDERFUL thing is the rain!
A charmer is the rain, never is vain.
It says to the barrel flowers, Come forth!
It makes the beauty the sad cloth earth;
To the violets bidden, Arise, it saith,
And lily awakes in the heart of death.
Gladness and joy of the rain is forever new.
Oh a wonderful thing is the April rain!

A wonderful thing is the rain!
Earth never tires of its sweet refrain.
The song of the joys runs away,
And the world is weary and worn to-day.
Vainly have poets dreamed and sung,
But the world of sorrow is ever young;
Earth still rejoices in sun and dew,
And the song of the rain is forever new.

A wonderful thing is the rain!
Earth's sweetest harmonies meet in its train;
The soother of sorrow, the ease of strife,
Weaving its rhythm in every life.
Through sleepless nights, with its silver chime,
Winging the weary wheels of time.
Oh would that I were a blessing or die!
Who can speak to the heart like thee?

A wonderful thing is the rain!
Licked to the spirit's joy or pain,
Joyous and hopeful, or sad and low,
All as the heart's deep fountains flow.
Bless me and sing me the song of things
Its light or shadow on earthly things—
There is the melancholy's mystic art,
A wonderful thing is the human heart!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

OUR MARKET REPORTS.

DRYGOODS.—Business is dull at present. It was not much.

FOODSTUFFS are about the same as at last quotations. Dark-ey raises are up to 2 cents. Fall summer session. Blunders will wear white.

LUMBER.—The market shows an increased supply, and many buyers have their last purchases still on their hands.

BALLOONING.—Stocks are good—Inter-Central Pneumatic Rail—The supply has not been large, but has shown a tendency to fall.

TURBOMOTORS are leading downward.

"What do you take for your rat-trap?" cried a lady to a grocer. "Cheese, pickled cucumbers, a day, mainly," was the prompt reply.

A barrister having wearied the court by a long and dull argument, the judge remarked that he could not see the point of his brief. "Perhaps not, my lord," replied the judge, "but I see it."

BALLOONING.—Stocks are good—Inter-Central Pneumatic Rail—The supply has not been large, but has shown a tendency to fall.

TURBOMOTORS are leading downward.

"What do you take for your rat-trap?" cried a lady to a grocer. "Cheese, pickled cucumbers a day, mainly," was the prompt reply.

A barrister having wearied the court by a long and dull argument, the judge remarked that he could not see the point of his brief. "Perhaps not, my lord," replied the judge, "but I see it."

"I shall speak as long as I please," he replied, angrily. "You have spoken longer than you please already," replied the judge.

With a little house well filled, a little land well tilled, a little wife well willed, a husband well skilled, and a conscience well drilled—a little time may be well killed.

THE FENCIBLE OF FENIANISM.—A patriotic party has been formed in this city, bearing exclusively Irish sentiments. These respectable styles themselves Fenians. The similarity of this name to the Irish Fenians is a curious Fenomenon.

EPITAPH ON DR. JOHNSON.

Here lies poor Johnson; Reader, have a care,
Tread lightly, lest you cause a sleeping bear.
Religious, moral, generous, and humane
He was, but self-convicted, rude, and vain,
Ill-bred and overbearing in dispute,
A scholar sure, a Christian, yet a brute.
Would you know all his wisdom and his folly,
Read his sermons, writings, words, and melancholy?
Boswell and Thrale, retailers of his wit,
Will tell you how he lived, and talked, and spit.

RAILROAD MAXIMS.

Delays are dangerous.
A train in time saves nine.
There is no place like home—the difficulty is to get there.
Do not believe till you see safe.
A railway train is the child of time.
The great charm of a railroad accident, no matter how many persons are mangled, is the individuality of every body.
A railroad is long, life is short, but the longer the railway the shorter the life.

A correspondent tells of a little girl who, attending Sabbath School for the first time, and being asked if she loved the Lord, replied: "Don't know, ma'; I hain't got nothin' ugin it."

UPON WHAT "LOSS" HAVE THE GREATEST SPEAKER OF ACCIDENTS HAPPENED?—On the C.R.I.N.O. line.

A young lady's first love kiss has the same effect on her as being electrified. It's a great shock, but soon over.

WHAT TO EXPECT AT AN HOTEL.—Inn-attention.

DESCRIPTION FOR STREET LETTER-BOXES.—"Free Filler to Mail."

QUITE THE WORST THING OUT.—Why is the Atlantic Cable like a railroad across a valley?—Because it's a subterranean bridge.

DIFFICULT TO SUIT.

I do not like a man that's tall;
A man that's short is worse than all.
I must abhor a man that's fat;
A man that's lean is less than that.
A young man is a constant pain;
An old one would by ghosts be taken.
Nor do I like a man that's fair;
A dark man I can't bear.
A man of sense I could not rule;
And yet I would not wed a fool.
A sober man I will not take;
A drunken man my soul would break.
All these I most sincerely hate,
And yet I love the human race.

BUSINESS MAXIMS.

Never say "Will—unless you are a bailsbroker and want to be responsible for doing your business.
Do not cry "stinking fish"—unless you happen to be a vender of cerates.
A stitch in time saves nine sewing machines.

QUITE RIGHT.—It is exceedingly bad husbandry to barley use the plough of your wife.

BUSINESS.—"Don't you mean to marry, my dear Sir?" "No, my dear widow, I'd rather lose all the rhe I've got than take another."

WHEN WAS RUTH very rude to BOAZ?—When she pulled the ears and let go his corn.

KISS.—A receipt given on "paying your address."

Why should marriage be spoken of as a tender tie, when it is so confounded tough that nothing but death can sever it?

WANTED.—Some of the bear produced when "alcohol is brewing."

The orator who "carried away his audience" is generally well humored as compared to bring it back, by persons who had friends present.

BOYS are a good deal like Parlan jelly—just as you mould them they are likely to turn out.

A GREAT CONTRADICTION.—A printer her at a public house.

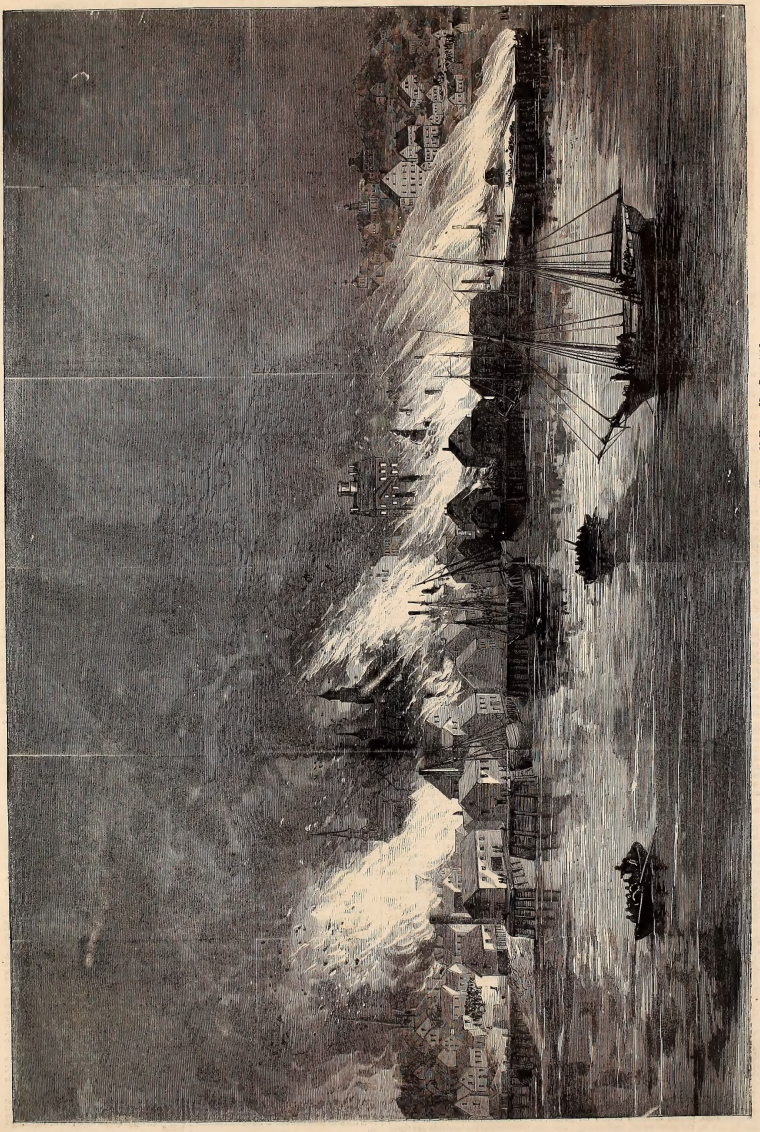
The vessel that no woman objects to embark in—A courtship.

WANTED FOR CRIMINAL PURPOSES.—A lady dissolved in tears.

TO THE TERRESTRIAL GLOBE.

Roll on!
Roll on, thou ball, roll on!
Through pain and woe, through years of space
Roll on!
What though I'm in a sorry case?
What though I can not meet my bills?
What though I suffer toothache's pains?
What though I swallow countless pills?
Never you mind!
Roll on!
Roll on, thou ball, roll on!
Through sun and rain of July wet
Roll on!
It's true I've got no shirts to wear;
It's true my tootsie's bill is dear;
It's true my hat has seen its days—
But don't it this unsettle you!
Never you mind!
Roll on!
I'll roll on.

A SURE TEST OF MILLS & WEAVERS.—The number of slips at the door.



"I say, Pat, why don't you use that railroad preparation for damages you have received; both of your legs are broken, and you have three ribs broken?" "Use it for damages, oh boy! I has damage enough already, for me head is broken."

A STRONG STORY.—It is reported that a sea sqabber was recently caught at sea for a violent storm, when he saved his life by taking a bottle of his soap and washing himself ashore. The soap, or the story, must have been made from whole cloth.

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP.—The Bangor Advertiser tells a story of a Yankee who was refused a license at one of the hotels in that city. "But what is your business, Mister?" Business! then did his best, and at the ringing of each bell in which he was interested, he would run over top of the table, turned to his host, and said: "Mister, you've read my notice, and I've read your advertisement by-by!"

"You have a considerable floating population in this village, haven't you?" asked a stranger of one of the citizens, as they looked over the Mississippi. "Well, you-aa-hem!" was the reply; "we have about half the people that come to the second story windows."

Two doctors were once disputing about the proposed duel in which one was to fight the other. "I remember," remarked the first, "I never lie buried in the ground as long as I live." "What a remarkable man!" said the second, "I say like a squirrel, I will."

GREAT FIRE AT BELFAST, MAINE, OCTOBER 17, 1865.—SECURED BY WILLIAM M. HALL.—[SEE PAGE 691.]

THE VICTORIA REGIA, ON EXHIBITION AT 807 BROADWAY.

THE VICTORIA REGIA.

We give on this page an illustration of the Victoria Regia, which is on exhibition at Reid's Floral Establishment, 807 Broadway. Mr. E. BALKEY is the cultivator and proprietor of this magnificent plant.

The Victoria Regia is an annual plant, a native of South America, and is found on the Amazon and some other rivers of that region. It received its botanical name, Victoria Regia, in honor of the Queen of England. It was first introduced into Europe in 1826, by the German naturalist SCHOMBURG, who discovered it during his travels in South America. But not until 1850 did the gardeners of Europe succeed in raising a plant approaching in size and beauty the giant lily of the Amazon. On that year, after great expense and exertion, the late Sir JOSEPH PAXTON, architect of the London Crystal Palace, succeeded in raising a handsome specimen of the Victoria in bloom in the botanical garden of the Duke of Devonshire, and thousands flocked thither to behold one of the rarest wonders of the floral world. It is said that Sir JOSEPH PAXTON conceived his pattern for the construction of the Crystal Palace from the structure of this flower.

The leaves of the Victoria Regia are nearly circular, and when full grown from fifteen to eighteen feet in circumference, turned up two or four inches at the margin, green above, the back crimson and traversed by eight large veins and numberless veinlets, which form nearly square apertures, from one-third to two and a half inches deep. The reversed leaf is protected by innumerable sharp thorns, as also the stems, which attain a length of over fifteen feet. The leaves are floating flat on the water, and on its native rivers children use the same as a sort of canoe to cross rivers and streams on them. The young leaf, on reaching the surface of the water, resembles very much a hedgehog, being folded up so that only its back, with its sharp thorns, is visible. The vitality of the plant is such that about nine days after the rise of the young leaf to the surface it has attained its full size. When it makes its first appearance on the water it measures about one foot in diameter. The flower itself resembles, the first time of its opening, a gigantic white rose, diffusing its delicate perfume. Then the color changes to a dark pink. The flower attains a size from twelve to fifteen inches in diameter. It is expected one plant will produce from twenty-five to forty blossoms in succession.

THE JENNER MONUMENT AT BOULOGNE.

We give on this page an engraving showing the monument erected on the 11th of September at Place des Bains in Boulogne, France, in honor of Dr. EDWARD A. JENNER, who first introduced vaccination as a means of preventing small-pox. It is somewhat curious that this monument, dedicated to the celebrated English physician, is first thought of by Frenchmen. It was at Boulogne that Dr. WOODVILLE and Dr. NOWELL, two of the disciples of JENNER, landed during the peace of Amiens, as soon as English visitors had permission to land, with the humane and friendly purpose of introducing his most useful invention to the medical practitioners of FRANCE. A sculptor of some repute, M. E. PAUL, furnished the design, and has superintended the casting without any pecuniary reward.

Dr. JENNER was born May 17, 1749, at Berkeley, in Gloucester, England. At the age of twenty-one he went to London, to study under the celebrated JOHN HUNTER. His progress in medical science procured for him an invitation to accompany Captain COOK in his first voyage around the world, but Dr. JENNER declined the offer. After staying two years with HUNTER he commenced practice at Berkeley. His discovery of some curious habits of the cuckoo procured his entrance to the Royal Society. It was Dr. JENNER who first proved satisfactorily, by experiment and theory, that vaccination was a safe and certain means of preventing small-pox. There is good evidence that vaccination existed among the Hindoos at a remote period. There are also proofs of its existence in other countries, independently of Dr. JENNER'S services. It is certain that in various parts of Devonshire, Somerset, Leicestershire, Staffordshire, and Middlesex there is a tradition that some persons, by handling cattle, contracted pustules on their hands, and became in that way exempt from small-pox. It is thought that Dr. JENNER made use of some such tradition, and his careful attention to the subject caused to be adopted systematically by physicians what had been already by chance or by some vague instinct adopted by a few obscure people.

On the occasion of the erection of the monument an oration was delivered by Dr. GROS, a physician practicing at Boulogne, and eminent in his profession, who enlarged on the benefits derived by mankind from the investigations and ultimately the great discovery effected by Dr. JENNER, whose memory they had assembled to honor.

The statue stands on a marble pedestal about twelve feet high; the statue itself measures nearly ten feet in height. It is of iron, bronzed by galvanic aid, and cast by M. BROCHON, of Paris. The pose of the figure is easy, and it is clothed in the costume of 1810. The head is slightly inclined, as though absorbed in thought. In the right hand he holds a lancet. The left hand reposes on a pile of treatises placed on a pedestal, from which depends a sketch of a cow. The right foot is firmly placed over the word "Angleterre," while the left is advanced over the word "France." On the border of the ground-work is inscribed the name "Jenner," and on the pedestal is imprinted "A Edward Jenner, la France reconnaissante, 11th Septembre, 1865."

In the evening of September 11 a fête, with fireworks, was given in the Jardin des Tintelleries; and a grand bal paré at the Etablissement des Bains, which was most numerously and fashionably attended, closed the festivities.

STATUE OF DR. EDWARD JENNER, RECENTLY ERECTED AT BOULOGNE, FRANCE.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Malden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW MUSIC.

"THEY SAY THAT TROY ART BEAUTIFUL." Ballad. A. W. Wrolstad.

"YOUR DOORS." Song. Wm. H. Stevens.

"THE ARMIES OF LIBERTY." In memory of President Lincoln. O. Clark.

"A MAIDEN FOR SALE." Comic Song. Despecker.

"GIVE ME HONEST FRIENDS." Tucker.

"I RELIANCE." Song. F. Muller.

"TOO LATE TO MARRY." Song. Sidney Pratten.

"HAPPY HOME." Song and Chorus. G. W. H. Griffin.

"ONLY YOU AND I." Song. Mrs. Parkhurst.

"WHAT LET ANY OWN WIFE." Ballad.

"STAND UP FOR THE FLAG." Song and Chorus. Foster.

"OH! HERE ALL DEAR HOMES." Song. Foster.

"THE SONS ARE MARCHING HOME." Song. Hunting. Price 50 cents each, or 4 for $1, mailed free.

"WE BLESS THEE, O LORD." Griffin. 50 cents.

HORACE WATERS, Publisher, 481 Broadway, N. Y.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS, Wholesale and Retail. To let, and sold when rent if purchased. Monthly payments received for the same. Second hand pianos at bargains from $60 to $225. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. HORACE WATERS.

FOR SALE

A Drum Cylinder Printing-Press.
Size of Bed.....34½×51 inches.
Four Rollers; Table Distribution.
Has been used till Oct. 1st to print HARPER'S WEEKLY. Price $1000.
Also, One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution. Bed 31×47. Price $700.
The above Presses are in good working order, and are offered for sale in consequence of the recent purchase by Messrs. HARPER'S WEEKLY requiring the "Lightning Press." Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS,
329 Pearl Street, New York.

MATILDA TOOTS.
NEW COMIC SONG. 15c. With picture, colored ..... 50c.
I CAN NOT SING THE OLD SONGS ..... 25c.
SUNLIGHT WITHIN MY HEART ..... 25c.
HAVE YOU SEEN HER LATELY? (comic) ..... 25c.
REMEMBER HAPPY HOURS. Quartette ..... 25c.
IF WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE ..... 25c.
Mailed postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME,
168 Bowery, New York.

SOMETHING NEW.
Every body want it. Agents or soldiers can make $10 a day. Sent by mail for $1. Address
W. GLOGGE, Woodbury, L. I.

Pile Remedy
DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs
DR. STRICKLAND'S HELLEBOROUS COUGH BALSAM is a certain cure for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the throat and Lungs.
For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

CLOCK'S
[Hair Restorer—to restore grey hair.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer makes hair on bald heads.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer stops Hair from falling out.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer prevents headache.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer is perfectly perfumed.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer is all that can be desired as a dressing.
CLOCK'S
Hair Restorer possesses all the merits claimed for it. A single trial convinces the most skeptical of its value. If, after a thorough trial of two bottles, it does not give perfect satisfaction, the money will be refunded. Sold every Where at $1 per bottle; six bottles for $5.
Dr. F. B. CLOCK, Proprietor,
No. 6 Astor House, Broadway, New York.
H. T. HELMBOLD,
Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway,
Ag-ht, New York City.

JOSEPH GILLOTT & SONS'
STEEL PENS.
TRADE MARK. JOSEPH GILLOTT. WITH Designating Numbers.
MANUFACTORY AND OFFICE
HENRY OWEN, SOLE AGENT. 91 JOHN ST. NEW YORK.

Cuvi'your Hair. One application will curl your hair into beautiful curls, and last 6 months. Price 50c. by mail. Address: A. JAGGER, Cohoes, N.

Love! Love! Instructive how to win the undying love of the fair sex sent by mail for 25 cents. Address
C. F. JAGGER, Cohoes, N.

Hero it is! Full instructions by which a person can master the art of ventriloquism in a few hours, and make a world of fun and money for himself and friends. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Address
FRANKLIN & JAGGERS, Cohoes, N.

MISTRESS. "Why, Bridget, what are you doing—nailing those biscuits down to the tray?" COOK. "Yes, faith, Mum, or they'd be afther lifting' the tops off your oven, Mum—this Yaste Powdher's so moity powerful."

[MESSRS. TAYLOR & YOUNG, and the Trade generally, are successfully proving the Pioneer Yeast Powder a good thing with which to "raise the wind."]

THE UNITED STATES NEWS AGENCY,
122 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK,
Supplies Newsdealers, Booksellers, and everything wanted in their line,
AT AS LOW PRICES AS ANY HOUSE IN THE UNITED STATES.
Packing done at the Lowest Rates.
Particular Attention given to Collecting Back Numbers of Newspapers and Periodicals.
Send for a Price-List.

M. T. COZANS,
S. V. STORMS, } MANAGERS.
W. J. HOLLAND,

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
AMERICAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.
The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most improved electrolic principles, and warranted to denote correctly as a watch. Guaranteed to be the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every one. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Neat, cheap, and warranted perfectly accurate. Don't pay or get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, with white enamelled dial in gold or silver gilt, $1. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. A circular. This invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under no matter what APPEARANCE or NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money is the J. Johnson Pen—warranted for one year—14 carats fine Also, every variety of Pen-holders on hand. Pens repointed on receipt of 75 cts. Pens sent by mail. Send for Circular. E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

SOMETHING NEW,
Of interest to all. Inclose three 3cd Stamps, and send for Circular, to H. S. GREER, Astor, St. John Street, New York.

Agents Wanted.
$10 A Day can be easy made $10.
By selling Engravings, Card Photographs, and Stationery Packets. Our Stationery Packages send all others. Each packet contains paper, envelopes, pens, pencil, &c., and Jewelry worth a dollar at retail. Prize gift with each. We will sent agents 10? PACKAGES and a SPLENDID WATCH for $17. We have a first class Stationery Book, Will send TOOLS and PORTRAITS, very popular and will retail at $50; will be $10 saved in ordering of us. We will send a sample lot for $1 by mail, postpaid, &c.
Agents for Canada must go to 58 Beekman Street, N. Y.
HASKINS & CO., 58 Beekman Street, N. Y.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."
Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the finest principles, into short ringlets or waving moderate curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1.00. Address THE HENDERSON HAIR-CURLING CO.,
Box 5281, New York Post-Office.

SOMETHING NEW,
OF MAGIC MADE EASY.—A New Book just out. The most complete book on Magic ever published. Over one hundred pages, profusely illustrated. Every trick explained in this book; how to cut off your nose; how to put it back. Laughing Gas; Recreating Fruit; Wonderful Hat; and nearly 200 others astounding Magical, Chemical, and Parlor Entertainments. Sent by mail, postpaid, for 25 cents. Agents wanted, with liberal terms. Price list of 7 cents; sent free. Address, JOHNSON, SMITH & CO., Detroit, Mich.

$1. Whiskers $1.
For One Dollar I will send, sealed and postpaid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a beard or whiskers on the smoothest face in 6 weeks, or upon bald heads in 8 weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Under each direction, or money refunded. Descriptive Circulars mailed free. Address F. L. SUTTON, P. O. Box 92, Lansingburgh, N. Y.

Make your own Soap
WITH B. T. BABBITT'S
Pure Concentrated Potash,
OR READY SOAP MAKER.
WARRANTED double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier for family use in market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 4 pounds, and 7 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of soft soap. No lime in powder. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.
B. T. BABBITT.
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

COMPLEXION.
It is an impossibility for any person afflicted with a diseased liver, or with any disorder of the digestive organs, to have a good or clear complexion. Beecham's Pills are a mild Purgative, will remove all disease from the liver and digestive organs, and by thus giving health and vigor to those organs, remove that sallowness of appearance and roughness of the skin so much to be avoided. The Pills are and a beverage. Agent—H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &c. One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

300 Musical Boxes, each	$20 to	$150
250 " with Bells and Castinets	30 to	200
250 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	20 to	80
500 " Chasing Dishes	20 to	100
1000 " Ice Pitchers	20 to	60
1000 " Fancy Cups with Saucers	10 to	30
2000 " Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 to	50
1000 " Castors	10 to	50
2000 " Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets	10 to	80
5000 Dozen Silver Tea-spoons, per dozen	10 to	30
10,000 " Table Spoons and forks,
per dozen	20 to	40
750 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches	50 to	100
750 Ladies' Gold and Enamel Hunting-Case Watches
	35 to	70
500 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches	20 to	40
500 Diamond Rings	50 to	100
5,000 Gold Pens and Pencil Cases	3 to	10
5,000 Gold Vest Band Bracelets	3 to	8
5,000 Set and Gold Bracelets	5 to	10
5,000 Gentlemen Chains and Guard Chains	5 to	10
5,000 Ladies and Gold Breastpin	3 to	8
5,000 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Brooches	3 to	8
5,000 Diamond, Ruby, Lava, and Emerald Ear Drops
	4 to	6
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops	4 to	6
5,000 Gold Diamond Stone Set Sleeve Buttons	2 to	4
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 to	8
5,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	2 to	5
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs,
&c.	3 to	8
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	3 to	6
10,000 Miniature Lockets	2 50 to	10
4,000 " Magic Spring	10 to	50
5,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	3 to	6
5,000 Plain Gold Rings	4 to	10
5,000 Set Gold Studs	3 to	10
10,000 Stone set and Signet Rings	2 50 to	10
10,000 Cameo and Intaglio Rings	3 to	10
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold	5 to	10
6,000 " " Jewelry—Lava, and Enamel,
Opal, and other stones	4 to	15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils	4 to	10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	6 to	10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	15 to	25
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Watches	5 to	10
5,000 Ladies' Gold and Jet Side Bracelets and Brooches	10 to	20

ARBADALL & CO., Manufacturers' Agents, No. 24 Broadway, New York, announce that all of the above list of goods will be for sale IMMEDIATELY.
In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, the agents for working out of the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry originally intended for sale in that country, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT A SACRIFICE.
Under these circumstances, ARBADALL & CO. are selling at one dollar each the above and European Manufactures, have created upon a large scale for this purpose, to be divided according to the following regulations:
A certificate of the various articles—put into envelopes indiscriminately, sealed up; and, when ordered, are inclosed in wrappers and sent by mail, or delivered at the store without any to mention. On receipt of the certificate you will inform me how many you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any one of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.
Read the Certificate.
In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the article, for registering, packing, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is returned. Five certificates for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred and fifty for $20.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT ENTERPRISE.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, diamond rings, gold, silverware, etc., by Messrs. Arbadall & Co., at No. 107 Broadway. They have a large assortment of articles, varying in value, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is very fairly done—persons to take a certificate of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not obliged to pay the one dollar unless they are satisfied with the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, and may be $100 or $200. An excellent plan for the investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 12, 1865.

MESSRS. ARBADALL & CO. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be worthy our worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish American Journal, of date 11, 1865.

We have inspected at the office of Arbadall & Co's establishment, No. 24 Broadway, New York, the immense assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry of the newest and latest styles. We also noticed a large number of persons and understand that the sales of these articles are proceeding with great rapidity, and to a most prepossessing extent. Those who wish to avail themselves of this excellent opportunity to secure a bargain, we know the firm in question to be very responsible and trustworthy, and we can therefore cordially recommend our friends to send their advertisements to Messrs. Arbadall & Co.

By Messrs. Arbadall & Co.'s arrangement the advertiser has the option of the sale of the article, or of the money tiling to gain, and nothing comparatively to lose. He receives a list of the articles to be disposed of, and he need not send it if he is not satisfied.—N. Y. Weekly News, Feb. 18, 1865.

EXTRAORDINARY FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable advertisement we have seen is that of the sale of certificates for the "Great Gift Distribution" of Arbadall & Co. A family of our acquaintance has been very successful in this way, not only in filling her own purse, but also in finding a good deal of fun in the matter. We have seen the certificates, as will be seen by our advertising columns. Arbadall & Co. can also be engaged.—N. Y. Sunday Mercury, August 14, 1864.

In our columns the reader will find an advertisement of Arbadall & Co's Gift Distribution of watches, jewelry, and silverware. In payment of their advertisement we received several sets of the jewelry advertised, and we are warranted in saying that, both in finish and quality, they exceeded our expectations. They turned out to be just what they had been represented.—The Democrat (Lexington, August 11, 1864.

Arbadall & Co., of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 28, 1864, one of our lady subscribers has received a gold watch from you, and is highly pleased with it. Another, one of your delicate, real as gilded lockets, and a third a handsome gold pen. We are glad to see that cute and successful Yankees are coming to Canada to introduce their enterprise, and some of them six times.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Tabb and Tee Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Rings, Bracelets, etc., which have been sent by Arbadall & Co. in this city.—Argus Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 18, 1865.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every county and town in the country, and those acting as agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered. In this way they can realize their expenses as well as for Dollar. Agents will collect 50 cents for every Certificate, and remit us 40 cents in cash, and keep the balance for their services.
ARBADALL & CO.,
Manager.
107 Broadway, New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
(ESTABLISHED 1860).
100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00
200 Gold Watches	60 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	15 00
10 0 Breathing Castors	$15 00 to 18 00
300 Drinking Cups	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Pearl, Jet, and Garnet Sets	5 00 to 10 00
300 Ladies' Californian Diamond Rings	5 00 to 8 00
400 Magic Spring and Long Dog Lockets	4 00 to 8 00
1000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 6 00
300 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
300 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
500 Dozen Tea and Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
500 Dozen Gold Table Forks, per doz.	24 00 to 48 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
4000 Sugar Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
1000 Otter Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates, naming various articles, stating that each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mix'd, and, when ordered, are delivered without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of those envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted everywhere. Great inducements to libral and genteel men. Full list and terms to send for circular, which gives specimen terms, full list, and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
AND DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF STEREOSCOPIC GOODS,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.
In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we have headquarters for the following:
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views,
Of the most extensive and complete assortment.
VIEWS OF THE WAR.
Obtained at great expense, and comprising the most complete PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF THE GREAT WHITE CONFLICT.

Bull Run,	Yorktown,
Gettysburgh,	Fredericksburgh,
Fair Oaks,	Lookout Mountain,
Savage Station,	Chickamauga,
Fredericksburgh,	City Point,
Fairfax,	Nashville,
Richmond,	Murfreesburgh,
Poop Bottom,	Belle Plain,
Manitoux,	Chattanooga,
Fort Morgan,	Atlanta,
Charleston,	Shiloh,
Florida,	Strawberry Plains,
	&c. &c. &c.

American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Copies of Works of Art, and Miscellaneous Subjects, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

Photographic Albums.
We were the first to introduce them into the United States and we nanufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging in price from 25 cents to $25. Our ALBUM LIST is the very largest of any exhibited in America, and complete in any style. Sent to any address on receipt of stamp.
The Trade will find our Albums the most Salable they keep in Stock.
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.
Our Catalogue contains nearly one Five Thousand different subjects (to which additions are constantly being made) of Buildings, Antiquities, &c., viz.:

Architecture,	Groups of Works of Art,
Ancient Ruins,	Miscellaneous Subjects.
Interior Views,	Statuary,
Landscapes,	Paintings,
Marine Views,	Flowers,
Rustic Views,	Fruits,
Cities and Towns,	Animals,
Public Buildings,	Groups of Children,
Monuments,	Portraits of Ladies,
Tombs,	Portraits of Gentlemen,
Bridges,	Actresses,
Cathedrals,	Opera Singers,
Churches,	Ballet Dancers,
Castles,	Clergymen,
Statuary,	Celebrities,
Groups of Statuary,	Authors,
Paintings,	Artists,
Groups of Paintings,	Musicians,
Rustic Groups,	Groups of Children,
Groups of Figures,	Miscellaneous Subjects.

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c., in the Public Galleries of Europe. An order for Fifty Photographs from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1.00, and sent by mail, FREE.
Photographs of Rare, Curious, and Odd Subjects, will please send for Catalogue of the second series.
The prompt attention and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

WHISKERS
AND MUSTACHES
Forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. Sarigny's
RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE,
The most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the tissue of the hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success.
Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if satisfactory in no way given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1 50. Descriptive circulars and testimonials sent free. Address
BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists,
Post-Office Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for U. S.

BEAUTY!
Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of Prof. DE GOLYER'S
FRISER LE CHEVEUX.
One application was sufficient to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into very ringlets or heavy massive curls. He has been used by the Nobility of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Done so before the ball. Price by mail, sealed and prepaid, $1 00. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address
BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists,
Post-Office Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for U. S.

DR. GOLYER'S
LIFE-TIME TOOTH-
ACHE AND CURE
Will relieve the severest ruptures than any other. It gives perfect satisfaction, and is used by Surgeons, Physicians, Druggists, Dentists, &c. &c. It IS ANY STREET, established 20 years.

TO ARTISTS.—A GENTLEMAN, STARVED SOLDIERS, and others, seeking profitable employment, to canvass every city and county in the United States for the most remarkable works of art ever published. The publication of this Association must with ready sale—large 1-dozenmate to agents are offered them by any other house in the country.
NO MONEY REQUIRED FOR COUNTY RIGHTS.
An energetic party can clear $75 00 a day. Specify the county you want, and send stamp for confidential circular. Address
ART PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
Box 3525, Philadelphia, Pa.
Office, 609 North 3rd St.

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!
Wholesale and Retail.
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
87 and 89 Bowery, and 65 Christy St.,
Have the best assorted Stock of Parlor, Dining-Room, and Bed-Room Furniture, Spring Beds, and Bedding, in the Union.
Our Facilities for manufacturing at Low Prices defy Competition.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.
PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.
AN EXACT and RELIABLE TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A certain, daily unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved Scientific PRINCIPLES, and warranted to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute certainty and the most perfect regularity. Should fall one the most costly and elaborate timekeeper of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. It requires NO KEY or winding up; NEVER RUNS DOWN, and can never be too fast or too slow. Has a perfect Astronomical Motion. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is known by Count Leotard's Patent. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt cases, only $1. Sent, postpaid, to any address in the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Full and CLEAR DIRECTIONS for regulating and using will be LEGALLY PROTECTED from infringement, all persons are cautioned from making or selling, without my INVITATION, imitations of this valuable invention. Address all orders to the inventor and manufacturer. Beware of IMPOSITION. Each one bears the fac-simile signature of the inventor, who invites the most searching scrutiny with a view to rendering the public, by offering a useless article (with a slight alteration of name) unworthy of our patronage. Liberal discount. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DOLLAR-HIDE & CO., Sole Proprietors, 609 Broadway, N.Y.

$6 ELEGANT $8 WATCH.
Fine imported watches for the retail trade at greatly reduced prices. A splendid article for $8, open face, solid silver, small size, EXCELLENT TIMEKEEPER, WITH GOOD LUCKEY ATTACHMENT to wind and set, for only $8. Cost one half of hundreds, $250. A sample one free by mail for $8.
AN ELEGANT GOLD WATCH, open face, same model, for $12. Fine timekeeper, with LUCKEY ATTACHMENT to wind and set, for $12. Cost fifty dollars, $467. Sample one, $12.
FINE PORTAIT WATCHES. Handsomely engraved, with Fancy Dial. Rare chance to get a fine watch cheap. $60, regulated and warranted. Sample one, $60.
SILVER HUNTING-CASED WATCHES, MAGIC CLOCK. Beautifully engraved or plain. Jewelled, &c. For sale cheap. $12 and $15. Sample, $15.
GOOD SILVER HUNTING LEPINES, fancy or plain cases, LUCKEY ATTACHMENT, &c. Cost $30. Sample one, $15.
FINER SILVER ENGLISH HUNTING-LEVERS. Superior, splendid, &c. For sale cheap. Cost $40. Sample one, $20.
ENGLISH FUSEE WATCHES. Fancy movements. EXTRA SUPER HUNTING-CASES, &c. Worth $50 each. For sale cheap at half price, $104. Sample, $ 5.
THE CELEBRATED DOLLAR WATCH, a wonderful article, superior timekeeper, with THERMOMETER, COMPASS, and SALOMON HUNTING-CASE. Cost $100. Sample one, $50.
For case of half dozen, $90. Sample, $20.
Fine gold and silver watches of every description. Catalogues for the trade mailed free. CAVELY BROTHERS, Importers, 158 Nassau St., New York. Established 1848.

WORTH'S BEST FRIEND.—Holden's Universal Cotton Washer and Bleacher. Saves one half the labor, washes clothes most useful and great labor-saving machine ever invented for the use of families.
Price $2 50 each. On receipt of price it will be sent free to any address by HOLDEN & CO., 43 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.
These CELEBRATED MACHINES we can recommend to the public as being the best of all the Lock-Stitch MACHINES which EXPERIENCE has proved to be meritorious. Our System of Sewing Machine Agency will be found in all parts to call and examine THE ELLIPTIC before purchasing elsewhere. 577 Broadway, New York.

JOE MILLER, Jr., a Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, &c. Sent by mail, FREE, for 25 cents. Send orders to Box 3210, P. O., New York.

MME. LOUISE, No. 609 Broadway, N. Y., sends 19 Photographs, 20 Songs, 100 Curlers for 25 cents.

THOSE who suffer from liver complaint may rely upon it that Dr. Jaynes's Sanative Pills will cure them from the lowest bilious type to the most inflammatory, and certain relief when all the usually prescribed remedies have proved useless.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.
You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and see how it is done, or enclose stamp and address, and I will explain. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c that retails easily for 25c, by H. L. WOLCOTT, 119 Chatham Square, New York.

THE LADIES
Use PERRY'S Moth & Freckle Lotion. It is the only reliable, infallible & harmless. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond St., New York. Sold by all Druggists. Price $2 a bottle. Send for Circular.

$25 A DAY. AGENTS WANTED to sell a new cheap one Hundred. Address HOWARD CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH. AGENTS WANTED for six entirely new articles, just out. Address C. T. GAREY, City Building, 154 Nassau, Nassau.

Look, Look, Look! My Golden Compound will restore the hair to its original color. Price $1 per box. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 50 cents, or 2 for $1. Address DR. FRANKLIN, Colburn, Ill.

GOLDEN HAIR CURLER.
That will curl the most stubborn hair into wavy ringlets, and will last 6 months. Price $1 by mail.
Address DR. FRANKLIN, Colburn, Ill.

$200 A MONTH GUARANTEED
To a small number of enterprising men, to engage in a new class of business. Address at once, for particulars,
AXE VALLEY, 284 Washington Street, New York.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.
The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.
Originally patented May 13, 1862; Improvement patented June 6, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with CRIMPING attachment; a most wonderful and elegantly constructed novelty, to sometime in operation, and the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and WORK horizontal, sews with motion so simple that a child can learn it in a few minutes. Has the RUNNING-STITCH motion peculiar to machines higher priced, and with attachment of the WHEEL, will execute every variety of work, from the finest muslin to the coarsest fabric, with unerring precision, NEW BEAUTIFUL STYLE; is LIGHT RUNNING, and will do as much work in a given time as machines costing ten times the money. Will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, bind, cord, and gather at one operation, making the strongest machine made, and will last a lifetime. It is so self-evident as to require no description. It has taken the premium at STATE FAIRS, and received the approval of all who have seen it. Agents wanted all of those who have seen them.
Caution! The dressmaker is invaluable; for the household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.
"It does a common family sewing very rapidly, and is especially adapted to that which can use it."—Independent.
"It sews rapidly and handsomely."—Tribune. It does very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like a hand sewing."—New York Tribune.
Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in the most substantial manner, on receipt of the price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circulars sent free. Also will be sent one machine, sent free.
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 101 Nassau Street, New York.

In those cases of anemy, retarded growth (the great characteristic of the disease), Dr. Jaynes's Tonic Syrup has been found to excite the Sanat, Muscular, and Nervous systems to healthy growth. (See Testimonials.) The History and a small Sample of this Balsam sent sealed on receipt of 25 cents.
JOHN RAWLINS, 8 Broadway, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.
CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $26, and $36. Price of an Office, with Press, $35, $50, $100, $425, and $71. Send for a circular to the LOWELL PRESS COMPANY, 164 Water Street, Boston.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.
TERMS: $2 50 a year; 3 copies for $6; 5 copies, and 1 to getter-up of club, $10. Single Numbers for sale by News Agents throughout the United States. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. Address
T. S. ARTHUR & CO.,
323 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BIGHAM YOUNG, CODDEN, BRIGHT, Sherman, Wade, Fessenden, Hendricks, Julian, Grant, Greeley, Beecher, the Mother of Wesley—with Portraits; Stammering; Lincoln's Mother; The Red Man and the Black Man; Heads of Clergy and Heads of Rogues; Fate of the Apostles; Hall of the Mind; Character in the Walk and Eye; —in the new ANNUAL OF PHRENOLOGY AND PHYSIOGNOMY for 1866, now ready. 15 cents. Address
FOWLER & WELLS, New York.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES.
THE HIGHEST PREMIUM.
They have sold Seventy-five Hundred.
They have a perfect self-adjusting Shuttle Tension.
They make four separate and distinct stitches on one and the same machine.
They have many advantages over all others.
FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
505 Broadway, New York.

Hawkes Improved Fountain Pen. One filling writes 8 to 12 hours. Also other styles of pens. Sent by mail, postpaid. Circulars free. G. T. HAWKES, Patentee and Sole Manufacturer, 64 Nassau St., New York.

PAPER RAGS—ALL KINDS.
The Crown Rag Co.
Make the Best, and sell the Cheapest. Any where.
Send for Price-List.
12 VESEY STREET,
NEW YORK.

BOOK OF RECIPES, 40 pages, with new catalogue, mailed free. Please address BUCKLE & CO., 713 Broadway, N.Y.

FUN.—Jeff Davis, his Life and Adventures. "Going In," and "Coming Out." Over 100 comic cuts. Only 15c.—10 for $1. Address HOUSE & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

A NEW LIBRARY OF MESMERISM and PSYCHOLOGY. In 3 vols., comprising Philosophy of Mesmerism, Clairvoyance, Psychology, Fascination, and Magic of the Ancients.
"All are just parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is and God the soul."
This work explains modern mysteries, and furnishes a key to that which is beyond the reach of science, even like the realms of spirits. Price, in all, $4. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

Window Shades, Curtains,
AND CURTAIN MATERIALS OF ALL KINDS, at
KERTT & BRO.'S, 707 Broadway.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are over.
THE COSMOPOLITAN
JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
Capital, $2,500,000.
Great One-Price Gold Sale.
SELLING BRASS OR SO-CALLED PLATED JEWELRY.
WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD
OR NO SALE.
Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price system, for cash, and that no article made of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.
250,000
Plates, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Silverware, Fine Gold Jewelry, Five thousand articles, many
Worth $2,500,000,
All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of each article the most valuable, and to be paid for until you know what you will receive.
INSTEAD THE DOLLARS WORTH FOR $2
The Finest—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the dollars, articles that may cost $5, a thousand retail, indeed, some of $10, as a sample. Gold or Castor, fancy Photograph Albums, subset of $8; and you have a perfect right to choose.
Fine Gold Watch or Piano.
Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and secrets, and a description of the articles which are well suited and taken out in gardens of choice, but we send, which will inform you what you can get for $2, from a Butte-Dish or Castor, worth $16, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $500. Also will be sent one selector, containing list of articles and full particulars; also terms for agents, by return great inducements are offered. Five sets open next for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5. Address
THE COSMOPOLITAN JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
253 and 255 Broadway, N. Y.
Depot, 207 South Fourth Street, Louisville, Ky.; or 93 and 95 Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

THE GREAT GIFT SALE.
BY MRS. A. J. D.
Oh, say, have you been to the Great Sale to-day?
Have you seen all the things they are giving away?
Have you got a ticket? A splendid one, too,
For a ring which the tiniest finger might grow
Into, and a watch, and a chain, and a pin,
Bracelets, brooches, and ear-drops in numbers untold;
And beautiful ornaments made for the hair,
For the matron, the maiden, the child at her prayer,
And glittering diamonds unchangeably bright,
Forever reflecting the beautiful light.
There are sewing machines, with their fingers of steel,
That outdance and outwork a dozen of Neal.
And the pole, wary sometimes is weary no more,
When you hear its glad song as you enter her door;
But perhaps you are thinking I've told you the joke
For those who are able to pay them their price?
That's true; but I'll tell you how you may get them a-way;
For each article only One Dollar to pay.
The poorest may now with the wealthiest share,
And only to Dare & Co.'s house they repair,
Or address through the mail, if they're far for aware
C. M. Dare & Co. are located in United States. Two volumes
For Certificates 25 cents each; 5 for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5; 100 for $15. Send stamp for circular.

ALL WORKS ON PHONOGRAPHY, HYDROPATHY, ELECTRICITY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, ETHNOLOGY, MESMERISM, PHOTOGRAPHY, MAGNETISM, MEDICINE, and the Natural Sciences, &c., supplied by HORACE FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York. Send for a Descriptive Catalogue of Physical Science Works. AGENTS WANTED.

1,000,000 Purchasers Wanted. Articles to suit all customers. Catalogue sent free. Address your address. W. G. WARNER, 379 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and the Army, delayed by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 63 Broadway, and will be delivered free.

ALL WHO WANT TO KNOW A SURE WAY HOW TO RAISE WHISKERS, cure trouble or Pimples, or cut Cards, send a twenty cent letter, to FRED. HILLS, 84 Nassau Street, New York, who will inform them by return mail, free.

MUJAVIRO
THE MOST DELICIOUS
AND HEALTHY DRINK
IN THE WORLD.
Of all Grocers and Druggists.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.
TERMS.
One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.
The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine. The following are the terms: one quarter of a page, $75; one half page, $150; one page, $300. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any other publication in the world.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.
Circulation over 100,000.
HARPER'S WEEKLY.
TERMS.
One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Six Months 1 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.
The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, postage paid, by express, under the following rates:
Cloth Binding . . . . . $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco 10 00
Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.
TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for Ordinary Advertisements. Each Insertion.
HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

SELF-RELIANCE.

RAGGED URCHIN. "I say, Stranger, let's go to the Circus?"
GOOD BOY. "My Mother won't let me!"
RAGGED URCHIN. "Hang yer Mother! I'm an Orphan. I'll take care of yer!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES;
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL ATTENTION.

ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL.....$2,000,000. SURPLUS...$1,700,000.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on favorable terms. J. L. WESTON, Cashier.
NEW YORK, August 21, 1865.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie-Crust, eaten with impunity, and the fear of the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PERRINE'S PATENT YEAST POWDER. Sold by grocers generally and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 185 Front St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if treatment is submitted to, on consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

$20. G. & S. CRYSTAL D. P. $20.
$1000 A year can be realized selling our putting up the Crystal Dose Plate. Agents wanted. Stock, Tools, and Instructions sent $20. L. L. YOUNG & CO.,
49 Nassau Street, New York.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & CO.
CHAMPAGNE
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and considerate acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold by Retail at duty paid by A. W. KITCHEL, 49 Beaver St., N. Y.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York,
BANKERS AND BROKERS, AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.
DE WITT C. LAWRENCE. CYRUS J. LAWRENCE.
SIDNEY BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HALSTED.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
Bought and Sold on Commission.

Decalcomania, a New and Beautiful Art.
The simplest process to ornament and embellish Furniture, Glass, Wood, Silk, Leather, etc. Only practiced by every body. F. L. VOUGHT & PALMER, 881 Broadway.

Warmed Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed, free, on receipt of one cent. Address
L. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1,120 Broadway, New York.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCHU,
Cures diseases of the Stomach, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Dropsy, &c. Five Odd Dollars. Sold by D. HAYES & CO. and F. C. WILLIAMS & CO., New York. Dunham & Bourne, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
ROSWELL & WARNER'S COLOGNIC colors beautifully and naturally. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 1 Dey St., N. Y.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

Agents Wanted
To canvass for our new, beautifully illustrated, and thrilling book, entitled GUERILLA WARFARE. CAMP FIRE AND COTTON FIELD, by Thos. W. KNOX, Herald Correspondent. Full of startling incidents, amusing anecdotes, ingenious stratagems, life in camp and prisons; together with simple and reliable directions to those who design engaging in cotton culture at the South. Send for circular. HALLOCK & CO., 82 Nassau st., New York.

THE WEBBER PIANO
Is considered by the leading Musicians, by the National Piano-Forte Association, the Conservatory of Music, and other Musical Schools, the Best Piano-Forte Manufactured,
because of their great POWER, SWEETNESS AND FLEXIBILITY OF TONE, PERFECT EQUALITY, ELASTIC TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.
Warerooms, 429 Broome St, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

THE BETTER PART OF FASHION, as well as of Wisdom, is Discretion. Ladies who think so should visit GENIN'S. His peerless stock of Ladies', Misses', and Children's FANCY HATS has been filled up with the freshest Paris styles, and marked down below the usual Broadway prices. GENIN,
No. 513 Broadway.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $1, $4, $5, and $6 a set. Ivory and Pearl Dollar-Buttons, $1 50 to $3 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELLING,
Importer and Manufacturer, 571 Broadway.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

THE MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.
FORTY-TWO GOLD or SILVER MEDALS, or other first Premiums awarded to these Organs within a few years, and SEVEN amidst the sharpest competition with all the other prominent makers of Reed Instruments within the last three weeks.
No other instruments of this class have ever been awarded a gold medal in this country. Not only have these instruments received the highest prominence at Industrial Fairs in almost every instance, but they are pronounced, by the leading musicians of the country generally, to be UNEQUALED BY ANY OTHER INSTRUMENTS OF THEIR CLASS IN THE WORLD. See printed testimony to this effect in our circulars, from more than two hundred and fifty, including a large portion of the most eminent organists, pianists, musical directors, and composers in the whole country. Catalogues of styles and prices, with full particulars, sent free. Address MASON & HAMLIN, 274 Washington St., Boston; or 596 Broadway, New York.

THE BROWN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying Power 1,000 Diameters. Mailed free on receipt of 50 CENTS, or THREE for $1 00.
Address F. C. BROWN, Box 2224, Boston, Mass.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented.
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to steel clasp for holding Cravat-ties, "Unique," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt bosom.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and stitching of the edges.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., Agents,
Whitney Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
Bowen Brothers.....Chicago, Illinois.
J. Lowens & Bro.....Cincinnati, Ohio.
Mayer & Harsch.....Cleveland, Ohio.
Cambridge & Co.....Louisville, Kentucky.
C. Capen.....765 Broadway, New York.
Wm. A. Smith.....3 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. Bierman & Co.....Detroit, Michigan.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the smallest, lightest, and most effective REVOLVER in the world. Its simplicity, compactness, durability, effectiveness, and power with lightness, facility of handling, convenience and safety in carrying, to a degree not attained by any other arm made. It carries a twelve cartridge magazine. Any Revolver made of same size and weight. The Cartridges is central fire, self-extracting. Light arm (34 oz.), large ball (30-100), six-shot, and only 7 inches in extreme length.
For sale by dealers in the trade generally.
GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff St., New York.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

VINELAND LANDS.
To all Wanting Farms.
Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Terms, one-fifth cash, balance in five equal annual payments, payable without interest. Good building property for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place; lots of Wheat, Corn, and Potatoes in the field and in storage. Letters answered. Apply to CHAS. E. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.
Extract from Report of John Ballenger, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for peasant farming that is now for sale in the States."

DEMULCENT,
HONEY, GLYCERINE AND PALM
SOAPS,
J. C. HULL'S SON,
32 PARK ROW, NEW-YORK.
Manufacturer of 100 different styles of Soaps.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best materials, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 19 Chambers Street, New York.

GREAT CHANCE FOR AGENTS.
What the people want—THE STANDARD HISTORY OF THE WAR—complete in one large volume of over 1000 pages, splendidly illustrated with over 150 fine portraits of Generals, Battle-Scenes, Maps, and Diagrams. This work has no rival as a candid, lucid, complete, authentic, and reliable history of the War. It contains really-no-matter equal to three large octavo volumes. Send for circulars, and see our terms. Address JONES BROS. & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.; Cincinnati, O.; Boston, Mass.; or Zanesville, M'Cune & Co., Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.

Philadelphia Photographic Co.
Trade supplied with best quality of card pictures at lowest rates. Card views in the Cu. Records, a large variety. No. 720 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Agents Wanted Every Where. RETURNED SOLDIERS,
And every body with a small capital, can make $10 per day selling goods, new, and wonderful extra large size, fine quality stationery packages. Every dollar invested returned doubled. Splendid gold and silver watches presented free to all who act as our agents. Smart man wanted in every village and town to establish agencies. Country rights free, sales immense, demand increasing. Every body buys them. Send for our new Circulars, containing extra premium inducements, free.
W. D. GILBERT & CO., Stationers,
102 Nassau Street, New York.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
469 Broadway (all). Lord & Taylor's and 154 Fulton St.

Stammering
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. Descriptive pamphlet, &c., address M. C. BATES, 707 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SCHIEBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for Piles, Old Wounds, Scrofula, Salt Rheum—all Sores and Skin Diseases, &c. 32 Beaver, New York.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

YANKEE BLADE—New Volume!
Now is the time to subscribe for the most popular of the story papers. Terms, $3 per annum; Club rates, $2 50. ADDRESS YANKEE BLADE, 22 Congress Street, Boston.

CHOICE MEDICAL BOOKS. Send for Catalogue to C. FEDERIHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.

DEY'S Patent Shirt Collar (new style). J. & G. IRELIN, 56 Nassau Street, New York.

DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE for November is out. The most entertaining and widely popular ever presented to the American public, especially to the ladies. Do not fail to see the splendid New Jerusalem. Now ready.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in the world. It is filled with attractive Illustrations, and Stories in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. For scurvy, leprosy, and cutaneous diseases they are unrivaled. In place where these maladies are prevalent no cure are more valuable. For the weak, nervous, bilious, &c., they are unparalleled, and as a consequence Holloway's Health increased. Only every where.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 463.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

NOT QUITE IN VAIN.

BY MILES O'REILLY.

How often in days of our sore distress,
When we faint with an absolute weariness
Of endless labor and endless pain,
The sickening thought in our souls will rise,
Clouding with gloom even the brightest skies,
And chilling the pulse and filling the eyes—
"We have lived—we have lived in vain!"

When the hearts we thought golden and trusted best
Prove but shriveling dross in the fiery test
Which the Fates for all friendships ordain;
As we turn the false picture with face to the wall,
Or veil the lost idol with charity's pall,
How cold on the soul seems the whisper to fall—
"We have lived—we have lived in vain!"

When some prize of ambition, for years postponed,
Is at length attained, yet we feel unadorned
For the struggle that gave us the pain—
Oh, spurning the dead-sea fruit we sought,
"Must it ever be thus?" is the weary thought,
And again to our ears is the whisper brought—
"We have lived—we have lived in vain?"

Oh friends! how rare in this workaday life
Are the prizes, if won, that are worth the strife,
The clangor, the dust, and the strain!
There is only one in the world below,
But one, that, whatever its price of woe,
Bids the soul in the veins to exultingly know
That we have not lived in vain!

'Tis that moment unspeakable—best unsaid—
When blushingly downward the dear drooping head
To our breast for the first time we strain;
And the promise is given, not in words, but in sighs,
And the sweet, humid tenderness filling her eyes—
"Oh soul of my soul! In my love be a prize,
Then you have not lived in vain!"

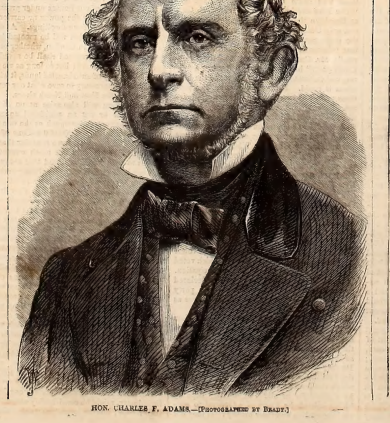
HON. CHARLES F. ADAMS.

THIS country has fresh reason to be proud of its Minister in England—the Hon. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS. His part in the remarkable correspondence which has recently taken place between him and Earl RUSSELL places him side by side with his father and grandfather as a defender of his country in the English court.

For CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS is the third member of his family who has represented this country in England. His grandfather, JOHN ADAMS, was the first American Minister to the Court of St. James. It was to him that KING GEORGE THE THIRD delivered the famous apostrophe: "I AM, Sir, of all men in England, as you may imagine, the soriest to receive you here." This was in 1785. Thirty years later the son of JOHN ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, was sent to England as our Minister, remaining at court two years. He took with him his son, the present CHARLES F. ADAMS, who was eight years old at the time they arrived in London, and went to an English school. Report states that he took his first lessons in the art of self-defense from some English fellow-pupils, whose sarcastic flings at his country was more than the young Yankee could tolerate.

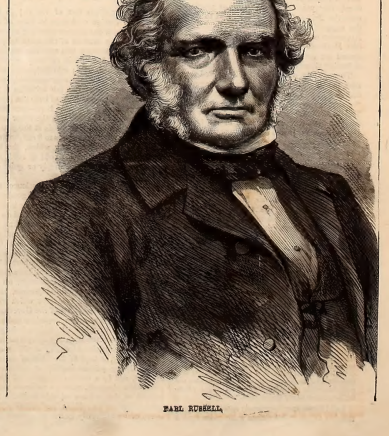
Mr. ADAMS has lived a quiet, unobtrusive life. In 1848 he was a delegate to the famous Buffalo Convention, and was chosen President of that body—a post of which he discharged the duties with credit. He subsequently published the Life and Writings of his grandfather, JOHN ADAMS—a work of great merit, which occupies a standard place in our political literature. In 1859 he was elected to Congress. He was not a prominent member of the House; but it is a curious fact, when considered in relation to his subsequent efforts in support of the war, that from him came the first proposition for a compromise when the country was first threatened with civil war. He represented Massachusetts in the famous perilous committee, and probably his was the most finished speech delivered in Congress at this remarkable crisis in our national affairs.

Mr. ADAMS is now fifty-seven years of age, and has, it is said, a splendid fortune, part of which he derived from his wife. His position for the past five years has been one which demanded not only unusual sagacity but also an extraordinary equanimity of temper. His great reward is, that his expressions of confidence as to the success of his Government in the war for its self-preservation have been so triumphantly justified.



EARL RUSSELL.

EARL RUSSELL, better known in history as Lord JOHN RUSSELL, is the third son of JOHN, sixth Duke of Bedford. His mother was the daughter of the fourth Viscount TORRINGTON. He was born at Mayfair, August 18, 1792. After a preparatory course of study at Sunbury and at Westminster School, he completed his scholastic education at the University of Edinburgh, where he was for some time the pupil of the metaphysician THOMAS BROWN and of DUGALD STEWART. Under the tuition of the latter the liberal opinions which came to him as a natural inheritance from his ancestors were doubtless confirmed.



In 1813, after the formation of the Liverpool Ministry, Lord JOHN RUSSELL entered Parliament as member from Tavistock. The Whigs at this time possessed great influence, though not in office. One of the first "hits" made by Lord JOHN was an eloquent speech on Foreign Treaties, which immediately gave him a high place among Parliamentary orators. At the time of the popular outbreaks in 1817 Lord RUSSELL urged that, instead of adopting harsh measures, timely concessions ought to be made to the people; but his advice was not followed by the Government. He threw his whole soul into the cause of Parliamentary Reform, and came at length to be the recognized leader in the movement. He was a strong advocate of Catholic Emancipation, and an opponent of Test and Corporation oaths. When WELLESLEY—the Duke of Wellington—came into power, in 1828, Lord RUSSELL saw his long-cherished projects carried into execution. Then came the excitement about the Reform Bill, in 1832. Then it was that Lord JOHN RUSSELL arrived at the zenith of his glory.

During Lord MELBOURNE'S Administration Lord RUSSELL became HOME Secretary, and from 1835 to 1841 was the guiding spirit of the Whig party. He succeeded Sir ROBERT PEEL as Prime Minister, and remained at the helm until 1851. As often happens, Lord RUSSELL while in office became more conservative and cautious; many of his supporters, and even Lord PALMERSTON, fell away from him; and in 1852 Lord DERBY came into power. In 1859, under Lord PALMERSTON, Lord RUSSELL became Minister of Foreign Affairs. In July, 1861, he was raised to the peerage as Earl RUSSELL.

Earl RUSSELL has proved a very prudent, if not a very satisfactory Foreign Minister. He has forever been protesting and menacing, but has always failed to follow up his protests or menaces with any efficient action; and although by his caution he has kept England out of hot water during three important wars, the English people would have been better satisfied if he had said less and made fewer angry expostulations. We give elsewhere a resumé of the recent correspondence between Earl RUSSELL and Mr. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, in relation to claims made by our Government upon England for injuries done by Anglo-Rebel privateers during the rebellion.

HON. CHARLES F. ADAMS.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

EARL RUSSELL.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

CLOSE OF THE THIRTY-FIRST VOLUME.

THE Thirty-first Volume of HARPER'S MAGAZINE closes with the NOVEMBER NUMBER. Among the prominent features of this Volume are the Novels by the two foremost writers of fiction of the time,—CHARLES DICKENS and WILKIE COLLINS; Personal Sketches of the prominent Generals in the Union Army; and descriptions, by MR. J. ROSS BROWNE, of the Mineral Regions of the Pacific. The "Monthly Record of Current Events" includes, excepting the single interval of the War, all the important facts for the Restoration of the Union.

Each Number of HARPER'S MAGAZINE contains fifty to one hundred per cent. more matter than any other American Magazine issued at the same price; and nearly double the quantity contained in the popular British Magazines, such as the "Cornhill," "Temple Bar," and "London Society," and seventy per cent. more than the half-crown British Magazines, such as "Blackwood," "Fraser," and "Dublin University."

MR. J. ROSS BROWNE will continue the historical narrative of his Journeys and Adventures in Nevada, Idaho, Salt Lake City, and other parts of the Far West.

Ample arrangements have been made for the ensuing Volume with old and new Contributors, of every department of the Magazine. For Terms, etc., see page 719.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1865.

THE BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

WE print elsewhere a full and clear abstract of the late correspondence between MR. ADAMS, our Minister in England, and EARL RUSSELL, the British Foreign Secretary. It is of the greatest interest and importance, and fully displays the skill of both gentlemen. But the candid reader, of whatever sympathy, will scarcely deny that MR. ADAMS has the strongest case, and that he presents it most strongly. Indeed his part in this correspondence is the crowning labor of a most honorable, sagacious, and arduous public service rendered at a time of unprecedented national peril, and requiring not only the most various ability and preparation, but the most fortunate temperament. In this, as in every official act, MR. ADAMS is a master. Calm, dignified, exhaustive, and forcible, his letters are free from mere rhetoric or bluster or sentimentality, but a true American heart beats in every line. He clearly exposes every sophism and corrects every misrepresentation of his antagonist, and courteously tears away every disguise in which the British Minister seeks to conceal his conduct during the war. To every duty of his difficult and delicate position MR. ADAMS has been fully equal, and he not only preserved unimpaired, but he has graced with fresh lustre the honorable traditions of his name.

The point in dispute is plain. It is the duty and responsibility of neutrals. What is the object of neutrality and of neutrality laws? Obviously to keep the volunteering of either party, and to prevent by penalties the giving of such aid. Now when a Government is blown that neutrality is not observed by its subjects, and when the evidence is overwhelming that its laws to secure neutrality are insufficient, what does an honestly neutral Government do? Can it honorably do more than one thing? Will it not secure neutrality by additional legal precautions? This was what the United States did at the request of Portugal nearly fifty years ago, and this was precisely what the British Government refused to do at the suggestion of the United States. Lord PALMERSTON said in the House of Commons that Ministers would certainly not revise or amend the laws of the realm at the dictation of foreign Governments.

There can be no fact more fully proved than that the Alabama would not have escaped if ordinary care had been taken. But did not the circumstances demand extraordinary care? The British Government, indeed, were not compelled to sharpen the edge of the law at our request, but it was unfriendly not to do so. It was especially unfriendly, because, in the case of the Grand Admiral, during the Russian war, our Government had shown itself peculiarly sensitive to guard its neutrality in the interest of Great Britain. This was so undisputed that "Historicus," in one of his earliest letters to the London Times, toasted absolutely upon the evidence of the Alabama and Florida from British ports, because of the generous conduct of our Government in similar cases.

Neither military nor extraordinary care was taken. EARL RUSSELL pleaded somebody's stomach-ache as a reason for not seizing the Alabama, and she ran quietly out of the British port and began to burn American ships. Thus the British law was shown to be insufficient to secure British neutrality. But Parliament declined to ask for any change in it. Even the law as it stood was not faithfully executed, and now EARL RUSSELL says:

"Her Majesty's Government are the sole guardians of their own honor. They can not admit they have acted with bad faith in maintaining the neutrality they professed. The law officers of the Crown must be held to be better interpreters of a British statute than any foreign Government can be presumed to be. Her Majesty's Government must, therefore, decline to make reparation and compensation for captures made by the Alabama or for the question to any foreign State."

EARL RUSSELL subsequently speaks of a Commission to adjust all claims arising during the war; but only such claims as the two Powers shall agree to refer to the Commissioners, but he had just said in effect that Great Britain would not refer those against the Alabama; and the Times officially repeats the statement.

British neutrality, under the present British laws, swept United States commerce from the ocean. The chief offender was the Alabama, and the British Government declares that no reparation or compensation for her ravages will be made. It is a violation of international law. If the United States Government decides, upon a full review of the facts, that Great Britain has failed in her duty, it will unquestionably, after proposing an amicable settlement, redress the wrong as it best can.

THE SIMPLE QUESTION.

THE States of New York and New Jersey will say on the Seventh of November whether they believe that the war is a failure or a success, and whether the Emancipation Amendment, the cardinal point of President JOHNSON'S policy, shall prevail. The Democratic Legislature of New Jersey rejected the Amendment as it refused to allow soldiers to vote. The orators of the Democratic party in New York are such gentlemen as MR. COX, who voted against the Amendment in Congress, and MR. SEYMOUR, who publicly declared that if the Union could not be preserved without emancipation the Union ought to be dissolved.

Is there any reason why a loyal citizen who has faithfully and zealously supported the war should withdraw his sympathy from the men who have supported it with him, and turn for fellowship to those who have opposed every effort to dishearten the country and compel an ignominious surrender to rebellion, and who stealthily solicited British interference to settle the war?

This is the simple question offered to the people of the States of New York and New Jersey. In the latter State the open opposition of MR. RUNYON, the Democratic candidate for Governor, to the President's policy, and the fact that he is supported by people who were open allies of the rebellion should, even in that State, secure his defeat. As usual, the true issue of the election is obscured by an alarming zeal, and their prospects were never so promising. But whatever the result, the true Loyal States will not accept the peace the State is released from the remorseless hold of a party which repudiates American principles and clings to injustice.

In New York the question is not less simple. If the platforms are similar, the voter will ask himself what are the antecedents and character and probable intentions of the candidates. Has the Democratic party been the faithful friend and supporter of the country during the war, or has it done what it could to make the Union party faltered in the war, or does it show any incapacity under the leadership of the President whose policy it has opposed for a great problem of reorganization? Which of the two is the more likely to yield every point to the late rebels? For the success of which do the late rebels most earnestly pray?

OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

THE most curious fact of the day is the weakness of foreign exchange in view of the preponderance of our imports over our exports. For the first few months of the financial year our exports of produce and merchandise were valued at $126,600,000 in currency, equal to say $85,500,000 in gold at 67½ cents, now for exports of specie, and the aggregate shipments from this port—which is a fair criterion of the whole country—for the same time, our import and export trade being done here—amount to $111,600,000 in specie. On the other hand, the importation of foreign goods at this port in the same time, currency value, was $161,600,000 in specie. Notwithstanding which, the best banker's bills are selling @ 108¾ @ 108¾, that is, only at a discount of nearly or quite one per cent.

Merchants and bankers of experience, noting the active import trade in foreign goods, the profits of importers, and the steadily increasing importations, on the one hand; and on the other, the unprecedented movement at the West, which has caused over two million bushels of wheat to be hoarded this season at Chicago, and which the present time would probably render it profitable to import wheat from the Baltic or from Liverpool, have looked for an active demand for exchange, an advance in gold, large shipments thereof, and a drain upon our specie resources which would seriously impede the efforts of the Government to restore the currency to a specie standard.

The failure of those calculations is in great measure due to the enormous exportation of American securities to Europe. No record, unfortunately, is kept of this class of exports; it is only by private inquiry at the foreign bankers, and by a careful digestion of the reports thus obtained, that an estimate can be formed of the volume of this traffic. It is known that over a million dollars (very much over) of Five-Twenty Bonds go abroad every week. It is also known that the great bulk of the stock of the Illinois Central has gone abroad. And it is reported that the Erie Railway that within a fortnight over $2,000,000 of the stock of that concern has gone to England, swelling the foreign holding to $11,000,000 out of $16,400,000. These exports, which are not cleared at the custom-house and appear in no trade tables, nevertheless furnish a large amount of exchange, and supply the place of specie.

But a still more potent agency in keeping down the rate of exchange has been the withdrawal from the country of money sent thither during the rebellion by people who had lost faith in the national cause. No estimate worth printing can be made of the amount of money transmitted to England by Americans or residents in the United States during the years 1861 and 1862; but that can be said is, that it must have been very large indeed. There was hardly a merchant or a banker in this city who did not place at least a portion of his capital on the other side. Quite a considerable number of the leading men of Wall and South streets bought gold at 200 and upward to the extent of their means, and transmitted it to London. Others put half their capital in gold and sent it out. The Kentucky banks sent their entire means to London. Leading private bankers in New York did not reserve currency enough to buy a potato; when they wanted money they borrowed with the security of their bills on London. These people were not only convinced that the currency was going to the dogs, but, by the teaching of Democratic speakers and newspapers, in the daily dread of a success of confiscation, and burned to get their money out of the reach of "ABRAHAM'S estrays."

They are now enjoying their reward. There has been no confiscation. No satrap has appeared in Wall Street in the shape of hidden gold. The Chairman of the National Democratic Committee has not been subjected to the thumbscrews by JEFFERSON DAVIS'S janissaries thirsting for the ROTHSCHILDS' bullion. The friends of British Consul ARCHIBALD, who declared they could not sleep with crowbacks in their possession, or words to that effect, have gone moaning they would wake up and find them worthless, have not yet been despoiled.

But all these classes of timid losses of people have now the satisfaction of drawing back from England the gold they sent thither at an average loss of fifty per cent. MESSRS. A, B, C, D, E, C, the smartest of our English merchants, MESSRS. D, E, and F, eminent German bankers, Messrs. G, H, and I, French importers (for that matter, so on throughout the alphabet of our foreign merchants and bankers), are reimporting at 146 the gold they sent to Europe at 200 @ 210. And this making an operation which they can not help, but one which, nevertheless, they will not hereafter recall without some private misgivings of fresh. It must console them to reflect that unwittingly they are rendering a great help to this country by keeping down the rate of exchange.

A WORD WITH THE SOLDIERS.

UPON another page we present the true defenders of the Constitution as contrasted with those who claim to be its especial friends. "The Democratic party," cried MR. S. S. COX at Brooklyn the other evening, "is the true and only Union party of the country." This is the same gentleman who declared in Chicago that "LINCOLN was no better than JEFF DAVIS." MR. COX and his friends of the "only Union party" have declared the war a failure, and exhorted the country to make the best terms it could. HORATIO SEYMOUR, the previous year, standing at "the prostrate fortunes" of the Fourth of July, at the very moment when hundreds and thousands of the true defenders of the Constitution were falling wounded and dead on the fields of Virginia, declared surrendering to GRANT. While the soldiers were dying on the field MR. HORATIO SEYMOUR was openly declaring that the Administration which ten days afterward raged in the city of New York, and the frenzied, bloody perpetrators the same party, as Governor of the State, called "my friends."

These are the gentlemen who now wish to persuade the soldiers that they are the true and only Union party. The soldiers do not forget that it was the party of MR. SEYMOUR and MR. COX which tried to deprive them of their votes. It was the party of these gentlemen which voted against the military necessity of emancipation. It was their party which unanimously declared that we were fighting for a false issue, and whose members derided the Union soldiers as "Bull Runners."

Do these gentlemen suppose that the soldiers of New York have forgotten who were the true defenders of the Constitution and Union? Do they suppose them to have forgotten such scenes as that depicted upon page 712 of this paper? Do they hope the soldiers have forgotten their dead comrades any more than the living cause which the dead and the living soldiers together have saved for us all? Or do they hope by hiding behind the figure of a General to conceal themselves and their history? If they do, we believe with General BARLOW, who expresses the utmost respect for the character and services of General SLOCUM, but who adds: "I do not believe, fellow-citizens, that those soldiers of New York who followed him so gallantly when he was marching against the enemy will follow him now that he is marching against their friends.... I have seen them fight for their country. They struggled, they fought, they died, and they were conquerors. Their glory, the trophies, and the treasure they have won, they have left to your care. Those trophies will not let you sleep. You, too, I have firm faith, will march and struggle and fight; and I believe you, too, will be conquerors."

Soldiers of New York! was it HORATIO SEYMOUR and his confederates at Chicago or Albany, the villifiers of LINCOLN and JOHNSON, or your comrades in the field, who were the true defenders of the Constitution?

CROTON WATER.

THE Commissioners of this Department have at last made their selection of the ground for the first reservoir for storing water to be supplied to the Croton pipe at such portion as the stage of water may require. The place selected is about one mile west of Brewster's Station on the Harlem Railroad, on the middle branch of the Croton, and about three miles above the station at Croton Falls. Its distance from this city, measured on the line of the aqueduct and river, is about 48 miles. It is 1 miles above the dam, and is seated at an elevation of 375 feet above mean tide. The area of this new reservoir is computed at 1,000 acres and a fraction, capable of holding 4,867,035,136 gallons, supplied from a drainage area of between 30 and 40 square miles. The height of the reservoir will be 12,200 feet, of the extreme depth of 73 feet. These details may be somewhat varied in the course of construction, but they present substantially the main points of the reservoir. Arrangements are now in progress for securing all the land required and for commencing the work.

A recent inspection of the situation enables us to say that a reservoir may be built at this spot with but little labor, as the river is confined between high hills which at the point selected for the dam approach so near to each other that the length of the dam will be about 400 feet. Above the dam the hills widen so as to present a broad but compact area, at present but thinly occupied, affording an extensive reservoir at reasonable rates, and for storing pure water not surpassed by any of the locations examined for this object.

The city may well be congratulated that this important work, delayed until now by questions between contending Commissioners, will soon be so far completed as to furnish a ample supply of water to make up the deficiency found to exist in periods of drought. Locations have been surveyed for 15 other reservoirs lying in the whole an area of over 4000 acres, which as the city increases in population will be required in whole or in part for future use. But the important matter of the supply of pure water no large city in the world has advantages superior to those of New York. The elevated land, consisting chiefly of the primary system in which the Croton rises, extend to the centre of the island, so that water may be furnished throughout the city by houses under pressure, its waste constituting the power or carrier for removing the refuse from dwellings. At some future time the question will be mooted here, as it lately has been in London, whether or not the material thus removed shall be saved for purposes of agriculture. But as we have no possess a great body of unexhausted lands, it will be considered unnecessary to save what our sewers now carry to the East and North rivers.

The question will also arise at no distant day, whether or not an additional aqueduct shall be constructed, inasmuch as the one now in use delivers but only 60,000,000 gallons of water per diem. But when we consider that the supply to London does not much exceed 12 gallons to each inhabitant, and that every one here can be furnished with 60 gallons per day—assuming the population,so amount to 1,000,000 in number—the question in this view is not likely to arise immediately; but there are other uses for water which may hasten the construction of a new aqueduct. It is said to be seen that in New Haven a machine constructed in Hartford has been used for driving printing-presses and other machinery by water drawn by the water from the New Haven water-works, supplied through an inch pipe, and applied in a manner so simple as to afford a means of industry and safe and economical that no one would become very extensive if there were a considerable surplus of water. The iron casing which inclosses the water-wheel is but little more than an enlargement of the water pipe, through which water flows discharging itself into another pipe and thence flowing to the sewer. Sewing machines, 60 or 70 in number, are worked together by means of this simple contrivance, which needs only to be oiled to be ready for constant use."

Our manufacturing, and especially our domestic industry, might be largely extended by such means; but the important want of the water is for all household purposes and for putting out fires, in which respect our supply will be unexcelled.

The London Times lately devoted an article to an examination of the relative merits and capacity for growth of various cities of the United States, in which the city of New York was allowed only an inferior relative position. All the main points which give to New York her great eminence were artfully overlooked. The supply of pure water would not alone be deemed of controlling importance; but Paris and London are both suffering for the want of this necessary of comfort and health—a want which must limit the growth of each of those cities—whereas the drainage area of the Croton, consisting of 338 square miles, is ample (the water properly stored) for all the population that can be crowded on the island and its adjacent lands in Westchester. Soon the Bronx will be brought into use for the supply of the lower part of Westchester, as its waters can be stored at Bronxville at an elevation of 70 feet above tide; thus relieving the Croton of that duty and placing the question of a supply to New York beyond all the contingencies of growth and extravagance in use. When we connect with this the eminent advantages of immediate contract with the sea for the largest ships; of convenient contact with Canada and the boundless Westfirst with a tidal stream of 160 miles length, and next with favorable valleys for improvements already existing, and to be farmed as trade increases—we have a future for New York which no city of the world can compare with. WASHINGTON, as a new bred of empire, and, at a glance, when stationed in the Mohawk Valley, the power which would be contributed to this city by the use of that continental line for opening to the West, while the residue of the Atlantic sea-board was separated from it by intervening mountains, and he must be a sentiment ist blind in the valley the tide to which now is derived from his ancient conveyance.

Years ago Mr. SEWARD was referred to the prophecies made by WASHINGTON of the uses to which these natural advantages might be applied; and if we shall have from Buffalo to Albany, in an enlargement of the canal, a Mississippi of the North, it will be but carrying out the keen perceptions which enabled WASHINGTON, in the midst of the revolution, to see at the northernmost of the Hudson with the waters of the ocean a mighty city, destined, we believe, to surpass all others in the world.

BUYING IN CANADA.

It is becoming pretty generally known that the place to buy clothes and food is Canada. At coast, costing $75 in New York, can be got in Montreal or Toronto for $50 to $60, or $40 in currency; a suit, worth $100 here, can be got there for $45, say $67 in our money; boots, worth $10 here, can be had there for $7, say $10 of our money; and meat, poultry, and all kinds of produce can be had there at 25 to 35 per cent. cheaper than here. Add to that speculation in produce and merchandise which has so long prevailed here, and has carried every thing to far higher relative figures than gold, has not yet penetrated Canada, and smart men are making their purchases for the winter in the colonial towns. In the Detroit River, Windsor, opposite Detroit, no less than eight large clothing stores have lately been established, and are doing a large business.

The fact—which, as we explained a couple of weeks since, may in part be ascribed to the dread of currency contraction, which prevents the free conversion of capital into the country—may perhaps operate in favor of at least a temporary continuance of the Reciprocity treaty.

THE CITY'S NEXT GUEST.

There is little doubt that the cholera has appeared in England, and that it will be here in the early spring. It was raging in Madrid at the last accounts, and is supposed to be more deadly in Turin than in Naples. We have thus had timely notice. We shall have a year to set our house in order. Whether it be in order or not depends on the action of the City Government.

The Health Commissioners, at a late meeting, seriously addressed themselves to this subject, and appointed a committee consisting of Mayor Cleveland, of Jersey City, and of the Health Officers of Brooklyn and New York, with the resident physician of Bellevue, to apply to the National Government for a suitable site to detain cholera patients and passengers arriving at this port. Dr. SWINBURNE, our Health officer, is of opinion that if fifty acres can be obtained and stockaded at Sandy Hook no disorder need be apprehended. Dr. SMITH, the resident physician, is not at a little current expense will prevent all danger. Any one who feels the usual cholera symptoms should go to bed and be there for forty-eight hours. Rest, warmth, composure of mind, and regular habits he considers to be the true means of preventing or curing the disease.

Undoubtedly the disease is much better understood than it was when it first appeared, but apparently no more precautions will be taken than at. The best opinion is, that it is primarily an affection or taint of the atmosphere, which seizes upon favorable bodily conditions. Universal purification would therefore seem to be the natural and sensible remedy. But the main point should be the sanitary condition of the city. What candidate for Mayor will promise to clean the city as it never was known to be cleaned before—pledge his care that the street-boxes be purified and kept pure? Who is the Hercules who will turn the river through the Augean stable in which we live? Let that be a test question in deciding upon candidates. Let the people insist in public meetings and the papers, and by petitions after and remonstrances, that some part of the millions of dollars which they pay for the care of the city shall be spent for that purpose, and shall not be squandered by the rats of the City Hall; and let them organize private committees of relief and prevention.

It is now the commonplace that in our lives that the tax-payers should now, in the early winter, take the matter in hand. Choleras in the slums of Greenwich and West streets, in Mackerelville and along the North River, if cholera in the Fifth Avenue and in every hotel. The civic authorities will present Death with the freedom of the city, and the widows and orphans will be ground to pay his bills, if the people merely look on passively and "guess something will be done about it."

DEATH OF LORD PALMERSTON.

THE tough old British statesman died on the 18th of October, just as he had completed his eighty-first year. In him England loses its most representative man, the statesman who was not its wisest thinker, not its shrewdest statesman, but the Englishman who most fully represented the average shrewdness of his countrymen. The most popular of modern British politicians, he alone was able to hold together in one Government men of liberal and conservative tendencies, and men of no serious convictions whatever.

For sixty years he had been in office, and such was his marvelous tendency that there was a general feeling that nothing would change in England while PALMERSTON lived and was at the head of affairs. He was a man of invincible good-nature, tact, and plausibility, and with a wide and personal knowledge of political history and men. He was the last great pupil of METTERNICH. He sought to maintain the actual condition, the status quo: Let us live while we may, and after us the deluge.

Lord RUSSELL will probably be his successor. He is now seventy-three years old; and he, too, is old in public life, having entered Parliament in 1813. His health is failing, and grave changes in British politics can now be long delayed. Earl RUSSELL is a Whig, but an old-fashioned Whig, not a modern Liberal. Mr. GLADSTONE is the party of the future. The destinies of the British empire must soon be intrusted to newer men, of whom Disraeli is the most striking representative—men who more truly understand the inevitable necessities of the time than either PALMERSTON or RUSSELL.

IN CASE OF ACCIDENT.

A PASSENGER writes to the papers that the Pavonia ferry-boat Susquehanna lately ran into the ferry-boat Hoboken, demolishing about thirty-five feet of the gentlemen's cabin. He asks that passengers shall be told what to do in case that the pilots of both these lines are in the habit of racing and endangering the lives of thousands of their passengers.

Let us suggest a very simple remedy. Whenever there is evidently racing upon either boat let a responsible person request the captain that the pilot does not leave the boat until a complaint is made before a justice and the offender is arrested and examined. If the passengers will give themselves a little trouble of this kind they may save themselves very serious disasters. It is very clear that nothing but the publicity of the fact can stop it. It can be made, will secure even tolerable security upon public conveyances; and nobody will stir in the matter if passengers do not.

MARTIN GROVER.

THE Angelica Reporter, in this State, has a long exposition of the political career of Mr. MARTIN GROVER. As Mr. HORATIO SEYMOUR and Mr. GROVER are those which abolitionists say are the worst men in the State, it is important to look at the record.

He entered upon political life in 1833 as a high Anti-Mason. In 1834 he became a Whig. In 1838 he became a Democrat. In 1844 he supported the Free Soil ticket. In 1847 he became a Buffalo Free Soiler. In 1853 he became a pro-slavery Hunker. In 1856 he became a FREMONT Republican. In 1860 he voted for Mr. LINCOLN. The war began. Mr. GROVER had no word of cheer for the cause or the soldiers. He denounced as unjust and unconstitutional the law making greenbacks a legal tender, complaining that it reduced the value of his salary as Judge. He ridiculed the Union League. He was one of the "Bull Runners." He sneered at the employment of colored troops. He excused the Fort Pillow massacre as a just retaliation, and asserted that the rebel treatment of our prisoners was as good as our treatment of the rebels. In 1864 he voted for HORATIO SEYMOUR, and cast a Democratic electoral ticket with all the electors' names crossed out. In 1865 he was nominated for Judge of Appeals by the Rump of the Chicago Convention at Albany.

Following the tradition that Mr. GROVER was a Democrat, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, a Copperhead, we spoke of him some time since as stolen from the Union party. But we confess our error. Mr. GROVER has never been the enemy better. They touch no man of whom they are not sure. Whatever a candidate's antecedents may be, and however strong may be personal feeling, the only safety is in distrust of every Copperhead nomination, and in voting the pure and simple Union ticket.

WHO ARE OUR ENGLISH FRIENDS?

We have little fear that the British Government will push to extremes its present difference with the United States, which we discuss elsewhere. Great Britain has no wish to go to war. She will consult the feeling of her people; for in this day it is really the people, not kings and lords, who determine questions of peace and war. And we can learn from the MORTON FETO what the British people are likely to say. He said last week in a speech in New York:

"I remember in the House of Commons when a vote of sympathy for the South was introduced, and I remember how it was received by the House. I was present in the House of Commons with you, and I must tell you that three-fourths of the House were with the heart and soul with the North. (Cheers.) In Yorkshire and Lancashire there were three millions of people starving because of your war, and if you had asked for a Southern meeting a man would not have appeared. But you had meetings and passed resolutions of sympathy with the North, but never for the South. (Cheers.) The House of Commons were with you, the people were with you; they were all with you. I must tell you that there were no more Southern sympathizers than those comforting the people who then were in New York. (Loud cheers and laughter.) I think I am entitled to be the authority of my country. If we had been together more we would have understood one another a great deal better."

POLITICAL POLITENESS.

THE World, which was so in love last year with "the strangely mature statesmanship" of the Chicago candidate, and which now professes an equally overpowering delight with the acts and policy of the President, whom in the spring it described as "vulgar, low-bred, and boorish," and as "the pander of the Irish infernos outrages upon American law and American liberty," illustrates its conception of the amenity of politics by describing a violent assault upon President JOHNSON as a conspiracy of State as "The scraping of the old sow SEWARD."

We challenge the production of any parallel to the scurrility of the New York World in speaking of ANDREW JOHNSON and Mr. SEWARD, except in the rebel journals early in the year, which described the President LINCOLN as a gorilla and a drunken ape.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

In the Mississippi Legislature—the first assembled under the new order of things—Governor SHARKEY is in the habit of a man, a majority of those who were at first opposed to him, and whom the former Shackey has to deal with, a full support. A resolution offered by Mr. Taylor to the effect that the freedmen of the State should have no men for the United States Senate who is in favor of granting to negroes political or any rights civil, political, or social, beyond those given to the same persons when slaves, was indefinitely postponed. The resolution was defeated by a vote of 71 to 8. The Speaker of the House is General Chalmers, whose negro slaves remained on the day of his action in support of rebellion. It seems quite likely that those members of the Legislature who have been most active in the rebellion will most eagerly sustain Governor SHARKEY in the line of action which he has taken. The Governor has been duly elected United States Senator to fill the seat vacated by Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS. Mr. J. L. M. CURRY has been elected to the Senate for the long term.

In the Alabama Legislature, sent at Milledgeville, October 25. Over 370 delegates were present. Herschel V. Johnson was elected President. In the opening message, the stage stated that the debt of the State was $20,310,525, of which only $7,000,000 was contracted before 1861. Only the latter he thought had any legal or moral obligation. President JOHNSON's letter in the case of North Carolina, insisted upon the repudiation by Georgia of her debt debt. The Legislature has repealed the secession ordinance and passed ordinances redirecting the State into every channel of peaceful industry, appointing the 13th of November as the time for holding an election for Governor and members of Congress, and an Electoral Ticket. A committee of five has been appointed to memorialize President JOHNSON for the release of Jefferson DAVIS and all other rebels now held as prisoners. A section has been introduced into the Constitution which abolishes slavery, and a proviso that the acquiescence in emancipation shall be no estoppel to future action. The impression is that it is thought that Joseph Brown will run for Governor.

EXPEDITION OVER THE TRAIL BY CARRIAGE.

On Sunday morning, October 29, a distressing catastrophe occurred opposite Thirtieth Street, on the North River. The steamer Hoboken of the ferry line plying to Jersey City, which left Albany on the preceding day at 5 o'clock, was approaching the dock at the usual hour for landing, especially for the accommodation of those who had come to bathe that day for fatality, injuries, and sickness. The Hoboken ferry-boat Navigation, which was at the time of the dreadful occurrence coming to New York, was immediately headed for the scene of disaster and rendered valuable service, taking off a large number of the passengers of the St. John and landing them safely at this city.

THE NATIONAL THANKSGIVING.

President JOHNSON, on the 28th of October, issued a proclamation appointing the last Thursday of November as a day of National Thanksgiving to the Creator of the Universe for the many and glorious deliverances of the year from the scourge of civil war, and for our preservation from the calamities of foreign war, pestilence, and famine. This appointment is peculiarly appropriate, and we hope that it will prove a permanent one, the last Thursday in November giving a National instead of a State festival.

NEWS ITEMS.

It will be gratifying to our city readers to learn that the police of the city have for once time past, in accordance with former instructions, been engaged in collecting the dirt which they have accumulated in great mass, to regard to the present condition of our streets, and the report is that many of the streets are shown to be in a very unsightly condition. A considerable force of men and teams have been employed against the present street-cleaning contractors.

Official duties have been issued for a further election of our national army by the disbandment of fifty-four regiments, comprising the organizations of the army at present time, in addition to those heretofore announced.

The steamship Ariadne, from this port on the 14th inst. for New Orleans, was towed into Hampton Roads on the 15th by the Mahona, having encountered a severe gale from the 14th to the 17th, and become completely disabled.

The steamship Quaker City, which sailed from this for Key Port on the 25th inst., with a party of excursionists, for the purpose of visiting the ruins of Fort Sumter, returned to this port on the 26th inst., having encountered a severe storm on the 25th inst., which compelled the vessel to put into Charleston harbor for safety.

The steamship Republic, which left this port for New Orleans on the 14th October, carrying over 200 passengers and crew, about fifty passengers, was wrecked on the coast of Georgia October 20, and of all those on board only seventeen, who reached Charleston in one of the ship's boats, have been saved.

It is stated that Mr. M'Pherson, Clerk of the House of Representatives, has made the intention of not including in the roll of members to be called at the opening of the next session representatives from any State which has been in rebellion. This is in accordance with several precedents established by Mr. CLAY.

A correspondent of the Detroit Tribune says that during 1864 and 1865, covering the active and stirring operations of the months which elapsed from the commencement to the retreat of the rebellion, has been completed, and will soon be issued by the Government.

The delegates to the Alabama Convention have memorialized the President to release Jefferson DAVIS on parole. C. Clay, of their State, who was one of the reputed rebel agents in Canada during the war, and who is now under bonds of implication in the plot which resulted in the assassination of President LINCOLN.

Hon. Freeman Clarke, Controller of the Currency, has written a reply to the suit of certain banks in Ohio, in which the latter denies that he ever asserted that the banks would be required to give up to the Treasury all of the national debt. Mr. Clarke unqualifiedly asserts that all the capital now constituting the debt, he will be unconditionally longing; and that he thereupon ordered them to be issued. Mr. Clarke further explains that in accordance with the official of the Secretary of the New York Legislature, he was present and heard the whole conversation.

The delegates to the Alabama Convention have memorialized the President to release Jefferson DAVIS on parole. C. Clay, of their State, who was one of the reputed rebel agents in Canada during the war, and who is now under bonds of implication in the plot which resulted in the assassination of President LINCOLN.

Hon. Freeman Clarke, Controller of the Currency, has written a reply to the suit of certain banks in Ohio, in which the latter denies that he ever asserted that the banks would be required to give up to the Treasury all of the national debt. Mr. Clarke unqualifiedly asserts that all the capital now constituting the debt, he will be unconditionally longing; and that he thereupon ordered them to be issued. Mr. Clarke further explains that in accordance with the official of the Secretary of the New York Legislature, he was present and heard the whole conversation.

The steamship Republic, which left this port for New Orleans on the 14th October, carrying over 200 passengers and crew, about fifty passengers, was wrecked on the coast of Georgia October 20, and of all those on board only seventeen, who reached Charleston in one of the ship's boats, have been saved.

It is stated that Mr. M'Pherson, Clerk of the House of Representatives, has made the intention of not including in the roll of members to be called at the opening of the next session representatives from any State which has been in rebellion. This is in accordance with several precedents established by Mr. CLAY.

A correspondent of the Detroit Tribune says that during 1864 and 1865, covering the active and stirring operations of the months which elapsed from the commencement to the retreat of the rebellion, has been completed, and will soon be issued by the Government

THOMAS CARLYLE.

THOMAS CARLYLE.

CARLYLE is now seventy years old. He is the eldest son of a small Scotch farmer of Dumfries-shire, and both his parents are described as persons of peculiar force of character. He was first formally introduced to the American audience by RALPH WALDO EMERSON in 1838, who collected and published CARLYLE'S papers from the British Reviews with the consent and aid of the author, who was already EMERSON'S friend. The readers of that time will remember how their hearts responded to the words of the editor. "Many readers will find here pages, which, in the scattered anonymous sheets of the British magazines, spoke to their youthful mind with an emphasis that hindered them from sleep. It is a fact worth remembering in our literary history that his rich and cheerful genius found its earliest audience in or near New England from young men who had complained with the first Quaker that, in the multitude of teachers, 'none spoke to their condition.'"

The editor was a correspondent of the author, and had already seen him at Craigenputtock in 1833, when CARLYLE lived upon a small farm of that name in the wildest part of Dumfries-shire. The house was lonely among hills of heather, "surrounded by sea-mews and rough-necked sheep," CARLYLE writes to GOETHE. At school he had been the besom friend of EDWARD IRVING, whom, in 1855, CARLYLE called "the best man I have ever found in this world, or now hope to find." From the school at Annan he went to the University of Edinburgh, where he was chiefly eminent in mathematics, but, also, mastered English literature and the foreign languages. He taught for two years in the family of MR. CHARLES BULLER, intending to be a clergyman; but gradually devoted himself to general literature. His first work was a translation of Legendre's Geometry, prefaced with an essay upon Proportion. Then came the Life of Schiller, written in sinewy and limpid English. Translations of Wilhelm Meister and other German romances followed; and by 1833, when EMERSON found him at Craigenputtock, CARLYLE was a hard-working scholar and author, writing for the Edinburgh Encyclopedia, the Reviews, and the Magazines; and he was then engaged upon the most remarkable work of that period, that vigorous protest against the dilettante tendency of British literature and life, Sartor Resartus.

At this time his visitor describes him as "tall and gaunt, with a cliff-like brow, self-possessed, and holding his extraordinary powers of conversation in easy command; clinging to his northern accent with evident relish; full of lively anecdote, and with a screaming humor which floated every thing he looked upon." Yet already he took desponding satirical views of literature at that time, as the reader will find in Sartor Resartus, which was published serially in Fraser's Magazine. The next year, 1834, CARLYLE moved to Chelsea, in the suburbs of London, where he has ever since lived. It was a pleasant neighborhood, but with his grotesque impatience of every thing high-flown, he said in his broadest brogue to an enthusiastic American visitor who one day entered his house overflowing with admiration of the interesting walk from London, "Pretty, was it? Yes, and did ye see the dead dogs?"

In 1837 the History of the French Revolution was published. It is not a history so much as a series of wonderful pictures, yet every essential detail will be found to be preserved in them. The work shows a marvelous power of picturesque description, but it is painful and appalling from its Mephistophelian tone, its want of deep and generous human sympathy. From 1837 to 1840 CARLYLE delivered lectures in London upon "German Literature," "the History of Literature," "the Revolutions of Modern Europe," and "Heroes and Hero-worship." His style was now entirely changed from the strong and transparent English of the Life of Schiller and the Review of Burns to a powerful and humorous manner, springing apparently from an admiration of the mystic suggestiveness of RICHTER'S works. The sneering and dogmatic tone of the new style indicated an almost misanthropic view of human nature and life; but the thoughtful reader will perhaps recognize in it rather an impatience of the apparently willful discrepancy between the world as man makes it and as he might make it. With this there is an overweening exaltation of brute force, as if a world which chose to be no better was rightfully ruled by clever despots however tyrannical.

INTERIOR OF THE SEABROOK TOBACCO WAREHOUSE AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

In 1839 CARLYLE published "Chartism," and soon after "Past and Present." In 1845 he edited Cromwell's Letters and Speeches, and reversed the verdict of HUME and of the British traditions, in the lofty place among honest and capable rulers which he assigned to "Oliver." In 1850 the "Latter Day Pamphlets" were published, a series of brilliant and fierce snarls at the age and the general stupidity of modern man. In 1851 "The Life of John Sterling" showed how still true and tender was the author's heart; and in 1858 the publication of his "Life of Frederick the Great" began, and is just now finished. It is criticised as a revelation of the author's total inability to comprehend true greatness, and a Titanic attempt to elevate mere executive vigor above all human qualities. The style is stormy, truculent, satirical, but full of force, wit, and splendor. No living man has been a more marked literary power than THOMAS CARLYLE. A terrible iconoclast, he has shattered "shams" on every side, and like all iconoclasts he has valued whatever is genuine for its own sake, often unmindful of its essential deformity. But no modern English or American student and thinker, however he may regret the tornado of wrath and scorn in which the better genius is often astray and confused, will deny the noble and stimulating influence upon his mind and character of THOMAS CARLYLE.

THE TOBACCO MARKET AT RICHMOND.

We give on this page a sketch, by Mr. HAMILTON, of THE SEABROOK GREAT TOBACCO WAREHOUSE AT RICHMOND, Virginia. Although the growth and sale of this staple in Virginia is just now but a mere mockery of what it was at the outbreak of the war, it is still of sufficient importance to be one of the leading items in the commerce of the State, if not its most important one. In 1860, out of an aggregate of 434,200,451 pounds of tobacco raised in all the States and Territories of the Union, Virginia produced 173,868,127 pounds, and Kentucky 108,126,868 pounds; these two States together producing more than half of the tobacco raised in all the States and Territories put together.

VIEW OF THE TOBACCO EXCHANGE, CORNER OF VIRGINIA AND CARY STREETS, RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

The enormous wealth represented by this staple made the Confederate Government peculiarly jealous about its falling into the hands of the Federal Government; and, consequently, when Richmond was evacuated, the most extraordinary exertions and the first edifices to be consigned to the cruel and devouring flames that made a wilderness of that fair city. Three of the largest warehouses were set on that fearful occasion utterly destroyed, and with them no fewer than 12,000 hogsheads of tobacco. The Seaboard Warehouse—the largest in Richmond—would also have perished had it not been at the time in use as a Confederate hospital.

This establishment was, by permission of the military authorities, opened to its former legitimate uses on the 26th inst. by Messrs. Westerman and Peters, Inspectors, and since that date they have already inspected 3780 hogsheads. This interesting establishment is situated at the corner of Second and Seventeenth streets, and covers a large extent of ground. On the ground-floor are ranged hundreds of hogsheads of the fragrant weed, which are opened at stated periods for the examination of connoisseurs. Four laborers are engaged in this work. One strikes the solid compressed mass of tobacco leaves with a hatchet, another thrusts a crow-bar into the aperture made, and then the two remove one of the gaps a handful of fresh leaves are pulled to give a taste of the quality. At the further end of the room the accumulation of hogsheads is seen in small structures leading to a room above, where, after daily examining buyers, the samples and contracts are completed to purchase at auction the various brands that are offered by the auctioneer, perched on the end of the long table with his samples.

The extent of tobacco culture next year—the planting season is in May—will depend altogether upon the state of the negroes, and the amount of labor essential to be given to working upon tobacco. It is a delicate crop, requiring the most careful attention from the planting of the seed to the pringing of the plant and making it ready for market, and any neglect on the part of the laborer would be a most disastrous to any one embarking in its cultivation.

During the war all the counties producing tobacco were entirely given over to corn by order of the Confederate Government; and it was only by a late order enforced that the writer only saw one field of tobacco during two weeks' ramble through the counties of Goochland, Louisa, and Hanover Counties. It, however, far too valuable a commodity for Virginians to neglect, and we safely expect that next year we shall have very large crops to offer for sale replanted with tobacco.

The laborers employed about the Seabrook Warehouse are all negroes. There are about twenty-six of them, and the proprietors represent them as all working very well and faithfully.

THE TOBACCO EXCHANGE, of which we also give an illustration, is situated over the commercial house of NEAL, LEA, & Co., at the corner of Main and Virginia streets, on the way to the old Danville Depot. Captain W. Y. SHEPARD is the auctioneer who conducts the sales; and the Secretary and Cashier—title of about as much in the trade—sits as permanent chairman of the Exchange, to preserve order that may arise regarding the sales. The building represented by our artist is the one at present in use in Richmond for the want of a better; but a change—which was in a fine large building close by—having been destroyed in the great fire.

The mode of conducting the sales is unique—where a daily sale occurs—as is follows: The hogsheads proposed to be sold on any day are ranged for the inspection at the Warehouse, as represented in the sketch, and which is called a "break" (from breaking open the hogsheads). A hogshead is opened in the centre of each longhead as a sample, and a small lead is attached to it, containing the initials of the owner of the tobacco, and a number for the inspector, to indicate that it has been inspected. A list is then made, containing the names of each commission merchant to whom the tobacco is instructed for sale, together with the private mark of each owner. The samples are then taken to the Exchange by the commission merchants, and the list handed to the auctioneer.

At the Exchange the auctioneer calls out each sample in succession; the commission merchant lands in the sample, and the highest bidder gets on, it is passed from hand to hand for examination. At the conclusion the buyer takes the sample, and the next on the list is called. Payment for the purchase is in which they are temporarily assembled, the scene daily presented at the Exchange among these odd accessories and habiliments of "the weed" is very animating and characteristic.

THE ADAMS AND RUSSELL CORRESPONDENCE.

WE present an abstract of the main points of the correspondence between Mr. Adams and Earl Russell. It covers a space of more than five months, Mr. Adams's last letter being dated August 5, and his closing one September 18.

April 24.—Mr. Adams wrote to Earl Russell stating forth the depredations committed upon the commerce of the United States by vessels built in ports of Great Britain or by British subjects, and since transformed into the Alabama. He therefore announced to him that the claim must not stand outside upon the Government of Her Britannic Majesty responsibility for those damages. He then alludes to the fact that the British steamer City of Richmond has been suffered to transport men and supplies from London to the French port Nassau, subsequently to fraud transformed into the Confederate Stonewall. He acknowledges that the British Government has endeavored to put a stop to those evil practices, but that the hostile policy which it has been the object of all the while to pursue, has not only not been met, but has been now going into execution with more and more complete success." This policy, being nothing less than the destruction of the whole mercantile navigation belonging to the people of the United States," has so far succeeded that "the United States commerce is rapidly vanishing from the face of the ocean, and that of Great Britain is multiplying in nearly the same ratio," and "this process is going on by reason of the action of British subjects in co-operation with enlargers of the transports," who have supplied vessels, armaments, and men. There is, says Mr. Adams, in this fact of the world's progress one to this of endurance of one nation of angry ones to it by another without bringing on the latter complaint thereof," and that no such event has followed has been owing to the "great forbearance" which the Government has assumed by no aggressive disposition toward the United States, but to a determination to fulfill the most exact operations of amity of its subjects.

Mr. Adams then goes on to say that the intolerable insistence of Her Majesty's Ministers," Mr. Adams declares his belief that "the whole history of diplomacy does not afford an instance which can more be regarded by any Government as any other than an act of war," and he accordingly does not scruple to say that the foreign commerce of the United States "is now destroyed from year to year, not by the action of any of Her Majesty's subjects, perpetrated under the shelter of Her Majesty's flag."

Mr. Adams closes this letter by stating that during the last two months there have been no less than seven ports of the waters of the United States; and says that in the opinion of his Government the blockade cannot be legitimate if those hospitalities should be restored. The navy of the United States, he says, will be immediately and actively directed to ask "as to the occupation which those vessels have been engaged in during the late civil war."

May 4.—Earl Russell replied to this note of Mr. Adams, that "the duties of Great Britain toward the United States are to be ordered by the known principles of the law of nations." The only question was whether "the Government of Her Majesty had failed in the performance of those duties." He then proceeds to say that "the British Government has not failed in the performance of any of those duties." Earl Russell, "to avoid hopeless discussion," declines to enter into the question of duty the nation which international law and their own laws have imposed upon them.

He then goes on to say that the war, "in the progress of which the United States have been engaged nothing the detriment to Her Majesty's subjects," who had powerful interests in the commerce carried on with the United States of the Union. Her there been no war the treaties of the United States would have been a subject of regret to the executive Government. But the President of the United States had declared that he was engaged in a civil war of the Union; and, argues Earl Russell, "it could hopefully assert that a state of civil war could be forced upon States upon one ground only, namely, that the territory of the State was actually in the military occupation of the United States." Such, he says, was not the case.

Earl Russell then goes on to say that the British Government was then pursuing the same course which it had pursued in the case of Spain, which, after applying with an armament sent from the British courts." In the end of that disturbance, Spain, after the Government had paid the 752, and more fully on the 24th of May, 1852, some of the claims were settled by the mixed Court of the Confederate service. This evidence was reported upon on the 24th of May, 1852, and more fully on the 24th of August. The vessel "was taken to sea on the false pretense of a trial," and although the Government of Her Majesty had repeatedly found for detaining the Alabama, it was yet doubtful whether it would be seen fit to detain her upon the same conviction from a jury, or even a charge in favor of condemnation from the judge. Had the Alabama been detained here, under the name of the Sea King, a merchant-ship; no evidence was produced that she was engaged in any hostile service. Such a detention was not the action of the British Government in detaining the vessel. The Government of Her Majesty had no right to be charged, upon high authority, with having acted illegally and improperly, and without due care, when those facts was unfounded, "nothing but the strongest conviction that the vessel was engaged in hostile service could justify that unless detained they would escape, and that such an act might have produced serious results, and that such an act might have produced serious results, and that such an act might have produced serious results

Soon I had another.

One day I began to unpack my effects, and arrange them in my present home. Almost at the last of the work I came to that which was to have been our sleeping chenib, but which was now, like the hand which thought to mould it, a mere cold lump of clay.

I hid it on the table, and looked at it. I thought to weep, but amazement checked the tears. There, in the midst of the dry mould, was the impress of a foot—the lower part of a coarse, large, unlined man's foot.

The truth burst upon me at once. The robber had trodden in the clay. I remembered that the stairs and floors were spotted with it. I remembered his ejaculation and the fatal step of the print on the bedstead. It was all plain. I locked the door, and sat down with both hands to my head. A fierce joy possessed me. I knew what to do. My hands had dabbled in cast-making often enough.

I found some plaster of Paris, and soon the foot lay to the instep stood before me—a coarse, large foot, as I have said before, with two toes gone—the great toe and the one next it—and a bunion on the side, as though a piece had been cut away.

When I had done this, and, though it was a matter of some toil, I said no word to any one, I broke down, and lay ill a long while. The excitement had been very great, and brought on a brain-fever, from which I nearly died.

Yet, despite all this, nothing came of my discovery. I waited and hoped in vain. A year passed away—another sixth began and crept on until the winter, and yet, though I had written to industrial friends in New Orleans, nothing was made by my discovery.

At last I said: The secret is veiled from human eyes forever. I must give up hope. And I grew calmer after that.

My boy was now a comfort to me, and I had gone to housekeeping with a young sister for my companion. She was a beautiful creature, and very much admired. My house grew gay, for we could not deem her to dullness, and young voices and laughter and music filled the parlors almost nightly.

Sometimes, however, I was alone there, while she was away amidst gay scenes and merry friends, and then I thought until thinking was pain, and the hours seemed years.

One cold evening night I had been thus alone when my sister Grace came home. She was in a merry mood, and cast her fur wrappings from her gleefully as she sat down by the fire.

"I've made a conquest, my dear," she said.

"Is that my thing new?" asked I.

"Ye is. Will you say to a millionaire?"

"I should ask, what is he besides a millionaire?"

"Why, a Cuban, fiery—old, I suppose, and not a bit handsome; but he adores me already. It's no joke, Ella; and I always said I would marry a rich man."

"Not without loving him?"

"Bah! It's enough if he loves me. How do love-matches turn out? Either one dies and the other is wretched, or they quarrel and are divorced in a year or two. Better no love, say I."

I sighed. She was half right, after all.

"He's a mystery too," said Grace. "No one knows exactly what his occupation is, though enormously rich. He has bought the Elms—the finest place here, you know—and they are making a great pet of him—all the rich ones. He saw me at the—to the envy of every girl in the room, and he'll probably call to-morrow to ask how I am. Will you shut me in my room and wish me good luck, your sister?"

I tried to smile, and the thought came upon me that it might be better never to know the height of happiness if one must be plunged from it into the depths of misery.

"I shall not turn the Cuban away if he is a good man and my sister likes him," I said; and Grace laughed and went to bed.

The Cuban did call next day, but I was out and did not see him. The neighbors spoke well of him, however; and he had bought the great place next to "the Elms," and intended to be a resident of the town. In a worldly point of view it certainly was a match for any girl, and I waited anxiously to see the man himself. Three days after I had the opportunity.

Grace had been to church in the evening; my boy was ill, and I had staid away. When it was time for service to be over I sat by the window watching for her. The bedroom was dark, and the moon outside very bright; consequently I could see the garden plainly. Soon Grace came up the path on a man's arm. At the gate she bade him good-by, and stopped to say a few words. He stood inside, swinging the gate in her hand. He leaned with both arms folded on the fence outside.

I had seen the picture before. Where? With a leap my mind went back to the night before my husband's murder. I saw Jane, the mulatto cook, and her companion; and, oh merciful Heavens! the man's face was the same. This was shaded by a fashionable hat—a fashionable collar and cravat, and an elegant over-coat finished the costume, while the first face was set off by ragged and ruffianly garments, but the persons were the same. I could have laid my hand upon the Bible and sworn to that fact on the spot. As I grew positive of this my senses departed, and my sister, when she entered, found me in a swoon upon the floor.

When I recovered I doubted my own sanity. I laid what I had seen to the illusion of moonlight and distance. I argued with myself that until I had again seen this Cuban I must regard the whole affair as a delusion. I waited, not patiently but silently. Soon I met him face to face in my own parlor. The moment was a terrible one. I knew now I had made no mistake.

There had never been the faintest doubt in my mind that this companion of Jane's had been at the bottom of the dark deed of that horrible night. There was no doubt now that this was the man; yet my own common-sense told me that to accuse a wealthy gentleman on such slight grounds as the memory of a face seen once by moonlight would be absurd. It should be called insane. But, if I were, this was a bold, bad man, and Grace should have no more to do with him. I told her so that night, and she turned on me angrily:

"You should have spoken sooner," she said. "It has gone too far. I am half engaged to him. It is a splendid match for a poor girl, and I'll marry him."

"Do you love him?" said I.

She laughed. "No; but as I said once before, he loves me. That's enough. I shall get used to my wealth, you doubt; and I shall be wise—mistress of a splendid house, carriage, horses, etc., and shall enjoy myself. It is only for his ugly face you object to Cuban? Don't you remember Shakespeare: 'Dislike me not for my complexion,' etc. To be sure he is suspiciously dark; but it is Cuban—no doubt—color."

And changing at once from angry to gay she kissed me.

"He has a horrible face," I said; "but that is not all. Grace, this must not go on. I will tell you a secret. The last time I saw over the garden-wall night talking to Jane. The face of one connected, I am sure, with this murder was this man's and he, himself, is the man himself."

Grace answered with a laugh.

"You are wild," she said. "That, you have always said, was a ragged, wretched fellow."

"Yes; but still the man in other clothes—"

"My husband has no need to turn burglar."

"How did this man make his money—can you answer?"

"Nonsense—of course not. Cotton or sugar I suppose. I hope you are not going to have another brain-fever, my dear."

"My life is in your hands, Grace. Heed me."

"That I can't; you will see your folly soon. The idea! Because the poor wretch of dreams, I will make him tell how he came by his fortune! Sleep on it, and you'll see your insanity."

She danced away, and I crept to bed with a heavy heart.

The next day she came to me gleefully. "Mr. Cathlon called again in truth, Ella," she said; "took his father's business, and gave it up when his million was made. He is not a bad man, I suppose, and since things I didn't understand, though I pretended to. He didn't find his million in people's cupboards. And he has popped the question, and I have accepted him, so there's an end. Come, I know you've had too much trouble; but don't brood over it and go out of your head."

She tried to kiss me, but I held her off.

"Listen, Grace," I said. "If you marry this man and I discover that he is a Cuban known as a thing of that awful night I shall still denounce him."

"And welcome," said she. Then with a sadden childish burst of tears she clasped me and cried: "Oh, Ella, Ella, don't make me go crazy! Try to take comfort; try to be yourself!"

It was useless to argue further, and I left her.

I had resolved, but I had determined to watch him. With this end I endured the sight and heard him speak. I met him wherever I could, and went to all the places where he spent certain years. I confused him by blunt inquiries concerning Cuba. I became convinced that he was a Cuban who knows me not self. Then watching him still closer I saw terror as well as brutality in his eye. I knew the man who had murdered my husband. My delusion and proofs were gathering about him, until I began to see in him the actual murderer. The man who had stolen herefore about our room, and the clay impress of whose mutilated foot I had locked in a box in my own room. Could I doubt? There could be sure—not else. And that had now become the object of my life; and, all this while, despite all my prayers and protestations, the engagement of my sister's marriage with Mr. Zenree were going forward.

The day was set. The time narrowed. Before that wedding-day I had sworn to make my discovery. That wedding-day was mine. My old prayer, that of saving Grace from becoming the wife of a monster.

I watched the foot as a cat watches a mouse, but discovered nothing. My agony grew greater and greater. Time moved too fast for me; I could have prayed for days and hours to lengthen those months out. At last there was but one day between the future in which I lived and that in which my sister would become Mrs. Zenree. On that morning I awoke with my plan fully matured.

I said to Grace at breakfast: "Since the wedding is so near invite Mr. Zenree to pass the evening with us."

She looked up with a smile.

"You are coming to your senses," she said.

I made no answer. Grace—after a while I asked again, "Do you love him, Grace?" and she answered; "I told you once why I accepted him. That is my reason still. After all, what is love worth?" but she sighed.

My heart had been at ease on that score before. It was cruel, perhaps, to do so, but now it throbbed with anxiety! The day wore on tediously, and evening came with a wintry wind, but with it came Mr. Zenree. He took tea with us, and did his best to be agreeable; but somehow, in spite of the remarkably handsome dress he wore, he looked more the ruffian than ever. After tea we had out the card-table, and he showed us some strange tricks at cards. We sat placed against us, and cheated us both for fun, and laughed at Grace's wonder. Then Grace sang a while; and then, the clock striking ten, my time had come.

"It is a cold night," said I.

"Bitter," said he, shuddering. "But then I come from a warm climate."

"Something warm to drink would be a comfort," said I.

He brightened up.

"It would suit me," said he.

"A bowl of punch now?" said I. Grace stared.

"Punch! I thought you—"

I stopped her.

"This is a special occasion," said I; "and, to tell the truth, I have some prepared."

"Fond of a drop yourself of a cold night, and none the worse for it, ma'am," said he, with a laugh.

I laughed too as I left the room. In the kitchen I found my servant girl.

"Is it hot?" said I.

"Boiling," said the girl; and I seized it on its tray and took the bowl. Then I called John, our coachman, a burly fellow over six feet in height.

"John," said I, "stay near the door. If I call you, come and do what I tell you."

The man stared but obeyed.

I waited until I heard him plant himself upon the sill of the door, then entered the parlor.

"Taste it, Mr. Zenree, is it not fine?" I said, and then, as I stood near him, the bowl dropped from my hands, and the contents poured over the floor and the Cuban's knees. I screamed. He howled, for the boiling fluid had filled the lone shoes he wore; and down I went on my knees before the spot to which he had sprung.

"Oh, what an unlucky thing! Are you scalded? Let me see." And as he sat writhing with pain on the sofa I tore off shoes and stockings with great pretense of compassion and grief.

The feet lay bare upon a cushion. The right perfect. The left—that mutilated foot which had made its impress in the clay on the night of my husband's murder.

I gave a yell of almost insane triumph, and cried aloud for John.

"Hold him," I said. "Do not let him go. He is a murderer."

I forget the other details of that night, or remember them only as in a dream of dream. I have reminiscries of the law soon filled my house. I know my wild statement slowly gained credence. I had my proofs in the clay and plaster in my room above. At last, in the recognition of the man as a desperado of the Mississippi, and finally in his own confession.

His end was the one he merited, and my work was done.

Long since Grace married a man she loved with her whole heart, and they are prosperous. And I—I am patient and ready to bide God's will.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"SINGLE STRUGGLES!"—We read that "A new process of Photographing on Wood" has been patented. It is found to be specially adapted for all blockheads, and the members of Bunkie. Persons who are plain, however, object to this new style of portraiture, for fear that they might attend the wood be in the least ill-grained, come out a dead plainer.

A suffering mother, appealing to her boy for sympathy, exclaimed: "Oh, Charlie, mamma's hand aches! Can't you play without making so much noise? Suppose mamma should fall sick and die?"

"Well," answered the tiny man, gravely, "I guess I should have to get married again."

A schoolmaster tells the following good one. I was teaching in a quiet country village. The second morning of my session I had leisure to survey my surroundings, and among the scanty furniture I espied a three-legged stool. "Is the dunce block?" I asked a little girl of five. The dark eyes sparkled, the curls nodded assent, and the lips replied, "I guess so; the teacher always sits on it." The stool was unoccupied that term.

QUEER PERSONS IN QUEER PLACES.
An Irishman at a Quakers' meeting.
A sailor in a synagogue.
A mermaid asleep in an oyster-bed.

A little Swedish girl, while walking with her father on a starry night, observed the accumulation of the skies, being asked of what the was thinking, replied, "I was thinking if the wing ride of heaven is so glorious, what must the right side be?"

A "STRONG STOCK"—A suit of mail.

A son of Neptune, who was in the habit of quarreling with his better half, was one day remonstrated with by the minister of the parish, who told him he had his wife ought to live on more amicable terms, as they were both one. "One!" said the old salt, shifting his quid; "if you should come by the house sometimes, bust my beer-toplights if you wouldn't think we were about twenty."

"You do wrong to fish on Sunday," said a clergyman to a lad he saw so doing. "Well, Sir," replied the boy, "it can't be much harm, for I ain't catched nothink."

"That was a horrible affair—the murder of Dann, and the smiling up of his remains in a tin box!" "What Dean?" asked half a dozen voices at once. "Sir-dine," was the reply.

THE WAY THE FENIANS IN AMERICA MEAN TO MAKE IRELAND FREE.—By going into bond-age.

OWED TO A MOSQUITO.
Mysterious beast! that with thy long proboscis
A puncturing venomously for our blood,
Doth make our human ears so big so show,
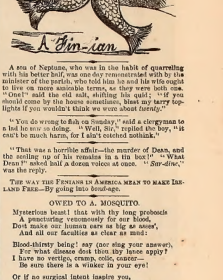
And all our faculties as clear as mud:

Blood-thirsty being! say (see sing your answer),
For what disease dost thou my house apply?
I have no vertigo, cramp, colic, cancer—
Do not know is a wisser in your eye!

Or if no surgical intent inspire you,
Say what you would satisfy your greedy new—
A quart of blood—a gallon? What require you?
For what rich bribe will you withhold your jaw?



I vow I'd sacrifice my best blood-heifer
If for his blood my own calf you would leave:
Or knock my fattest pig thus paltry stifler
If my own bacon thus I might retrieve.

In vain! in vain! your voice is still for stinging;
A very Hydra in your fool instinct;
Yet one mere offer—only cease thy singing.
And take my blood—I'll have no more to give!

"How the deuce, my dear fellow, can I make a girl love me, who is constantly devoured by love of herself?" asked a young man of his friend. "Oh," replied the latter, "that is the easiest thing in the world: just introduce to her self-love unto itself; all that runs over will be yours."

In the author, writing of the manners of the last century in Scotland, says that even sons of the ladies were not behind the gentlemen in their ceremony. "Three gentlewomen one night had a merry making in a tavern in Edinburgh, near the Cross, where they sat till they were all pretty fou. On leaving the house and ascending to the street they failed to remember where they were, but as the moon was shining brightly they found little difficulty in getting along till they reached the Tron church. Here a prodigious obstacle presented itself. The moon, shining high in the south, threw the shadow of the steeple directly across the street, from the one side to the other; and the ladies, being no more clear-sighted than they were clear-headed, mistook the same for a broad and rapid river, which they would require to swim across before making further way. Under the delusion they sat down upon the brink of the supposed stream, took off their shoes and stockings, lifted their clothes, and proceeded to wade through to the opposite shore, upon reaching which they rearranged their shoes and stockings, and went on their way rejoicing."

A GOOD GAME OF CRICKET.—Eleven Bachelors play eleven Spinsters at Lady's Ground, and the result is a

THE TRUE DEFENDERS OF THE CONSTITUTION.—[DRAWN BY MR. JAMES WALKER.]

"The drunken and beastly CALIGULA, the most profligate of all the Roman emperors, raised his horse to the dignity of consul—an office that, in former times, had been filled by the greatest warriors and statesmen of the republic, the SCIPIOS, the CATOS, by CICERO, and by the mighty JULIUS himself. The consulship was scarcely more disgraced by that scandalous transaction than is our vice-presidency by the late election. This office has been adorned in better days by the talents and accomplishments of ADAMS and JEFFERSON, CLINTON and DALLAS, CALHOUN and VAN BUREN; and now to see it filled by this insolent, drunken lowlife, is a comparison with whom even CALIGULA'S horse was respectable!—for the poor animal did not shame his own nature."—New York World.

1864.

"ANDREW JOHNSON is Military Governor of Tennessee, and this test oath is proposed by him, and substantially excludes every man opposed to the Administration from taking a vote. . . . Talk to me of a Democrat sustaining all these usurpations, these violations of the Constitution and of the elementary principles of civil liberty! I submit that no man who has a democratic heart in his bosom and a democratic intellect in his head could fail to seize this occasion to drive from power the Administration that has been signalized by acts like these."

JOHN VAN BUREN.

1865.

"Such did the Democratic masses find to be the record of ANDREW JOHNSON. They found as Civil Governor of Tennessee, member of Congress, or federal Senator, not one word or act of his which a national Democrat would not defend, and, as Military Governor of Tennessee, they appreciated the exigency in which he was placed. This cheered and delighted them."—New York World.

1865.

"I look upon him (ANDREW JOHNSON) as a patriot and as a statesman who for twenty-five years has been distinguished in the service of his country in the various offices that he has filled, from the Legislature to Governor of the State, in both Houses of Congress, as Vice-President and President of the United States. I look upon him as patriotic, wise, and prudent."

JOHN VAN BUREN.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Author of "Hand and Heart," &c.

CHAPTER LXV.

THE LAST OF THE BATTLE.

It was now nearly four o'clock in the afternoon. Throughout the search at the barricade Saxon had seen the shells flying at a great height overhead, and heard the battle going on unceasingly in the streets of the town. Sometimes the sounds advanced, sometimes retreated; but never ceased for one minute together. Finding at length that neither friends nor foes came round to their direction, the men posted at the barricade loosened their muskets and dropped away one by one; and presently Saxon, being to all appearance no more likely to find his friend in one place than another, followed their example.

He traversed one whole street without seeing a living creature; then, coming to a cross-road, paused and listened. The musketry now seemed to be very distant, but he could not tell precisely from what quarter the sound proceeded. While he was yet hesitating a couple of Neapolitan soldiers came running toward him. Seeing an armed Bandinian they stopped short, as if doubting which way to turn; and Saxon called to them to surrender.

At that moment some six or eight red-shirts made their appearance at the top of the street in full chase. The Neapolitans instantly obeyed; fell upon Saxon, flung away their rifles, and fled down a by-street to the left.

But the fugitives were pursued by, and Saxon, anxious to know how the great interests of the day were faring elsewhere, went on his way, and left the fugitives to their pursuers.

A few steps further on he fell in with a detachment of Tuscans led by young Beni, now on foot.

"Hollo! amico," cried the Palermitan, "where do you come from?"

"From the barricade in the Via Lombardi. And you?"

"From the beach, where those cursed Regi have been pouring down shot and shell as thick as fire-stones. Fiume!"

"How goes the day?"

"Triumphantly. We are driving them up toward the centre from all sides. Where are you?"

So Saxon fell in with the Tuscan company; and as they pressed up against the hill, and wound round by a road on the eastern side of the town, the young men in a few hurried sentences exchanged such news as each had to tell.

"The whole of the lower part of the town is ours," said Beni. "Medici's men have done wonders. The Genoese carabineers have cut off their number—Peard's company has possession of an old wind mill on the heights above the castle, where they have rifled the enemy clear out of the northern works."

"This is great news!"

"It is glorious. Before another hour is past we shall have them all shut up in the castle like mice in a trap."

"Where is your horse?"

"Shot under me half an hour ago. Where is your friend?"

"Safe, I hope. He vanished in the mêlée down at the barricade, and I have not seen him since."

"Silence! I hear a tramp of feet—halt!"

The column halted, and in the sudden pause that ensued the approaching footsteps of a considerable body of men were distinctly audible.

It was an anxious moment. The hum of winding, steep, and narrow. On one side rose a stupendous cliff of solid rock; on the other ran a low wall overhanging the precipitous quarter of the town. A worse place for a hostile encounter could scarcely have been selected; but the young Palermitan, avowed no command as he was, at once saw the difficulty of his position, and prepared to meet it.

Silently and promptly he drew up his little troop across the road—the front row lying down, the second kneeling, the third standing—all ready to greet the enemy with a deadly fire as soon as they should come in sight. In the mean while Saxon, having his rifle over his shoulders and began climbing the face of the cliff. Where the rock afforded footing for a goat-track always footing for him; and almost before Beni knew what had become of him, he was posted behind an overhanging point of rock above the column. Before a dozen others immediately followed his example, till every shrub and projecting angle of rock concealed a rifle.

The Garibaldians had but just completed their preparations when the white cross-belts of the Neapolitans appeared at the turn of the road, some sixty yards ahead.

Evidently prepared to find their passage resisted, they recoiled at sight of the Garibaldians, who instantly poured in their first volley. Then their fire flew thick and fast from out of sight, as if hesitating whether to advance or retreat. The nature of the ground was such that neither party could see the extent of the other's strength; and Beni had been careful to turn this circumstance to his advantage. In the mean while his men had re-loaded, and were waiting in the same order as before.

They had not to wait long. In another second there arose a shout of "Viva il Re!" and the royalists, cheered on by their officers, came back with fixed bayonets, at the pas de charge—a narrow, compact, resolute torrent, which looked as if it must carry all before it.

Again the Tuscans delivered their deliberate and deadly fire—again, again, and again; and at each discharge the foremost Neapolitans went down like grass before the scythe. There seemed to be a charmed line drawn across the road beyond which they could not pass. As fast as they reached it they fell; as fast as they fell those behind rushed up, and were shot down in their turn.

And all this time the tirailleurs on the cliff-side dropped in their unerring bullets upon the advancing column, bringing down the hindmost men, and picking off each officer as he came into sight.

The struggle lasted but a few moments, and was over in less time than it takes to tell.

Mowed down by an irresistible fire, little guessing by what a mere handful, they knew not, they were being held in check, and left almost without an officer to command them, the Neapolitans all at once desisted from the attack and retreated as rapidly as they had charged, dragging off some few or eight of their wounded, and leaving a large part of their dead piled up half-way between themselves and their opponents.

"Viva Garibaldi!" cried Saxon, swinging himself lightly from bush to bush, and leaping down into the road.

"Viva Garibaldi!" shouted Beni's troop, eager to pursue, but held back by their young leader, who knew that they would be annihilated if once they betrayed the insignificance of their numbers. Throwing himself before them, he forbade a man to move. At the same time the tramp of the enemy, broken, hurried, and disordered, died rapidly away, and the Garibaldians, all two or three dozen of them, found that they had remained in undisputed possession of their little Thermopylæ.

It high spirits, they presently resumed their march; but they saw no more Neapolitans. When they had passed the northern torch pinetum, and overlooking the town, they halted. Above them rose the castle ramparts, apparently deserted. Below them lay the streets of the suburb of Mazzo, with the open country beyond. A strange silence seemed suddenly to have fallen upon the land. There was no echo of musketry to be heard upon the air—no smoke-wreath visible even in the distance. The battle had been fought and won an hour before. Save a distant shouting here and there, and an occasional shell thrown from the inner wall of the fortifications, that on the westward side of the castle, the tumult of battle seemed to have passed magically away.

"What does it mean?" said Saxon, breathlessly.

"Well," replied Beni, "I suppose it means that the battle is over."

At that moment a detachment of Malenchini's brigade made its appearance in the further side of the platform, shouting, "Viva l'Italia!" and planted the tricolor on the highest point of the ancient watch-tower.

The battle was indeed over; the long day's fight fought gallantly out and finished to the last. The Royalists were all in the town, up to the very gates of the castle—all in the hands of the liberators.

CHAPTER LXVI.

SAXON PURSUES HIS SEARCH.

The battle over, orders were issued for the construction of barricades at all the approaches to the castle. Weary as they were after their long day's fighting, the Garibaldians fell cheerfully to their muskets and went to work with a will. Pavements were hastily torn up, carts dragged from the ruins in which their owners had left them, and doors taken from their hinges. Before sundown a chain of extempore defences was thrown up on all sides of the fortress, and the royalists were effectually imprisoned in their own strong-hold.

Then, guarded only by a few sentinels posted upon the barricades, the army dispersed itself about the streets and squares, and lay down to rest by hundreds in the churches, the deserted houses, and even the open doorways along the streets.

In the mean while Saxon went about from barricade to barricade, seeking his friend and questioning every one whom he met as to the positions of the enemy. One Garibaldian remembered to have seen him with the Tuscans; another to have seen him with the Genoese; but all agreed that he had been killed by the bursting of a shell; while a fourth no less positively asserted that he was lying wounded in the old wind mill above the castle. Confused by these contradictory statements, Saxon wandered hither and thither all the livelong afternoon, and when the sun had entirely exhausted, stretched himself upon a bench in the magazine, and fell asleep from sheer fatigue.

His sleep lasted only a couple of hours. He had lain down with his mind full of anxiety and hopelessness, and no sooner was the first weight of excessive fatigue passed off than he woke, oppressed by a vague uneasiness, and, for the first few moments, unable to remember where he was.

He looked round upon a spacious piazza deep in shadow, dotted scattered with groups of sleeping soldiers and stands of arms.

Melazzo taken; Castletowers missing; perhaps wounded—perhaps dead! He sprang to his feet as these recollections flashed upon him, and half stupefied with sleep, prepared to resume his quest. As he did so, a figure approached him—the corpse of a Neapolitan grenadier, lying as if asleep, with his white face turned up to the sky. A few paces further on he met a couple of Garibaldians bearing away a wounded man upon a shutter, and preceded by a torch-bearer.

Learning from these that there were several temporary hospitals in the town, as well as others beyond the gates, he resolved to visit all before pursuing his search in other directions. He then followed them to a church close by, the open door of which was filled to the very top with straw for the reception of the wounded. It was a strange and piteous scene. The groups here and there and there against the walls and pillars of the building served only to make visible the intense gloom of the vaulted roof above. All round, more or less dangerously wounded, lay some sixty soldiers; while gliding noiselessly to and fro were seen the surgeons and nurses busy on their work of mercy.

Pausing at the door he asked the sentry if he knew any thing of an English nobleman—Lord Castletowers by name—whom he had reason to fear must be among the wounded.

"An Englishman?" said the sentry. "Signornico, there was an Englishman brought in about two hours ago."

So Saxon went up the nave of the church and preferred his inquiry to one of the nurses.

She shook her head.

"Alas!" she replied, "his case was hopeless. He died about ten minutes after he was brought in."

"Died!"

"His poor body has not yet been removed. It lies yonder close under the pulpit."

Half in hope, half in dread, the young man snatched a torch from the nearest sconce and flew to the spot indicated. The shattered corpse lay placidly enough, with a smile upon its dead lips, and the eyes half-closed, as if in sleep; but it was not the corpse of Lord Castletowers.

With a deep-drawn breath of relief Saxon turns turned away, and passing gently along the line of patients looked at each pale face in turn. Having done this he inquired his way to the next ambulance which was established in the ground-floor of the Polizia. In order to reach this place he had to recross the piazza. Here he found the principal torch pinetum of the Garibaldians were still anxiously searching for the dead or wounded at the foot of the wall.

At the door of the Polizia he accosted the sentry with the same question that he had been asking at every hospital—and again with the same result. He could give him any information of the English gentleman styled Lord Castletowers? The sentry knew of no Englishman but a Frenchman, lifted his cap with the best brat air imaginable, and asked, in return, if he had the honour of addressing the friend of Trefalden.

Saxon replied in the affirmative; but—

"Alors, par exemple, on a donne la pierre d'enfer. Il trouvera son ami, mi-lord Castletowers dans la première salle a gauche."

Scarcely waiting to thank the friendly Gaul for his intelligence Saxon rushed in, and almost the first face on which his eyes rested was the face of his friend.

He was sitting on the side of a bench that had evidently been using him for a bed. He had a large cloak thrown over his shoulders, and looked rather pale; but was, nevertheless, tranquilly smoking a cigar, and chatting with his nearest neighbor.

"So, Trefalden," said he, as Saxon burst into the room, "I thought you were dead at last! I knew you would be looking for me all over the place, if you were alive to do it; so I left word at the door that you'd find me here. Why, because my left hand."

"Lord Castletowers!" exclaimed Saxon.

"Ay. I was never so glad in my life!"

"Gently, my dear fellow—gently. You need not shake me to pieces with extremity."

"What is the matter? Where are you hurt?"

"In the right arm—confound it!"

"Very badly?"

"No. That is to say, I am not doomed to amputation; but there's an end, so far as I am concerned, to glory and gunpowder—and that is quite bad enough."

CHAPTER LXVII.

IN DURANCE VILE.

THE mystery of the Earl's disappearance was sufficiently simple when it came to be explained. He had been carried over the barricade in the last great rush, and, instead of remaining on the spot like Saxon to fight it out to the last blow, had dashed on with some twenty others in pursuit of the fugitives. Having chased the Neapolitans into a blind alley, taken them prisoners, and deprived them of their arms, the Garibaldians had left them in with the Pavia company, and shared with them some of the hottest work that was done in Melazzo that day.

It was while thus fighting gallantly, and at the moment when he was assisting to plant the tricolor on the top of the watch-house in the bombarded garden, that Lord Castletowers received two shots in the right arm, and was forced to go off to the rear for surgical help.

His wounds, though severe, were not in the least dangerous; one bullet having lodged in the fleshy muscle of the upper arm, and the other having fractured the ulna bone of the forearm. Both, however, had been already extracted before Saxon found his way to the Polizia, and the surgeon in attendance assured them that a good Gentleman would in time regain the use of his arm as completely as if no mischance had ever befallen it. In the mean while, to be sure, the results were decidedly inconvenient. The Earl's military career was brought to an abrupt conclusion, and his hope of doing something brilliant—perhaps of winning even Miss Colonna should be forced to admire—was nipped in the bud. These things he had to bear, and he commanded all the patience that he could summon to his aid.

Their campaign thus unexpectedly ended, the young men would gladly have gone back at once to their little yacht and set sail in search of "fresh fields and pastures new;" but to that proposition the medico would not listen. So they lingered on in Melazzo day after day, keeping for the most part beyond the walls, and passing the hot and weary hours as best they might.

It was a dull time, though purposely enlivened by the surrender of the garrison. They saw the Neapolitan transports steam into the bay, and witnessed the embarkation of Bosco and his troops.

When this interlude was played out the Garibaldians began to look toward Messina and speculate eagerly on what might next be done. Then came rumors of a general evacuation of the royal strong-holds; and by-and-by they had learned beyond doubt that the tedium of success was not likely to be relieved by any more fighting in the island of Sicily.

Somewhat comforted by this intelligence, and still more comforted by a note which the Earl received from Signor Colonna the fourth day after the battle, the young men submitted to the semi-imprisonment of Melazzo, and saw Garibaldi depart with the main body of his army scarcely less regretfully than they might otherwise have done.

Brief as a military dispatch the Italian's note ran thus:

"CARO GERVASE. The victory which has just been won terminates the war in Sicily. Desirous until terror reign in the Cabinet at Naples, to bring about a peaceful issue before another blow is struck; and it is possible that even that blow may not be needed. In the mean while give ear to earnest counsel. Shunts thy seed and pursue thy journey in peace. This is the kindness that I crave of thy childhood.

"GIO."

It was something to receive this assurance from a man like Colonna—a man who knew better than even Garibaldi himself the probabilities and duration of the war. So the friends made the best of their position, and amused themselves by planning what they would do when they received the medico's order of release.

Norway was now out of the question. By the time they could reach Bergen the season would be nearly past; besides which, the Earl was forbidden to return to his wounded arm by a severe change of temperature. They therefore proposed to confine their voyage to the basin of the Mediterranean, and to make a pleasure-cruise, and touching, if possible, at Malta, Alexandria, Smyrna, Rhodes, Naples, Cadiz, and Lisbon by the way. To this list, for reasons known only to himself, Saxon added the name of Sidon.

The Earl, who had originally unanimously set it for removal, though not yet well enough to dispense with medical care. So Saxon cut the knot of the difficulty by proposing the services of a young Sicilian surgeon; and, thus attended, they once more went on board the Ariadne and weighed anchor.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

A LITTLE YACHT.

A LITTLE yacht rides at anchor in the harbor of Alexandria, and two young Franks, one of whom carries his right arm in a sling, are wandering, with a drowsy, shiny-eyed air of half cup of enchantment—a first day in the East.

Alexandria is by no means a delightful residence on a Oriental city. On the contrary, it is a meagre, modern trading port, with an unhealthy climate, a dreadful drinking-supplies, and no scenery worth remark; but it is the East for all that, and therefore a new world to those who have not seen Cairo, or Smyrna, or Constantinople.

The two young men Franks roam hither and thither in a state of semi-beatitude, conscious neither of hunger, nor thirst, nor fatigue, nor sleep, till the hour arrives, which is the last nine o'clock in the morning, is already tremendous.

First of all, having but just stepped ashore, they plunge into the Arab quarter of the town, passing through a labyrinth of foul lanes fenced in on either side by blank, windowless dwellings, that look as if they had their backs to the street; and coming presently to thoroughfares of a somewhat wider order, but in which houses seem almost toppling together, and the latticed balconies all but touch, and the sky is narrowed to a mere riband of dull ultramarine high overhead. Here are beggars at every corner, calling loudly upon Allah and the prophet; here, Greek shops, Italian cafés, and picturesque; vagrant dogs, hungry and watchful; now and then a mosque with its minaret, its fountain, its scattering of the foot-passengers before him right and left as he flies along. Here, too, are shops with open fronts and narrow backgrounds; some gorgeous with silks and shawls; some rich with carpets; some fragrant with precious gums and spices; others illiterately with scarves and daggers of Damascus. In each shop, sitting cross-legged on floor or counter, presides the turbaned proprietor, smoking his chibouque pipe, and indifferent alike to custom and fate. Now comes a Moorish herd of deformed cream-sellers, wearing glimpses of a shady court-yard set round with latticed windows, and inclosing a palm-tree and fountain; now a water-carrier, bearing shaft of sunshine falls direct on the green leaves and sparkling water-drops, and on an aqueous waist-coat, fringed with brass; now a jar as Morgiana may have filled up with boiling oil in the days of the good Caliph Haroun al Raschid. And now comes a string of splay-footed camels, noiseless and dogged-looking, laden with bales of hemp covered as like as two straw and led by shiny Nubian slaves, with white loin-cloths and turbans. Avoiding this procession our two Franks plunge into a dark archway, and find themselves from above. This is a bazar—one path in a catacomb of passages, all full of Oriental names, Oriental goods, and Oriental perfumes. Here are alleys where they sell nothing but slippers; alleys of jewels; alleys of fur, of tobacco, of silks, of sweetmeats and drugs, of books, of glass and ivory wares, of harness, of sponges, and even of printed Manchester goods, Sheffield cutlery, and Coventry ribbons. Here crowds a motley throng of Europeans and Asiatics of every shade and hue, with the camel's-hair thread bound upon their brows; stately Moslems, tattered and savage-pered; Greeks, in crimson jackets and dingy white kilts; dervishes, in their high felt-caps; magnificent dragomen, in huge muslin trousers; Armenians, Copts, Syrians, negroes, Jews of all climates, and travelers from every quarter of the globe.

The water-carrier, with his jar of sherbet on his head, tinkles his brass drinking-cups in the ears of the passers-by; the tart-seller offers his melon-puffs; and here, just leaving the fruit-shop, where she has doubtless been buying "Syrian apples and Ottomanne quinces, peaches of Oman, and Egyptian limes," comes the fair Amine herself, followed by that identical porter who was "a man of Rhenne, and had perused lectories."

Wandering on thus in a dream of Arabian Nights, the visitor soon finds himself, having forbidden with sherbet, presently mount a couple of very thorough-bred, high-spirited donkeys, and set off for the ruins of ancient Alexandria. Past ruins lie out beyond the town-walls, amidst a sandy, dreary, hilly-waste that stretches away for miles and miles beside the sparkling sea. Here they see Pompey's pillar, and Cleopatra's obelisk, and a wilderness of crumbling masonry clothed in a green and golden mantle of wild marigolds all in flower. Here, where once stood the temple of Serapis with its pale form of a hundred steps, the wild sea-bird flits unmolested, and the jackals have their home. And the traveler talks with bated breath of the glories of the Ptolemy.

At last, fairly tired out, our Franks are fain to strike their colors, and go back to the town. Here they put up at an English hotel, where they breakfast, lunch, rest till evening, and then they again sally forth—this time to call upon the English consul.

CHAPTER LXIX.

IN SEARCH OF A COMPANY.

The consul was not at his office when the travelers presented themselves; but his representative, a very magnificent young clerk, resplendent in rings, chains, and a fez, was there instead. He received this official in the act of writing a letter, humming a tune, and smoking a cigar—all which occupations he continued to pursue with unabated ardor, notwithstanding that Saxon presented himself before his desk.

"I shall be glad to speak to you, if you please," said Saxon, "when you are at leisure."

"No passport business transacted after two o'clock in the day," replied the clerk, without lifting his eyes.

"Mine is not passport business," replied Saxon.

The clerk hummed another bar, and went on writing.

Saxon began to lose patience.

"I wish to make a simple inquiry," said he; "and I will thank you to lay your pen aside for a moment or two, and—"

The peremptory tone produced its effect. The clerk paused, looked up, lifted his eyebrows with an air of mingled surprise and disdain, and—

"Why the deuce, then, don't you ask it?"

"I wish to know in what part of the city I shall find the offices of the New Cleveland Route Railway and Steam-Packet Company."

"What! you mean to say the New Overland Route?" said the clerk.

"I mean a company so called—a company which has established an office here in Alexandria."

"Never heard of any such company," said the clerk, "nor of any such office."

"Where, then, do you suppose I can obtain this information?"

"Oh, very well," said he. "If you know it, that's enough."

And with this he resumed his triple occupation.

At that moment a little glass door opened at the back of the office, and a bald-headed gentleman came out. He hovered.

"You are inquiring," he said, "for some commercial office, I believe? If you will permit me to offer a suggestion, I would advise your calling upon Mr. Melchisedek. Mr. Melchisedek is our great commercial authority in Alexandria. He knows every thing, and he knows every body. A man of universal information, and very courteous to strangers. You are—not do better than call on Mr. Melchisedek."

"I am sure," said Saxon, "I am very much obliged to you."

"Not at all—not in the least. Mr. Melchisedek—any one will direct you. The Viceroy is my particular friend—Excuse me, Viceroy."

So saying the bald-headed gentleman bowed to the travelers to the door and closed it behind them.

"Why, Trefallen," said the Earl, when they were once more in the street, "what interest can you possibly take in an Overland Company? It is some obscure undertaking, depend on it."

"It won't be obscure for long," said Saxon, complacently. "It is a magnificent affair, and if the agents out here are keeping it quiet they have their own reasons for doing so."

"You seem to know all about it," said Cashenden, with some surprise.

"I know a good deal about it."

"And mean to take shares?"

"I may have shares already," replied Saxon, "to a large amount."

Whereupon the Earl only looked grave, and said nothing.

FALSE HAIR AND WHERE IT COMES FROM.

WHOEVER does it all come from? A spectator naturally asks, as he surveys the harvest of locks hanging in the windows of the fashionable hair-dressers, or disposed in every conceivable form on the heads of waxen dummies. And little does the spectator think of the Bluebeard's cupboard he is asking an entrance to: pitiless as the grave, and as natural of course, all products required for the artificial decoration of the "——kind" are equally to Paris and we accompany. d that they is the empire of the trade in human hair. One hundred tons' weight of this precious commodity, we are informed, annually taken there, whence it is distributed in a raw and manufactured state over the whole of Europe.

The collectors of hair on the Continent are generally peddlers, who travel from village to village on some other business, to which they add the trade of hair purchasing. The fact that the agents employed in collecting this precious material have usually been ostensibly employed in some other occupation, would lead to the inference that the trade is not of the most reputable kind. In one part of France, however, there appears to have been no false shame on the part of the women with regard to parting with their hair, and this for a very obvious reason. The peasant girls of Brittany cover the head with a quantity of hair, which, as a whole hides the hair; hence from this quarter the sale of the article has been for a long time openly carried on. Mr. Fraser, author of "The Romance of Industry," published a few years since, describes a most amusing scene at a fair in Cellerais, where he says, he saw several hundred women sharing the peasant girls like so many sheep. A crowd of fair Britishnesses assembled at the entrance to the fair, and sheared, he threw the long hair, tied up into a wisp, in a basket beside him. While he was operating on one the other girls stood waiting for their turn with their caps in their hands. The fashion which enforces the wearing of these caps on a whole province has made a tonsure callous to the loss of their hair, for which they generally get but a few sous, or a little ornamental jewelry in exchange. We have no doubt that even the simple Brittonesse have by this time become awake to the increased value of the article they sell, and that this fact has taken the place of cotton in the exchange.

Spain and the north of Italy furnish considerable contributions of the valuable if jet-black locks. The main crops of the golden hair, now so much admired, come from Germany, Belgium, and even from Holland. In all Catholic countries one great source of supply is the convent. The splendid tresses the nuns have been wearing change visits to back into the world again, and are offered up at the shrine of vanity. This hair is known in the trade as clerical hair.

Less fake hair is used in England than in France; for it is fortunately not the fashion to wear wigs. It is asserted that one woman in every ten in England uses more or less false hair with her own. The larger proportion of this comes from Paris, either raw or manufactured. The prevailing English color is brown, and as the home-grown article catches Parisian fashions from the time it leaves the mamma a proportionately higher price. When we say that the supply comes from Paris we mean, of course, we refer to the better classes. There are, perhaps, a greater number of distinct shades of color in Paris than in any other part of the world country, and this is accounted for by the mixture of races of which English men and women are built up.

The flaxen hair of the Saxon, the blue-black of the Celt, and the auburn of the Scandinavian, originate in special localities. Hair-merchants, by long experience, have acquired great proficiency in judging of the nationality of their goods. This is done either by the sense of touch or smell. Some nations have much coarser hair than others; indeed, there is a constant difference found with regard to length and weight.

Light hair is much finer and softer, in general, than black and brown. It is curious to see a hair-merchant take up a long tress, muff a long muff, and say at once what it came from. This is owing to the chemical constituents of the material in some measure lead him to a conclusion, as there is always found in the hair of each race a certain quantity in fair hair, and an excess of carbon in black hair. Local colors also are great tell-tales. The chiffonnier who goes about the streets collecting and picking out prizes from the gutter, have not overlooked human hair. Some of the most valuable parts of the fair Parisienne are returned once more to the human head; no doubt there is a dust-heap odor in the hair-merchant's shop.

But there is still another kind of hair, about which there is a deep mystery. A grim smile passes over the features of the hair-merchant when he is asked a long "leech" of hair (for that is the trade name for the small parcels which are done up for sale after being combed out from the brush of the churchyard hair! How this hair is obtained is a mystery which the trade has hitherto kept its own. When we so often hear of the desecration of churchyards, and the shoveling away of the old bones and decayed coffins, we may perhaps have a shrewd guess at the source from which this hair comes.

It must be remembered that hair is almost indestructible. There is a beautiful tress of golden hair now in the British Museum, which had lain in the tomb of a Theban mummy for three thousand years. And very little is found its way to the national collection, yet that hair is as fresh as though it had just come from the hands of the hair-dresser, and the curl is so strong in it that it can not be taken out even by the application of heat.

There can be little doubt that the majority of the long English tresses come from the heads of criminals, who are compelled to part with their hair. Fever, also, places its contributions in the merchant's hands; and there are still other resources from which human hair is obtained. Death is a terrible leveler; but enough has been said to show that when a lady pays false locks she little knows the curious and mysterious tale each individual hair possibly could tell her.

Raw hair comes from abroad in bales tied up in "leeches," and containing hairs of various lengths. The first step in its preparation is to cleanse it of its own matter. This is done by rubbing it in fine sand, which completely absorbs all the fatty matter it contains. It is then carded by hand, the workman throwing the lock of hair with great rapidity over the iron teeth of the card, and speedily reducing it to a state of smoothness. The next step in the process is to select from the different "leeches" the different lengths of hair they contain; these, length for length, are matched with others, and in this manner the "leech," as it is offered for sale, is prepared by the trade for the retail dealer. A manufacturer has markets to supply—the demand for single unarmed locks for the purpose of plaiting; curls, with the natural wave, and curled hair, for the ends of the wig and front makers, and for the thousand and one fashionables in which hair-dressers may help out clustering ladies. The curl is permanently fixed by twisting the hair tightly round small wooden rollers, and then boiling them for a considerable time in water.

The rarer kinds of hair, both in color, quality, and length, are so well known that they are sold over by the merchants by the ounce. The longer the hair is the more valuable, other conditions being equal. In general there is the greatest demand for the medium brown colors. But the precious colors are bright golden and auburn. We scarcely need say that the fashionable hair-dresser will endeavor to procure that fair golden hair is now the rage. The color for queens, however, proves just the true tint: the true opalescent gold which changes with every motion of the head—the color, in short, which has a little deal of the pale-blush are given to bleach their hair down to the required tone, and to mix, we may say flavor, their tresses with the proper shade. It is said that a celebrated Hamburg' sherry manufacturer flavors his made-up with a little of the true growth of the Xeres. This golden hair is now being sold by the ounce, at about three times the price of silver. But there is a rarer hair still, which comes from the rays of vanity are only surpassed by age. Gray hair is in great demand, and when fine and soft commands an almost fabulous price.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"EF not the first by whom the new is tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

Is a trite but sensible maxim: and skillful they who hit this happy medium. A great deal is said and with much truth against the rapid changes which imagine Imperial Fashion imposes upon ladies. Possibly, however, it is not only the ladies who are slave to Fashion. The gentlemen are quite as absolute Fifth Avenue of a fine afternoon is quite as particular that his coat, vest, and pants should be of the proper cut as that his bonnet and his cravat should be unexceptionable. To all, with large or limited incomes, whose business it is to be fashionable, we suggest that there is much good sense in Shakspeare's words:

"Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man" or woman!

We are happy to see, in glancing over the latest Paris fashions, a slight return to elegance of fashion—correct good taste. It is stated that "simplicity in the trimming of dresses is now very much adopted by ladies of good taste. In a dress as it was last year, when the trimmings cost frequently double the price of the dress: and, although rich materials are used, the ornamentation is no sure made plain, it is by no means a rule without exception."

We give one style of dinner or soirée dress which is simple.

A spotted satin antique dress, of a deep shade, quite plain, with a train. The body made with basques, and fastened with steel buttons.

One must not be too sanguine of a sudden revolution, however—the following quite throws our plain dress into the shade.

A ball dress of white tulle, with twenty narrow double quillings, forming flounces. Very low and short body, trimmed with one point of white satin ribbon, serving also as a sash for a small tri-pointed third. There are sixteen quillings on the skirt.

HATS are still so much in request that bonnets for the moment are almost entirely laid aside. But there are some elegant new models, mostly of the steppes Empire, which indicate a return to prettiness. The fall in tulled shows no promising tokens for the coming winter, the favorite color being light-gray, trimmed with black or cherry-colored velvet, and long square veils, the shape that of the Empire mollied.

A young Miss of some twelve years exhibited a somewhat unique dress on Broadway the other day. She had dispensed with her crinoline, and the drooping folds of her drapery contrasted strikingly with the stiff dresses of most of other promenaders. Her dress was of rich scarlet cashmere, heavily embroidered in black, and quite short, displaying scarlet and white Balmoral stockings and high buckle boots. A short, black velvet sacque, and pretty white hat, trimmed with narrow scarlet ribbon, completed her outfit, which attracted considerable attention.

Whether the following is in old or a new story we know not. Certain it is that it touches a good lesson. Many a person who, in the hour of sudden temptation, would have yielded to the impulse to steal, has not since had wors wrestled forth to help him rise. But the utmost universal custom is to give no trust to those whose characters are in any way tarnished; and woe betide the friendless man or woman whose foot slips in the rough path of life!

A "CONFIDENCE" CONFIDENCE.—Some years ago a bachelor let it be known to his baker, butcher, and grocer that he would set up housekeeping. He received fifty applications a day; none of value received. One morning while he was hard at work at his study—it was about 6, which is early for a M., in winter—somebody knocked at the door. He opened it.

"I am told that you wish a confidential servant, Sir."

"Yes, I do; but I think you are the sixtieth."

"I have recommendations, and tried, I dare say, ten times as many places."

"No, Sir. I am just out of jail."

"I beg your pardon the astonishment of M. Leguvre.

"Just out of jail?"

"Yes, Sir; I served a woman who required money; she pressed me every day to give her money. I gave her all I earned honestly, and as she required more, I was forced to get her connivance. I was arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment for three months, and I served last Saturday."

"Do you think that a recommendation to a place as confidential servant?"

"Yes, Sir; a man who has lost his character by an hour of folly will be on his guard against temptation. Besides, I know that I am to be sent to jail no more."

There was in the fellow's tone such an honest accent that M. Leguvre looked at once, and took a very good friend. The fellow served awaist his new tie term of the bachelor's life, and died of old age in his service. M. Leguvre says his household expenses are 33⅓ per cent. less than they were.

Winter is stealing on with silent steps. Eastern papers tell us that an inches of snow fell on the hills of Auland, Maine; and that the snow in the roads about there is fifteen inches deep. Still nearer, at Troy, it snowed last week.

The new comic opera, "L'Orpheo a la Comare," is a decided success. It has been received with universal admiration. While there is little in the plot of this opera to awaken interest, the music is charming in every respect, and is managed with the greatest possible skill and delicacy to restitute fun. The leaves of music and of fun find it in the libretto.

When once a sense of degradation has taken possession of an individual or of a race it is no easy matter to eradicate it. The most striking example of this is exhibited in the following somewhat humorous anecdote:

"Some of the Southern negroes are so convinced of the loathsom of his position—that labor was his natural lot—that they actually believe that God Almighty, believing that "they'd make niggers work; even if he go to heaven." A negro preacher was lately thus cited in a religion, by representing that this could not be the case, as there was nothing for work for him to do in heaven. His answer was, "Oh, you go way, massa, I knows better. If dere's no work for colored folks dere, dey'll make 'em hush de clouds away."

Gentlemen are always losing umbrellas, just as ladies are always losing parasols and shawls, or left-hand pair of gloves and handkerchiefs. Now that the cold weather is approaching we would recommend the ladies to buy an eye and a hand on their muffs. Furs are not to be laughed at nowadays—even an ordinary set costs a small fortune; but then there are such a sunday-looking imitations in the look-out.

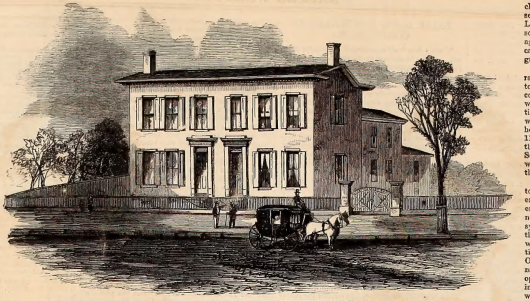
SOMETHING A MUFF.—A scene took place in one of the city cars the other day. A lady stepped from the platform of the car, and left her muff on the seat. "Go ahead." In a moment the lady was seen in full chase after the car. The driver heard the cries and saw the gesticulations, and the car was stopped. Out of breath, and hot with the chase, the lady reclaimed the muff, and found that the muff in the car. Search was made. All arose but one female, who sat with her face buried somewhat uncomfortably contempt for a woman who could make such a fuss about a muff. The conductor asked her if she had seen the muff, but no muff was seen on her seat. The keen eye of a lady soon detected the muff, which was under the young woman's skirts, and pulling at the tassel it was found that the remainder of the muff was on the other end of the tassel, the table tassel she would have claimed it as her own. With a look of scorn she threw the muff in the same thing to her, and took the next car down town. She was quite well known, and has since passed the name by every car.

The latest whim of fashion in Europe is for ladies to wear their hair in the style of the days of Queen Elizabeth. The foreign papers have a pleasure supply of advertisements of waters for the purpose of destroying the hair on the cheeks, upper lip, chin and forms. The fox appears, as more economical, shave, and have a hideous bare mark, like the result of a fire, all over a strong beard.

The following item gives a lamentable view of Parisian life, since a similar record, doubtless, might be given of any city:

THE SUICIDES OF A DAY.—A French journal gives the following list of deaths, or attempts at suicide, in Paris, succeeding from love of one kind or another, in a single day: A young lady, a favorite in the Bal Mabille, burned with carbonic acid gas, because he could not endure a life of poverty with the man of her choice; another young Amber person, also an Italian, flung himself out of the window, because a brass bedstead was considered a similar refusal. Another, M. Auguste V——, having had his heart broken by a lady, to whom he was paying his attention, at two o'clock in the day he went to the grave of his mother, knelt down, and, having loaded, and fired a pistol at his head, fell dead on the spot. Another poor lover threw himself into the Seine, and was drowned. Another, a young man in the Rue Saint-Denis, was raised as he was about to throw himself into the river, by the timely sweep of the long black skirts of his mother.

Those who desire to enter into the matrimonial state may find it less embarrassing to come to a definite understanding with each other before the time for the ceremony arrives. The writer of a lady will not require any arrangements with the clergyman to leave the "obey" out of the service, and the occasion of her marriage to receive there is an arrangement beforehand, experiments at the altar are hazardous.



A CHANGE OF TEMPORARY SUPERINTEND.—The other day, in accordance with previous arrangements, a couple appeared at the Church of the Advent, Boston, for the purpose of being united in wedlock. All went well until the clergyman came to the indigenous portion of the service, the words, "I,——, take ——— to be my wedded wife,—for better, for worse," when the bride looked lovingly at her betrothed through her veil, and whispered in her ear, "I don't." The second gentleman immediately closed the book and quitted the church.

A story is going circulating through the German newspapers which illustrates the Continental idea of an English joke.

A REAL ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.—Lord S. is an eminent banker, and has a splendid country house, where he gives a deal of shooting. Dining one day with the great banker B., the latter asked the Lord to come down to his country seat on the estate, and at once made a note of the man's name and address. Next morning his butcher presented his horse and rode off in search of the celebrated athlete. He found him digging in his garden. "My good fellow," said the poor, dismounting and pulling off his gloves, "I've heard a great deal of your strength and skill; let us have a fight." The laborer looked at his visitor for a moment without speaking; and then suddenly grappling with him flung him over the hedge. "I say, my good man," cried Lord S., as soon as he recovered his breath, "will you do me a favor?" "What, haven't you had enough yet?" growled the laborer, sullenly. "Not at all; but I am personally concerned, but please throw my horse over too."

THE RESIDENCE OF GRANT'S FATHER.

We give on this page an illustration representing the residence of General GRANT'S father at Covington, Kentucky. This house is of course General GRANT'S stopping-place when he is in that vicinity. The association that must be linked with the place in the thought and affections of our Lieutenant-General also make it a very dear and interesting place to all of us. We have from a member of the family a certificate of the authenticity and correctness of the sketch sent us by our artist Mr. E. P. FRAZER, of Cincinnati.

RESIDENCE OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT'S FATHER AT COVINGTON, KY.—[SKETCHED BY E. P. FRAZER.]

THE EXECUTION OF CHAMP FERGUSON.

CHAMP FERGUSON, the notorious guerrilla, suffered the death-penalty on the 20th of October. The emotions excited by the career and final fate of this man are those of mingled pity and horror—pity for the brutal wretch himself, and horror on account of the revelation which his life affords as to the possibilities of human cruelty. The wounded, the sick, the aged, and even helpless childhood, were not spared from his brutal murders.

Up to within a short period before his execution he was as profane and reckless as ever before. "He appeared," says a Western paper, "as braced against every feeling of humanity, as when, with his own hand, he murdered the venerable old man who had cradled him on his knee, and to whom he was indebted for a thousand favors."

Efforts were made, and with some success, to extract from FERGUSON the details of his career. He claims to have been a Union man up to the battle of Bull Run. His brother JAMES then joined the Federals, and he the Confederates. The former was killed in battle. He thought, he says, that he was engaged in legitimate warfare. "We were having a sort of miscellaneous war up there, through Fentress County, Tennessee, Clinton County, Kentucky, and all through that region. Every man was in danger of his life: if I hadn't killed my neighbor he would have killed me. Each of us had from twenty to fifty prescribed enemies, and it was regarded as legitimate to kill them at any time, at any place, under any circumstances, even if they were wounded or on a sick-bed."

FERGUSON admitted the truth of nearly all the specific charges made against him. In most cases he claimed that those murdered would have killed him at sight if he had not disposed of them. He looked upon his approaching and violent end with great coolness. He was nearly forty-four years old. His wife and daughter were with him the day before his execution. They were very much affected at parting with him, but he preserved his usual coolness up to the last moment.

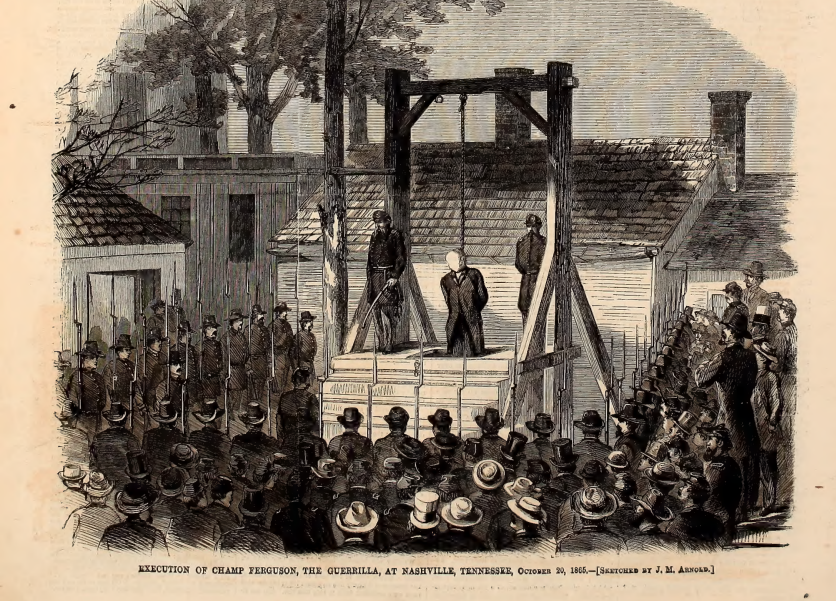
CHAMP was very anxious that his body should not be given to the doctors to be cut up; in fact, this was the burden of his speech on the scaffold.

WADE HAMPTON.

AT the beginning of the war WADE HAMPTON was among the first of the aristocrats of South Carolina. He was a man of fortune, being among the richest of Southern planters, and the largest slaveholder in the South. He was born in Charleston in 1818. His grandfather, WADE HAMPTON, was an eminent military officer, and in the Revolutionary war served with distinction under SUMTER and MARION; he was also a member of Congress from South Carolina from 1795 to 1797, and again from 1803 to 1805; in 1813 he was made Major-General, but his career was somewhat blemished by his insubordination. He was forever "receding" from the authorities placed over him, and is said to have frustrated the attack on Montreal by his refusal to co-operate with General WILKINSON, with whom he had been long in enmity.

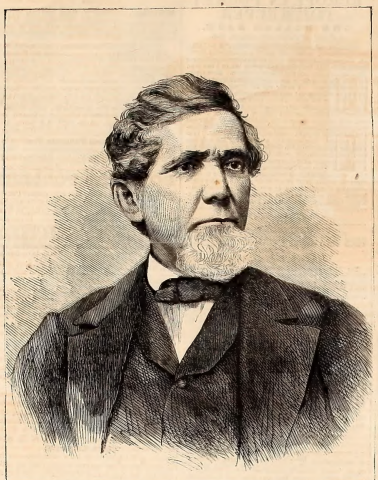
The present WADE HAMPTON'S father was also a military man, and served in the war of 1812. The son, the subject of our sketch, was educated at South Carolina college. While a young man he married the youngest daughter of General FRANCIS PRESTON, of Virginia, by whom he had three children, two of whom became officers in the rebel army. His present wife is the daughter of Governor M'DUFFIE, of South Carolina.

The pursuits of HAMPTON before the war were exclusively agricultural, though he served in both branches of the Legislature of his State with some distinction. His argument against the opening of the African slave-trade was one of his greatest efforts.



When the war commenced he raised a legion—called the Hampton Legion—consisting of six companies of infantry, with which he arrived in Virginia in time for the battle of Bull Run, where he was wounded in the head. Of this Legion, 800 strong, 110 were killed or wounded in this battle. In the battle of Seven Pines Colonel HAMPTON was again wounded—this time in the foot.

HAMPTON was then promoted to the position of Brigadier-General of cavalry under Major-General STUART. He took a prominent part in the invasion of Pennsylvania in 1862 and 1863. In the battle of Gettysburg he was wounded three times. In the action on the Boydton plank-road, October 27, 1864, he attacked the national force in the rear in co-operation with MAHONE'S attack in front. One of his sons was wounded in this affair, and another was killed.



HAMPTON was well fitted for success as a cavalry officer, having been all his life passionately fond of field sports, and being possessed of a wonderful organ of locality, becoming acquainted instantly and almost instinctively with all the features of whatever locality he may happen to pass over.

Major NICHOLS, in his interesting "Story of SHERMAN'S Great March," gives the following description of WADE HAMPTON, as he appeared in the interview with General KILPATRICK on the occasion of JOE JOHNSTON'S surrender:

"WADE HAMPTON, a large and powerful man, gave but little opportunity for the critical examination of the graces of his person; for during the morning he lay stretched in an indifferent manner upon an old carpenter's bench by the side of the house; and when he afterward followed his superior out of the inclosure, dangling after him an immense sword which must have been imported for the occasion, either mature or his tailor, or both, gave him an appearance of vulgarity and clumsiness which surprised those who had been educated to believe that a South Carolinian who owned many slaves was necessarily an elegant and refined gentleman. It should be said of HAMPTON's face—that is, what could be seen of it, behind a beard which was unnaturally black for a man fifty years of age—that it seemed bold even beyond arrogance; and this expression was, if possible, intensified by the boastful fanfaronade which he continued during the whole period of the conference."

EXECUTION OF CHAMP FERGUSON, THE GUERRILLA, AT NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, OCTOBER 20, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY J. M. ARNOLD.]

GOVERNOR JAMES M. WELLS, OF LOUISIANA.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY MOSES & PITTET, NEW ORLEANS.]

WADE HAMPTON, GOVERNOR ELECT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

WADE HAMPTON, as the Governor of South Carolina, will hold an important position, which will give him much power for good or evil. As he has been elected under the auspices of the working-men of his State, we hope that he will administrate the State government in the interest of labor rather than of capital.

GOVERNOR WELLS AND LOUISIANA POLITICS.

THE politics of Louisiana have long been a vexation of spirit. General BANKS established a Government based upon a small number of voters, and MICHAEL HAHN was elected Governor. The Legislature afterward elected Mr. HAHN United States Senator, but he has never taken his seat. The Lieutenant-Governor, JAMES MADISON WELLS, assumed the chair, and seems to have been tacitly recognized by the Administration, very much as Governor PIERPOINT was in Virginia. The BANKS Government has been for some months the only de facto one in the State, and an election is now to be held for Governor and other State officers.

There are two parties in the field: the "National Conservative Union party" and the "National Democratic party," and each party has set forth its principles. The "National Democratic party" declares that the late issue was made "openly, manfully, and honorably," and that, having failed, the party now frankly supports the Federal Government under the Constitution. It declares that the Democratic is the only Union party; approves the views of President JOHNSON as it interprets them; asserts that ours is a white man's Government; repudiates the BANKS Constitution as a creation of fraud, violence, and corruption, but yields to the necessity of recognizing it as the only existing civil Government; asks compensation for the losses caused by emancipation; advocates economy, the repeal of laws inharmonious with the United States Constitution, a labor system to relieve the planters and the people, and an early general amnesty and prompt restitution of property.

The National Conservative Union party "proudly hails" the restoration of the national authority; approves President JOHNSON's policy; declares that the allegiance of every American citizen is primarily due to the National Government; repudiates the doctrine of secession; opposes the rebel State war debt; supports the national debt incurred in suppressing the rebellion; opposes the political equality of "the African;" favors economy and a just regulation of labor; advocates a general amnesty and repeal of the confiscation law; opposes ostracism for nativity or religious opinion; and recommends relief to those who living beyond the national protection have been taxed by the rebellion.

Both parties nominate MR. WELLS for Governor, knowing that his immense official patronage in the present state of affairs would probably secure his election. MR. WELLS has accepted both nominations. The Democrats have selected the rest of their candidates for their devotion to the rebel cause. The National Union men have selected theirs for their devotion to the Union. The spirit of each party may be readily discerned in their resolutions, and from his speeches, as reported, MR. WELLS seems to be more in sympathy with the National Democratic than the National Conservative Union platform.

The test of the relative strength of the parties will be the vote for Lieutenant-Governor. The Union men have nominated J. G. TALIAFERRO, and the Democrats ALBERT VOORHIES. It is fair to presume that, as in Mississippi and South Carolina, the candidates most closely identified with the rebellion will be elected.

CRADLE SONG.

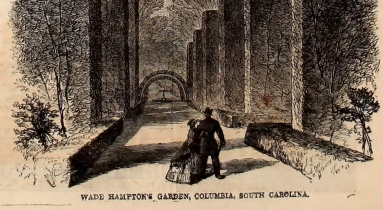
SOFT the twilight shadows fall,
The birds to the sunbeams tenderly call,
Sleep, baby, sleep!
In the purple lustre rich and rare,
In the hush of the evening, dreamy and fair,
Lovingly folded in mother's care,
Sleep, baby, sleep!

Now the busy day is past,
My little darling is weary at last,
Sleep, precious one, sleep!
Quiet the restless, dimpled feet;
Hushed the prattle so dainty and sweet;
But mother's ears hear the little heart beat—
Sleep, dearie, sleep!

Had ever baby eyes so blue,
And cheeks like rose-buds washed in dew?
Sleep, darling, sleep!
While twilight wanes in slumber he'll lie,
But soon will awake with a tender cry,
And smile with delight to find mother nigh—
Sleep, baby, sleep!

Bending low in a languor of joy
I drink to the breath of my angel-boy—
Sleep, precious one, sleep!
Deep where the heart-throbs come and go,
I fold him tenderly, tenderly so,
Murmuring blessings soft and low—
Sleep, baby, sleep!

THE IVY LEAF.



FLING garlands of ROSES to the young and fair,
Let them tread on the roses of life;
Let them call for their blossoms or for their hair,
Time will soon enough strip them and sow thorns there:
The petals will fall, even with tenderest care,
For earth with destruction is rife.

But bring me a leaf from the ivy tree,
Fluck it fresh in its beautiful hue;
And whisper quite low as you give it to me,
That unchanging as this little leaf will be,
Enduring and clinging most faithfully,
Shall your love remain firm and true.

Flow'rs may wither and die, joys soon are fled:
But this leaf, like true love, can not die,
Strew flow'rs—earth's fair offerings—o'er graves of the dead;
Wreathe with flow'rs—brief delights—the young victor's head,
Bring flowers—sweet hopes—for the bride to tread,
But this leaf for my life, say I!

VIEW OF WADE HAMPTON'S RESIDENCE, COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

WADE HAMPTON'S GARDEN, COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS

FOR SALE.

A Drum Cylinder Printing-Press.

Size of Bed.....39½×53½ inches.

Four Rollers. Table Distribution.

Has been used till Oct. 1st to print HARPER'S WEEKLY. Price $3000.

Also, One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38×51. Price $2800.

The above Presses are in good working order, and are offered for sale in consequence of the increased circulation of HARPER'S WEEKLY requiring the "Lightning Press." Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl-st., New York.

MATILDA TOOTS.

NEW COMIC SONG, 32c. With picture, colored ..... 50c.
I CAN NOT FIND MY OLD POCKET ..... 30c.
SUNLIGHT WITHIN MY HEART ..... 35c.
HAVE YOU SEEN OUR LATEST COMIC SONG ..... 30c.
SOLDIERS' HAPPY RETURN, Mazurka ..... 30c.
IF WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE ..... 35c.

Mailed postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME,

286 Bowery, New York.

"RIT-TA-TINNY."

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANO-FORTES, and VOLUMES and VOICE, Melodeon and Seraphine. To let, and rent allowed if purchased. Monthly payments received for the same. Second hand pianos at bargains from $50 to $250. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Illustrated catalogues and Piano. Piano tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

Pile Remedy.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Cough's

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer restores gray hair.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer makes hair grow on bald heads.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer stops Hair from falling out.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer prevents headache.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer is elegantly perfumed.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer is all that can be desired as a dressing.

CLOCK'S

Hair Restorer possesses all the merits claimed for it. A single trial convinces the most skeptical of its value. If after a thorough trial of two bottles, it does not give perfect satisfaction, the money will be refunded. Sold every where at $1 per bottle; six bottles for $5.

Dr. F. CLOCK, Proprietor,

Manchester, N. H.

H. T. HELMBOLD,

Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway,

Agent for New York City.

PRESTIDIGITATION

Or, MAGIC MADE EASY.—A New Book, just out. The most complete book on Legerdemain, Slight of Hand, &c., ever published. Everybody likes it. A large variety of tricks. Sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address, DE WITT & DAVENPORT, Publishers, 160 Nassau-st., New York. Agents wanted. Rare chance. Something New and Popular. The Wonderful Hat and Cane Trick, and 50 other amusing and instructive Optical performances of the best Magicians, Wizards, and Prestidigitateurs of the day. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address, J. HUNTER & CO., Publishers, Hinsdale, N.H.

Make your own Soap

WITH B. T. BABBITT'S

Pure Concentrated Potash,

OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other superfine or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 10 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of soft soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,

64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money in the world. Johnson Pen—warranted for one year—is Gentle, Elastic, every variety of Fine-holders on hand. Pens repointed and made to fit. Pen case sent by mail. Send for Circular. E. S. JOHNSON, Manufacturer and Office No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

JOSEPH GILLOTT & SONS'
STEEL PENS.
JOSEPH GILLOTT,
TRADE MARK. 304 HEAD OFFICE, 304
HENRY OWEN, MANUFACTORY AND WAREHOUSE,
SOLE AGENT. 91 JOHN ST. NEW YORK.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

(ESTABLISHED 1850).

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
10 0 Diamond Pins, Rings, &c	$25 to 100 00
1000 Drinking-Cups	7 00 to 10 00
5000 Oval and Cameo Gold Bracelets	7 00 to 10 00
3000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
30 0 Gold Lockets Diamond Rings	5 00 to 8 00
6 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders	4 00 to 6 00
1000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
1000 Pearl, Ivory, and Shell Card Spools, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
1000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	12 00 to 24 00
1000 Butter Knives, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
3000 Napkin Rings, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
3000 Butter Coolers	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one is, how to be used (as some articles require a special mode of use, which we order d, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, costing only a fair charge. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 6 for $1; 13 for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; and 160 for $15.

Agents wanted everywhere. Great inducements to dealers and canvassers to act as such. Full net to send for circulars with prices, &c., to J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 168 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of SUPPLYING PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we have good quarters for the following, viz.:

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS.

Of these we have on hand constantly, including

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

Obtained at great expense and forming a complete

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE LATE WAR.

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,
Yorktown,	Fortress Trains,
Gettysburgh,	Hanover Junction,
Fair Oaks,	Johnny Reb Mountain,
Savage Station,	Chickahominy,
Fredericksburgh,	City Point,
Fairfax,	Petersburgh,
Richmond,	Petersburgh,
Deep Bottom,	Dale Plain,
Monitors,	Chattanooga,
Fort Morgan,	Atlanta,
Charleston,	Mobile,
Florida,	Strawberry Plains,
	Knoxville.

American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, Flowers, Fruits, Animals, Microscopic Objects, Astronomical Subjects, &c. Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

Photographic Albums.

We were the first to introduce them into the United States and we received the highest premium at the World's Fair, beating in this line 60 seats to 600. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior to any in the market, whether foreign or other. They are for sale by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

20 Page Album, holds	20 Pictures.
40 Page Album, holds	40 Pictures.
80 Page Album, holds	80 Pictures.

The Trade will find our Albums the most Saleable they can buy.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains over 1,000 PORTRAITS different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Eminent Persons, viz.:

Of the Royal Family of England,	50 Subjects.
" " " France,	70 other Citizens, 120 Divines,
" " " Belgium,	20 Authors, 100 Actresses,
" " Austria,	30 Opera Singers, 100 Actors, &c.

2,000 Copies of Works of Art, including representations of Sculpture, Paintings, Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of Stamp. Any of the above sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

Cards per doz., $1.00, and upwards. Cards per 100, $6.00, and upwards.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D., will please remit $1 with their order, as we are frequently troubled with orders from irresponsible parties.

Liberal discount to the trade.

Lists of the prices and quality of our goods sent free.

"RIT-TA-TINNY."

$6 ELEGANT $8 WATCH.

Fine imported watches for the retail trade at greatly reduced prices. A splendid gentleman's double-case, hunting, small size, EXCELLENT TIMEKEEPER, with GOLD LOCKET, handsomely engraved, KEY, &c., for the low price of half dozen, $36. A sample one five by mail for $6.

Also, a splendid gilt-plated double-case hunting watch. Fine timekeeper. Gold locket, vest chain, key, &c., to match. Price per case of half dozen, $36. Sample, $6.

FINE DOUBLE HUNTING-CASE GOLD-PLATED WATCHES. Superior style. Magnificent. Fine gold jewelled movements regulated and warranted. Per case of half dozen, $60. Sample, $12.

SILVER COMPOSITE HUNTING-CASE WATCHES, MAGIC CASES. Handsomely engraved, GOLD LOCKET, KEY, &c. Per case of half dozen, $60. Sample, $12.

CASE SILVER HUNTING LEVERS. Fancy or plain cases, warranted. Per case of half dozen, $72. Sample, $15.

FINE SILVER ENGLISH HUNTING LEVERS. Superior, jewelled, &c. Per case of half dozen, $90. Samples, $20.

ENGLISH SILVER HALF-CHRONOMETERS. Extra silver hunting-cases, large jewels. Warranted. Per case of half dozen, $120. Sample, $25.

THE CELEBRATED IMPERIAL WATCH, a wonderful article, superior to Chronometers, with Compensation Balance, and Jewelled Escapement. Imitations of a $100 gold watch. Per case of half dozen, $60. Sample, $12.

These gold and silver watches of every description. Cabinet Watches, Levers, Lepines, &c. Jewelled Chain and Pipe Repellers on hand and made to order.

Imported, not Manufactured.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 168 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.

$10 A Day easy made $10.

By selling Engravings, Card Photographs, and Stationery Packets. Send stamp for Catalogue, Terms, &c.

HARKNESS & CO., 10 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MU JAVIRO
THE MOST DELICIOUS
PERFUMES
SOLD EVERYWHERE

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved Scientific principles, and warranted to DEFOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. More truthful than the most costly and elaborate Timekeeper of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. It requires no key or winding up. It never runs down, and will never be out fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Just introduced from Europe, where it is in use, & where it is secured by ROYAL LETTERS PATENT. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. SPECIAL NOTICE. Our GENERAL AGENTS being the only one authorized to sell this new invention, no gift enterprises can be conducted from buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under penalty of the law. Agents, or Dealers, in Timekeepers, who imitate this advertisement with a view to deceive, will be dealt with by placing a serious article with a slight alteration of name. SOLE AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES, CANADA, AND MEXICO.

"RIT-TA-TINNY."

MAGNIFICENT SALE.

GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c.

THE ONE DOLLAR PLAN.

THE ENTIRE STOCK of one Gold and Silver Watch Factory, one Jewelry and Jewellery Establishment, one Musical Instrument and Sewing Machine Warehouse, one Silver Plating Factory, one Gold Pen and Pencil Maker, to be disposed of with dispatch.

WITHOUT REGARD TO COST.

The goods are of fashionable styles and no excellent workmanship. The Watches are in this manner to relieve the proprietors from embarrassment occasioned by a distressing war.

THE ONE DOLLAR PLAN.

The name of each article effected for sale—as Gold Hunting Watch, Musical Instrument, Gold Cake Basket, &c.—is written on a card and inclosed in a sealed envelope; these envelopes are then placed in a wheel and well mixed; then as an order is received, with 25 cents for return postage and stamp, the wheel is turned and an envelope drawn at random, and sent by first mail to the customer, who will see at once what he has got for One Dollar. One certificate will be sent for 25 cents; 5 for $1; 14 for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; and 160 for $15.

AGENTS WANTED throughout the country to operate for us. A large commission will be paid. Send for terms, &c., including stamp. Write your NAME, TOWN, COUNTY, and STATE plainly, and address

GOLDSWORTHY BROTHERS,

160 Broadway, New York.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS retains and cures more ruptures than any other. It is the most perfect ease and comfort. Elastic stockings, belts, bandage, crutches, &c. No. 31 ANN STREET. Established 25 years.

FIRST PREMIUM

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 17, 1862; Improvement patented March 14, 1865. The ELASTIC FAMILY SEWING MACHINE, with or sewing attachment, a most wonderful and elegant production of mechanism, is sold at the low price of $5. Each machine SEWS, BINDS, HEMS, FELLS, and EMBROIDERS in a most superior manner. Makes the SEWING-STITCH more perfect and regular than by hand, and will sew forward or backward rapidly, making the stitches to each revolution of the Wheel. Will darn, braid, stitch, and gather with ease. Is simple in form, requires no change of stitch; is NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, has few parts, and is warranted to work well for a LIFETIME. It is so fortunate as any other patent. It has taken the United States Patent Office record. Is the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have purchased.

"For the dressmaker it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a want long felt."—Godey's Lady's Book.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—Scientific American.

Will work silk or double thread, is nicely put very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—Scientific American.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, C. O. D., with privilege of examining, on receipt of the price, $5. Sub-delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Circulars containing liberal inducements, sent free.

FAMILY SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

GREENBACKS AND GOOD—ROBACKS ARE BETTER.

The best tools and agents' outfits in the world. Sp. Of catalogues sent free to any address in the country. Address BURNS & CO., Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Rehoek, Proprietor, Cincinnati, O.

A GIFT FOR YOU

At the Philadelphia Gift Book Store.

A NEW CATALOGUE of books just issued, of over 50 pages, of books in every department of literature, with full instructions for Territory Agents, &c., &c.

The best place in the world to buy books is at the

"Evans Original Gift Book Sale."

Catalogues sent free on receipt of red stamp. Address G. O. EVANS, 629 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.

TERMS: $2 50 a year; 5 copies for $6; 7 copies, and 1 extra copy of club, $10. Single Numbers for sale by News Agents throughout the United States. Two volumes a year, beginning in January and July. Address

T. S. ARTHUR & CO.,

323 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ALL WORKS ON PHONOGRAPHY, HYDROPATHY, PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, ETHNOLOGY, MECHANICS, PHYSIOGRAPHY, ANATOMY, MEDICINE, AGRICULTURE, EDUCATION, &c., supplied by FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York. See our SPECIAL LIST of Private Medical Works. AGENTS WANTED.

$1,000,000 Worth

OF

Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....each $125 00
100 Silver Watches.....each 20 00 to 25 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases.....5 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. The method of disposing of these goods for ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms and privileges. Address A. H. BOWN & CO.,

56 Beekman Street. P. O. Box 4570, New York.

Hawkes Improved Fountain Pen. One filling writes 8 to 12 hours. Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1 00 each. Send stamp for circular. G. F. HAWKES, Patentee and Manufacturer, 94 Main-st., Rochester, N. Y.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine on the nine quarterly needed by every boy. A sample and full particulars sent by mail. Manufactured only by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

$200 A MONTH GUARANTEED.

To a limited number of re-spersing men, to engage in a light, honorable business, with which they can make $200 a month. Address, with stamp, C. T. VAN ALLEN & BROS., 184 Washington St., N.Y.

AGENTS and DEALERS in FANCY GOODS—a staple article, big profits, sells readily. Send for circular and terms, and trade-list. W. C. Wemyss, 370 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore Washington prices. Goods shipped by mail to troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS. 64 Baltimore-st., Baltimore. Soldiers Depot for Iowa.

$5 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasp—for 30 Photographs. Sent by mail for $5 00.

$5 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasps—for 20 Photographs—for 10 photographs. By mail, for $5 00. Articles, suitable for Christmas Gifts, always in stock. Send for catalogues. W. C. Wemyss, 370 Broadway, N. Y.

SOMETHING NEW.

Of interest to all. Indoor Self-Exercising, and send for Circular, to H. S. GREELY, Agent,

No. 65 Broadway, Room 3, Second floor, New York.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

AMERICAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved principles of science, and warranted to denote solar time with greater accuracy than the most expensive watch. Any person can have one for the price at which it is sold plates it within the reach of every one. It is acknowledged by all to be a boon to the million. Neat, cheap, and warranted perfectly accurate; can never get out of time. No one should be without it. Sizes, with white enamelled dial in gold or silver gilt, 50 cts. Sent by mail complete, with full directions, on receipt of price. This invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturing Company of New York, and all persons purchasing or offering for sale any IMITATION, under or mislead with a view to deceive, will be dealt with by the AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

Brandreth's Pills

Mildly but certainly relieve the bowels of all contrary to health; a single dose has often been the means of saving many times its cost. By using the pills you may avoid a sickness to throw from the system those matters upon which disease depends for continuance.

DYSPEPSIA is an ex cured by Brandreth's Pills. When the headache and fever continue, they should be used daily to keep the bowels open. They are the best remedy in the smaller doses. The worst attacks are often cured in forty-eight hours.

See B. BRANDRETH on the Government stamp.

ARCANA WATCH.

An elegant, durable, and reliable as the finest gold watch. Gents', size, 18 inches in circle, $15. Ladies' Hunting case, $25. Six for $125. ARCANA WATCH CO., 162 Chatham-st., New York. 2d floor.

WHY SHOULD YOU WEAR A BEARD? BECAUSE IT PROTECTS THE THROAT, and gives you fine, rich, gentlemanly whiskers. But there are some people whose beards won't grow; and to those people I say that DEVOE'S MAGNETIC LOTION is given on the smooth-st face, and within six weeks from the first application, it will be a luxuriant growth. It will not soil stain or injure it. I have one to change $1 top per package, or will send them in free of charge to any address as it can be had of almost any Druggist or Perfumer in the United States.

R. G. CRAHAM, 69 Nassau Street, New York.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HORNER PIANOFORTE, a SPECIAL GOOD MEDAL, was awarded to it by the late great World's Fair, and stands in JUSTICE over all competitors for the best instruments.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument on exhibition—a most just testimony, and a most deserved honor. The instrument of this class was used by James M. Pelton, exhibitor and agent of the Victoria Regia Conservatory, when it was given to Music and Harmon.—Watson's Art Journal.

"I set up each of them in the parlor."—O. W. MORGAN.

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRUSH.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A KING.

"The best is unexceptionable—for its richness of any other instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,

No. 97 East Twenty-third street,

New York.

BOUND VOLUMES

OF

Harper's Weekly,

From the commencement, will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 10 00 "

Each Volume contains One Year.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

Franklin Square, New York.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each

500	Musical Boxes, each	$20 to $150
150	" " in Bells and Accordeons	100 " 500
500	Silver Tongue and Cuffee Cups	50 " 150
1000	Gold Lockets	50 " 150
800	" Ice Pitchers	50 " 150
1,000	Sets of Sleeve Buttons	50 " 150
2000	Goblets and Drinking Cups	50 " 150
3000	" Spoons	50 " 150
2000	" Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets	50 " 150
2000	Sets of Sporting Implements	50 " 150
10,000	" " Table Spoons and forks, per dozen	10 " 40
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches	50 " 150
150	Ladies' Gold and Enameled Hunting-Case Watches	50 " 150
1000	" " Open-Face Watches	25 " 90
800	Gents' Plain Gold Case Silver Watches	20 " 50
500	Diamond Rings	50 " 150
1,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chain	10 " 30
2,000	Gold Oval Band Bracelets	5 " 15
5,000	Gold Oval Band Bracelets	10 " 30
2,000	Chatelaine Chains and Guard Chains	5 " 20
1,000	Solitaire Gold Pencils	5 " 15
1,000	Oval, Opal, and Enameled Brooches	5 " 15
1,000	Medal, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops	5 " 15
7,000	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops	5 " 15
4,000	California Diamond Breast-Pins	2 50 " 10
2,000	Gold Pens and Vest-Pencil Holders	5 " 15
4,000	Pearl and Vest Ribbon Slides	2 50 " 10
5,000	Sets of Gilt Studs, Solitaire, Shirt Studs, &c.	2 " 6
2,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	2 " 6
10,000	Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 10
4,000	" Magic Spring	10 " 30
2,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	2 " 6
5,000	Plain Gold Rings	2 " 6
1,000	Plain Gold Bands	2 " 6
10,000	Sets of Studs and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000	Solitaire Diamond Rings	5 " 15
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold	5 " 15
6,000	" " " Coral, Opal, and other stones	5 " 15
10,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils	4 " 15
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	5 " 15
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	15 " 25
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Bracelets	5 " 15
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Rolls	5 " 10

ARE NOW SALE at No. 65 Manufacturers' Row, Broadway, N. Y., where, having purchased the entire stock for cash, we are enabled to offer the above Goods at One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, Scotland, and Switzerland, we can cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of value, like Gold and Silver Watches, which we have purchased for a less sum than the cost of sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Under these circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., sole agents for the principal Importing Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Grand Gift Appointment, to be divided among the following magnificent assortment:

Certificates of the various articles are packed amongst packages containing the articles, and when purchasers are taken out without regard to choice, the Certificate will be given to the purchaser, and on receipt of the certificate you will see what you can have for a dollar, and take the article or not. Further on we may state that Gents' Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, and Jewelry of every description are sold for ONE DOLLAR.

Send for circular and certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding, for which purpose, on receipt of remittance of One Dollar, 25 cents such, which must be enclosed over the One Dollars in a separate letter. Five certificates will be sent for eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered to the public in the following articles, viz.: Watches, Revolvers, &c., by Messrs. Arrandale & Co., at No. 161 Broadway. They have purchased a immense stock of goods, regardless of value, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is very fully described in the circular, and on receipt of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, and in many cases $100. A rare opportunity for those of investing a dollar.—Saturday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 25, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been promptly known to the public as one of the most reliable firms of public confidence.—N. Y. Sunday American Journal, March 5, 1865.

We have inspected at the office of Messrs. Arrandale & Co. Agents for the Manufacturing Jewellers, a large assortment of Watches, &c., of real value to be given away in their present distribution. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving general satisfaction to buyers, and creating extensive employment to agents. We know the firm in question to be very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to read their advertisement.—N. Y. Atlas, Sept. 3, 1865.

By Messrs. Arrandale & Co.'s arrangement the advantages secured to us by the sale of the enormous stock we are selling to-day, and nothing comparatively to lose. No house can be will get for his stock of goods, and the consequence is, it is not satisfied.—N. Y. Weekly News, Aug. 5, 1865.

EMPLOYMENT FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment we have heard of for ladies is the sale of certificates for the "Great Gift Distribution" of Arrandale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this way, not only in filling her own purse, but time to her family. We would advise our readers to call on the Certificates, as will be seen by our advertising columns. Gentlemen can also find employment.—N. Y. Sunday Mercury, August 14, 1864.

In our columns the reader will find an advertisement of Arrandale & Co.'s Gift Distribution of valuables. We have had occasion to speak favorably of that advertisement we received several years ago of the advantages secured to us by purchasing that, both in finish and quality, they excelled our expectations. The present we intend to do, as they had been represented.—True Democrat (Lewistown), August 1, 1864.

The British Whig of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 26, 1864, one of our subscribers became an Agent for Arrandale & Co., and by request brought some twenty articles, sent a specimen for her agency in this office for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that each and all of the articles were worth treble the amount paid by the recipients, and some of them six times.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Pins, Bracelets, etc., which have been sent us by Arrandale & Co. to this place for $1 each.—Angelica Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 16, 1865.

ADDRESS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittances amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 75 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents by return mail, or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
161 Broadway, New York.

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!
Wholesale and Retail.

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
87 and 89 Bowery, and 65 Christy St.,

Have the be. assorted Stock of Parlor, Dining-Room, and Bed-Room Furniture, Spring Beds, and Bedding, in the Union.

Our Facilities for manufacturing at Low Prices defy Competition.

"Put Money in thy Purse."
BUSINESS FOR YOU.
Positively no Humbug, but a Legitimate Money-Making Occupation.

Wanted: Men and Women, Boys and Girls, to secure our magnificent INDUCEMENTS, ILLUSTRATED MART OF INSTRUCTIONS in a very beautiful and highly popular BUSINESS, that can be done at home, and PAYS LIBERALLY.—For cents' worth of material producing over a dollars' worth of work, for which there is a ready Demand in every city, town, and village in the Union.

With this Outfit you will Receive a PRESENT, consisting of either

A Gents Silver Lever Watch!
A fine Photograph Album;
A handsome copy of Shakspeare's Works;
A "Souvenir Gallery;"
A Five-Dollar Gold Piece, } Genuine Money;
A Package of U. S. Greenbacks, }
A splendid work-bag—Large Size;
A Royal Friendship Album;
One Hundred Popular Card-Pictures;
Twenty-five Colored Stereoscopic Views;
And some one or a variety of pretty and useful articles.

Inclose $1 20, for which you will receive the CHART and PRESENT, post-paid, by return mail. Send for a free circular, which names the Present to which you would be entitled with your order.

AGENTS WANTED EVERY WHERE. Unequaled inducements. Address all orders to

The Franklin Publishing Company,
Box 1406, Philadelphia, Pa.
Offices, Fifth and Chestnut Streets.

CANVASSERS WANTED.—To take orders for VICTORY'S HISTORY OF THE REBELLION, endorsed by the President, Cabinet, Members of Congress, and the Press generally. Sixteen Thousand already sold by the Press generally. This work still in demand. Different Histories of the War all who have purchased Victory's subscribe its superiority over the authors themselves. Agents make orders for VICTORY'S HISTORY, Life of LINCOLN, Life of GRANT, and HISTORY OF AMERICA (of the kind published); for a new illustrated edition of the INDEPENDENT'S AMERICANS; and for PORTRAITS or GENERALS, &c. Time extra and liberal terms. Territory given. Every agent supplied by CANVASSERS ONLY. Liberal terms and exclusive territory given to Canvassers. Address

TORREY & HOYEY, Publishers,
Cincinnati, Ohio, or Boston, Mass.

"HIT-TA-TINNY."
Turn of Life.

YOU are on the eve of the "turn of life," a period when, both in male and female, the body requires bracing up, to enable it to enter with vigor, not only upon infirmity, but with freedom from disease after. HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS will be found peculiarly efficacious in giving our system, and give you vigor of frame, that will enable you to pass through all critical periods. These Bitters are for sale by all druggists. This Bitters is not a beverage. Prepared by H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy.
Sold by Stationers and Druggists, and all who want cheaply, and expeditiously print their own Cards, Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., Circulars, &c. Send for Catalogue. PRICE, $30 and Upward.
KELSEY & CO., Meriden, Conn.

IRON RAILING.

JENKINS'S PATENT COMPOSITE IRON RAILING, formerly sold by Hotchkiss & Wickersham, is now sold by the undersigned, successors to the late firm, at DAVIES & CO., No. 46 Broome Street, New York.

JUST RECEIVED, a large assortment of Gold Chains, Coral Stones, Witch Keys, Fancy Pins, Laughable Compositions of Ancestry, &c., &c. Send for circular. Send orders to Box 5410, P. O., New York.

PAUL FRY MAGAZINE OUT. Price 5 cts. Address CHIEF OF ART DEPT. OF STAMP DEPOTS.

UNITED STATES STEEL PEN WORKS,
FACTORY, CAMDEN, N. J.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.,
STEEL PEN MANUFACTURERS,
WAREROOMS, { 400 JAMES STREET, Philadelphia. 47 JOHN STREET, New York.

SAMPLES AND PRICES OF APPLICATION. LOTS MADE TO ORDER ON ANY PATTERN OR STAMP REQUIRED.

Caution: These Pens are of genuine American manufacture, and equal in finish, elasticity, and temper, to any of foreign make. We caution the public, therefore, not to purchase the Esterbrook Pens, unless the facsimile of the American public, the Esterbrook Pens are also the most generally against foreign imitation.

For sale at retail by all stationers throughout the country.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR
KEY'S AMERICAN UNION WRITING FLUID.
THE BEST AND MOST PERMANENT INK IN THE WORLD.

$200 per month! The very best chance ever offered. No humbug or risk. Full particulars free. Address E. G. ROBINSON, Detroit, Mich.

THE HUMAN HAIR,
AND THE CUTANEOUS DISEASES WHICH AFFECT IT.
BY
B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST.

With six full-page Illustrations.
1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth. Price $2.
For sale by all booksellers, and mailed free on receipt of price by JAMES C. DERBY, Publisher,
No. 622 Broadway, New York.

Metropolitan Enterprise.
NEW YORK AND PROVIDENCE
Jewelers' Association.
Capital.....$1,000,000.

Depot, 558 Broadway.

An immense stock of Pianos, Watches, Jewelry, and Fancy Goods, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you see what you will receive.

CERTIFICATES, containing each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of a description of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; fifty-five for $10; and one hundred for $15.

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to pay the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, Sewing Machine, or any Set of Jewelry on our list, for $1; and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. Address

C. M. DUNN & CO., 558 Broadway, New York.

Set To Fit Military Men, Florist and even the Godless, these Corsets are unsurpassed for Durability being a combination of the best interior and exterior materials, manufactured on strictly scientific principles cannot possibly chafe or irritate the seat of the wearer and are recommended by the Medical Faculty as the only Corset that will not interfere with the most delicate organization. Sold by all leading Merchants. Manufactured only by

WARNER BROTHERS,
Sole Proprietors, 359 Broadway, New York.
Corsets supplied, Steam & Foreign, Investors, Physicians and Manufacturers. Wholesale and Retail.

Allcock's Porous Plaster.
A MEDICATION OF INDIA-RUBBER.

By their marvelous electric properties they relieve internal pain more speedily than a blister.

In Asthma, Lumbago, Backache, Cold, Pleurisy, Pains of the Chest, Sides, and Kidneys, they are unequaled, and are used to be approximated.

ALLENTOWN, Pa., April 4, 1865.

Messrs. T. Allcock & Co.:

DEAR SIRS,—My daughter used one of your Porous Plasters. She had a very bad pain in her side, and it cured her in one hour. Yours, JOHN W. ECKERT, Merchant.

A Man Saved from Lameness for Life.

A gentleman, from placing the heel of his boot on a piece of orange-peel, was suddenly thrown down, and violently sprained his knee. He was six months confined to the house, during which time he had recourse to, as he last record, a very eminent physician, who called in to see him, and on leaving, said, "I can do you no consolation, he said: "My opinion is you will never be better." But the gentleman's patience began to be long and knee should be increased in a Plaster of Allcock's Porous Plaster, and by the time the second stiffening of the knee, and said: "The sooner it is cured the

ARRIVAL OF ANOTHER DISTINGUISHED FOREIGNER.

COMMON CONSCIENCE (to CHOLERA, that is to have the Freedom of the City). "I promise you, Sir, a more desirable residence in this City than you could possibly find in any other quarter of the Globe!—Pat, show this Gentleman a specimen of our Street Soil!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.
Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our prompt attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL...$3,000,000. SURPLUS...$1,500,000.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on Fayorable terms. J. L. WORTH, Cashier.
New York, August 21, 1865.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 34 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie-Crust, eaten with impunity, and no fear of the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PIONEER YEAST POWDER. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 195 Front St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

$20. G. & S. CYSTAL D. P. $20.
A year can be realized gilding and putting up the Crystal Door Plate. Agents wanted. Stock, Tools, and Plate complete cost $20. L. L. TODD & CO.,
39 Nassau Street, New York.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

$1000 BUY and SELL Gold (Dry Goods). J. G. BELIN, 89 Nassau Street, New York.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co. CHAMPAGNE.
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and consumers are acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold in bond or duty paid by A. W. NITCHIE, 59 Beaver St., N. Y.

JEFFERS
ON DECK STILL AT
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.
It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

THE MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.
FORTY-TWO GOLD or SILVER MEDALS, or other first Premiums awarded us within a few years, and SEVEN EX'amidst the sharpest competition with all the other prominent makers of Reed Instruments) within the last three weeks.
No other instruments of this class have ever been awarded a gold medal in this country. Not only have these instruments received the highest premiums at Industrial Fairs in almost every instance, but they are pronounced, by the leading musicians of the country generally, to be SUPERIOR BY ANY OTHER INSTRUMENTS OF THIS CLASS IN WORLD. See printed testimony to this effect in our circulars, from more than two hundred and fifty, including a large portion of the most eminent organists, pianists, musical directors, and composers now in the whole country. Prices, $55 to $1,000. Send for circular, with full particulars, just free. Address MASON & HAMLIN, 274 Washington St., Boston; or 596 Broadway, New York.

IVORY and PEARL
Slove-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $2, $4, $6, and $8 a set. Ivory and Pearl Sett-Buckles, $2 to $5 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 15 cents each. Detachable and Solid.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 571 Broadway.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

MAGEE'S PORTABLE AND BRICK
FURNACES
Will consume less fuel, give a purer atmosphere, are more durable, and more economical, than any other in the market. WARRANTED to give SATISFACTION.
MAGEE'S PARLOR OVEN
RANGES
Are unequaled in economy, convenience, and operation. Both cook with heat at bake. Either oven may be heated separately. Five passes equally under the six boilingplaces. Warranted perfect in their operation, and to do more work with the same amount of fuel than any other patent. Also COOKING STOVES, FIREPLACE HEATERS, FLAT TOP RANGES, PARLOR STOVES, &c.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.
Office, Wholesale and Retail, 370 Canal St., New York.
JOHN SUMNER.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostate glands, stone in the bladder, calculous gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The most powerful exciting medicine for the cure of female complaints. Fifty years' experience incontestably proves these remedies unrivaled for the disorders incidental to the softer sex. No family should be without them. They may be taken by persons old or young, as they will further health when every other means prove unsuccessful.

CHEQUE MEDICAL BOOKS. Send for Catalogue to FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.

Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet (which, free, on receipt of ten cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

SNOLANDER'S
COMPOUND EXTRACT OF
BUCKU,
Cures diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, &c. Price ONE DOLLAR. Sold by D. BARNES & CO. and F. C. WELLS & CO., New York. Dr. LEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
ROSWELL & WARNER'S COLORLESS colors beautifully and naturally. One application, no smoke, no trouble. Large bottles, $1 a pair. Manufactory 9 Dey St., N. Y.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United State Dispensatory.

Agents Wanted
To canvass for our new, beautifully illustrated, and thrilling interesting volume of army experience. CAMP FIRE AND COTTON FIELD, by Thos. W. KNOX, Herald Correspondent. Full of startling incidents, amusing anecdotes, gorgeous descriptions, life in camp and bivouac together with ample and reliable directions to those who design engaging in cotton culture at the South. Send for circular. BLELOCK & CO., 19 Beekman St., New York.

THE WEBER PIANO
Is considered by the leading Musicians, by the National Institute Association, the Conservatory of Music, and other Musical Schools, the BEST PIANO-FORTE Manufactured,
because of their GREAT POWER, SWEETNESS AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE, PERFECT QUALITY, ELASTIC TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.
Warerooms 429 Broome St., New York.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 20 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Gozzo" (our own make) Bi-Carb. Soda.
SODA ASH—Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
CAUSTIC SODA—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Margaret Brothers', and Hunsley's.
SAL SODA—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
SALERATUS—Paragon, Excelsior, and Double Refined, made at our own works.
Perfectly pure Cream Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Flor. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Terra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Sherbert Palm Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Rosin, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are "first hands." Established in 1847.
OFFICE—126 and 128 Cedar St., New York (west side).

DEMULGENT,
HONEY, GLYCERINE AND PAIN
SOAPS,
J. C. HULL'S SON,
62 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.
Manufacturer of 100 different styles of Soaps.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

RED PLUME,
A TALE OF THE BLACK FEET COUNTRY,
(Beadle's Dime Novels, No. 9.)
Now ready at all News Depots. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of Ten Cents.
BEADLE & CO., PUBLISHERS, New York.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer
RENEWS THE HAIR.
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER
Restores gray hair to the original color.
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER
Prevents the hair from falling off.
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER
Makes the hair soft and glossy.
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER
Does not stain the skin.
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER
Has proved itself the best preparation for the hair ever presented to the public. Price $1. For sale by all druggists. DEMAS BARNES & CO., Wholesale Agents.

Newsdealers, Bookseller, Newspaper Readers, and Book Readers
Are informed that
The American News Company,
OF NEW YORK,
Is ready to supply at the usual rates, and on the very lowest terms:
Newspapers, Daily and Weekly, Magazines, Books, Dime Novels, Cheap Publications, School-Books, Envelopes, Pens, Writing-Papers,
And every thing wanted by a Newsdealer or Bookseller.
FREIGHT TO BE ALLOWED.
Describing the nature of the news business, how to do it, terms of papers and magazines, with their prices, &c., will be sent free to all who ask for them. Address
THE AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY,
119 and 121 Nassau Street, New York,
Successor to Sinclair Tousey and H. Dexter Hamilton & Co.

TAXIDERMISTS' MANUAL.
GIVING full instructions in Skinning, Mounting and Preserving Birds, Animals, Reptiles, Fishes, Insects, Eggs, Skeletons, &c. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50.
ADDRESS S. H. SYLVESTER, TAXIDERMIST,
Middleboro', Mass.

$150 A MONTH and board by DISCO'S ROTARY SEED SOWERS and others, with Stencil Tools. Don't fail to send for circulars containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vermont.

POLLAK & SON Manufacturers of Gold Jewelry, 212 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced prices. Will likewise cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.
A WELL-KNOWN
WHOLESALE DRUG FIRM in PHILADELPHIA,
Desire a Partner with capital, not a silent partner, will profitable amount in value to $25,000.
To the man of business, the business unsurpassed by any other in the city, and is routed under a long lease, having a number of years yet to run, at an exceedingly low rent.
The price of the good-will, including transfer of lease, is $15,000, and the stock and fixtures will be sold at actual cash valuation.
This is, without doubt, as good an opportunity as will ever be presented for a man to enter into the business, and is well worthy of attention, especially by persons from the South desiring Northern Goods.
Communications may be addressed to "DIUGUIST," Box 1291, Philadelphia P. O.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and fine linen of different styles of Shirts sent to Clubs in any part of the country.
WARD'S SHIRT DEPOT,
No. 387 BROADWAY, N. Y.

HATS AND FURS,
BURKE,
469 Broadway (adj. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

HARPER'S WEEKLY
A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 464.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

ANECDOTE OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

"I SAY, I say, General Jackson, for fear you should think I have some axe to grind because I try so hard to keep you at my poor house all night, I will agree to entertain you free of expense!" exclaimed the landlord of the only inn in the village of Jefferson, Ashe County, North Carolina, to General Jackson, late one evening in the autumn of 18—, as he entered his carriage to pursue his journey toward Tennessee. "The Blue Ridge, Sir, is infested with bandits, and you will certainly be robbed, and possibly murdered, before morning. Isseech you, stay!"

"You are very kind, Sir, and I thank you," replied the General, "but I shall proceed, and try and reach the Tennessee line at all events. I have no fears of being molested. Drive on, Ned, briskly. Adieu, gentlemen all!" and the old hero drove off at a rapid pace.

"Hillon there, youngster!" cried the landlord to a slim, wiry, flaxen-headed stripling standing in the muddy street in front of the tavern, "if you are going to Tennessee, you had better jump up behind and go along with the General; it's as cheap riding as walking."

"Sure enough; I reckon I'd better, and thank you," replied the young man, jumping up behind the coach as it drove off.

They rode on quietly for some hours until they began to ascend the mountain, when the General, hearing a slight cough behind, called out, sternly:

"Who's that?"

"It's me, Sir—Andrew Johnson. I am a traveler, on my way to Tennessee, and I thought I might get a lift on your carriage, Sir. I beg your pardon, Sir."

"You are quite welcome, Sir, to my carriage. Come forward and take a seat with me."

"Thank you, Sir; but as the mountain is rather steep here, I'll jump off and walk up."

He walked forward up the mountainside in advance of the carriage, but had not gone far before he saw a man ahead of him ascending the mountain. He appeared to be intoxicated. He lurched this way and the other way, staggering backward and forward; now his knees would double up, and he would miss a step, as if the earth had suddenly vanished before him; then he would cross his legs, and a lurch would send him diagonally across the road. He stopped and turned himself up so as nearly to fall backward, and then drifted helplessly along. Presently he turned an angle in the road and was out of sight.

"That man is beastly drank!" remarked the General.

"Drank!—not much, Sir," laughed the young man; "he's no more drunk than I am. He's playing 'possum, and means mischief. Look there! he's lying in the road.

As they drove up he raised himself lazily and hiccuped. "Hic! ah! I—I say, gentlemen, can't you give a man a lift? I—I—hic! can't walk. I'm loaded too heavily with d——l mean whisky."

"Then stay where you are and get rid of it!" replied the General, sternly.

"The devil!" exclaimed the man, springing to his feet with the agility of a cat. He gave a keen whistle and planted himself in front of the coach. Three men sprang out from the bushes, and made a rush at the carriage.

Quick as thought the General sprang upon one of them, and they rolled over in the road together. A dull, crushing sound was next heard over the conflict, and a second one rolled over in the dust, propelled by the loaded whip in the powerful hands of the driver. The young man, by a timely shot, fired and brought down a third, and then sprang to the assistance of the General, who still fought manfully with his Herculean antagonist, while the driver engaged the remaining robber.

"Stand back! stand back!" cried the General to the young man; "we are man to man. I'll give the villain fair play. By the Eternal I have you now!" and he threw his antagonist over, apparently lifeless.

"Are you hurt, my boy?" asked the General. "And you, too, Ned?—what's Ned?"

"Here, mass!" replied the boy, puffing up the road. "My robber coward—he run—he! he! he! I golly! I save one, mass save one, an' de young gentleman save one—he! he! ha!!"

All this occurred in less time than it takes to record it.

"But you, General, are you hurt?"

"No; nothing but a few bruises, thank God! But, look there! one of them is stirring. You, Sir, and Ned, pinion his hands, while I examine the others."

None of them were found to be dead. Two were only stunned, and the third had received a pistol-shot through the shoulder, and was crouching in affright. They were all soon pinioned, and a council was held, when it was determined to disarm them and let them go, rather than be detained on the road. No further incidents befell our travelers during their jaunt.

On their separation in Tennessee the General gave the young man much good advice. He recounted to him his own history, and bade him aspire to be good and useful. The General continued en route for his home in Middle Tennessee, and the young man stopped and settled in the town of Greenville, Tennessee, as a journeyman tailor. Of his subsequent career it is needless to speak; it is a part of the history of our country.

M. E. D.

JOHNSONBORO, TENNESSEE, Nov., 1865.

THE CHOLERA.

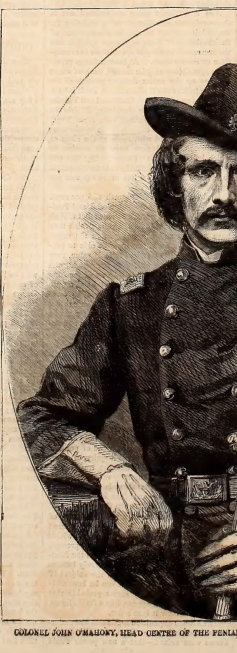
THE news of the arrival of the Atalanta from London on the 24 instant with cholera on board has given increased interest in this country to the subject of the epidemic. From fifty to sixty cases during the passage were reported, and sixteen deaths. The weather is not yet so cold as to prevent a prejudice flourish of the grim old monster this fall, nor is it safe to reckon too confidently on the security which winter may afford us. The disease has been known to defy the Frost King even in the colder latitudes of Russia. We have had ample warning, but what has been effected in the way of security? The street-cleaning commission of this city, with the Mayor at their head, have given out the work to men who certainly have done any thing else but clean the streets.

The Police Commissioners have felt obliged to take the matter in hand and have preferred charges against the contractors. The latter claimed that the trouble was due to the police, who should prevent citizens from throwing garbage into the streets. To this the reply was made that the police have reported cases (in one year to the number of 60,000) of violation of the city ordinances, but they were rarely, if ever, prosecuted to conviction.

According to a late work published by General VIELE, it appears that the original and natural drainage streams of the entire area of the city have been imperfectly filled up, and their places supplied by artificial sewers that utterly fail to drain off the water that is constantly accumulating. This water becomes stagnant, filth and garbage are allowed to mingle with it, and the miasma and noxious vapors arising therefrom are the fruitful and inevitable sources of disease and mortality. When one reflects upon the frightful masses of putridity that underlie the streets, alleys, public buildings, private residences, vacant lots, and a number of the public parks of the city, he can not be at a loss to divine the reason why fever and ague, intermittent fevers, and like complaints are chronic, and why epidemics prevail with such virulence in those localities when once they break out.

In Europe, in the mean time, the cholera appears to be declining in the places where it has been prevailing, on the eastern and northern shores of the Mediterranean, the coasts of the Euxine, and the banks of the Danube. Not more than eight or ten new cases have been reported at Southampton. The application of ice to the spinal column appears to have been a highly successful treatment. Although the cholera has been a month in Paris, the paternal care of the authorities avoids alarming the public with official returns. It is announced that on the 11th of October it attacked about 380 persons, 190 of whom died. But what are they among so many? asks a writer in the Times. Even at Marseilles the cholera deaths have been only four in a thousand among the whole number of inhabitants.

We give on page 724 an illustration of a scene which recently occurred in the streets of Marseilles on the occasion of LIGHTING FIRES NEAR THE PALACE OF JUSTICE TO DESTROY THE CHOLERA.



HON. JAMES L. ORR.

IT appears from the latest returns that WADE HAMPTON has been defeated in the South Carolina election for Governor by a majority of 500. If this is true Hon. JAMES L. ORR, whose portrait we give on page 723, is the Governor elect of South Carolina—a result of the election which will afford gratification to the loyal people of the country.

Hon. JAMES L. ORR was born May 12, 1822, at Craytonville, South Carolina. On both sides he is of Irish descent. His grandfather, JOHN ORR, was a brave soldier in the Revolutionary war. His father, CHRISTOPHER ORR, was a successful merchant, who devoted his means liberally to the education of his children. JAMES began his studies at a very early age, and in his eighteenth year entered the University of Virginia. He left college in 1841, and the subsequent year entered the law-office of Judge WARDLAW. He was admitted to the bar in 1843, after a highly creditable examination, and began to practice at Anderson, where he also established and edited a newspaper.

Mr. ORR was elected to the State Legislature from his district in 1844, at the age of 22, by a larger vote than was given to any other candidate in the State—a convincing evidence of his popularity in his own neighborhood. His very first speech was against nullification, which was the baby-form of secession, and was received with great favor throughout the State. He became a candidate for Congress in 1848 and was elected, and for more than ten years he held his seat without opposition. While he deprecated the agitation of the Slavery question, he was devoted to the Union. He was opposed to the Compromise measures introduced and passed by the Thirty-first Congress. When South Carolina, in 1851, threatened to secede alone, he opposed the movement, and although the State seemed determined to go out of the Union, through his influence the current was stayed.

In the reconstruction of South Carolina Mr. ORR has taken a leading position; and it is fortunate for the State that he is elected Governor. No man in the State so clearly understands the necessities of the situation in which the war has left the rebel States, and no one is more disposed to conduct affairs in such a manner as to steer clear of the delusions which have proved so fatal to Southern interests. Mr. ORR's past conduct gives good evidence of the spirit with which he will govern the State.

COLONEL JOHN O'MAHONY, HEAD CENTRE OF THE FENIAN ORDER.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BARNALOW.—[SEE PAGE 726.]

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

TWENTY years ago MR. HENRIETTA WELLINGTON BOOTH was invited in Europe by an American family of large possessions at the South to travel through the slave States and see for herself their actual condition. Her rhymed reply was this singular prophecy:

You tell me of a bright land far over the sea,
But, ah! can you call it the land of the free?
Where the image of God, for a handful of gold,
Like a beast of the field in the market is sold—
Where the child from the mother's fond breast is torn—
Where the father is clothed, leaving orphans forlorn—
Where the anklet is tortured, like sufferings that rise
From damned to the lash and the groan of despair!

Woe! woe to thee, fair land! for ever the stain!
For the anniversary of death—dark thereby's stain!
Shall pass by in sight, while every child
From the victims who writhe, mourn for justice on high.
And He, the great Lord, of the universe, shall Shall smite thee to earth in thy strength and thy pride;
For wrongeous hand fall for foul rebellion!
On the bridge reformed by His own beloved son!

This sound of the war-drum shall thrill thee at night,
At day time and thy brothers are borne to the fight;
The shot and the cotton shall rain their vain pain,
And the North and the South be divided in twain,
And brother 'gainst brother shall strike in the fight,
And battle be fought in the field of the night;
And the white maid and widow in sorrow shall mourn,
And the flags of the freedom in tatters be torn.

* * *

The North in her might like a whirlwind shall rise,
And the spirit of the nations be borne in her cries,
And though the warm blood of her heroes be shed,
The light of her freedom shall never be dead;
The Stars on the Stripes an Empire shall be,
Proud Liberty's banner from land and by sea;
And the Union, though spurned by the slaveholder's scorn,
Shall be guarded by Northmen for ages unborn.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1865.

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

THE next vital point of public interest is the organization of the House of Representatives. In the Clerk of the House devolves the place upon the roll the names of the representatives who may appear from the unorganized States, and may they take part in deciding the question whether they are entitled to seats?

To state the point would seem to settle it. But the law is happily coincident with the suggestion of common sense. The Statutes at Large provide that the clerk "shall make a roll, and place thereon the names of all persons whose certificates show credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the laws of their States respectively, or the laws of the United States."

Now as there is no government in the unorganized States which has been recognized by the United States, as their governments are sex parely provisional and experimental, and are entirely dependent for validity upon the approval of Congress, it is clear that until Congress has approved the Constitution under which the representatives are elected there are, in the eye of the law, no representatives. For suppose that the names of the claimants from South Carolina, for instance, should be enrolled; suppose that they should be able to affect the choice of Speaker and the whole organization of the House: they would then be also in a position to determine whether Congress should approve the Constitutions under which they were elected. In other words, the late rebels and their Northern allies would determine upon what terms the unorganized States should resume their relations in the Union; and they would also be strong enough to repudiate the National debt!

This preposterous proceeding is gravely urged as the only lawful one—by whom? By the late rebels and their friends at the North. The Government has been saved against a gigantic rebellion, and—according to these gentlemen—it can be now lawfully intruded only to blow into the war upon it, and their allies who cheered them on! The Constitution was always pleaded by the rebels and their friends against a war to suppress the rebellion, and it is now pleaded against the natural and legitimate action of the country in securing the fruit of its victory. Thus it appears that the Constitution, as interpreted both by its open and its disguised enemies, is only valid to embarrass the Government in saving the Government first from the arms and then from the intrigues of its enemies.

Before the representatives from any lately rebellious State can take part in the proceedings of Congress, Congress must determine whether that State is duly organized for its normal relation to the Union. In the case, for instance, the Provisional Governor of South Carolina has forwarded to the President the proceedings of the Provisional Convention, and the acts of the people and of the Legislature in accordance with them, and these have been laid by the President before Congress and approved by it, then, and not before, can the representatives regularly elected under the laws of such States be admitted to Congress. Until then a representative from South Carolina has no more right to a seat or a voice in Congress than one from Canada or Guatemala.

The conditions upon which the whole work of provisional reorganization proceeds were indicated by the President. He authorized some of the people of the States named to take certain steps in order "to present such a republican form of State government as will entitle the State to the guaranty of the United States therefor." The United States, of course, will decide whether the State shall have that guaranty; but the State itself will have no voice whatever in the decision. If the President had taken up with the Provisional Governor his under Constitutions which had for four years repudiated the national authority, sent representatives to Congress, would not the HON. MR. MCLANAGHAN or HORATIO SEYMOUR claim that they ought to be admitted equally with the representatives from New York and Ohio?

If the State of Ohio, or that of Indiana or New York or Ohio are, then the action of the President is not only an impertinence, but lays him liable to impeachment? And if the representatives may come without question, like those of Massachusetts—as Provisional Governor HOUSTON intended—then the action of the President was constitutional and necessary as a measure of public safety, and this is the view of all the loyal men. The representatives must wait until the United States in Congress bid them enter.

THE LAST EXCITEMENT IN WALL STREET.

THE Latin proverb to the contrary notwithstanding, people do not learn by experience, at least in Wall Street. For several years it has been evident that the Bears have been trending a dangerous path. Men who sell that which they have not got, and that which, under certain circumstances, they can not get, court ruin. Nine years ago Harlem Railroad stock jumped up from 20@40 to 50@60 per cent. The advance was justified on the theory that the Harlem Railroad Company is going to obtain the Broadway Railroad grant. It was soon ascertained that this expectation was fallacious. On this fact a number of Bear operators undertook to sell Harlem short. It chanced that a leading operator, who was backed by Commodore VANDERBILT, was at the time a holder of Harlem. He realized the situation, encouraged the speculators to sell Harlem short, purchased the stock, and compelled the short sellers to buy @ 250 to 280 that which they had sold @ 75 @ 100. The lesson was severe—it proved fatal to many parties concerned—and it was supposed that it would prove salutary. It would seem, however, that Wall Street is not yet cured.

The case is similar to that of the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien Railroad. The road runs from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to Prairie du Chien on the Mississippi. It was built and originally run by the Milwaukee and Mississippi Railroad Company, a concern which came to grief and was practically bankrupt in the panic of 1857. In the hands of the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien Company, which has been skillfully managed, the road has done well, and the stock has ranged in the market from 30 to 60 per cent, rising in the expansion of April 1864 to 89 per cent, and falling in the panic of April 1865 to 30 per cent. This autumn, owing to the heavy wheat crop of Wisconsin and Minnesota, the line has done a large business, and the stock rose in consequence in October to 70 per cent.

This advance of 840 a share in six months attracted the attention of the clever Bears on the Stock Exchange, and they began to sell the stock short. Their operations were closely scanned by an operator of experience, nerve, and capital. He began, quietly to buy up the options offered. Presently, questions arising as to the intrinsic value of the stock, he said his friends were against a sale of the road of the Company, where they were informed by the President and Directors that there was no likelihood of dividends being paid for some next. Under these circumstances it was evident that the stock was selling for more than it was worth, and the speculators sold more and more of it short. The wary old operator took their contracts quietly. As a general rule they sold the stock for cash or on short options, and borrowed it for delivery. Hence the scarcity. Full half the capital could be borrowed, and the Bears were encouraged in the belief that no money was coming into the market, for the 1st of October a heavy falling off in the receipts of wheat at Milwaukee was reported, and the short sales increased to seventy-five per cent. This promptly met by the operator for the rise, and simultaneously two new developments took place.

In the first place, without any obvious attempt to corner the stock, it rose with marked spasmodic bounds of 5@8 per cent a day.

And secondly, all purchases of stock on long options began to be made on the terms of the Open Board of Brokers, and not on the terms of the Stock Exchange. The motive of this was obvious. Under the rules of the Stock Exchange, a buyer or seller on long options may, within twenty-four hours after his purchase or sale, call for a deposit of 10 or 20 per cent in the Trust Company to secure the fulfillment of his contract; but after the lapse of twenty-four hours he can not call at all, nor, if he has called 10 or 20 per cent. within this period, can he afterward call for any more money. Under the rules of the Open Board buyer or seller may, at any time during the pendency of his contract, call for 10 per cent., and, as often as the market-price of the stock varies, may call for more and more, so as always to have a margin of 10 per cent. Buyers of Prairie du Chien, by stipulating that the contracts must be made on the terms of the Open Board, secured the right of calling for deposits to an indefinite amount. Thus, on 31st October contracts were made on the basis of 70 per cent., and 10 per cent. was called up. On 1st November the price was 80, and 10 per cent. more was called; on 2d the price was 90, and 10 per cent. more was called; on 3d the price was nearly par, and 10 per cent. more was called; on Saturday evening, 4th, the price reached 113, and 10 per cent. more was called; and on Monday, 6th, the price was 225, and 100 per cent. more was called, making altogether 150 per cent. called up—say $15,000 on every 100 shares of stock.

Thus the clever operators who, when Prairie du Chiens was selling @ 70 or thereabouts, concluded it was not worth so much, and sold for future delivery at that price, have now in the Trust Companies twice as much money up as the whole amount of their contract sales, with a fair prospect of being obliged to make still greater deposits. A man who on 1st November sold 1000 shares on 10 per cent margin—that is, knowing nowadays deals in less than 1000 shares—and, on 6th, in six days, a loss of $150,000 must find him in the fence, with a prospect of its indefinite increase. Harlem was terrible, but Harlem was nothing to this. Settlements were made on 6th, by which the short sellers of 1000 shares compromised with the buyers by paying $100,000 in money for a week's diversion. Of the future nothing can be predicted. When "corner" may break; before these lines are published Prairie du Chien may be selling at 70 again; or it may be selling at 500. All that can be said with certainty is, that he who sells that which he hasn't got and can't get must pay the price which the holder chooses to name, no matter how unreasonable that price may seem.

Just a fortnight since we pointed out in these columns the danger of speculating for the fall in railway stocks, in consequence of the smallness of their aggregate volume, and the increased capacity of speculators to monopolize or corner them. At least a dozen prominent speculators may be named, each of whom can buy up the entire floating portion of the Illinois Central, Erie, Hudson, etc., etc., and the speculator who corners these stocks may find himself loaded with them at the close of his operations, and may have no market for which he can dispose of them. But this will not console the Bears who have been compelled to settle with him at a loss of 100@200 per cent.

Harlem was not really worth 285 per cent. when the corner in that stock closed, and Prairie du Chien is not worth 500 now! But Wall Street gamblers will sell the thing which they have not got and can not get, on the vague theory that they will somehow be able to procure it for delivery at its intrinsic value, they must not be surprised if they are caught, and forced to pay fancy prices by way of teaching them the fundamental laws of political economy. To be reasonably safe speculation here after must run in governments, which can not be cornered, or in the price of which will be governed by the general law of supply and demand.

OUR FRENCH RELATIONS.

THERE is a general feeling that our Mexican and French relations are not satisfactory. The Secretary of State assured us at Auburn that there was no spirit upon the horizon; but he was looking resolutely through his resolute telescope. The unanimous declaration of the House of Representative in the midst of the war; the plain opinion of the leading Generals since the war ended; the rhetoric of political conventions; the persistent inquiry of many representative constituents; and the tradition of the Monroe doctrine carefully revived and emphasized—all show that there is great dissatisfaction with the presence of the French in Mexico holding an Austrian upon the throne.

Yet is it not wise to trust the course of events a little, seeing how feebly they are? Nobody, except a minority of this country, wishes to see it hurried into another war at present. With whatever ardor we may profess the Monroe doctrine at this time, it is surely best to avoid a war with France upon the subject of her Mexican enterprise, if it can be honorably avoided. And it really seems probable that the difficulty will disappear, like a feeble flame, if we do not blow it into a fire.

The French expedition to Mexico was undertaken upon the assumption that the United States were ruined—that a new power would be established in the Southern States which would be only too glad of a strong alliance upon its border, and that the dwarfed and enfeebled Government which had proclaimed the Monroe doctrine would never whisper that word again. Notwithstanding these favorable auspices the expedition was always immensely unpopular in France, and was keenly ridiculed and indignantly denounced in the Chambers by the Opposition. The entire French force in Mexico has never been considerable, and its Mexican allies are of no importance. MAXIMILIAN has been trying to influence himself upon his very uncertain throne, but the French Emperor has been painfully silent and inactive, while JUAREZ, the Mexican President, still maintains a struggling but persistent warfare.

Now the assumption under which the French came to Mexico is utterly destroyed. Instead of two new neighboring powers, the nearest of which was to be necessarily friendly, LOUIS NAPOLEON finds the one old power, with which the Monroe doctrine is a fond and universal tradition, more imposing than ever, with the most severe military training, with an immense navy, and flushed with victory. His prolonged stay in Mexico involves probable war with that victorious Power, and to what purpose? It would be a war unpopular and opposed in France, and opposed because of no adequate advantage to France which could be possibly secured.

LOUIS NAPOLEON, then, is the probable secret wish of LOUIS NAPOLEON? To let the destiny of the Latin race take care of itself, and to leave MAXIMILIAN to take care of his own. If such a man has made up his mind to go, he does not wish to be bullied or kicked out. Indeed such is human nature, a man will fight as fiercely under such circumstances as if he were conscious of a good cause. An attitude of courteous but positive expectation is much more agreeable to the French than the most arrogant impatience. If the Government of the United States politely and firmly expresses its confidence that the favorite theory and doctrine of "the consent of the peoples" will be suffered to have its course in Mexico as in Savoy, there is little doubt that the imperial power will devise a convenient plea for withdrawing. But journals and orators, and all organs and influences of public opinion, should not forget that they have duties to the good fellowship of nations and the peace of the world, as well as to Buncombe and Yankee-doodle-doo.

INDUSTRIAL RECONSTRUCTION.

THE intelligent citizens of the Southern States are naturally anxious to see the industry reviving upon which alone the prosperity of the country and the permanent peace established. They are calling for immigrants, and, possibly distrusting the good-will or capacity of the freedmen—which seems to us entirely groundless—are until they have given them the same fair chance that we all demand for ourselves—they propose that immigrants may be persuaded to come southward and invest money and labor in the land.

But do not our honest well-wishers to the South see their few arrangements for peace or rest in that part of the country until it is tranquilized and can promise the new-comers security in labor and property and prosperity? While the States at the South remain unorganized that stability is wanting which alone invites foreign immigration. Besides, Mexico has never had any charms for that valuable immigration which brings enterprise and capital to the States of peaceful industry; and any state of society which appears to the Mexican will always repel the most truly desirable population.

The industrial destiny of the disturbed States is the peculiarity in their own hands. They can be rebuilt in prosperity only by peaceful enterprises of agriculture and commerce. Those depend entirely upon confidence, and confidence will be restored only as fast as the people of the States show that they have fairly swept the situation. While the acts of secession are merely repealed; while the rebel debt is reluctantly repudiated only upon palpable compulsion; while the acquiescence in emancipation is merely verbal and formal, and an evident unwillingness to treat the freedmen fairly appears in every step taken in the new and provisionally intrusted with the work of reorganization, so long, of course, every sensible man will feel that there is no security of permanent quiet, and he will wait until the horizon clears before he sets out upon his journey to town fields and pastures new.

Here, for instance, is the State of Georgia. The Provisional Convention repeals the act of secession; but the legislature should pass at once that had become for the present inexpedient. It declares slavery abolished; but higgles about repudiating the rebel debt until the freedmen seals a peremptory telegram that it must be done. What provision it will advise for justice to the freedmen does not appear. That any body takes the very plain and logical position that, as the system of slavery is at end, all the laws that sprung from it fall to the ground, we do not discover; and we fail to see that there is any other spirit in the Convention than that of doing exactly as little as is imperactively necessary to resume the State relations with the Union. In Mississippi, indeed, every loyal man will observe with pleasure that Provisional Governor SHARKEY and Mr. ALCORN, the two Senators of the United States elected under the new Constitution now awaiting approval by Congress, do take this ground. But our private advices assure us that the condition of public sentiment in Mississippi, in Alabama, in Georgia, and in South Carolina is extremely unsatisfactory to those who hope for an early and sincere reunion.

We shall be told, of course, that this is natural. We understand Mr. BEECHER to say that he should not respect our Southern brethren half so much if they felt otherwise or did differently. That may be. We do not ask nor expect our fellow-citizens at the South to profess satisfaction with the result of the war. But if they acquiesce in that result we do expect them to do it frankly and fully, not sullenly nor maliciously. They may still believe in State sovereignty and the right of secession. They may declare the war upon the part of the United States to have been unjust and cruel. But if they agree to accept their State rights under the authority of the United States we have a right to expect that the measures they adopt will be such, both in substance and in the spirit with which they are adopted, as to leave no doubt that they have taken the only with their hearts as well as with their lips the formal assent to the strict letter of the required conditions, while all the incidents of daily life show an unwilling feeling, and a great difficulty to secure a formal recognition of the fact of compliance, but it certainly can not inspire that confidence upon which alone the prosperity of the Southern States is to be built.

Many of our own friends at the South think it very hard that we say many things that do not tend to conciliation. We do not mean intentionally say one. We must speak plainly, but plainness of speech is not unkindness. We are asked, Why not leave the Southern citizens to thus accept the conditions imposed? They may refuse to accept them, if they can not take them in the spirit in which they are offered. That is one thing they can do, and we should respect their refusal. Every thoughtful man at the South knows that true reorganization is not a letter but a spirit. How can any fair part of the country who read these lines do not know neighbors and friends who take the oath with one hand and sneer at it with the other?

That is not the way in which civil troubles are composed. If it be natural that those who have lost nothing should be left in such a frame of mind, it surely is no less natural that those who have won should regret and distrust it. And certainly the citizens of the Southern States will earnestly wish to see them more at peace, and an influx of capital and labor, must perceive that nothing will prevent such a result but a popular conviction of the acquiescence of which we hear is formal and not sincere.

THE FENIANS.

THE Fenian movement is an enterprise for Irish revolution against England. We can not see that it is wise, however natural it may be, nor do we believe the elements of success upon which it counts. A revolution imposed upon a country by those of its citizens who have chosen to deny it rather than to remain in the country and assert its independence at all costs, has not at the first view the promise of victory. The emigrés who left France at the outbreak of the revolution of 1789 hoped to return in 1815 and place LOUIS XVIII. upon the throne. But they returned with the bayonets of Europe behind them. A similar party in France formerly aided Irish revolutions, but still the revolutions failed. Upon what alliance do the Fenians count?

Our peculiar interest in the present movement, which does not recommend itself by any illustrious name, but is made itself known by the leadership and sympathy of the Church, which seems to us essential to the vitality of any Irish insurrection, springs from the fact that it is apparently a movement from the shore of the sea. The United States are apparently the moral base of the Fenian enterprise against Great Britain. We say the moral base, because there is no evidence that any men or munitions have been dispatched from this country; and indeed, such is the vast and accurate knowledge of the lively race, that it is by no means sure that the whole thing is not a burst of rhetoric.

The practical point is just here. The Irish population at home could not hope to do today more than SMITH O'BRIEN and his friends did fifteen years ago. That was to be one of the most ignominious of all the efforts to throw off the English yoke. There were noble men, to our knowledge, involved in that movement, but the movement itself was a total and almost ridiculous failure. If, however, the Irish population of the United States intend to cross the ocean in person, unite with the Irish at home, and fight with Great Britain; and if they can organize and equip adequate expeditions and fall upon the shore by sea and land, there may be serious trouble.

But even granting this intention—even supposing that our fellow-citizens of Irish descent are burning to leave their wives and children to the poor-house in this country in order that they may cleave the Sassenach to the chine in Ireland or England, it will be a most perplexing question for the government of the United States to decide whether the Constitution under which we live is not a satisfactory

LIGHT IN TEXAS.

THE following extracts from the Houston Telegraph, in Texas, are significant. If the education of the people is to continue—and even the Democratic party have not yet declared openly and directly against it—all other questions will be easier of solution. The first extract is from the issue of September 20:

"More than half of the school-age children in Houston go into the haunts of ragpers. Several schools for colored persons are now in operation here and in Galveston. Many planters buy a stock of school-books for the schools already not unfrequently upon plantations. We believe this is the proper thing, and that the education of the negroes in the elements of knowledge will aid in a hopeful solution of the question of how great labor will be controlled, and whether the negro race will survive their freedom."

The next is from an editorial in the same paper of September 30:

"Meanwhile the northern State, desirous of increasing its political power, should present a Constitution admitting of universal suffrage some time or in some way, it seems to us that the people of Texas will not be slow in both the Northern contestants. We are not the summer prepared to say that any plan can be wonderful or strange to be possible. Politicians are mighty sucretals, and what they will do are not be foretold by what they have done."

We do not despair of seeing a party of equal rights in the Southern States to join that in the other parts of the country; and when that party controls the late rebel as well as the loyal States we shall have once more an era of good feeling.

LITERARY.

"OUR Mutual Friend," DICKENS's new novel, is just issued by the HARPERS, in two forms: the two parts in paper at $1, and one volume in cloth at $1.50, both uncut and illustrated. It is one of the most characteristic of his works, full of that humor and pathos and peculiar creation which have put at the head of all living novelists. The plot is ingenious and interesting, and the multitude of characters that flit through the pages are very much in wonderful society to which Pickwick, and Peckniff, and Toots, and Dick Swiveller, and Little Nell and scores of other familiar and immortal friends belong.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON has ordered Governor Sharkey to exercise his official functions until ordered otherwise. Governor Humphreys, it seems, has been issuing a proclamation calling the State organization of the Legislature together, and Governor Sharkey's telegram is petitioning the President to prevent the Legislature from assembling.

The Legislature has assembled upon this notice, however, and the excitement among the latter is very great.

The Constitutional question is the supposed validity of the State debt. The President has in a special dispatch to Governor Johnson instructed measures as indispensable to the peaceful restoration of the State. Governor JOHNSON has advised the Convention to protest against the Government for the action destroyed by Gen. SHERMAN in the guaranty of faith through the State.

Governor Perry in his message to the South Carolina Legislature urges the importance of an early election for Congressmen. He suggests that the latter will take their seats and aid in the reorganization of Congress. He claims that the Constitution is legally bound to guarantee upon the toil. He pronounces the special oath (to support the laws of Congress) as "disqualifying members to swear that they have never taken active part in the late war." He recommends a general amnesty proclamation. No man in South Carolina could take such an oath. He says, "If the Southern members are present when the roll is called by States they will take part in the organization of the House, and by voting against the oath bring to the front to the members when they are sworn.

Governor Perry also recommends that giving some very pertinent advice to the negroes of that State. He tells them that they are free but they should become industrious men and ladies, and advises them as a matter of courtesy to continue to call their former masters "master and mistress." The Florida Convention met October 26.

THE DEBT.

According to the official statement of the public indebtedness on the 31st of October there has been a further decline of $3,000,000 in the national liabilities during the month of September. The cash balance remaining to the credit of the Treasury on the same date amounted to $116,000,000 in the currency of gold. There has been a reduction in the currency of nearly forty-five millions of non-bearing during the months of September and October.

THE ANDERSONVILLE CEMETERY.

The New York Times of November 4 publishes a full list of the names of the 12,000 men who died in the prison at Andersonville. It appears that of the whole number buried at Andersonville about one-fourth were of New York soldiers.

LOYAL SOUTHERN GOVERNORS.

Virginia has given to these loyal gentlemen, whose names are as follows: Thomas, Terrill, Cooke, Reno, Pendleton, Letcher, Smith, Johnson, Dupree, Jackson, Pickens, Graham.

Kentucky, "My Maryland," has given us ten generals, namely—Orel, Cooper, Buckner, Grimey, Preach, Kenley, Breckinridge, Hardin, Lyon.

Delaware has given us three generals, namely—Lockwood, Thomas, Anderson.

Kentucky—the birth-place of President Lincoln—the nurtured and the adopted State, stands in the most unenviable relief in the number and efficiency of the rebellion virtues she has sent into the field for the defense of the Union. She has given us twenty-eight generals, whose names are Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Dumont, Ewing, Garrard, Helm, Hartzer, Quigley, Stahl, Shelby, Tompkins, McClernand, McMillan, Clay, Clay Smith, Morris, Prentice, Pope, Burbridge, Fry, Shackelford, Germain, Johnson, Jackson, Wood, Ward, and two Bolivars.

Tennessee has given us twenty-six generals, namely—Trousdale, Campbell, Abercrombie, Spears.

Missouri, the Border State that gives us five generals, namely—Hunter, Orme, Pleasanton, Brannan, Getty.

Arkansas has given us three generals, namely—Two Bowers and one Crittenden.

North Carolina has given us two generals—Meredith and Johnson.

South Carolina has given us two generals—Barbuse and Pleasant.

Missouri has given us Reno; Louisiana, Weet, and Georgia, Bledsoe.

Here we have a list of seventy-three Southern generals of land forces, many of whom have already, with loyal valor and blood, intermingled with the valor and blood of their compatriots from other sections of the country, added strength and indissolubility to the Union.

If we take the list of naval officers that the South has spared at least which will be famous in history so long as the American flag floats, we have a record of fifty-one seamen: Farragut, of Tennessee; Porter, of Louisiana; Goldsborough, of the District of Columbia, and Winslow, of North Carolina—that brave and dauntless Old Coon who captured the pirate Alabama.

NEWS ITEMS.

In the return match, played November 8, at Brooklyn, between the Atlantic and Excelsior Clubs, the Atlantics made in one action 96 runs to the Excelsior's 84 in the score.

Brigadier-General Barnum has received a brevet appointment as Major-General, as a reward for distinguished and brilliant services.

The Treasury of property seized and occupied since the 1st of June, 1865, by order of Treasury Johnson, been very guarded in New Orleans. The property, at 11, there occupied by General Banks, that of Mrs. Slocomb, occupied by General Sheridan, and that of Mrs. Fenner, Jefferson Davis, and other prominent citizens, has all been restored.

Brevet Brigadier-General Lieutenant-Colonel Lee, of the 2d United States Artillery, Howard's Battery, has been brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel for gallant conduct in the war.

Large numbers of Germans, Swedes, and Danes are pouring into Virginia. But the supply is not equal to the demand. The price fixed for their services as farm hands is, however, $150 a year, with board and lodging. This is between twenty and fifty years old, and for women $100.

The New Orleans Times, the Republican organ, had on the 3200 majority, beating Perez, who was the late mayor.

The 70th volume has been issued of Harper's Magazine. Cheese selling over $200. Eight of the ten counties in the Territory elect Republican members to the Legislature.

It is said that $1,020,000,000 have been paid to the army alone since the commencement of the war.

The Treasury is receiving on the coin of Governments through the port of New York, in October, amounted to $1,064,000 in gold, and $3,037,000 in currency, or $4,101 less. Thus far in the current week it has averaged $424,167 a day, or equal to the monthly payment of $7,500,000.

The Rochester Union says there are three authentic coal mines, two of which have already taken fire, which yield a superior quality of coal.

A dispatch with official notice given by Mr. Seward heretofore, a large quantity of claims against foreign Governments, which, for reasons by private, have been filed in the State Department.

The Brooklyn city government has passed an order, authorizing the Cobblestone Water Board to build a reservoir on Prospect Hill, with capacity of 50,000,000 gallons.

In Brighton and Newton, to cost $500,000, and to purchase lands for the Cochituate Water Board, to cost more than $1,000,000, and authorizing the Treasurer to borrow the above amounts.

The Democratic Party Wade Hampton, Brown, Butler, Martin, and Bruinan are members of the South Carolina State.

At eleven o'clock on the morning of November 8 a hot was discovered in the roof of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, 23, 25, Greenwich Street, and placed on the sidewalk exploded, and injured twenty-four persons, either by pieces thrown around it, broke windows and shook the buildings in the vicinity. It was not known who was the first long, but was the property of a German named Theodore Lorey, who resided in Jersey City. He had taken the can to sell to the hotel with his baggage. Smoke issued from the box before it was delivered to the cook. The cook, supposing no cream. The German owner of the box was severely injured. He had at least twenty pounds of it were, though he supposed they were chemical oils. The cook, whose name is William Lee, of Yorkville, he said, put the box into his charge, setting him to sell the oils it contained. No doubt occurred in consequence of the explosion.

FOREIGN NEWS.

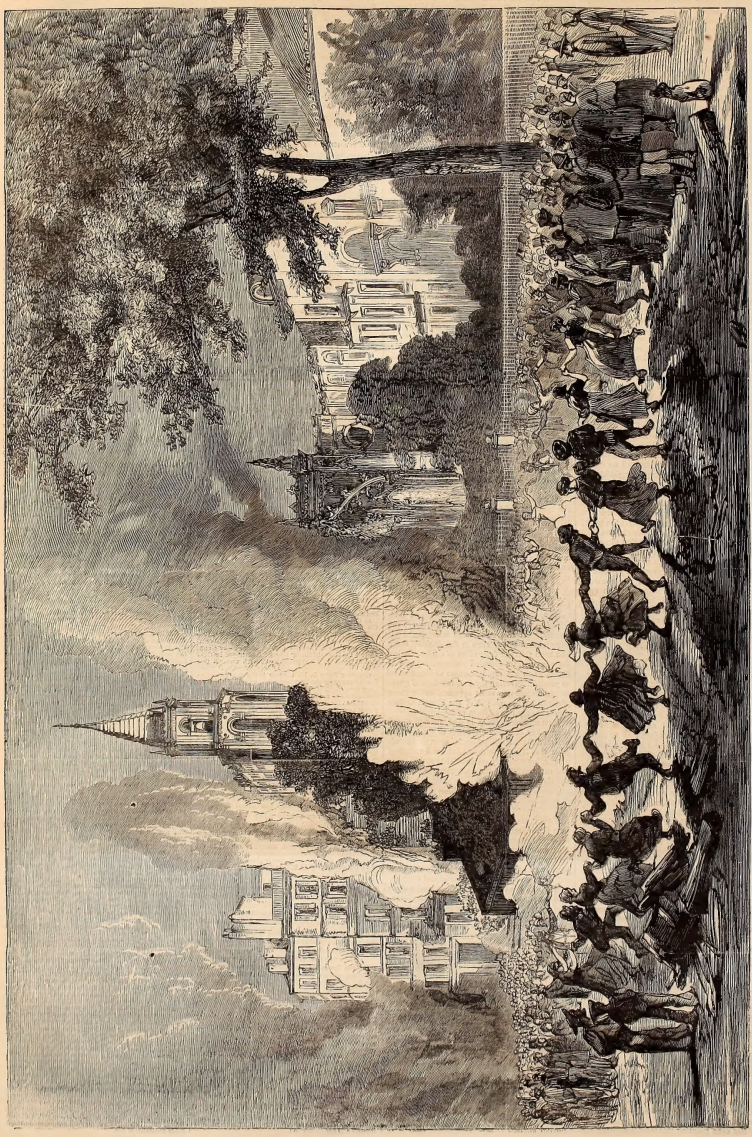
GREAT preparations were made in England for Lord Palmerston's funeral. He was to be buried in Westminster Abbey, near Lord Fox. The Government took the lead the imposing cortege. The pall-bearers were to be ten Cabinet Ministers, Lord Derby, Prime Minister. In the Abbey, and business generally suspended on the occasion, and the Government of Parliament assembled to attend the Peerage in her own right.

The Emperor of Brazil has removed all restrictions on American vessels in English ports.

It is understood that the naval commanders in the Pacific have received orders from their Government to protect the persons and property of foreigners.

The Brazilians and their allies continue to be successful in the war against Paraguay. Our latest intelligence is to September 29. The Paraguayans had suffered another defeat in the vicinity of Uruguayana, in which five thousand prisoners, who were immediately disposed of by being drafted into the Brazilian army. The allies were in great rejoicing at Buenos Ayres. At this rate the Paraguayans will not be numerous long.

Prussia has taken the part of Kini under her juridiction. The Prussian Minister has been instructed to remain in the port.



The British Government seems to have caught all the Irish Fenian it cares for. The Archbishop of Dublin thinks the insurrection is entirely at an end. Napoleon, He says also, that when Irish patriots saw Garibaldi, a leader of the same religion as themselves, fighting for Italian with acclamations and petted by bishops and the highest ecclesiastics, they would be bold to attempt the same of getting up a revolution in Ireland.

Cheyney has been appointed Consul of France for a Saxony Congress. The Porte has appointed a Commission to investigate the affairs of Candia, and to endeavor to put the causes of the recent outbreak, and to indemnify upon the Christian inhabitants for their losses. The Cretan commissioners will include the Italian consul to the Porte.

The Pope has addressed to the origin and progress of the troubles in Candia. He says that the Greek clergy is around Morato Bey, which is the part of the island against the Turks. He is the District of Candia, and these hundred men, armed with swords, left Dimitres and separated in small bands. They then held a meeting in the Baptist Chapel. The ringleaders wrote to Spyridi Spin and Bish Dimitri, who were arrested on the 11th. The mob, now numbering four or five hundred, rushed on the Police Station in Dey Street, seized the guns, swords, and powder, and triumphantly hurried on to the Turk-house. Mustapha Pasha escaped by means of "Hot Act," which he read amidst a storm of stones and bricks. The subsequent proceedings of the mob will be found recorded every account of the rioters were read or sounded.

A fight between the Turks and the Candiote insurgents, in which the latter were worsted, and narrowly escaped with their lives. The Turks were not so fortunate as to that. The insurgents now gave full vent to their fury. They killed two of the magistrates and many other persons. The tongue of a clergyman was cut out. The Church-house was burned. More troops were sent for, and those, together with the inhabitants, succeeded in making headway against the mob. Forty of the insurgents have been hanged.

It is proclamation dated the 8d of October, at the city of Candia, the Governor-General authorized and ordered the execution of every prisoner thereafter taken by his forces, any Mussulman who should be in the vicinity of the rebels, the commander of the troops who capture him, and to be shot within twenty-four hours; and this whether he be made resistance or not.

CHOLERA AT MARSEILLES—FIRES LIGHTED IN THE SQUARE OF THE OLD PALACE OF JUSTICE TO DESTROY THE PESTILENCE.

THE LATE HENRY JOHN TEMPLE, VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, K.G., G.C.B.

LORD PALMERSTON.

On the 18th of October Lord PALMERSTON, the most popular Premier and the most experienced statesman of England, died of an inflammatory attack on the bladder, brought on by a severe cold. Though the event ought not to have been unexpected, yet the English people have felt no shock so sudden since the death of the DUKE OF WELLINGTON. PALMERSTON was to Englishmen a sort of Palladium—so long as he was present no serious misfortune could befall the state.

HENRY JOHN TEMPLE, Viscount PALMERSTON, of Palmerston, County Dublin, and BARON TEMPLE, was born October 20, 1784, at Broadlands, Hampshire, England. His early education commenced at HARROW. From Harrow he went to the University of Edinburgh, and thence to Cambridge. At school and college he was thought rather dull. When he was only seventeen years old his father died, leaving the son heir to his estate and title. The young lord was easy in his manners, arrogant to his equals, and condescending to his inferiors, and, though not dissipated, was a lover of gayety and a scrupulous devotee of Beauty and Fashion.

The fearless audacity of Lord PALMERSTON was shown in his first advent into public life. At the early age of twenty-two he ventured to contest the seat of Cambridge in Parliament with Lord HENRY PETTY, then Chancellor of Exchequer. Defeated in this contest he took a seat for Bletchingly—a pocket borough. Afterward he represented Newport, in the Isle of Wight. In 1811 he first represented Cambridge. From 1835 until the time of his death he sat for Tiverton.

When Lord PALMERSTON entered Parliament Lord GRENVILLE was Premier at the head of a Whig Administration, with FOX in the Foreign office and ERSKINE Chancellor. But the opposition of the KING to the Catholic Disabilities Removing bill upset this government, and with the accession to power of Lord PORTLAND Lord PALMERSTON came into office as Junior Lord of Admiralty. One of his first speeches in Parliament, if not his very first, in 1807, exhibited some degree of that talent in respect to Foreign Affairs, for which he became afterward so distinguished. PONSONBY had assailed the ministers on account of their diplomatic reticence in regard to the expedition sent to seize the Danish fleet at Copenhagen. PALMERSTON defended the ministry, justifying its silence and the expedition at the same time—the latter on the ground that the enormous power of France enabled her to coerce a weaker state to become an enemy to England. In 1809, upon the accession of Mr. PERCIVAL as Premier, PALMERSTON was appointed Secretary-at-War, which office he held until 1828, under five successive administrations. We have an indication of his modesty in the fact that, having offered to him his choice of the Chancellorship, the position of Secretary-at-War, or a seat at the Treasury Board, he consulted with a statesman much his inferior (Mr. PLUMER WARD) as to which of these positions he could most fitly and prudently fill. It was during his tenure of the war office that Lord PALMERSTON was shot at and wounded by a half-pay lieutenant named DAVIES.

At this period Lord PALMERSTON had little to say in the House of Commons except on matters relating to the army. When he did speak on other matters he sided with the Whigs rather than with the Tories. He followed closely in CANNING's lead. There was a great difference between the two statesmen. CANNING acted from principle, and would have supported his reform measures against any opposition. PALMERSTON acted upon practical grounds, and waited for conditions favorable to reform. He advocated Catholic emancipation with great force and clearness. But in the matter of Parliamentary reform he was backward; though always willing to yield as much as popular opinion demanded he was always sure to add not one little more.

In 1830 PALMERSTON succeeded CANNING as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The Tory Administration of WELLINGTON had retired and the Whigs had come into power with Lord GREY at their head. Lord PALMERSTON now commenced a long career of distinction, as Foreign Minister of England, in which he sometimes met with opposition but was always triumphant. The London Times thus speaks of him at this period:

"He stepped into the post so long identified the right man in the right place, and during that long term of power with it he (he says Bill goes) as the Whigs, he stood forth as the most brilliant representative of that school, the man of men, the minister of ministers, the type and the glory of England. No English minister ever attained to more world-wide fame than he acquired in those and subsequent years of office. All over the globe his name was lavished as the symbol of English generosity and English omnipotence. The Bedouin of the Desert recognized in PALMERSTON Pechaw a being whom Allah had endowed with more than mortal power. The negro on the Guinea coast knew that PALMERSTON was his friend, and watched day and night against slavery. Brown in the backwoods of America, or in the gardens of Siam, felt that he had an intelli-

the safeguard if he had PALMERSTON'S passport to show. PALMERSTON, it was imagined, would move the whole force of the British empire in order that this Brown-Rousseau—might not be defrauded of his Werther-sacs amidst the ice of Siberia, or of his pale ale on the Mountains of the Moon. He could do any thing, and he would do every thing. Nothing great was accomplished without being attributed to him. He was supposed to have his pockets full of constitutions, to have a vein in half the Cabinets of Europe, to have manœuvred past reckoning under his hands. He humbled the Sultan, he conquered Abdel-Kader, he abolished the Negro, he conquered Cochin-China of the Sun, he went to the world's end, and there had been walled round for centuries by impregnable forts; he defied the Czar, and he humiliated the French fleet into when he received the assurances of the brilliant Turkish thereby.

LORD PALMERSTON, though opposed to the politics of independence in Europe which the people must favor, had the most complete faith in the moral power of public opinion. It was as the exponent of the popular opinion of England that PALMERSTON came to great power. This power was exercised in the affairs of the Continent in the interest of Liberalism.

The Republic of Belgium was established mainly through his influence. He took the part of the Greeks against the Turks, and more recently of the Italians against the Pope. He even went to the extent of an armed interference to prevent the dismemberment of the Turkish Empire by the Egyptian Pashaw. It was probably the brilliant success of this interference which alone made it palatable to the English people. Lord PALMERSTON was made most strenuous efforts to suppress the slave-trade.

In 1841 LORD ABERDEEN succeeded PALMERSTON at the Foreign Office. Five years later the latter resumed the duties of Foreign Minister. These duties now became very difficult. PEEL's policy had to encounter great opposition both at home and abroad. His enemies succeeded in carrying a vote of censure in the House of Lords, but failed in the Lower House. Lord PALMERSTON's speech in defense of his administration was considered to admit what could not be delivered. Even Sir ROBERT PEEL, who was opposed to him, was forced to declare "We are proud of him."

Lord PALMERSTON gave offense to the Queen in 1851 by his hasty recognition of NAPOLEON's coup d'état, and resigned. But in a few months he succeeded in upsetting the RUSSELL Administration. Lord DERBY then became Premier, and after him Lord ABERDEEN. Lord PALMERSTON succeeded in 1855. Under the auspices of the latter peace was made with Russia in the following year. In 1858 Lord DERBY again became Premier, but the next year he gave way to PALMERSTON, who was at the head of the Government until his death.

Lord PALMERSTON was fifty-nine years in the House of Commons, and nearly four-fifths of that time he held office. His career is complete beyond that of any of his contemporaries. This was due to his practical experience, to his rare tact in all threatening crises, to his regard for public opinion, and, above all, to his thoroughly English nature.

Lord PALMERSTON married, in 1839, the sister of Lord MELBOURNE, and the widow of the fifth Earl COWPER. It was a happy union, and it is said to be due to his wife that a social influence was reconciliation was brought about between himself and Lord RUSSELL, thus preparing the way for the powerful combination of the late Administration.

RAE GIFFORD.

CHRISTOPHER GIFFORD had married the druggist's daughter at Clodds, to show that he did not need to look out for rank or wealth in a wife, and that he did not care for being cut by the community; in fact, he professed it, not to be vain of winning the countenance of his one equal—his sister, Miss Gifford. The latter forgave her brother's low marriage, for she could not help it, because a Gifford could not do wrong; and continued to stay at home because nobody could arrange its housekeep and order the domestic economy perfectly, as it had always been ordered, but a born Gifford or somebody very near a Gifford.

Mrs. and Miss Gifford, the sisters-in-law, were sitting at work together among the grim institutions of the parlor, when the cross country cousin of the drawing-room. It was not five o'clock in the afternoon, but the table was set for tea—not the women's five-o'clock tea, as we anticipate it, but the five-o'clock dinner of the present generation—but the family ten of the past.

The two women were both young—about of an age—three and five-and-twenty, and ten and twelve years Christopher Gifford's junior. They were dressed alike—in gray silk gowns, with little cuffs and cuffs; they were working at the same piece of work—for a couple of aprons for one of Clodds' but nothing could make them like sisters. All that was reached was the look of two entirely opposed soldiers in an enemy's country. Eunice was tall, she was a handsome woman, with the clear-cut face of the Giffords. She did not look older than she was, for self it would have been evident that her neck, shoulders, and bust were fine. She was bare-browed, with no alive complexion that clears to a glowing brown or gets thick and sodden, according to health of body and mind. Her eyes were not often seen, they were bent on her work as at present; at church "the only place where she appeared in public, she never lifted them from her prayer-book.

"Rae, what are you doing with that square?" cried Eunice, suddenly: "don't you see the sides are not even? It is out of shape; it will never fit."

"I did not notice: I shall pull it down again?" asked Mrs. Gifford, raising those frozen eyes, helplessly.

"Of course; you don't grudge the additional work, Rae: it would make an ugly blunder in the quilt," explained Eunice, condescendingly.

"Oh no: I had as lief pull down as pull up," answered Mrs. Gifford, stolidly, beginning to tug at the cotton.

"Not 'as lief,' as soon: the one is as easily said as the other. And take care, Rae, or you will have the whole square down: you know you can stop at the row which is amiss."

Eunice did her teaching gently, as a wise woman guides a child; and, taking the work from her sister-in-law's hand, put it right for her. When she was returned, Mrs. Gifford said, "Thank you," let the cotton drop, and began to pick it out, and then began again to pick, pick at the loops, as if she had been set on a trend-mill for crocheting cotton, and, after a pause which was brief, but long, she gone on again.

She is little short of an idiot in practical matters, thought Eunice, as her theories well enough," meditated Eunice. "What would poor Christopher have done without me? What would become of his child, if it be spared? I wonder what he saw in her, a common, ignorant girl, very rustic, if not altogether vulgar—but even a beauty! a flower and not slovenly figure, which repulse me. The lad Penn, her father's apprentice, gave her up, after keeping company with her, when he went away and got on in the world. Yet they called her 'talking,' at Clodds; I call her 'quiet.' . . . a wonderful fellow, my girl was Joe Corbet's daughter: took strangers, took Penn, who was a young genius, took Mr. Gifford. All the people that Mr. Gifford took up the Corbets have been accustomed to please themselves. I suppose she has fallen off; but it is a mercy I am here to care for the interests of the prosperity of the family."

Eunice took off the thread of her reflection at this point, in the entrance of her brother, and the punctual appearance of the urn for tea.

Christopher Gifford was a man with marked features, fine teeth standing apart, and a sprushed-up top of light hair, where grey could not be seen. He wore clothes of the fashion of the day, and of the span, woven, cut, and stitched at Clouds; and, in consequence, rather coarse in their texture, dingy in their shades, purple and faded, and ill-made in their form. But he was not ungentlemanlike. There was a good deal of the soldier about him, and he loved study in itself, though he loved his own attainments better.

"Rae, you reminded the mistress of the house," "we are waiting for you." And Rae shuffled to the tray.

Mr. Gifford had good spirits and was talkative. His own family, with one member to sympathize with him and reply to him, was quite enough of an audience for his mood.

"I have been looking over the right-hand bookcase, Eunice, and observed a few books that call for concern. . . . I think the looks had better be shifted. I have all the Roman men there; they are valuable editions; I should not like them to suffer, and it is damp at that window. Indeed, I began to do a little: but I opened Virgil where my old friend was having Georgics, and I—I—well, Rae—as Mrs. Gifford's company."

"I am aware Virgil is a favorite of yours, Christopher, since you used to translate him for me. You have not done it this long while."

"Well the winter months come," answered Mr. Gifford, much gratified: flattered both in his love of consequence and his love of study. "I hope we will not be shut up long, Rae?" he added, "Have another trout Do? Try the brown bread?"

"No, thank you: and I never sleep on a chair."

"That is scarcely complimentary," retorted her husband, with a look of fondness. "I have remember something about Æneas. Come, tell us, Rae." Awaiting the information.

"He fondled his wife," Rae said, briefly.

"So he did. Any thing more?"

"He was blind."

"But only when he wooed queen Dido."

"I found the silene quinquevulnera to-day, Christopher," announced his sister, shortly afterwards.

"Ah! did you?" he continued, with interest, putting down his cup; "a sufficient specimen?"

"I think so: it was in a very good condition, in spite of the authorities, that it is a distinct genera. Not only are the petals marked, but the styles differ. I take the liberty to say a good deal, and study for her, and she thinks her father used to gather it."

"Indeed. I wish you could be particular Rae," he suggested. "Precision details is absolutely necessary in botany, and in every thing else, if you would have a well-ordered mind," he counseled her.

Unless, in the same patronage, there was no fault to be found with Christopher Gifford's treatment of his wife. He was considerate, and in her not that he over-estimated the social sacrifices he had made for her, or that they came to gall him. He after being "struck" with Rae's beauty, and deferring to the saying of which Eunice had been thinking, he had reckoned on moulding Rachael to his tastes and habits.

Christopher Gifford did not take his mistake too deeply to heart. He was accustomed to disappointment in the seclusion of his life few witnessed his failure. Besides, Christopher Gifford was too much of a man and a gentleman to visit upon Rae his pet by harshness and unkindness to Rae; and the hope of an heir filled him with pride and gentleness.

CHRISTOPHER GIFFORD had returned to his library, and Eunice was in her own room, when she heard the postman's knock, and, with no being followed by any business letters to her or to Christopher, whose sanctum was next door to hers. Servants were always gathering round when she wished they were always profitable letters, Eunice said to herself, and went on with an inventory she was engaged on, until the blue of the afternoon sky had deepened to its evening purple, and the last cow had left the fields for the yard. Then she went with her light, swift, assured step, down stairs, and entered the drawing-room; but stopped after the first step across the threshold.

Mrs. Gifford was there, seated in the window-seat, catching the last beams of the falling light, with an open letter on her knee. It was not the letter which struck Eunice—for sister-in-law, at intervals few and far between, got letters from Australia—but something she could not on the instant fix upon, strange in the aspect of the orderly room. The next moment she saw a chair and footstool were pushed out of their places, and the piece of the quilt Rae had been poring over was thrown down on the floor, with the cotton warped backward and forward, as if somebody had passed blindly across the room, dragging it from chair to chair.

"Rae, you have not been at work at all: the cotton got into a tangle: you should take better care of it. The square will not look nice when it is so often pulled out, or when the thread is broken and joined: and it is far from nice to work it when it is soiled." Eunice advanced, after stooping to pick up the work, then she stood still again, and spoke abruptly, "Rae, what is it? What have you heard? Is any thing wrong?"

Rae sat up, grasping the letter in her hands; her face was a ruddy brown: her eyes—those cool, blueeyed eyes—were red and glistening, and looking straight into Eunice's face, piercing it, burning into it, with their intelligence.

"Matt Penn has written, Miss Gifford," gasped Rae, going back with a jerk of the body and a reversal eye, to the letter. "He says he is coming to give me up. He did not pass the first examination, and he could not stand to write that he had not. His vessel till he had gained. He was always a proud lad."

Eunice remained standing, and looking down on her brother's wife with a shade of a blush reflected on her ivory white of her cheek. Her mouth, drawn in, and with thin-lipped, closed hard, and narrowed to a faint red line.

"Why do you tell me this, Rae? What do I know of Matthew Penn, except that he ever was once or twice in your father's shop? He may have written to you not knowing the event that has taken place." Eunice spoke the last in a low voice, with out opposition. Sure enough it was addressed, "Rachael Corbet, Joseph Corbet, Druggist, Clodds."

But what is it to you?" Eunice spoke in a tone of low, cold, wondering remonstrance. She touched Rae on the arm, and the letter fell on the floor, and fell on the fevered, throbbing flesh chill, unsuppressionable, unyielding as iron.

Rae's light-brown eyes waxed wider, and at the same time a film descended over them, and a mounting quiver ran through her body.

"I had forgot—I had not a mind that I could have just risen and gone to him," she said, in a high-strained key. "I thought it were all as one as then I wouldn't—whether I opened further and another, and took Mr. Gifford at his word, or went away home and left him to the reach of Matt's repentance; but oh! I see it is a fell difference."

"I am shocked," Eunice interposed, sternly. "But my poor girl, I will not answer you such foolish words to my brother. I could not repeat them to him, and yet you could say 'them to me!' You must compose yourself, Rae—as Mrs. Gifford began to rock herself with a feeble, crushed, wailing sound—"you must not give way to these expressions. You will hurt yourself. Think of your state: think of your child."

Rae screamed at that word a short sharp cry, as if Eunice had stabbed her, and fell back, trembling in every limb, with a horrified, scared expression, flashing out the pain to the face, and replacing it by other and deeper suffering.

Eunice was not easily frightened, but she was frightened now, and proceeded to rebuke and protest any more.

After a while, when Mrs. Gifford remained still, except for a feeble effort to draw up the apron she was in the habit of muffling her hands with to cover her face, Eunice asked whether she would go to her room; and taking no refusal as a consent, put her arm round Rae—a dead weight on Eunice's arm—and assisted her to rise and proceed to the dark, frigid room, with the heavy stuff bed; helped her to bed, and sat beside her there till she saw the grey-cold light, before their old deputy, Sarah, a secret they had petrified at their source—close like bark, and not to be penetrated.

The next day, to Eunice's relief, Mrs. Gifford wandered into the drawing-room as usual, and began mechanically to pick the wool eyes, and her half-apart lips, and a little shiver now and then, as if she felt colder than formerly—like another Sisyphus, the old lot seemed drawn up her mountain of white crochet cotton-work.

MR. GIFFORD's place was always staid and dull; but early this October morning there was a stillness about it that was not of life. Death had crossed the threshold of the house, and of front window and the trees bustle, and fixed his bony clutch where it is most felt, on the head of the house: he who has his right and left hand, and who has drawn all together the rest. Christopher Gifford had rusted in his confirmed ways, and he had never indulged in his place by a stroke, as such men are apt to die, leaving some to mourn and more to miss him.

One person he had singled before his visitation. The new-made widow, worn with fatigue and awed with the blow which had fallen, was standing at one of the closed windows with her three-year-old child in her arms. A leaping arose in the widow's heart—something Eunice had called it by with all its impulses long ice-bound—to go out with her child and breathe the cold, keen air. Rae got her ordinary dress, put on her little girl's pink hood, and walked abroad—with small remark from the servants, who had come to regard her as an out-of-the-way thing, and to consult their notice—into the watery sunshine, and along the road where swine of open like were hanging from the dank, crimsontipped leaves, and a robin was singing its solitary song. Rae had no thought of irreverence to the dead. She was an unconventional being, to whom manners could not easily be taught. And both she and the child wanted air and light, space and freedom, after close confinement; for Rae had watched during the last fortnight, with little intermission, and had sat up all night, by her husband's pillow. She was mourning, too, in a stunned, self-reproachful, simple way for her husband, from whom she had never known any thing but friendly dictation, and affectation for their will.

"Miss Gifford has sent me for you and the child," said a servant, advancing, and recalling Mrs. Gifford to the house.

Rae returned immediately, and met Eunice at the drawing-room door. The same neat, exemplary Eunice throughout all her sisterly duties, indeed, ending in the baffling mystery of death, with only her eyelids red for the brother she had clung to, her sole kindred, save the child in her arms.

"You must stay within doors, Rae, for the present," said Eunice, with the tone of mild decision she had always used to her sister-in-law. "If baby frets, Barbara or Hannah can carry her out."

She obeyed so implicitly as to stand when she was a wife, and she had even a more frightened look in her face now; while Eunice commanded herself to see her late brother's lawyer, and to give thought to her own and the widow's mourning.

Mr. Gifford's will was to the general mind a wild and reasonable one. He left his estate, burdened with an inconsiderable annuity to his widow in life-rent, to his sister, to pass on her death to the child. And Miss Gifford was a very superior woman, getting music—it in years and able for the business intrusted to her. Mrs. Gifford was nobody and nothing. The public were apprised of Mr. Gifford's decease, quiet as he had kept it. The somewhat talking girl, who had been deemed bright and original as she played about the streets of Clouds, and who walked in the twilight beside Mr. Gifford, with the genius who was raising himself and was going to raise her, had proved, in the sudden lift in life which had appeared to realize her ambitions, a poor-spirited, inept, incapable woman. Mr. Gifford had done well by his sister to leave it under the care of his sister. Miss Gifford was worthy of trust willingly; she had no positive dislike to her sister-in-law; but at first there had been a somewhat repugnance never broadly displayed, existing in the two toward each other.

It never entered Eunice's head that no account would be required of her; that her pupils would slip their bonds, steal a march on her, and leave her with her labors, her duties, and her sorrow believe it, when a week after the funeral, without accounting any longer to her instructress, Rae Gifford, in the misty morning, before even the farm people were about, walking and carrying Delia, and placed a letter on the lobby table for Miss Gifford.

The letter said:

"I know you will be angry with me, Miss Gifford; but you will not be angry when I thank you for all you have done for me, and more you have intended to do, as I would thank you for my child, if I had one to thank you for, instead of belonging to you and Mr. Gifford but Delia. I know she will be better with you than with me, and that you will be much more kind to her; but I must have my child to myself, though I am not fit to have her, and I am going to take her. I am not ungrateful to you, Miss Gifford, nor any thing to disgrace Delia; I will try to grow a fitter mother for her, and I am tempted to work for her. I am quite able to work for my child. I want you to know that it was chiefly for Delia's sake that I married Matt, and pray your pardon and pray God to bless you, Eunice Gifford.

RACHAEL CORBET."

Surprise was Eunice's first sentiment. Yet it was like Rae—that singularly unpractical woman, who had only known how well off because she had been good hands—the whole eccentric proceeding was like Rae, and so was the absurd supposition that she could support in the future inheritance for Christopher Gifford's daughter. Eunice did not so much as think the supposition worth a lapse of time, with the utmost pains, be recovered. Eunice had to suffer the same "days' seeding," as Rae had done months passed, that she had lost sight of her brother's child and representative, little Delia, and regard, with a sympathy which had no relief, and wormwood with her own diet, that while she dwelt in peace and respectability those poor creatures, in their weakness, might be facing badly.

IV.

"DR. PENN, Miss Gifford; Mrs. Gifford, Dr. Penn."

The man and the woman introduced, on one of the rare occasions when Eunice went into company instead of out with a brother with whom the excuses of controversy between them, and there was ground for sympathy. Eunice Gifford had fallow-feeling with this man. Too proud to be ashamed after eight years' work as a professional man—he returned to Clouds, to Christopher Gifford's knowledge, so much more simply held than Christopher's had been: his manly power, a certain grandeur in his every movement, the passion of a woman to be pleased with his person, that had outdrawn the traits of the plain, precocious lad, who had grated at a gentle and refined home, whose classes, and grocers, except during the charmed moments he had in the old time lingered with Rachael Corbet. He was a man now, with the seal of nature's nobility stamped on his irregular features, and the expression of his face gave ease as a druggist's lad, could have had an infatuation for Rae Gifford.

Dr. Penn, on his part, could not help valuing Eunice Gifford's clear head, her application and perseverance, the species of single-heartedness and gallantry which had made and kept her a student of solid old books, a naturalist who knew bugle from graminivorous, the species of single-heartedness and gallantry which had made and kept her a student of solid old books, a naturalist who knew bugle from ground ivy, and a type which improves with a certain number of years. She had passed the exaggerated glow of great brightness. Her well-defined features were rather mellowed than become sharp ish. A handsome woman of a certain age, bearing the indexes of a sensible, equable, occupied, and healthy temperament. Perhaps Dr. Penn, in his empiricism, held also the Chaucerian traditional respect for Miss Gifford.

A week after their introduction Dr. Penn met Miss Gifford on one of the quiet field roads, showed her the yellow pumpkins, and a relative of the purple empress-vine in those parts, and offered to send or bring their fellows to her.

Within a few months Dr. Penn visited her simply as an intimate friend, and the country neighbors fixed that Eunice Gifford would at last change her state, and pronounced the match a fair one.

Dr. Penn was sitting in his office at Clouds; and so courageous or careless was he in facing his acute dents that he had lengthy the very shabby, tumble-down house which he had inhabited, with the rest of the family, as an apprentice to Joe Corbet the druggist. The doctor was reading by the height of the forenoon. A ring came to the doorbell, and the Doctor's servant interrupted him with the vague communication, "A person wants to see you, Sir."

"What sort of person?" inquired Dr. Penn, mindful of a brother practitioner's rights.

"A better sort of a person, Sir; a woman; and she has a girl, and she said, 'Is Dr. Penn at home? Can I see Dr. Penn?'"

"There is no mistake—there, show her in."

The Doctor had only to wait a moment, when—under the broad light of the April noon sun, casting golden motes on her black dress and striking her hair under the bonnet and bringing out its auburn wood—Rue Gifford walked into her old home. Mather Penn's home, holding her little child.

"Rue! Mrs. Gifford!" stammered the Doctor, starting up and bowing his visitor to a seat. He was much excited, and his heart sank and beat tumultuously. Rue, whom he had known as a girl, touched by a straw and transparent as cryst l, was prepared and dressed in competition.

"I have come to you, Sir, to ask your help for my girl. I was sure you would help her if you could."

Then Dr. Penn recognised the old Rue, in the unbounded faith in his abilities, the simple devotion to the object of her affection, which could bring her back to Clouds, to him and Eunice, which could cast aside stubbornness, and pride, and to destroy the one independent plot and act of her life to rescue Delia from real or imagined evil.

He looked at Rue. Time had dealt harder with her than with him and Eunice Gifford, and her widow's dress and her look still showed the ravage on her, but the face remained a unique face, with the changing light of the hair, the steel-blue eyes, which could grow clear, warm and tender, the lips of the mouth which he kept seeing tender and mobile as a child's now that it was still. Then he had to thrust from his comfort of telling himself that he and the little town of Clouds and pompous Christopher Gifford had always been right. he had not seen such another face over land and sea.

"Thank you, Mrs. Gifford," he was saying, formally; "I am in my power to help you, and to help her; I am sorry she should need my help." And with that he looked at Delia.

The rosy, bold, frank child of two or three had grown into a pale, shy little girl of nine, with her head dangling very much on one side, with the same saucy that remained between her and her meek shepherdess's name.

Rue kept actively to detail the child's symptoms of weakness as if she had lost all consciousness in her care for her darling.

But Mather Penn was a humane man and somewhat of an enthusiast in his beneficent calling. He bent his mind to see a little pallid creature, not laying with features of Christopher Gifford's, which it stung him yet to acknowledge—to understand the case, treating it strictly as a case of suffering and disease. When he had mastered the account and formed his judgment he drew Rue a little aside and spoke gravely and abstractedly, like a simple physician.

"I think I can help her—I hope so; but it can only be after a long trial. It is my duty to tell you she is suffering from what is always a lingering complaint, but not incurable, not necessarily incurable. If I am to do her any good I must attend her for weeks and months." Here the Doctor broke down, and the man spoke out short, sharp, and decisive. "Rue, she must go to her mother's home, to her own house, and to her aunt, Miss Gifford. It is impossible that she can remain here under other circumstances."

"I will go there if Eunice will take me in to wait upon my girl. I know she will receive Delia, and I think she will let me in to see after the child," said Rue, resolutely.

Dr. Penn gave Rue no assurance, but he turned to his desk and wrote—

"DEAR MISS GIFFORD,—Mrs. Gifford and her child have just come to me. The child is in a bad state of health and the mother has had a fancy, a superstition, that I could cure her. You had better come and think them away immediately, in case of any change of mind on Mrs. Gifford's part. Yours faithfully, MATHER PENN."

Eunice answered the appeal at once in person, to the great glorification of the Clouds gossips.

"So you have come at last, Rue; let me see my brother's child," was all the reproach Eunice made before she conveyed the two home.

V.

EUNICE, without being unkind, took far less notice of Rue than Delia. However Eunice's mind might have been diverted from its abiding care, she was much taken up about the child, and not only with her health, in which she could not credit there was any thing far wrong—it was nothing worse than a temporary disorder brought about by the mismanagement of the ignorant mother. There were in many other things to be looked to—Delia's mind, manners, habits; every thing to be done over again to fit her for growing up such a girl as Eunice would have her.

But just when the cowslips were nodding in golden tufts in the fields for the little girl to pluck and dry in pedantic play, since she was too old to toss them in cowslip balls; and streams of new milk were flowing for her to bathe in, if need were for the waste; and her aunt Eunice was ready to stoop for her private benefit all her round, well-digested theories of early hours, mingled exercise, and study, Delia was fast bound to the narrow house of her father's grave.

"When may Delia be able to sit up again, Dr. Penn?" This lying on her back does not seem to agree with her. I half think I know her weaker every day." Rue said to the Doctor one day morning when she had followed him to the drawing-room, where he was consulting sadly with Eunice, in order to read his face with eyes straining themselves, yet recoiling in anguish from what they were to read there.

"Yes, this is a great deal weaker," said Dr. Penn, very curtly and gravely. "Should you like me to bring another doctor, Mrs. Gifford?"

"No; why should I?" She set her mouth to repel the suggestion.

"Rue, these are very white, and he put up his hand to his mouth.

"Because I am very sorry—I am afraid—"

"Don't say it, Mather Penn. How can you be so cruel? Oh! spare me, spare me—don't tell me that!" cried Rue, putting out her hands to stop him. "I will not have you be cruel now, because I believed in you after all; and you will kill me also if you tell me that I must give up my child, my little lamb, the only one thing on earth I have to care for. How can you expect me to bear it?" Rue burst readily.

"Rue, these are most improper words. This is most unbecoming conduct to Dr. Penn. Do you not see how you are making him your enemy, when he is your friend?" cried Eunice, more harshly than she had ever spoken to her sister-in-law.

Rue sat up at her aside quickly and caught Mrs. Gifford by the arm. "Rue," he said, piteously, "I would do anything I can with power with you to save you all unnecessary pain; but I cannot tell you more than I have done. These bellows-changing the Queen Bee may offer obvious opportunities for choking. Three dwellings are offered without rents, as food would allow a dangerous scarcity of gas.

Gas and water (when it rains) will be put in every dwelling. No person having means of gain will be permitted to agitate perfect ventilation.

An easy and unexpensive mode of access and egress is by jumping. But rope-ladders and hanging baskets are also provided.

The dwellings will be ready on the first of next April.

Professor Love, in deference to the advice of friends, has had his name changed to Professor Hate.

For further information address a note of inquiry to No. Peter High, No. 1001 Main Avenue, and send it up by a kite.

OLD SAWS NEW SET.

Least broken soonest paid for. (Recommended to the notice of servants of all work addicted to the grave offence of smashing.)

Spitted fish waits on dividend.

It is never too late to repair. (Said to have been originated by some humble fowl.)

Keep your breath to cool your Revalenta Arabica.

The better the day the better the deed.

An ill-looking fellow was asked how he could account for Nature's forming him so ugly. "Nature saw me to design," said he, "when I was two months of age. I considered the handsomest child in the neighborhood, but my mother, having satisfied upon my parents for exercised injury at her hands, one day arranged me quite for another by coming to a friend of hers, whose child was rather plain-looking."

"A THING THE WORLD WOULD NOT WILLINGLY LET DIE!"—A lady whose hair is already pretty-colored.

THE COW-KEEPER'S PARADISE.—The Milky Way.

TWO sons of Erin were standing by a hydraulic press manufactory in Philadelphia, when one asked out to the other: "Jim, I'd like to put ye under and squeeze the water out of ye." "Will you please, mister, say by?" was the answer. "Spare the divil out o' you, sir; there'd be nothing left!"

WOMAN is said to be a mere delusion, but it is sometimes pleasant to beg delusion.

OBJECT TEACHING.

"First class in Philosophy of Common Things; come up, uncle Jacks. John, how many legs has a quadruped?"

"Six legs, Sir."

"How do you make that out?"

"He has five (four) legs in front, and two behind, sir."

"Right. Now, Sam? Where does the sun rise?"

"In the east, Sir."

"When does the sun rise in the east?"

"I suppose the (e) east makes him rise, Sir."

"Very good. Now, Jake, spell brandy with only three letters."

"D (d'ye dem de vil).

"No. Next."

"I (aye).

"Right. Next boy. Why is a rat like the Emperor of France?"

"Because there's a queer tale about 'em."

"No."

"Because the cat has for the son, and the Empress is further off."

"Wrong. Next."

"Because both are fond of a Nap."

"Right. You've all answered very well, and all of you may go to the bull's play."

BOYS IN COURSE.—"How can we all go to the bear?" THE TRAGEDIE.—"Why, you little fools, each of you go to your own hotel."

An awful trouble once asked a lady if the person living in the next house to her was an idiot. "Not even I know of," replied the lady. "Why do you ask, child?" "Because," said the child, "mamma says you are next door to a idiot."

"SIR," said an intelligent, thoughtful boy of mine, "I don't think Solomon was as wise as they say he was." "Why, my dear, what could have put that into your head?" asked the astonished mother. "Because the Bible says he slept with his fathers, and I think if he had been so wise he would have had a bed of his own."

A CONSTABLE KNOT.—An old lady had married a young and rather fast man. On one occasion, shortly after their marriage, the husband was about to set off on a journey. His wife accompanied him to the railway station, and gave him many a kiss. "Darling," she said, "remember that you are married." "Caroline," he rejoined, with alacrity, "I will make a memorandum of it." And he at once tied a knot in his handkerchief.

At a recent meeting of a parish a small-hand and neat exemplary epistle submitted a report in writing of the destitute widows and others who stood in need of assistance from the parish. "As you can perceive, dearest Sir," looked another solemn brother, "that you have embraced all in widows!" But still he looked for bad.

THE Moore said to Feel, on looking at the picture of an Irish orator, "You can see the very quiver of his lip." "Yes," said Peel, "and the arrow coming out of it." Moore was telling this to one of his countrymen, who said, "He meant arrah coming out of it."

BEN JONSON said of a certain lawyer who died: "He has simply gone to stay with his best client."

CLERICAL INDUSTRY.—A clergyman has shown resenting the power of uniting debtor or creditor second letter than has ever been done by even the most intelligent accountant. In his new church he has two distinct pews, one side of the church being for those who have paid per cent, who are his creditors, the other side for those who do not pay pew rent—that, is the reverend gentleman's debtors.

BREAD FOR USE.—"What is the chief use of bread?" asked an examiner at a recent school exhibition. "The chief use of bread," answered the urchin, apparently astonished at the simplicity of the inquiry, "is to spread butter and jam on it."

Poor consolation for us survivors that "the good die first."

For a nation to be largely in debt, is, in the nature of things, such its credit.

Why is a stock gambler like a railroad train?—Because he may be expected to smash up at any moment.

The woman who rushed to a soldier's "arms" has been found to prison for having Government property in her possession.

"There, now," cried a little girl, while rummaging a drawer in a hurry, "grandpa has gone to heaven without his spectacles."

"I CAN'T come now, my tears have no effect on you at all!" Well, drop them, dear."

PRETTY INNOCENT!

LITTLE JESSIE. "Mamma! Why do all the Railroad Tunnels smell so strong of Brandy?"

[The fair Lady thinks her sweet sister was fond of Children, and thinks she never met a Child she disliked more than this one.]

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

IMPORTANT TO THE LOWE-LY MINDED!

HOUSES GONE UP!—NEW ERA IN BALLENAST!!

WE understand that Professor Love, the great ballastic and thunder-bolt, has just the Demand for houses in New York, will arrange a range of balloons for residence.

The space above the city is laid out in certain avenues and streets, numbered as upon the ground. These avenues are named from the holders of the solar system viz: "John Avenue," "Mercury Avenue," etc.—while the names of the streets are taken from the fixed stars. The balloons are hung from the above avenues and streets, forming the parlor story of the city, and making the inhabitants of the ground live in a basement.

Those who wish an elevated situation, and all who have children, or anything else, will prefer lofty balloons, which are all proportionate—and those with love in one pair only. These balloons are hanging the Queen Bee may offer obvious opportunities for choking.

Three dwellings are offered without rents, as food would allow a dangerous scarcity of gas.

Gas and water (when it rains) will be put in every dwelling. No person having means of gain will be permitted to agitate perfect ventilation.

An easy and unexpensive mode of access and egress is by jumping. But rope-ladders and hanging baskets are also provided.

The dwellings will be ready on the first of next April.

Professor Love, in deference to the advice of friends, has had his name changed to Professor Hate.

For further information address a note of inquiry to No. Peter High, No. 1001 Main Avenue, and send it up by a kite.

EXPLOSION OF THE BOILER ON BOARD THE "ST. JOHN," OCTOBER 29, 1865—SCENE IN THE MAIN SALOON.—[SKETCHED BY JOHN P. NEWELL.]

EXPLOSION ON THE "ST. JOHN."

WE give on this page three illustrations relating to the recent distressing catastrophe on board the steamer St. John. This boat is one of the finest river boats in the world, and plies between Albany and New York. On the morning of Sunday the 29th ult., as she had arrived opposite Thirtieth Street on the way to her landing at Canal Street in this city, her boiler burst, and thirty tons of scalding water with an immense volume of steam rushed through the huge fissure in the boiler into the state-room hall, carrying destruction in its track. Almost instantly nine persons were killed. The state-rooms in the immediate vicinity of the boiler were completely destroyed, and their inmates were killed. The boiler on one side being empty the vessel careened over on her other side, and the pool of scalding water followed the motion of the boat toward the opposite state-rooms. At the moment of the accident many fell victims to the destroying current by opening the doors of their state-rooms to discover what was the matter, and were stifled and scalded by the steam.

The scene in the main saloon, as presented by our artist, was heart-rending. Frightened passengers leaped barefoot into the hot water. Poor, struggling creatures lay helpless and bruised, tossing in unutterable agony.

Among the fatally injured were Captain F. J. Lyon and his wife, MARY INOCENT LYON. When the explosion took place Mr. and Mrs. LYON, both undressed, rushed into the state-room hall. At that time the hall was full of steam, and both were fearfully scalded. They had been married only three days, and were returning from their wedding-trip to Albany only to be buried in the Church of St. Luke's, where they had been married. Besides those killed fifteen were severely injured. JOSEPH LAMBERT, fireman, rushed overboard when the explosion took place and was drowned. Mr. REYNOLDS and his child were providentially saved, having left their state-room just before the accident. The wife and mother, however, was left behind, and was among the killed.

The Hoboken ferry-boat Morristown, seeing the signal of distress flying, went to the assistance of the unfortunate passengers, and succeeded in taking a large number of them off the steamer and landing them safely; while those on shore did all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of the scalded, and tried to make the others as comfortable as circumstances would permit.

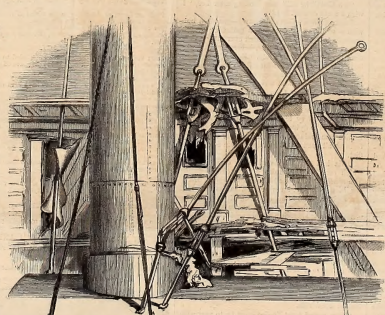
A coroner's investigation has been held, but no satisfactory result can be attained from the evidence presented.

Mr. NORMAN WIARD of 46 Pine Street, New York, has written a paper upon boiler explosions, which is of great interest in connection with this disaster. These explosions, he says, are not due,

1*st*, to the direct pressure of steam, for it is not the weakest part that gives way; nor,

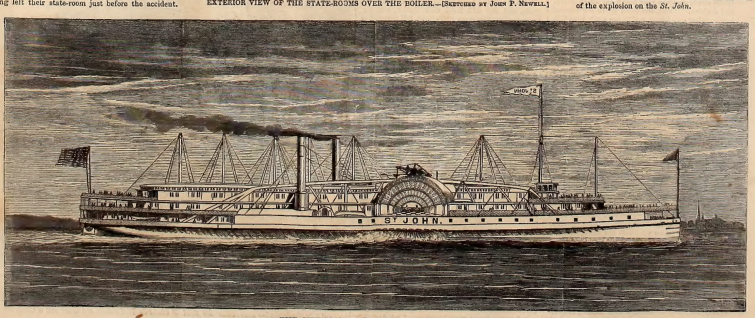
2*d*, to the decomposition of steam, giving it the quality and character of an explosive gas; nor,

3*d*, to the overheating of the boiler-plates; nor,



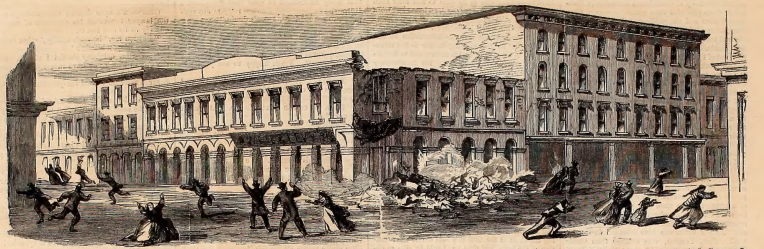
4*th*, to the increased pressure of steam from injecting water up on heated plates after the water has been low for a previous time, since not enough extra steam is produced in this way; nor,

5*th*, to the projection of a large amount of "solid water" with momentum against the shell of the boiler, when the pressure is relieved suddenly from the surface; nor,



6*th*, to the mysterious action of electricity; nor,

7*th*, to a new sudden increase of steam from the overheating of steam, plates, and stays, the surplus heat being communicated to the water.



Mr. WIARD attributes these explosions to the unequal expansion of the boiler plates, they being heated in one part more than in another, while there is the ordinary or less than the ordinary steam pressure. Successive unequal expansions of this sort in some particular part permanently weaken the iron in that part, and hence the explosion. Mr. WIARD considers this to have been the cause of the explosion on the St. John.

EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE STATE-ROOMS OVER THE BOILER.—[SKETCHED BY JOHN P. NEWELL.]

THE HUDSON RIVER STEAMER "ST. JOHN."

EARTHQUAKE IN SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, OCTOBER 8, 1865—VIEW ON THE CORNER OF BATTERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS.—[SKETCHED BY C. L. BUGBEE.]

EARTHQUAKE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

We illustrate on this page the recent earthquake in San Francisco, the most severe shock of the kind ever known in that city.

The shock occurred at 1.35 P.M., October 8, frightening almost the entire population from their houses into the streets. During half a minute there were two tremendous shocks, which caused the buildings to rock to and fro in a manner altogether alarming. It was on Sunday, and services were just over in the churches; the congregation of the Unitarian church was being dismissed when the shock commenced, and the excitement among the women and children threatened serious consequences. The rush from the Catholic church on Vallejo Street was so great that the doors to the main entrance were carried away, and several persons were injured by being trampled upon. The walls of many buildings were cracked in several places, and more or less plastering fell from perhaps half the ceilings in the city. The cornices and fire walls fell from many buildings.

EARTHQUAKE IN SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., OCTOBER 8, 1865—VIEW ON THE CORNER OF THIRD AND MISSION STREETS. [SKETCHED BY C. L. BUGBEE.]

We show in one of our sketches the injury done to a building on Third and Mission streets. Two-thirds of the front fell into the street, and a small section of the side into an adjoining building. The rear wall of the upper story fell upon and through a frame building nearest to it. Another illustration which we give is a view of the two-story brick building on the northwest corner of Sacramento and Battery streets. Here the front of the upper story fell out. The motion of the shock appeared to be from east to west. The tide, as is usual in such cases, rose to an unusual height.

VIRGINIA STATE PENITENTIARY.

On this page we give a sketch, by our Richmond artist, of the Virginia State Penitentiary at Richmond. It has been in existence a good number of years, having been enlarged and devoted to the services of the State, in its present capacity, as far back as 1800. It is capable of accommodating 300 prisoners, and at the time of the evacuation of Richmond contained 267 within its gloomy walls. On that eventful Sunday which saw the general break-up of Confederate authority in Richmond, these prisoners were under the care of Lieutenant SMITH and the public guard; but the latter being compelled to withdraw on the approach of the Federal troops, the prisoners took the law into their own hands, broke up and made instruments of escape out of their iron bedsteads, set fire to the building—a portion of which is yet in ruins—smashed the place, taking every thing valuable they could find, including some 7000 pairs of shoes, and left themselves loose upon the community. Some of the 287 who escaped only 87 have hitherto been recaught; and of these have, after examination by a military commission, been remanded back to their old prison-house to fulfil the remainder of their sentence. The officers of the guard have absolutely upon the track of the others. There are at present only 160 prisoners confined in this building, and on the arrival of two whites to one blacks.

THE VIRGINIA STATE PENITENTIARY AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—[SKETCHED BY J. R. HAMILTON.]

This building has historic interest, both past and present. It is here that were confined every criminal of any considerable note in the State. It rec ives no prisoners for petty offenses, or for a term of confinement less than one year. Those sent here are for rape, murder, and all the great social crimes, or political offenders of extraordinary interest, etc. AARON BURR was here confined for a trial. DICK TURNER, who escaped from Castle Thunder and was brought about the 1st of June, is now here for extra security, as well as several other notable prisoners. It is also here that, in Confederate times, Major GENERAL PRICE and Seventh West Virginia Cavalry, was immured for eight months in company with eight other Federal officers.

Captain J. M. SCHOONMAKER is the commandant of this and all the other prisons of Richmond. Lieutenant LYMAN HOYSRADT was in charge of this prison from May 8 to July 12, when it was turned over to the civil authorities; but he still remains there in command on account of the Government prisoners, and the guard under his control is a military one from the Seventieth New York Militia.

Mr. A. B. HOLMES is the general superintendent.

THE BASE-BALL MATCH AT PHILADELPHIA.

We present our readers on page 733 an illustration of the base-ball match played October 30 at Philadelphia, in which the Atlantic club of Brooklyn and the Athletic of Philadelphia contended for the championship. The match created a great excitement in Philadelphia, and the ground at Germantown Street and Columbia Avenue was thronged with spectators. The two clubs engaged in the contest are considered the best in the country.

During the early portion of the game the Athletics were ahead, all the seventh inning the score for each side was 14. In the ninth inning the last man of the Athletics was put out, and the score of the Athletics 27 against 23 of the Atlantic Athletics.

At the request of the Athletics another match was played between the two clubs on Monday, the 6th instant, at the Capitoline grounds in Brooklyn.

THE SWAFFHAM TINKER.

THERE is a remarkable dream, of which the hero was a tinker of Swaffham, England, over a hundred years ago. This dream is both traditional and historical, being well known, in its first form, in the place where it occurred, and having been recorded in the legendary histories of former ages:

"There lived at Swaffham, in Norfolk, a hardworking, industrious man, who followed the trade of a tinker. This man dreamed one night that if he took a journey to London, and placed himself on a certain part of London Bridge, he should there meet with a person who would communicate something to him of great importance to his future prospects in life. This dream made a great impression on the tinker's mind, and he related it very circumstantially to his wife in the morning. She, however, half laughed and half scolded at him for his folly in putting any faith in such an idle dream, and told him he had better get up and go to work. The next night he dreamed the same again, and likewise the third night. Now the impression was so powerful on his mind that he determined, in spite of the remonstrances of his wife and the ridicule of his neighbors, to go to London and see what would befall him. Accordingly, having made the requisite arrangements as to the management of his business during his absence, he furnished himself with a sum of money, and set out on foot for the metropolis, distant about ninety miles. He reached the end of his journey late on the third day, and having refreshed himself with a night's rest, he took his station next morning on a part of the bridge which corresponded with the description in his dream. There he stood all day, without any one accosting him as to the purpose of his journey. The next day it was the same—and the third, so that, toward night, his confidence in the dream as well as his patience began to be considerably shaken; and he inwardly cursed himself for his folly in not yielding to his wife's advice, and resolved that next day he would leave London and make the best of his way home again. However, he kept his station during the evening; when, just as he was about to leave it a stranger, who had noticed him standing dejectedly on the same bridge for the same space of time days, accosted him, and asked him what he was waiting there for. After some hesitation the tinker told him his errand, without, however, acquainting him with the place he came from. The stranger smiled at his simplicity, and advised him to go home, and in future to pay no attention to dreams. 'I myself,' said he, 'if I were disposed to put faith in such things, might now go a hundred miles into the country upon a similar errand. I dreamed three nights this week, that if I went to a place called Swaffham, in Norfolk, I should find an apple-tree in a certain garden, on the north side of the town, I should find a box of money; but I have something else to do than to run after such silly fancies! No, no, my friend, go home and work well at your calling, and you will find there the riches you are seeking here.' The tinker was astonished. He his doubted not was the information he was seeking; but he said nothing further to the stranger than to thank him for his advice, and to declare his determination to follow it. He immediately went to his lodgings, and the next day set off for his home; which he reached after a long walk. He hastened to his wife on the subject of his journey, but rose early the next morning, and commenced digging on the spot supposed to be pointed out in the dream. After proceeding with his work a few feet downward the spade struck against a hard substance which, upon clearing the mould from the top of it, proved to be an iron chest. He quickly removed it to his house, and having with some difficulty broken off the lid, to his great joy found it full of money.

"After securing his treasure, he discovered, upon the inside of the chest, a parchment roll, which, being no scholar, he was unable to decipher. He therefore hit upon the following expedient to ascertain its meaning. There was in the town a grammar school, several of the pupils of which were constantly in the habit of passing his dwelling on the way to and from school. The tinker judged that by placing the chest at the door it would excite the attention of the boys, that he would be able to obtain the object in view, without exciting any suspicion among his neighbors. He had soon the opportunity he sought. A number of the boys soon gathered round, as was their custom, to witness the operations of the forge, he had to contrive to address their scholastic skill in the translation of the inscription. Some shook their heads: others, after conferring over it for a few minutes, declared at length one, older than the rest, anxious to display his superior learning, after scraping and breaking off the rust, gave the following solution of it—

'Where this stood
Is another twice as good.'

Overjoyed at this information the tinker next morning resumed his labor; and a little below the ground already cleared he found a second chest, double the size of the first, and, like it, filled with gold and silver coin. The second goes on to state that, becoming thus a wealthy man, the tinker showed his gratitude to Providence by building a new chancel to the church, the old one being out of repair. And whatever fiction the marvelous taste of these ages may have mixed up with the fact, certain it is that there is shown at this day a monument in Swaffham church, having an effigy of a tinker, with at that of the tinker, with his dog at his side, and his tools and implements of trade lying about him."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 734.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXX.

MR. GREATOREX IS SEARCHED FOR AN INVESTMENT.

WHILE SAXON and his friend were yachting and fighting, and London was yet full to overflowing, and Francesco Secondo was still, to all appearances, firmly seated on the throne, Mr. Laurence Greatorex bent his steps one brilliant July morning in the direction of Chancery Lane, and paid a visit to Messrs. Trefalden.

He had experienced some little difficulty in making up his mind to take this step. It was an exceedingly disagreeable one, and required no small amount of effort in its accomplishment. He had sent once for a lawyer of Oxford Street only during the last two or three months: but he had never spoken to him since that affair of the stopped check. His intercourse had been with exchange civil speech or salutation with William Trefalden again; and to hate him heartily, and manifest his hatred openly, all the days of his life. And he would have done this unscrupulously, if his regard for Saxon had not become in the way. But he liked that young fellow with a genuine liking just as he hated the lawyer with a genuine hatred; and, since what he might, he was determined to serve him. So, having thought over their last conversation—having conversation which he had had on the train, between Portsmouth and London; having looked in vain for the registration of any second will—he seemed likely to be the one referred to; having examined no end of reports, prospectuses, lists of directors, and the like, with a keen, despising his animosity and his reluctance, to see William Trefalden face to face, and try what could be done with him in person.

Perhaps, even in the very suspicion which prompted him to look after Saxon's interests, despite Saxon's own unwillingness to have them looked after, there may have been a lurking hope, a half-formed wish, of some day discovering the vengeance. If William Trefalden was not acting quite fairly on Saxon Trefalden's behalf, if there should prove to be any thing underhand in some particular of these unknown transactions, would it not be quite as sweet to expose the defrauder as to assist the defrauded?

Laurence Greatorex did not plainly tell himself that he was actuated by this double motive in what he was about to do. Men of his stamp are not given to analyzing their own thoughts and feelings. Straightforward and honest, and frank in their motives of others, they prefer to make the best of themselves, and habitually look at their own acts from the most favorable point of view. So the banker, having made up his mind to accept the disagreeable side of his present undertaking, complacently ignored that which might possibly turn out to be quite the reverse, and persuaded himself, as he walked up Fleet Street, that he was doing something almost heroic in the cause of friendship.

He went in his coat, and was shown at once to William Trefalden's private room.

"Good-morning, Mr. Trefalden," said he, with that noisy affectation of ease that Sir Charles Bergoyne so especially disliked; "you are surprised to see me here, I don't doubt."

But William Trefalden, who would have manifested no surprise had Laurence Greatorex walked in o his room in lawn sleeves and a mitre, only bowed, pointed to a seat, and replied:

"Not at all. I am happy to see you, Mr. Greatorex."

Trefalden looked his questioner haughtily in the face.

"You labor under some mistake, Mr. Greatorex," he said. "I do not, in this place, you are referring to some association with which I am unacquainted—"

"Exactly—"

"And in the second place, I am at a loss to understand how my cousin's affairs should possess any interest for you."

A first-rate speculation possesses the very strongest interest for me," replied the banker.

Mr. Trefalden shrugged his shoulders significantly.

"The law, perhaps, has made me over-cautious," said he; "but I abhor the very name of speculation."

"And yet, if I understood your cousin rightly, his money has been invested in a speculation," persisted Greatorex.

The lawyer surveyed his visitor with a calm hauteur that made Greatorex fidget in his chair.

"I can not help," said he, "but feel curious, in his ignorance of money-matters, may have unintentionally misled you upon this point; but it must be pointed out to you right in one particular. Saxon Trefalden has certainly not speculated with his money. Because I should no more counsel him to speculate than he would speculate without my counsel. I trust I am sufficiently explicit."

"Explicit enough, Mr. Trefalden, but—"

The lawyer looked up inquiringly.

"But nothing," said the banker—confoundedly disappointing. I made sure after what he had told me—"

"May I inquire what my cousin did tell you, Mr. Greatorex?"

"Certainly. He said you had invested a large part of his property, and the whole of your own, in the shares of some new company, the name and objects of which were for the present to be kept strictly private."

"No more than this?"

"No more, except that it was to be the most brilliant thing of the day."

Trefalden smiled.

"Poor boy!" he said. "What a droll mistake—and yet how like him!"

Seeing him so much amused, the City man's belief in the success of his own scheme was momentarily staggered. He began to think he had made too much capital out of nothing at all.

"I hope you mean to share the joke, Mr. Trefalden," he said, uneasily.

"Indeed, I do. As it always the case in these misapprehensions, Saxon was a little right and a good deal wrong in his story. He may have been led to a company on first-rate security—he not invested in shares, or embarked in any kind of speculation. I am not at all acquainted with the company—it is sufficient that he could nowhere have found more satisfactory debtors."

"I suppose, then, there is no chance in the same direction for outsiders?"

"My cousin has advanced, I believe, as much as the entire property warrants, to borrow."

"Humph!—just my luck. Well, I am much obliged to you, Mr. Trefalden."

"Not in the least. I only regret that I can be of no service to you, Mr. Greatorex."

They rose simultaneously, and, as they did so, each read mistrust in the other's eyes.

"Does he really want an investment?" thought the lawyer, "or is it a mere scheme of detection from first to last?"

"Has he caught a scent of my little game?" the banker said himself. "and is this plausible story nothing, after all, but a clever invention?"

These, however, were questions that could not be asked, much less answered; so Laurence Greatorex and William Trefalden looked coldly enough, and hated each other more heartily than ever.

There was one, however, who witnessed their parting, and who, from the window, also marked the expression of the banker's face as he left the office, the look of dismay on William Trefalden's as he returned to his private room. This keen observer was Mr. Keckwich; and Mr. Keckwitch well knew how to turn his quick apprehension to account.

CHAPTER LXXI.

THE GREAT COMPANY WITH AUTHORITY.

THE young man had no difficulty in finding the mansion of Mr. Melchisedek. It was a large, white, Oriental-looking house, with immaculate balconies, a fountain playing in the courtyard, and a crowd of Nubian and Egyptian servants, in rich Eastern dresses, lounging about the gates.

When Saxon inquired for the master of the house, a grave Armenian in a long drab robe and lofty cap stepped forward and conducted the visitors across the courtyard, through a long corridor, and into a small room furnished like a European counting-house. Here they were received by a gentlemanly person seated before a large desk covered with papers.

"Mr. Melchisedek, I presume?" said Saxon.

The gentleman at the desk smiled, and shook his head.

"I am Mr. Melchisedek's secretary," he replied. "Can I have the honor—"

"I particularly wish to see Mr. Melchisedek himself," said SAXON, "if he will oblige me with five minutes' conversation."

The secretary smiled again; much as a vizier might smile at the request of a stranger who asked to see the sultan.

"If you will do me the favor to state the nature of your business," said he, "I will acquaint Mr. Melchisedek with the particulars. He may then, perhaps, grant you an interview."

So SAXON explained all about the inquiries which he was anxious to make, and the secretary, taking their cards with him, left the young men for a few minutes to themselves.

"The Commercial Authority seems to be a mighty man in the land," said Lord Castlestowers.

"The Commercial Authority has a princely garden," replied SAXON, looking out of the window upon a wilderness of gorgeous flowers, clumps of sycamores and palms, and alleys of shadowy cypress-trees.

"Princely indeed!" said the Earl; and quoted a line or two of Tennyson:

> "A realm of pleasance, many a mound,
> And many a shadow-chequer'd lawn
> Full of the city's stirs asound,
> And deep with plots like dizzy noon
> The stately cedar, terrarkes,
> Thick meadow of roseated bloom,
> Tall orient shrubs, and obelisk,
> Greeves with emblem of the lime,
> In honor of the golden prime
> Of good Harun Alraschid!"

—by-the-way, Trefalden, what if the Commercial Authority keeps the Persian girl 'with argent-lidded eyes' hidden up behind yonder cypresses?"

At this moment the door softly kreopened, and, instead of the secretary, the Armenian appeared.

He bowed almost to the ground, and requested the effendis to follow him.

Up a broad flight of marble steps they went, and through a long suit of rooms magnificently furnished in the most oriental style, with divans and hangings, carpets in which the foot sank noiselessly, statues, massive bronzes, ornamental clocks, and large paintings in heavy Italian frames. Having led them through five of these stately reception-rooms, the Armenian paused at the entrance to the sixth, held the velvet curtain aside, and stood back to let them pass.

A spacious room, still more oriental, and, if possible, still more costly in its decorations, opened before them. The windows admitted the last crimson rays of the autumnal sun, and the air was heavy with a mixed perfume of orange-blossoms and roses, and the scented fumes of Turkish tobacco.

As the young men entered a gaunt figure, clothed all in white, rose from a sofa at the upper end of the room, and stood to receive them.

This was Mr. Melchisedek.

The great Commercial Authority was, beyond doubt, a very extraordinary-looking individual. He was a Jew, par et simple. It needed no ethnologist to see that. A Jew of pure Asiatic lineage, with deep-set, fiery eyes, a complexion almost the color of a Roxburgh binding, high, narrow, aquiline forehead, and a well-developed "beard and mustache. He wore a crimson fez, and a suit of fine white linen that showed all over like a honeycomb satin. The buttons of his coat and waistcoat were also of linen; but in his shirt he wore two superb brilliants, and the long, slender brown hand which held his chibouque was all ablaze with jewels.

Handing the chibouque to one of four gorgeously attired Nubian slaves that stood behind his sofa, Mr. Melchisedek inclined his head, pointed to a couple of chairs, and said, in the tone of a sovereign giving audience:

"Gentlemen, you are welcome."

Pipes and coffee were then brought round in the Eastern fashion, and for some minutes the two smoked and sipped in silence.

Mr. Melchisedek was the first to speak.

"May I inquire," he said, "which gentleman I am to address as Mr. Trefalden?"

"Myself, if you please," replied SAXON, blushing.

The Commercial Authority removed his pipe from his lips and looked at him with some appearance of surprise.

"I know your name well, Mr. Trefalden," he said. "You came lately into the possession of a fortune twenty thousand years ago."

"I did," replied SAXON, laughingly. "But I did not expect to find that fact known in Egypt."

"All remarkable financial facts are known among financiers," replied Mr. Melchisedek; "and the fame of the Trefalden legacy has been considerable."

Hereupon he resumed his pipe, and a second round of coffee made its appearance.

SAXON and Castlestowers exchanged glances. The semi-Oriental gravity of the man, the peculiarities of his appearance, the pashaw-like splendor of his palace, and the train of slaves shoot the place awoke and amazed him.

In obedience to a sign from the Earl, SAXON left Mr. Melchisedek to conduct the conversation according to his own pleasure.

Presently the Nubians removed the coffee-cups and brought round a silver bowl of rose-water, and three embroidered napkins. The guests dipped their fingers in the one and dried them on the other. The slaves then closed the lattices, lit the lamps, and withdrew.

They were no sooner gone than Mr. Melchisedek turned to SAXON, and said:

"If I understand my secretary aright, Mr. Trefalden, you have been informed that a second Anglo-Indian Company, calling itself the New Overland Route Company, has lately been incorporated; and you wish to know whether that information be correct?"

"Not precisely," replied SAXON, "for I have reason to know that such a company has actually been formed; but—"

"May I inquire what that reason is?" said Mr. Melchisedek.

"I have taken shares in it."

"Will you permit me to see your debentures?"

"I have none—that is to say, they are doubtless in the care of my lawyer. He takes charge of all my papers, and transacts all my business."

Mr. Melchisedek looked at SAXON with something like a grim smile hovering about the corners of his mouth, and said in his oracular tone:

"Sir, there is no company. All joint-stock companies must be publicly registered as the Act directs. They do not exist as companies till this registration has taken place. And, being registered, they become capable of legally carrying on the business for which they are formed, according to the provisions of their deed of settlement. No such company as this New Overland Route Company has been registered in England or elsewhere—consequently, no such company exists."

SAXON changed color, and was silent.

Mr. Melchisedek touched a silver bell, and the Armenian chamberlain presented himself upon the threshold.

"My volume of maps," said the master, laconically.

The Armenian vanished; but presently reappeared with a huge folio, which Mr. Melchisedek opened on the eastern hemisphere.

"Be so good, Mr. Trefalden," said he, "as to show me the suppositions route."

Thereupon SAXON placed the map from Marseilles, through the Straits of Messina, to Sidon on the coast of Syria; from Sidon to Palmyra, through the fertile valley of the Euphrates, down the Persian Gulf, and over to Bombay. He explained the scheme as he proceeded. It seemed so brilliant, so easy, so feasible, that before he came to the end of his commentary he could see that it had become quite triumphant, and all his doubts had vanished.

But the great Commercial Authority only smiled again, and shook his head.

"No Oriental undertaking can be set on foot without my knowledge," replied Mr. Melchisedek, stiffly. "I employ agents throughout the East, whose business it is to keep me informed of all such matters."

"Good Heaven!" murmured SAXON. "I do not know how to receive it!"

"Besides," added the Commercial Authority, "the thing is impracticable."

"Why so?"

"In the first place, the obstacles to the Euphrates route by land are innumerable—perhaps insurmountable—especially the Arab tribes and pillage. Sidon, which is to this scheme what Alexandria is to the genuine route, is one of the most dangerous districts of the Syrian Coast."

"Is that possible?" exclaimed SAXON. "I have read with much labor of Sidon in Homer—in the Bible—in ancient and medieval history. Surely it is the sea-port of Damascus?"

"It was," replied Mr. Melchisedek; "but it has not been a sea-port for more than two hundred years. When the Emir Fakreddin defended his territory against the Turkish general Amurath the Fourth, he built a fleet in the harbor in order to prevent the Turkish vessels from entering the town. Since that time no vessel of size has dared to attempt an entrance."

SAXON stood bewildered, with his eyes fixed upon the map.

"I fear you have been defrauded to a considerable extent," said Mr. Melchisedek, quietly.

"To be defrauded is, I suppose, the lot of the ignorant," replied SAXON. "But it is not so much for himself as for others that I care. It is for these—"

"Precisely," said Mr. Melchisedek. "The swindle."

SAXON shrank from the word as if it stung him.

"I am very much obliged to you," he said, hastily.

"Pray do not name it, Mr. Trefalden. I am happy to have been useful to you."

And with this Mr. Melchisedek again touched the silver bell, and, with five rivers of salaam by fashion, and remained standing till the Armenian had ushered them from his presence.

Back they went in state through the five magnificent rooms, down the marble staircase, now all ablaze with lamps of quaint and beautiful design, and out across the spacious garden.

It was now dusk. A delicious breeze was blowing off the sea; the Frankish quarter was full of pronomaders; and the whole place was in the great square, before the French Consulate.

But Saxon strode on toward the Hotel de l'Europe, observing nothing; and Castlestowers followed him silently. Not till they were again alone in their own sitting-room did he venture to break in upon his friend's meditations.

"I am afraid this is a bad business, Trefalden," he said.

"A terrible business!" replied SAXON, leaning moodily over the window.

The Earl laid his hand upon the young fellow's shoulder.

"Is your loss very heavy?" he asked, gently.

"Nearly half my fortune."

"Good Heavens, Trefalden!"

SAXON smiled bitterly.

"Yes," he replied; "it is a loss not to be counted by thousands, or tens of thousands, or hundreds of thousands—but millions. I have been robbed of two millions."

"But not irrecoverably robbed! You have the law to appeal to?"

"The law can do nothing for me," replied SAXON.

"The law can do every thing if one has prompt recourse to it. Supposing that these gentlemen have not, you can set a hundred detectives at their heels; you can hunt them down like vermin—you can—"

"I tell you, Castlestowers, I can do nothing," interrupted SAXON, impatiently.

"Why not?"

SAXON was silent.

"Who laid the scheme before you? Who sold you the forged shares?"

Still SAXON made no reply.

A foreboding of the truth flashed suddenly across Lord Castlestowers's mind.

"Trefalden," he said, "I believe—"

"Don't ask me!" said SAXON, passionately; "don't ask me!"

Then, breaking down all at once, he exclaimed,

"But oh, it's not the money, Castlestowers! it's not the money that I grieve about!"

"I understand that," replied the Earl, scarcely less agitated than himself. "Who would have confidence in Mr. Trefalden could be robbed?"

"My own kinsman—my friend whom I loved and trusted!"

The friend whom we all trusted," said the Earl.

SAXON looked at him with an alarmed, almost an imploring, expression—opened his lips as if to speak—covered his face with his hand, and turned away with a heavy sigh.

He had now no doubt that his cousin had wronged Lord Castlestowers of that twenty-five thousand pounds; but he could not bring himself to say what he suspected. Besides, there was still a hope.

At all events he would wait—wait and think.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

VALE.

"I'm over Farewell" is this world I wot.
Nor ever a meeting but without it.
In shadow falls over each lovely scene,
The dying word, the last, the last, the last.

Farewell! Farewell! and in shrieks the train
Through mountain and sunshine with one long shiver,
On the platform there parted two hearts with pain,
And away, away, went the fleeting river.

The bell of the steamer rings loud and long,
And white hands wave far over the railing;
Like far lines we part with the parting throng
Who wave as the ship goes rearward sailing!

The wind sprang up in the day grew dark,
The black waves tossed in wild commotion;
Farewell! we shall see them back here,
Went sailing alone on that fearful ocean.

We saw not far off the shining strand—
We knew not the rocks, the reefs, the peril—
Yet we knew that at last she had reached the land
Where farewells follow not on the meeting.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

EVERY body has heard how presence of mind displayed by Sir Thomas Lawrence saved his life; but the tale bears repeating. One day while Sir Thomas was walking on the roof of his palace, but in contemplation, an insane man came behind him, and struck at him unresisted to push him the battlements. The chancellor was in his power, and before any one could make to struggle with such a strong fellow. He had a little dog with him. "Now," said he, to the maniac, "let us first throw the dog over, and then we will throw you." The dog was first so thrown over. "Is not this fine sport?" said his holding; "let us have the fellow." The dog was so, and the madman was going down Sir Thomas fastened the door and called for help.

One evening, not long ago, a peaceful-minded gentleman, who probably never fired a pistol in his life, was perusing the columns of a newspaper, when one of our city swindlers suddenly was accosted by a half-intoxicated ruffian with "Here, you!" said the latter, "what are you looking at?" A three-barreled revolver," was the instant reply: "What have you got?" The drunken wretch turned, and walked away in a sobered state.

Somebody has said that "presence of mind is good, but absence of body is better." Very true. But danger rouses us face to face on every hand. In these times when a smash-up on the rail or an explosion on the water is of almost everyday occurrence, we may well bethink himself how he shall act should he be one of a terror-stricken band of hapless passengers. Some are never gained by rash impetuosity, even when the mind, half-paralyzed by fear, yields to the instinctive urge from impending danger. If there is but one moment in which to save one's life, half that moment is well spent in thinking how to do it. Could the passengers of the ill-fated St. John's steamer the impulse to throw open state-room doors to the deadly ocean, and to spring headlong through the opening window, what agony would have been saved to many! Since almost everything is controlled by habit, a certain amount presevering is to notoriously unsafe, a certain amount presence of mind across the equinox, and to prove a saliguard.

It is a brief, and history which is involved in the two items which follow:

MARRIED.

LYON—GREENE.—On Tuesday, Oct. 26, at St. John's Church, by the Rev. J. H. Tuttle, Francis J. Lyon, to Mary Augusta, only daughter of Edward Greene, all of this city.

DIED.

LYON.—On Sunday, Oct. 29, from injuries received by a railroad accident on Saturday last, Mr. John A. Lyon, aged 21 years. Also, on Monday, Oct. 30, at 7 A.M., Mary Augusta, wife of the above, and only daughter of Edward and Martha Green.

Years ago when the cholera was striking toward this country some people were in the habit of making wills who not. The mortality was in the ratio of the preparation. In Boston there was no panic, and none left the city who had any inducement to remain. Public meetings were held, and money freely contributed for the thorough cleansing of the city. Numerous committees, of two gentlemen each, were appointed, who visited every dwelling, inspected cellars, closets, drains, and yards. Every sort of rubbish and filth was removed by public carts, and orders whitewashed. The infected houses were ruled and fitted up with beds, medicines, etc., and physicians appointed to each. What was the result? Only two or three cases of cholera, and not a single case taken to either hospital. Was ever money or time better spent?

At the recent grand banquet given at Delmonico's by Sir Morton Peto to his American friends the "Bill of Fare" was a unique and elegant affair. It was arranged in the form of an eight-paged book, each leaf being of satin, and containing the numerous dishes of the banquet in regular order, while the covers, which were of morocco, were stamped in gold with Sir Morton's coat of arms and the name of the particular guest at whose place the book was laid. This dinner is said to have been one of the most elegant affairs of the kind that has ever taken place in this country.

It is rumored that an Anti-marriage Club is about being organized in our city—the idea coming, as all new fashions do, from France. The grand object of this society is to discountenance the habit of extravagance among young ladies. It seems that a couple of gentlemen, at their club room the evening before last, were discussing the late fashion, sought rest on a lounge in the smoking room, each with a fragrant Havana. But either the lounge was uncomfortable or the cigars were poisonous, for a heated discussion ensued, which resulted not long after in a meeting of sixty or more determined young men who could not afford the expense of a wife). The general idea promulgated at this interesting meeting seems to be that all the money expended in a family was spent by the wife; consequently, if a man wanted any for his own use he must not be a husband. A report was made on this vexed but still great accuracy, by five gentlemen, in the space of half an hour! The meeting came to a abrupt conclusion by the appearance and unexpected arrival of a married gentleman, and the important documents were hustled away into some secret corner. The movement will undoubtedly be successful, and a flourishing club be formed, composed of young gentlemen about town, who decide that the proper destination of their billiards, cards, cigars, and retreat. Will their nobody will disturb them! However much ladies may be said to be in favor of a retrenchment, we may need to attach to the bellows.

The public has been interesting several times by Beauty, of Syracuse, and Miss Jenkins, formerly of St. Louis. The bridal costume of the former was of white satin, richly trimmed with velvet a shade darker than the material, and velvet bonnet, veil, and flowers. Hat and bonnets to match.

The bridesmaids' dresses are of lavender moire, trimmed with point lace and ornaments of gold. One of the bridesmaids is the sister of the bride, the other the daughter of the bridegroom. Between this young lady and her proposed step-mother there is only one year of difference in age, and both will be in society at the same time.

The bride's trousseau includes every thing that is re shevhe landscape in a lady's wardrobe.

And in this connection we will give our lady readers a few lines from the latest Paris fashions.

Long veils are definitely re-appearing. The small muslin tucked in tight at the sides of the face, and reaching barely to the chin, are the most fashionable. Some are worn to the extreme, being long, wide, and flowing, and very nublike in effect. Others, again, have been made in the mushroomed genius, measuring scarce a span long and a half; but they are not worn by persons of consequence. The long veils are worn by ladies of fortune, sometimes embellished with beads. They require to be gracefully worn.

Our readers will be glad to hear that dress-circle ribs are likely to be curtailed during the winter, for the great annoyance that exists at the present time, when the rising dress-makers are making plain skirts for promenade costumes. Those already provided with ribs have the greatest bands of satin round their skirts, and in the centre of the back a corresponding piece of the same material to the dress.

A principal feature to be remarked in the make of winter dresses is the absence of all pleats both in front and at the sides of the skirt. To manage this, the material is cut in the Princess form, and the bodice and front breadth of the skirt are made in one piece. Sometimes the back pleats are arranged at the back of the skirt, but all the rest is cut on the bias. Now, such a dress is liable to absolute bagpan. As for crinolines, we are reported to that they are "coming out," but that there are very few sources in of the country. In Paris the mode-absurd article are certainly worn in front, but to the back they have by no means diminished—rather the contrary.

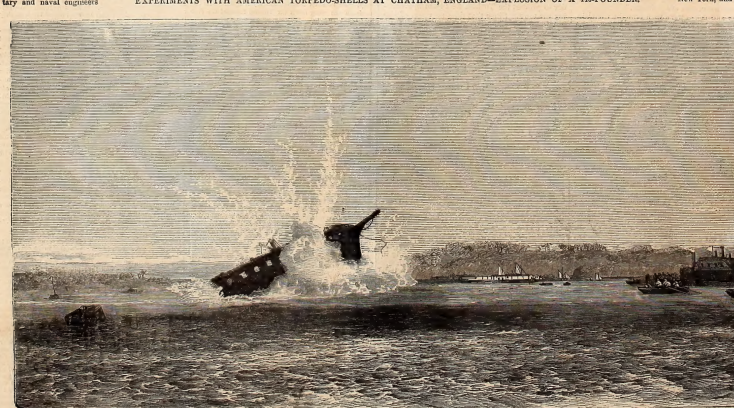
Industry is carried out on the most extensive scale. A gentleman in that country has trained a couple of mice, and invented machinery for enabling them to spin cotton yarn. It is no contrivance of the mice to do this, but he deals atonement to society for past offenses by twisting and reeling the to 10 hours per day. Now, such an invention is really worth something! We wish we had some machinery by which we could only make bad coffee could be used at some useful trade—provided they could be caught! New York is becoming overrun with rats. Even in many fashionable houses they are not infrequently seen at stretching—nothing is secure from them. And then they meet you with such a look of scorn as to say, "Can you do such impudence that it is—will, to say the least—not pleasant. The surest remedy is a good cat! We have tried and know it to be a thing worth trying. Try it, reader, and try Tabby.

A story is going the rounds of a man living out West who completes eight pairs of large-sized boots every day. That would be considered small doings in New York if the following statement is true. "There is another shoemaker down in the swamp, who, as fact as he finishes a pair of boots, he takes them around to the Legislature, and He keeps one in the air all the time and don't half try."

The following appears to us to be a very good story:

An Englishman who emigrated some years ago to see one of the schools in Dublin devoted to the conversion of children to Protestantism. The master got the other small class in attendance through a very fair lesson in Holland Scripture, and then proceeded to the Catechism, one of the practical instructions received by his pupils. "Now, boys, you know who David Was?" "Yes, Sir, we do." (Every hand up.) "Is it right to go to Donnybrook Fair?" "No, Sir, it is not." "Why is it?" "It's a fight, Sir." "Very well, boys," replied the master. Turning to his pupils the master said, "Now we do not neglect to combine practical precepts as well as religious opinions!" "Quite right, Sir," replied the boy. "Now, boys, I will put a question to the boys myself." "Oh, certainly, Sir!" answered the boys. "Well, then, boys, tell me honestly, every boy who has been to Donnybrook this year, hold up his hand!" Up went every hand in the class. Of course the boys, being Irish, saw the intensity of the joke, and laughed accordingly, and the master being of the same nation was not more backward, in spite of his defeat; and visitor, teacher, and scholars joined in a good hearty roar, which had hardly calmed down when the little genius of the class stepped forward to distribute the hand. "Please, Sir, I want to distribute the hands." "Why, what do you want to do with reference to Donnybrook to tell truth, or coming alive out of it?" "Please, Sir, I want to count the fingers!" Yes, the boys, with all again with renewed vigor.

AMERICAN TORPEDOES IN ENGLAND.



THE first use of submarine explosive shells for the destruction of hostile ships of war was introduced by MR. DAVID BUSHNELL, of Connecticut, about 1777. He contrived a machine in which the operator, with air enough to breathe for half an hour, could dive under the bottom of an enemy's vessel and fasten to it a keg of powder, which was afterward to be fired by means of a gun-lock and a long cord. This machine, which took its name from its shape resembling the American turtle or torpedo, was tried without success against the British squadron in New York harbor and in the Delaware. Twenty years later ROBERT FULTON, the author of steam navigation in America, devised a method of applying submarine bomb-shells, which he laid before the British Government. It was discountenanced by the naval authorities, but found some favor with Mr. PITT, who on one occasion witnessed, near Walmer Castle, the blowing up of the brig Dorothea by means of an 180-pounder torpedo. FULTON's shell was provided with clock-work to set the gun-lock in action and fire the powder, after the lapse of a given time. The whole subject, however, seems to have lain in abeyance till the Russian war of 1854, when the channels leading to Cronstadt were defended by sunken magazines of powder, laid by buoys at a certain depth beneath the surface. The intended method of ignition, when the enemy's ships passed over, was by the breaking of a small glass tube containing sulphuric acid, which would then flow down a long flexible tube, containing at its bottom a preparation of chlorate of potash, so as to produce a flame communicating with the magazine. These Russian torpedoes, however, did not prove very efficient, and were harmlessly fished up by the exploring boats.

Our late civil war has occasioned the practical application and modification of these engines of warfare in a great variety of forms. They were extensively used by the military and naval engineers of the Southern Confederacy, the most successful example being shown by the destruction of the Tecumseh, at Mobile, in August, 1863. A torpedo diving-boat, with steam-engine and screw-propeller, and with two vanes, like the fins of a fish, to regulate its upward or downward motion, was constructed by them at Charleston, and another at New Orleans; but in these instances the torpedo-shells, as employed by the Southerners, were to be thrust forward at the end of a long arm or spar, so as to be placed in direct contact with the bottom or side of the ship to be destroyed.

This principle, which seemed fatal to the usefulness and convenient applicability of the invention, has been entirely superseded by the new kind of torpedoes exhibited recently at Chatham. The merit of the novel combination, in its present shape, is shared by Mr. W. W. WOOD, Chief Engineer of the United States Navy, and Mr. G. W. BEARDSLEE, of New York, inventor of the magneto-electric telegraph, which had already been employed with remarkable success for military and engineering purposes on land. Without going into a description of Mr. BEARDSLEE's invention, which supersedes the galvanic battery as well for the transmission of messages as for the explosion of mines or magazines, at any distance, either on land or under water, and sunk at any depth, it may be stated that the magneto-electric apparatus, requiring no acids or plates, is carried in a small box as portable as a writing-desk; it may be worked very easily upon an open telegraph wire on land, or a wire, in the water, insulated by a coating of vulcanized India rubber. In August, 1864, when Mr. BEARDSLEE's apparatus was experimentally applied to the ordinary line of telegraph wire between New York and Washington, a charge of gunpowder at Washington was fired in an instant by the operator at New York, and nice ver-sd, at a distance of 240 miles, whereas in former experiments of this sort with GROVE's galvanic batteries, the combined power of no less than 150 pairs was required to ignite powder by means of burning a platinum wire at Baltimore, forty miles from Washington. MR. BEARDSLEE employs a patent fuse or cartridge for mines and torpedoes, which is so ingenious that we must give it particular notice. It consists of a small wooden cylinder about three quarters of an inch in diameter, and three inches long; at one end of the cylinder is a cavity which holds the combustible, which is confined only by pasteboard or membrane, so that when ignited it will blow straight into the heart of the principal charge; the two wires of the electric circuit, entering at the other end of the cylinder, terminate upon the little wooden disk which forms the bottom of this cavity, so that the end of one wire is about a quarter of an inch from the other; the electric circuit is completed by drawing a dash with a black-lead pencil across the tiny space of the wooden surface connecting the two ends of wire; and the fuse is then charged. It is a property of black-lead or plumbago to burst into flame when reached by the electric current; hence, by sending a current through the circuit thus composed, which may have wires of any length, the pencil-mark lying in the tract of this current, and consisting of a few disintegrated particles of plumbago, is infallibly set on fire, and must infallibly set fire to the whole charge of the fuse, and of the torpedo or mine. The use of such a fuse is in every way superior to the method of producing ignition by platinum wire, which involves a great waste of electric power.

EXPERIMENTS WITH AMERICAN TORPEDO-SHELLS AT CHATHAM, ENGLAND—EXPLOSION OF A 440-POUNDER.

EXPERIMENTS WITH AMERICAN TORPEDO-SHELLS AT CHATHAM, ENGLAND—BLOWING-UP OF THE "TERPSICHORE" BY A 75-POUNDER.

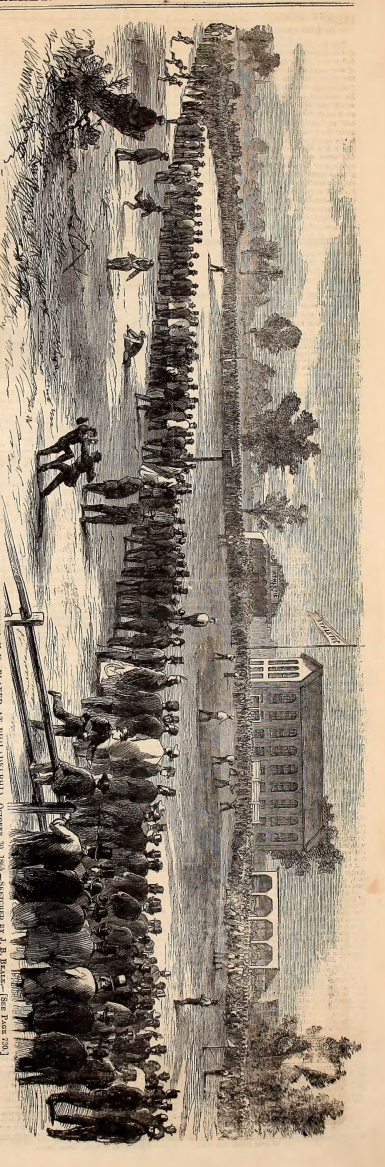
The illustrations which we give on page 732 relate to a recent trial made of these torpedoes in the Medway, England, in the presence of the DUKE OF SOMERSET, First Lord of the Admiralty, and other eminent naval authorities. This test resulted in a complete success. Several experiments were tried. One was to try the effect of the explosion of a torpedo charged with 440 pounds of powder and sunk under mud and sand at the entrance of Chatham Harbor. The depth of water at high-tide was 26 feet. The train being fired, in an instant there rose from the placid bosom of the river high into the air a huge column of water, in shape and action much resembling those great waterspouts occasionally witnessed by sailors in mid-ocean, and to which, though very beautiful to look upon, they do their best to give a wide berth. The splendid volumes of snow-white feathery spray soared quickly to a height of little less than 200 feet, and then fell gently again in exquisitely graceful curves into the vortex whence they had risen, leaving no trace of themselves behind save a slowly-expanding circle of bubbling, foaming water, the muddy, yeasty aspect of which showed that the river had been stirred to its lowest depths. The illustration on page 732 will give some idea of the appearance of this huge column of water.



Another experiment, which we illustrate, was the destruction of the Terpsichore—an 18-gun English sailing frigate—by two 75-pound torpedoes. These were let down alongside of the ship. Only one of these bore upon the ship, the other being borne away by the tide too far to have any effect on the vessel. Upon the explosion the Terpsichore suddenly rose at her bows ten or twelve feet into the air and keeled over on her starboard side, while great masses of water burst up through her decks, her whole frame being convulsed and heaving as with agony, till she began to settle down forward. In another moment her stern stood up at an acute angle, and her low sunk deeper and deeper. Not a fragment, however, of her timbers was seen to be detached from the rest of her hulk, not a splinter had been shot up into the air or had fallen off into the water, and she appeared to be going down bodily. The mischief she had received would seem to be a broken back; for she still continued to go down by the head until, in about five minutes from her first movement, she lay fast aground in the Medway mud on an even keel, with the tide up to within a few inches of her port-holes.

It is now admitted that one of these torpedoes, with a charge of 440 pounds, would be sufficient to destroy the strongest of her Majesty's ships-of-war.

HON. JAMES L. ORR, GOVERNOR ELECT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

BASE-BALL MATCH BETWEEN THE "ATHLETICS" OF PHILADELPHIA, PA., AND THE "ATLANTICS" OF BROOKLYN, N. Y., PLAYED AT PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 30, 1865.—SKETCHED BY J. R. BEALE.—[SEE PAGE 730.]

THE DUBLIN EXHIBITION.

THE HIGHEST PRIZE AWARDED TO THE GROVER & BAKER MACHINES.

On Monday morning EARL RUSSELL announced the awards to the successful exhibitors in the International Exhibition, Dublin, and the Prizes were afterward presented by the DUKE OF LEINSTER. Among the exhibitors who obtained Medals were the GROVER & BAKER Sewing Machine Company, Liverpool and London, this being the fifteenth first-class prize gained by these Machines this season.—Liverpool Mercury.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even for the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR SALE.

A Drum Cylinder Printing-Press.

Size of Bed..... 36½×51½ Inches.

Four Rollers: Table Distribution.

Has been used till Oct. 1st to print HARPER'S WEEKLY. Price $2000.

Also, One Twelve Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution. Has been used 18 months. Price $3000.

The above Presses are in good working order, and are offered for sale in consequence of the recent introduction of HARPER'S WEEKLY requiring the "Lightning Press." Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS,
329 Pearl Street, New York.

MATILDA TOOTS.

NEW COMIC SONG. 35c. With picture, colored ..... 50c.
I CAN NOT SING THE OLD SONGS..... 30c.
SWEETEST WITHIN MY HEART..... 35c.
HAVE YOU SEEN HER LATELY? (comic)..... 35c.
SOLDIER'S HAPPY RETURN, MARCHES..... 50c.
IF WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE..... 35c.
Mailed postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME,
289 Bowery, New York.

Make your own Soap
WITH B. T. BABBITT'S
Pure Concentrated Potash,
OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other powder or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 10 gallons of soap. No lime or washing soda needed. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money is the J. Johnson Pen, warranted for one year.—54 cents fine. Also, every variety of Pen-holders on hand. Pens replaced on receipt of 50 cts. Post paid. Send for Circular. E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office No. 28 Maiden Lane, New York.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.

TERMS: $2.50 a year; 3 copies for $6; 5 copies, and 1 to getter-up of club, $10. Single Numbers for sale by News agents throughout the United States. Price 15 cents a volume a year, beginning in January and July. Address
T. S. ARTHUR & CO.,
323 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

JOE MILLER, Jr., a Book crammed full of Jokes, Comic and Side Splitting Sayings, Funny Stories, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to BOX 3420, P. O., New York.

$6 WATCHES FOR THE HOLIDAYS. $8

An extensive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, adapted for Christmas presents, at prices to suit the finest and rich design, at greatly reduced prices.

An elegant Watch, in fine gold hunting case, beautifully engraved, English full plate jeweled movements, adjusted two positions, engraved palisol and bow bridge, fine enameled white dial, and fancy hands. CONVEX CRYSTALS, with key, case, gold, FINE VERY GILT, with beautiful satin LOCKET double hunting case for ladies, illustrated, all complete, a beautiful gold watch, sent free by mail for only $8.

A handsome Watch, of a very serviceable pattern, in heavy double case; small size, same as $8 watch; with key case, chain, gold locket, &c., complete, and free to any part of the country for only $6.

The Imperial Timekeeper, is a Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, containing a beautiful and correct working Watch, with the accurately adjusted MARINE COMPASS in miniature, rank in dial, and a Reliable Calculator, indicating day of month, week, and numbering the Watch a perfect SPORTS, HEAT, and TIME EXPOSURE, and of great value to travelers, farmers, and others. Sent free of a perfect regulator. This valuable Watch is encased in Solid Polished Genuine Hickory Wood, and is a perfect Gem for outer case being of fine 14-Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Silver, movements of the Best Quality, and Jewelled in Seven Genuine English Imported Jewels. Capt. M. Tobias recommends this watch to every Ready Letting gentleman and Clerk, Engineer, Inventor, and in fact all classes, and in exact imitation of a $150 watch used by REAL ENGLISHMEN and OFFICERS OF THE NAVY. Warranted one year. Price per single set, all complete, with case, key, &c., as above set where at each, $20. FINE SILVER Lepines, Hunting Case, $15. IMPROVED DUPLEX, Genuine AMERICAN LEVERS, $10. SILVER WINDING WATCHES, $20. FANCY LEVERS, $20. Ladies' FINE PATENT LEVER WATCHES, $20. All the above WATCHES for PRESENTS. Catalogues sent free. Address LATLEY BROTHERS, Importers of Fine Watches, 163 Canal St., New York. (Established 1858.)

$3 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasps—for $3 photographs. Sent by mail for $3 00.
ALBUMS—very handsome—three brass bound—two clasps—for 75 photographs. By mail for $5 00. Articles, pearl-cut, Yankee notions of all kinds. Everybody need for catalogues. W. C. WESLEY, 170 Broadway, N. Y.

SOMETHING NEW,
Of interest to all. Inclose three 3d Stamps, and send for C value, to H. S. GREUB, Albany, 60 John Street, New York.

MISTRESS. "Why, Bridget, what are you doing—nailing those biscuits down to the tray?"
COOK. "Yes, faith, Mum, or they'd be after liftin' the tops off your oven, Mum—tha Yaste Powdher's so mighty powerful."

The Pioneer Yeast Powder is manufactured by Taylor & Young, No. 186 Front Street, New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
(ESTABLISHED 1840).
100,000 Watches, Chains, Sidney Articles, &c.,
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL WE KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$175 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
1000 Revolving Castors	$10 00 to 25 00
3000 Drinking-Cups	1 00 to 10 00
2000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
2000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
1000 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	5 00 to 8 00
8 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 5 00
100 10-Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	2 00 to 15 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz.	14 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
2000 Napkin Rings, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
2000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

A Certificate of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mix d; and, when ordered, are taken and delivered, one to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Our Circular will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 30 for $5; 60 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducement to be the first agent in each town. Full particulars and Circular, which gives special terms, full list, and particulars, address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 335 Broadway, N. Y.

WANTED—AGENTS, TO INTRODUCE THE NEW and rapid-selling work, "GUNS and SHOOTING," their Carriage and Gunnery," by Hon. J. T. Headley. New Ready. Handsomely illustrated with steel portraits, battle scenes, and maps. A rare chance to make money. For terms call on or address E. B. TREAT & CO., Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York.

PAUL PRY MAGAZINE Out. Price 3 cts. Address PAUL PRY, 66 John Street, New York.

Metropolitan Enterprise.
GREAT GIFT SALE
OF THE
NEW YORK AND PROVIDENCE
Jewelers' Association.
Capital..... $1,000,000.
Depot, 558 Broadway.

An immense stock of Plated, Watches, Jewelry, and Fancy Goods, to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you see what you will get.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are first put in envelopes, and well mixed; one of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for 100 cents; for $1; SIXTY for $5; Sixty-five for $10; and one hundred for $15.

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to pay the dollar and take the article or not. Persons may also obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, Sewing Machine, or any Set of Jewelry or Gold Set, for $1; this in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no BLANKS in the distribution.

C. M. DUNN & CO., 558 Broadway, New York.

In these cases of weakly, retarded growth the necessary evil, the Sulphurous Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites has been found to excite the blood. Nourishes, &c., to a fine and vigorous growth. (See Testimonials.) The History and a small Sample of this Balsam forwarded on receipt of return postage.
JOHN HAWLEY, 8S, Broadway, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $30, $65, and $105. Type of the Finest Quality, $1 per lb. Send for a Circular to the LOVE PRESS COMPANY, 79 Water Street, Boston.

POPULAR NEW BOOKS
PUBLISHED BY
HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

☞ Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. By CHARLES DICKENS. COMPLETE. With Illustrations by MARCUS STONE. 8vo, 9 parts, 8vo, Paper, $1 00; one volume, Cloth, $1 50. Now Ready.

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Year 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AINSLEY, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

CAN YOU FORGIVE HIM? By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. Illustrated by HABLOT K. BROWNE. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $2 00. Now Edition.

THE STORY OF THE GREAT MARCH: Diary of General Sherman's Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas. By Brevet Major General WARD NICHOLS, Aid-de-Camp to General Sherman. With a Map and numerous Illustrations, and an Appendix, containing Official Reports by Major-General SHERMAN, Quartermaster and Commissary Reports, &c. Twenty-second Edition. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

DRAPER'S AMERICAN CIVIL POLITY. Thoughts on the Future Civil Policy of America. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D., Author of a "Treatise on Human Physiology," and a "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe." Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 50.

THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA: Showing where Petroleum is found; how it is Obtained, and at what Cost. With Hints for refining it and Valuable Recipes. By WILLIAM WRIGHT. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

CARRY'S CONFESSION. By the Author of "Mattie: a Story." 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

BRACKETT'S UNITED STATES CAVALRY. History of the United States Cavalry from the Formation of the Federal Government to the 1st of June, 1863. To which is added a List of all the Cavalry Regiments, with the Names of their Commanders, which have been in the United States Service since the breaking out of the Rebellion. By ALBERT G. BRACKETT, Brevet Colonel United States Army. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 75.

$25 A DAY. AGENTS WANTED to sell a new and wonderful SEWING MACHINE, the only cheap one licensed. Address
SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH. AGENTS WANTED for six entirely new articles, just out. Address O. D. GARDNER, Alfred Centre, Biddeford, Maine.

AGENTS and DEALERS in FANCY GOODS—a saleable and profitable article. Send 25 cents for sample and terms. Address, HANDLEY & EATMAN, No. 45 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

THE SALEM LEG.

All who desire an artificial Leg, unrivaled for comfort, strength, economy, durability, and elegant, pleasant ease to THE SALEM LEG COMPANY, 29 High Street, Salem, Mass. Pamphlets, containing full information concerning this original, ingenious, thoroughly tested, and durable leg. Soldiers entitled to Government aid receive this leg without charge. Manufacturing facilities for filling large orders. All applicants are supplied with promptness.

SANTA CLAUS.
Friend Antonnion Negro Dancers, imitating motions of flying negroes, and performing infinite amusement. Male Doll, $1 50 and $2; female dancer, $2 50; green, male and female, $3 50 per pair. Solar Seeing Machine. Children of all ages delighted with it. Coal Chart for Coal and Geologists. No. 1, $2; No. 2, $5; No. 3, $8. Orders with cash will receive prompt attention. Liberal Agents supplied.
BERENDSOHN BROTHERS, 105 Beekman St., N. Y.

THE
New York Weekly,
(The greatest Story and Sketch Paper published)
Is Now Ready,
AND
Contains the First Chapter of a New and Beautiful Story,
From the Pen of our Popular Contributor,
LOUIS LEON.

It is entitled
The Hunted Pioneers;
OR,
Strong Abe's Adventures among the Indians.
A TALE OF FRONTIER LIFE.

STRONG ABE, whose adventures among the Indians form the basis of these pages, belonged to a branch of the family of the late lamented

President of the United States.

He went to the wilderneses of Kentucky, where he became famous as a Scout, and was finally killed by the Indians; but the particulars of his removal to

The Dark and Bloody Grounds;

of the settlement he founded; of the daring deeds which won for him the sobriquet of "Strong Abe;" of his battles with

Scalp-Robe

(the terrible chief of the red-skins); of his noble and unselfish conduct during years of constant trials and danger, as the leader of the Pioneers—all these fascinating and thrilling subjects are for the first time fully represented and displayed in this narration. We confidently anticipate, therefore, that the publication of

THE HUNTED PIONEERS

will prove the greatest literary event of the day, attracting intense interest from one end of our country to the other; for not only are the persons and events figuring in the tale of a nature to be general favorites, but they also throw a most interesting light upon the sterling manhood of the ancestors of our glorious showing from whom he inherited his high qualities, and how worthy was the ancestor of his distinguished descendant.

Deceased President,

In brief, this thrilling record of the affections, friendships, dangers, manful devotion, &c., &c., of this great pioneer, the heroic scout, can not fail to charm the entire population of America. Let our readers all be on the look-out for it.

Also, just commenced,
The Diary of a Village Gossip,
From the Pen of the Gifted
ALMEDIA M. BROWN, whose
"Diary of a Minister's Wife"
so deeply interested our readers.

TERMS:

The New York Weekly is sold by all News Agents throughout the Union. The Price is Six Cents, but in cases where agents have to pay extra freight a higher price is charged. When there is a News Agent in the town, we desire our friends to get the Weekly through him. We do not wish to mail the paper except to places where there is no other means of getting it. When sent by mail: Single Copies, $3 00 per annum; Four Copies, $10 00; Eight Copies, $20 00. The party who sends us $20 00 for a club of Eight Copies (all sent at one time) will be entitled to a copy free. Postmasters and others who get up clubs in their respective towns, can afterward add single copies at $2 50. The postage on the Weekly to all parts of the country is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered.

STREET & SMITH, Proprietors
11 Frankfort Street, New York.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT TIMEKEEPER. Elegant Pocket Timepieces for Ladies and Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the Patent supposed Scientific Principles and warranted to Discount Solar Time with absolute certainty for the shortest space possible. We defy fair then the most exact and elaborate timekeeper of modern manufacture to keep more correct time. It requires no key or winding up; Solar Time knows, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a most interesting study. Just introduced into this country from Europe, and is now offered for sale at the low price of $1. Five for a single case, with plain or fancy outside dial, in gold or silver gilt case, will be sent, post-paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Each watch is packed in cases neat, artistic being the only one ever introduced into this country, and no one can afford to lose buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, and a no matter at what price, as in this case we will be able to Free and Instantaneous. Beware of Imitations, who imitate this advertisement with a view to swindling the public, by offering a useless article with a slight alteration of name; we'll TAKE OFF a good Time-Keeper. All orders must be address to J. W. DOLLY-MORE & CO., Solar Timekeepers, Jersey City, N. J.

MAGNIFICENT SALE.

GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., &c.

THE ONE DOLLAR PLAN.

THE ENTIRE STOCK of one Gold and Silver Watch Manufactory, two immense Jewelry Establishments, one Musical Instrument Store, one Machine Warehouse, one Silver Plating Warehouse, one Gold and Fancy Goods Maker, to be disposed of at less than ONE DOLLAR EACH TO COST.

The goods are of fashionable style and most excellent workmanship, and are guaranteed in this manner, to satisfy the customers from embarrassment occasioned by a distrustful spirit.

THE PLAN IS SIMPLE.

The name of each article is offered for sale on Gold Hunting Watch, Musical Box, Silver Cake Basket, &c.—is written on a card and inclosed in a sealed envelope; and envelopes so thus placed in a drawer and well mixed; then so as to afford a certain, with 25 cents for postage, package and charges, one of the cards or certificates is taken out at random, and sent by first mail to the purchaser, who will see at once that he can get for ONE DOLLAR. One certificate will be sent for 25 cents; 3 for $1; 7 for $2; 14 for $3; 65 for $10; and 150 for $15.

Agents will be wanted in all parts of the country to operate for us. A large compensation will be paid. Send for terms, &c., in forming agency. Write your NAME, TOWN, COUNTY, and state plainly, and address

GOLDSWORTH BROTHERS,
163 Broadway, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our extensive stock of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are headquarters for the following Stereoscopic and Stereoscopic Views.

Of these we have in constant store and ready, including Our Own Publication,

OVER 10,000 VIEWS,

Obtained at great expense and forming a complete PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF NATURE AND ART.

Bull Run,
Yorktown,
Gettysburgh,
Fair Oaks,
Savage Station,
Fredericksburgh,
Fairfax,
Richmond,
Dutch Gap,
Monitors,
Fort Morgan,
Charleston,
Florida,
Portress Monroe,
Hanover Junction,
Lookout Mountain,
Chickahominy,
City Point,
Nashville,
Petersburgh,
Pole Plain,
Chattanooga,
Atlanta,
Mobile,
Strawberry Plains,
&c.

American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, &c., &c. Also, Reviving Stereoscopes, for gentle or private exhibition. Stereoscopes to be sent to any address on receipt of stamps.

Photographic Albums.

We were the first to introduce these into the United States and we manufacture immense quantities (at Factory, 205 Broadway), and keep in store from 50 sizes to $15. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of containing more Photographs than any other Album. They will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

☞ Full Price List MADE TO ORDER. ☜

The Trade will find our Albums the most Saleable they can buy.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects (to which additions are continually made) of Eminent Americans, &c., viz.: about

100 Military Men, 60 Generals, 650 Statesmen,
100 Sailors, 150 Officers, 100 Prelates,
50 Authors, 70 Navy Officers, 125 Actors,
25 Artists, 50 Prominent Women.
250 Copies of Works of Art,

including copies of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

An order for One Dozen Pictures from our Catalogue, will fit Glass and Frame of 40 in. and will be sent by mail.

Photographers and others entering goods for sale, please send for our Catalogue and Price List. Sent on receipt of Stamp.

☞ The prices and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. The best, and cheapest in the market. Monthly payments received for the same. Second-hand pianos at bargains from $50 to $225. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Only place for second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

Agents Wanted.

$10 A Day easy made $10.

By selling Engraved Tags, Oval Photograph-pins, and Stationery Packages. Sample and Price List Outfree. Terms, &c.

HARRIS & CO., 58 Chatham Street, N. Y.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

AMERICAN GOLD JACKET TIME-KEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to denote solar time with perfect accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every one. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Neat, elegant, and reliable in every particular; and never get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, 50 cents each; three for $1; seven for $2; 15 for $3. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION.—Beware of worthless imitations of Gilded and Bronzed Pins, &c., offered for sale by irresponsible parties, and all advertising the Yankee Gold Jacket Time-Keeper. All orders must be address to J. W. DOLLYMORE & CO., Solar Timekeepers, Jersey City, N. J.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. WM. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Croup, Croup, Pneumonia, Pleurisy, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.

$10,000 DOLLARS REWARD is offered for a better recipe. It contains no Opium, Morphine, Alcohol, Tobacco, or anything that can be injurious to the most delicate child.

DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS strikes at the root of the disease at once. The most distressing cough is frequently relieved by a dose or two, and a bottle or two for a few hours' time. The afflicted do not have to take bottle after bottle before they find whether the remedy will afford relief or not.

This is no nostrum preparation, but one which, if used in season, will save the lives of thousands. It has effected a cure in almost every case where the faculty of physicians in this country and in Europe have been employed, and have given up all hope, and in vain. Cases which they have pronounced incurable, and sufferers whom they have given over to die, after using from 2 to 3 bottles without a single ray to relieve them in their gloom, have been cured by DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and the "VICTORIES OF CONSUMPTION" are now so vigorous and strong as to defy disease and death. Even those cases are not inclined ones; they are numerous, and can be pointed out in every community. Its wonderful and beneficial remedy has been tested. Full directions will be found in pamphlets around each bottle.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
No. 380 Canal Street, New York.

TO THE LADIES.

The Only Perfect Dye.

DR. PERRY'S Bath & Toilette Lotion, which is prompt, infallible, and harmless. Produces, by One Application, Beautiful Brown or Black. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 a bottle. Send for Circular.

Curl your Hair.—Curling Fluid will curl your hair into ringlets, curls, and locks 6 months. Price $1, by mail. Address H. A. JAGGERS, Cincinnati, O.

Here it is! Full instructions by which a person can make a fortune in a few hours, and can make a world of fun and a fortune, sent for 50 cts. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Address FRANKLIN & JAGGERS, Cincinnati, O.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.

THESE CELEBRATED MACHINES we can now furnish to the public, confidently as they do all the IMPROVEMENTS in Family Sewing Machines which have proved so popular in the perfection of Sewing Machines. We invite all inspection and to examine the "ELLIPTIC" before purchasing. Salesrooms, 597 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS, LOOK AT THIS.

A sample and catalogue of articles every body needs, sent free for one stamp. Address

H. RIVINGTON & CO., 609 Broadway, New York.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunnewell Process gives the composition of ingredients for Ladies, and numerous other things worth having, will be found in the "TIMES OF WONDERS." For copies send 25 cents to Box 5051, New York.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

It is over twenty years since this celebrated remedy was introduced to the American People. During all this time it has performed hundreds and thousands of the most astonishing cures, and its reputation and sale have now reached a point that far surpasses any remedy of the present or past ages. It has received the most genuine proofs as to its system of virtue, but by the actual merit of the article itself. If you are afflicted with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, it is recommended, with the Hoofland's Liver Complaint, as a certain remedy for disorder of the Digestive Organs. It will not fail to satisfy the most skeptical patient. For sale by all Druggists. It is not an alcoholic drink.

H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, N. Y.

GREENBACKS are GOOD.—SCRAPS are BETTER.

The best tonic and again preventive in the world. 50,000 bottles sold monthly. Sold by dealers every where. Beware of counterfeits. Wholesale Agents, New York: B. W. Rickets, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

FIRST PREMIUM IMPROVED $5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 16, 1865; Improvement patented October 3, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with many valuable attachments, a most wonderful and elegantly-constructed Novelty, is noiseless in operation, does not fatigue the operator, and works harmoniously with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD OF ALL SIZES. Makes the strongest, most durable and regular lock stitch, alike on both sides, and with extraordinary rapidity, making STITCHES by a self-acting evenness of the wheel. Will hem, fell, bind, ruffle, shirr, tuck, run up beading, &c., &c.; requires the least possible power to do the largest range of work, and is the strongest machine made, and will last a lifetime. Has received the first premium at every fair where it has been in competition at State Fairs, and received the approval of all the various Institutes at which it has been exhibited.

For the Manufacturer it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a vacant place.—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"It has a common-sense look, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—Independent.

"With high speed, it runs very light, silently yet very forcibly, with a common needle, takes the running stitch exactly like hand-sewing."—Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, post paid, for $5, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price. Liberal discount to the trade. Agents wanted in every town. Circular containing illustrations sent free.

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
No. 36 Broadway, Room 5, New York.

ALL WORKS ON PHONOGRAPHY, HYDROPATHY, PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PATHOLOGY, ETHNOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PSYCHOLOGY, ANATOMY, MEDICINE, AGRICULTURE, EDUCATION, &c., supplied by FOWLER AND WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York. See our SPECIAL LIST of Private Medical Works. Terms, CASH.

$1,000,000 Worth

OF

Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, by sale. Call or send for list. Know what you are to receive.

136 Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each $125 00
636 Silver Watches ..... each $20 00 to 35 00
1,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases..... " 6 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. The number of articles and variety at ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:

Watches, Jewelry, Silverware, Plated Ware, Pistols, Accordeons, Violins, Guitars, Flutes, Musical Boxes, Work-boxes, Dressing-cases, Writing-desks, Portmonnaies, Pocket-books, Port-folios, Albums, Opera-glasses, Spy-glasses, Telescopes, Fishing-tackle, Base-ball Implements, Cricket Implements, Croquet Implements, Chessmen, Backgammon Boards, Dominoes, Cribbage Boards, Chess Boards, Work-baskets, Dressing-combs, Port-mon

NOTHING CERTAIN.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. "Ah, Mr. S., when I have left you forever, you'll Miss me then!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL...$1,000,000. SURPLUS...$1,000,000.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on favorable terms.
J. L. WORTH, Cashier.
NEW YORK, August 21, 1865.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 2d Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie-Crust, eaten with impunity, and no fear of the generally appreciative feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PAYSON'S YEAST POWDERS. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 136 Front St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

$20. G. & S. CRYSTAL D. P. $20.
$1000 A year can be made by gilding and publishing the Crystal Door Plate. Agents wanted. Stock, Tools, and Instructions cost $20. L. L. TODD & CO.,
39 Nassau Street, New York.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
BY HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co.'s CHAMPAGNE.
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and consumers acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne. Wine. Sold by boat or duty paid by A. W. NITCHIE, 58 Beaver St., N. Y.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
Measuring Card,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a PERFECT FIT.
E. A. BROOKS'S
BOOT AND SHOE EMPORIUM,
No. 575 Broadway, New York.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
E. A.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 602 Broadway, Box 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for circular. Pipes $6 to $10 each.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS AND GOLD
Bought and Sold on Commission.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostate gland, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

CHOICE MEDICAL BOOKS. Send for Catalogue to FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCHU,
Cures diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, &c. Price $1.00. DOSE, 20. Sold by D. HANNER & CO., 162 F. C. WELLS, 170 ... CO., New York. DYER, BROWN & BOURNE, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
BOSWELL & WARNER'S COLOGITIC colors beautifully and naturally. Non-explosive, no stain, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 9 Day St., N. Y.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

Agents Wanted
To canvass for our new, beautifully illustrated, and thrilling interesting volume of WAR EXPERIENCES. CAMP FIRE AND COTTON FIELD, by Thos. W. KNOX, Herald Correspondent. Full of starrily exciting incidents, amusing anecdotes, ingenious stratagems, life in camp and bivouac; together with simple and reliable directions to those who design engaging in cotton culture at the South. Send for circular. BELFORD & CO., 10 Beekman St., New York.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemen's Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $3, $4, $5, and $8 a set. Ivory and Pearl Shell-Buckles, $1 50 to $6 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 571 Broadway.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nerves and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 98 Chambers Street, New York.

Philadelphia Photographic Co.
Trade supplied with best quality of card pictures at lowest rates. Sent to all parts of the U.S. Send for large variety. No. 720 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Agents Wanted Every Where.
RETURNED SOLDIERS,
And every body with a small capital, can make $20 per day selling our great, new, and wonderful extra large size, fine quality stationery packages. Every dollar invested more than doubled. Splendid gold and silver watches presented free to all who act as our agents. Smart men wanted in every village and town to establish agencies. County rights free, sales immense, demand increasing. Every body buys them. Send for our new circulars, containing extra premium inducements, free.
W. D. GILBERT & CO., STATIONERS,
192 Nassau Street, New York.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

$150 A MONTH MADE BY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, Sailors, Widows, with Stencil Tools. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vermont.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free to any address.
S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

Catalogue of Langenheim's
MAGIC LANTERN PICTURES,
Dissolving and Stereoscopic Views.
All artistically executed, embracing the principal events of the Great Rebellion; Sacred History, Old and New Testament; Pictures illustrative of the different Schools of Art; Gems of Humorous and Miscellaneous Pictures. Improved Lanterns and Stereoscopic Apparatus.
W. LANGENHEIM,
Philadelphia P. O., Box 2075.

25 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with catalogue of terms to agents. Address
HAYWARD & CO.,
229 Broadway, New York.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Scrofula, the most constitutional incurable until the great discovery of Holloway Pills and Ointment flashed upon the world. Ulcerous sores bathe the skin of the Medical Schools, readily yield to these peerless remedies. Scurvy, erysipelas, Tetterworm, Itch, and all cutaneous eruptions are curable by them.

THE WEBBER PIANO
Is considered by the leading Musicians, by the Native, at Piano-Forte Association, the Conservatory of Music, and other Musical Schools, the Best Piano-Forte Manufactured,
because of their GREAT POWER, SWEETNESS AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE, PERFECT EQUALITY, ELASTIC TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.
Warerooms 429 Broome St., New York.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Goose" our own make: BI-CARB. SODA.
SODA ASH—Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co's, Kurtz's, John Shaw's.
CAUSTIC SODA—J. G. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co's, Musgrave Brothers', and Huntley's.
SAL SODA—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
SALERATUS—Farnum, Excelsior, and Double Refined, made at our own works.
Perfectly pure Cream Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Flor. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Terra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Shoreham Palm Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Rosin, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are "Tried Friends." Established in 1847.
OFFICE—136 and 138 Cedar St., New York (next slide).

HOW TO MAKE AN ORATOR.
BEADLE'S DIME ELOCUTIONIST.
A new Guide to Public Speaking.
For sale by all Booksellers and News-Dealers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of ten cents.
BEADLE & CO., Publishers, 118 William St., N. Y.

DEMULCENT,
HONEY, GLYCERINE AND PALM
SOAPS,
J. C. HULL'S SOAPS,
32 PARK PLACE, NEW-YORK.
Manufacturer of 100 different styles of Soaps.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the smallest, lightest, and most effective REVOLVER in the world. It combines compactness, durability, effectiveness, and power with lightness, simplicity of operating, convenience and safety in carrying, to a degree not attained by any other arm made. It carries a heavier metallic cartridge than any Revolver made of same size and weight. 7-8. Cartridge—centre fire, Water-proof. Light arm (14 oz.), large ball (36-100), six-shot, and only 7 inches in extreme length.
For sale by dealers and the trade generally.
C. H. GOLD & HICKOX, 84 Cliff St., New York.

Stammering
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. G. C. Bates, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SCHILBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for Piles, Old Wounds, Scrofula, Salt-Rheum—all Boils and Skin Diseases, &c. 93 Bowery, New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying sixty times. Mailed free on receipt of 50 CENTS, OR THREE FOR $1.00.
Address E. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

LADIES' PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS,
WHOLESALE & RETAIL.
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

K-Y-M-C.
LAVADENTEM
FOR THE MOUTH.
TO KEEP CIDER SWEET, use the Siphonic Faucet, to be had in all first-class groceries. Manufactured by WM. CLEVELAND, Orange, N. J.

SEND 25 cts. for sack, to TOWNSEND, Novo Dealer, Meadville, Pennsylvania, and receive the best MAP or the PETROLEUM OIL REGIONS, Free, by Mail.

Portable Printing Offices.
For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Families, Druggists, and all who wish to send handy, cheap, and expeditious Circular and Price-Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., to Users. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 59 and 61 Dutch Street, New York.

Heating and Cooking by Gas cheaper than coal or wood.
EAGLE GAS HEATING STOVES will heat Offices, Parlors, Dining, Sleeping, and Bath Rooms.
Descriptive Catalogue sent free. Address
Eagle Gas Stove Manufacturing Co.,
461 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 465.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

GENERAL GRANT'S BIRTH-PLACE.

We present our readers on this page a sketch of the birth-place of Lieutenant-General U. S. GRANT, at Point Pleasant, Clermont County, Ohio. The house in which the distinguished General was born has undergone no changes, with the exception of a new roof. The weather-boarding gives evidence of age in the numerous crevices which are apparent in our illustration.

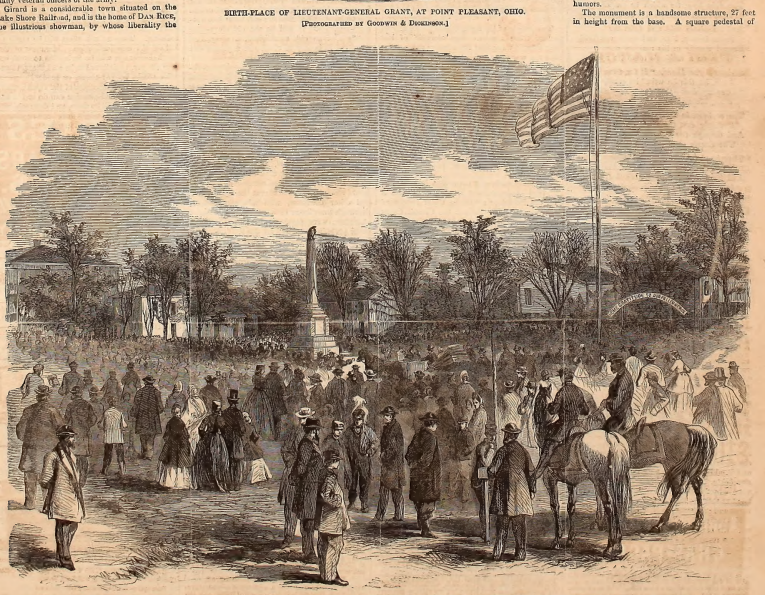
Point Pleasant is on the Ohio River, twenty-five miles above Cincinnati. With the exception of being the place of General GRANT's nativity the village has little to distinguish it from any other.

Indian Creek runs close to the house a short distance before entering the river. The house was built before the General's father came into possession. It is now occupied by a German family.

Our sketch is from a photograph taken by Mr. JAMES GOODWIN, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, to whom our thanks are due for his courtesy in allowing us the copy.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT IN ERIE COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

THE inauguration of the monument erected at Girard, Pennsylvania, to the memory of the fallen heroes of Erie County took place November 1. Six or seven thousand people were congregated together on this interesting occasion. Among these were many veteran officers of the army.



Girard is a considerable town situated on the Lake Shore Railroad, and is the home of DAN RICE, the illustrious showman, by whose liberality the monument was built. It would not be amiss if his example were followed by other wealthy men in other counties. The monument is located in a small, uninclosed square in the centre of the town.

At 12 M. the ceremonies commenced with an imposing procession, an important feature of which was a tableau car, drawn by the elephant "Romeo," accompanied by a "baby elephant." The car contained thirty-six young ladies, representing the States of the Union. After the uncovering of the monument Governor CURTIN delivered an address which was eloquent and appropriate to the occasion. After the address a fulsome impromptu was introduced. A young lady, who represented Pennsylvania in the tableau car, and another representing South Carolina, approached Governor CURTIN, each holding two bouquets. Pennsylvania presented her bouquet, and said, addressing Governor C., "Accept this as a tribute to the Soldiers' Friend;" and South Carolina then presented her bouquet in silence. The Governor received both bouquets, and gallantly saluted the fair givers with kisses. Proceeding then to DAN RICE, seated near, Pennsylvania offered her second bouquet, saying, "We appreciate your noble munificence. Accept this." South Carolina, as before, presented her gift in silence. Mr. RICE hesitated about giving the salutation of Governor CURTIN, but not long. This pleasant affair was followed by an address from Ex-Governor TOD, of Ohio, who was followed, reluctantly, by DAN RICE, who made a few remarks, putting his audience in the best of humors.

The monument is a handsome structure, 27 feet in height from the base. A square pedestal of

BIRTH-PLACE OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT, AT POINT PLEASANT, OHIO.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GOODWIN & DICKINSON.]

INAUGURATION OF THE MONUMENT DEDICATED TO THE FALLEN HEROES OF ERIE COUNTY, AT GIRARD, PENNSYLVANIA, NOVEMBER 1, 1865.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY THOMAS SWEENY, CLEVELAND, OHIO.]

nite and marble, with four upright cannon at corners, supports a plain round column draped th the American flag and surmounted by an
gle. It was built by MR. LEONARD W. VOLK, Chicago, at a cost of about $2000. The cost ll be increased by the addition of a fence, in ne of the temporary ones of wood that now inose the monument. Its location is in the cenof the Square, the roadway passing on each side
t. On the northern side is the inscription:

IN MEMORY
OF THE
OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS
FROM ERIE COUNTY, PENN.,
WHO GAVE THEIR LIVES
IN DEFENSE OF THEIR COUNTRY.

HYMN TO PEACE.

BY H. T. TUCKERMAN.

Amid the tinted umbrage now,
The scarlet vines and yellow weeds,
With gracious smile and pensive bow,
See Autumn tell her closing deeds.

When last I watched the deep'ning blue
Of sea and sky, her tranquil glow
Was stained by battle's lurid hue,
And darkened by a nation's woe.

Serene once more her blazoned crest
Of purple bars and amber fleece
Kindles the vistas of the West
With Nature's heredity of Peace.

While fragrant smoke from burning leaves
With incense fills the crystal air,
On shore and upland clustered sheaves
The harvest's mellow luster wear.

O Peace! no listless spell is thine,
The ruddy end of aimless strife,
We fondly linger at thy shrine
To hallow, not to deaden life.

Thy prelude Bethlehem's shepherds heard,
In holy evidence never cease
For the Redeemer's parting word,
His welcome and farewell, was "Peace!"

And when the hard whose lofty fame
In exile rose, by age renewed,
To the lone convent's portal came,
Wistful and wan but unsubdued;

As in the friar's hand he laid
For coming time the pensive scroll,
The only boon for which he prayed
Was Peace—tranquillity of soul.

And he whose wild and fitful lay
From beauty, love, and scorn was bred,
Paused ankle in his reckless way,
When on a maiden's tomb he read:—

She prays for Peace; "If far from kin
I die, let this be writ," he cried,
"Over my grave—that death may win
What life and love and fame denied."

The zephyrs, in their gentle play,
Benignly cast the downy seed,
And through the quiet summer day
The clouds electric currents feed

The placid lake reflects the skies,
The calm drift yields the alpine rose,
And Truth's pure image ever lies
In hearts that own thy blest repose

Thine is fruition's brooding sleep
When passion's lull binds thought awake,
Wisdom her patient vigil keep,
And Love her sacred mission take:

To stay the ruthless hand of crime
And awe the rage of lust and fear,
The fruits of Nature and of Time
Again to earn and to rear;

Our country's rankling wounds to heal
By faith supreme, with tender pride,
And guard with consecrated zeal
The cause for which her martyrs died

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1865.

THE AUTUMN ELECTIONS.

THE Autumn Elections are over. Several local and the largest State of the Union have voted for the first time since the end of actual hostilities, and the result is another impressive manifestation of popular government. Foreign statesmen and many Americans have always feared that a free people must be a mob, and would show itself as extremely bold, fierce and fickle. The trial has revealed that these were exactly wrong. No nation in history, tried as this has been, has been at once so humane and patient, so reasonable and resolute.

But party-spirit had hoped and predicted that with the cessation of armed hostilities would come a reaction which would sweep away the real results of the war. The party which first palliated the rebellion; then, dismayed by the vehemence of popular patriotism, held its tongue; then, when the pressure of the war began to be felt, opened its mouth to disheartten the people, to thwart the Government, and to encourage the rebels, fondly believed that the return of peace would demoralize and destroy the great party which had saved the Government. It was supposed that such a party was held together only by the necessities of the war—that it was composed of those who had a hundred different views of public policy—and that it would disappear with the occasion that created it. Probably it will, when that condition is fulfilled. The political blunder was in supposing that the occasion was past.

The Union party grew out of the danger of the Union. It will have finished its work when the Union is secure. But the Union can be menaced by intrigue as well as by arms. The Union is not secure until every late rebel State has shown that it accepts in good faith the conditions required by the judgment of the world. This point is doubtful the necessity of the Union party is as imperative as ever, and it is that instinct which has carried every where and unanimously the autumn elections.

Another element must not be forgotten, and that is the feeling of the soldiers. The men who have been offering their limb in the field will never forget the party which declared their efforts useless and the country conquered. Those who betrayed the soldiers they will not remember. A Copperhead is henceforth more odious in this country than a Tory after the Revolution; and because the Democratic party was controlled by Copperheads it has lost its ascendency as absolutely and irretrievably as the Federal party after the last war. Nor can such a party be resuscitated, even upon new issues, except by the overthrow of its old leaders. There are men in the country who can rebuild parties as dead mice scent a louse. They must be utterly removed or the house is not habitable by decent lodgers.

But the crowning glory of the autumn elections is their revelation of the fact that the people of the United States stand heartily together in support of the Executive and Congress. That is the text from which the United States are to be the sermon. Hitherto we have not been true to our republican principles even in ourselves. The world has been able by a single sneer to put us on our defense; and our apology has not been accepted because the offense was inexcusable. But by infinite sorrow we have expiated the crime, and the election show that we mean to make the expiation effectual. If we do not imagine the millennium will, no State legislature or convention and no national party will be able to prevent the country from securing the freedom which it has bestowed.

The people of the unorganized States should ponder these results. The autumn of the year showed them that the country did not believe the war to be a failure, and that it meant, to fight it out upon that line to victory. The election of this year should show them that the popular purpose is unrelaxed, and that all the advantages gained by the war are to be definitely, finally, unconditionally secured. The country has solemnly proclaimed that it is not so necessary that the disorganized States should resume their relations to the Union speedily as that they should resume them safely.

THE TRIAL OF DAVIS.

THE only authentic statement in regard to the trial of JEFFERSON DAVIS for treason is that the President asked the Chief Justice of the United States whether the Circuit Court in Virginia would be soon prepared to undertake the trial of great treason; and that the Chief Justice replied that it was not becoming the courts of the United States to sit in regions still subject to military rule.

We can easily imagine that the Chief Justice may have also thought that there was one consideration at least which rendered the question partial undesirable, and that is the possibility, as in all trials, of a disagreement of the jury. The country has decided by the most prolonged and careful war, by the successful operations of vast armies and navies, by an incalculable sacrifice of precious life and an enormous expenditure of money, that whether lawful or unlawful, constitutional or unconstitutional, there shall be no secession of States from the Union. The doctrine of State sovereignty, which was the only plea of the rebellion, has been judged in the battle-field and overthrown by arms. The national decree is irreversible except by another appeal to war.

Now if the jury upon the trial of DAVIS should think him guilty of treason, they would merely affirm what the country has already decided. If the jury should disagree, that result would have the same effect as an acquittal. If it should acquit him, the Government and the country would be convicted of the unspeakable crime of vast and desolating war unlawfully waged against men whom the highest court of the country would have justified in their action. Is there any reason why the country should be exposed to this tragical and absurd dilemma?

But we are told that there are a great many persons who wish to have the highest judicial assertion of the fact that there is such a crime as treason. That is undoubtedly true; and if the result of the trial could be assured, and a verdict against the prisoner were a matter of course, there would be no difference of opinion. But if the jury were packed, not only would its verdict settle nothing, but the fact could not be concealed, and would overwhelm the country with ignominy. And if it were not packed there remains the chance of disagreement or acquittal, in which case quite as many persons as those who wish to have the judicial affirmation that treason is a crime would curse the Government for the lives of husbands, sons, and kindred massacred in an unlawful war.

We are also asked whether the enormity of the crime should condone the offense. Certainly not. But neither the conviction nor acquittal of DAVIS would in the least degree affect the public judgment of the enormity of his offense; and although his execution might gratify the natural feeling of those who wish to see at least one traitor executed, yet the remarks of the President to the South Carolina delegation plainly implied that, even if convicted, he would not be hung.

The simple question then recurs, Is it desirable, for the purpose of having JEFFERSON DAVIS judicially declared guilty of treason, to take the chance of having the Government convicted of waging a cruel and unlawful war?

Shall nobody, then, be punished for this fiendish crime? asks some impatient friend. But what is the object of legal punishment—is it revenge or prevention? Did not the old judge truly state the theory of legal punishment when he said to the convicted horse-thief: "Friend, you are to be hung not because you stole a horse, but that horses may not be stolen." Are not the consequences of the war the universal ruin of the rebels, the freedom of the slaves, the political guarantees which in a single exact, the vast loss of rebel life in the field—are not these to the rebels the punishment of their crimes? If the object of punishment be to deter offenders, will the hanging of any dozen men prevent future rebellion if the waste and ruin and mortality of the war do not?

We are told, moreover, that the public mind regards this point very differently, now that it can more calmly survey the whole question.

THE WARS OF THE BROKERS.

IN the course of the coming month the New York Stock Exchange will remove into its new building on Broad and Wall streets; and then, it is understood, the enmity which has so long been smouldering between that institution and the Open Board of Brokers will burst into active hostilities. It will be the old story—the struggle of the established, wealthy, and powerful monopoly to crush out a young and enterprising rival.

Until within two or three years the stock-brokerage business had always been monopolized by the New York Stock Exchange. This was a close corporation. To obtain admission to membership required to pass the ordeal of a secret ballot; five black balls out of an aggregate vote of over 150 excluded a candidate. Needless to add that the most worthy and unexceptionable applicants were frequently excluded. The Board had traditional prejudices. One was against foreigners, meaning Germans. One German—a young man of high character and fair capital—obtained admission; but the Board resolved never to repeat the indulgence, and other Germans, with adequate means, thorough knowledge of business, and stainless character, were constantly excluded. Another prejudice was against Jews. Two Jews had by accident crept into this sacred body. But the Board inexorably closed its doors against their co-religionists. Men who were in every way entitled to seats in the Board, whose character and responsibility were beyond question, were firmly excluded, for the single reason that they frequented the synagogue. Prejudices thus flatly recognized as good grounds for exclusion, they were excluded according to the views of members. One man was excluded for many years because he was loud and rough—a foolish talker. Another because he displayed a silly vanity. Another because, at a time when Democracy was akin to Copperheadism, he had presided over a Democratic meeting. Another, it is said, because his manners were coarse, and it was rumored he ate peas with his knife. Many were shut out for no reason at all except the foolishness of old members, who had seen business pass away from them, and who sought revenge and solace by obstructing it in the faces of younger aspirants. When five votes out of 150 sufficed to exclude a candidate it was easy enough to monster the requisite number among the slaves of prejudice and the spiteful veteludinarians. Of course there were very many members to whom this was distasteful, in whom were as liberal in their business principles as in their private dealings; but they could not or would not control the Board.

It may seem incredible that such principles governed a body which actually controlled the traffic in public and corporate securities. If the Stock Exchange had been a social club their exclusiveness might have been understood. But to deprive a man of the right of following his trade—in the only place in which that trade could be followed to advantage—because he was German born, or a Jew, or a vulgar man at table, or a young man without friends seems, at this day, almost too preposterous for belief. It was, however, the policy of the New York Stock Exchange for many years. Its monstrous absurdity may be realized by anybody with other trades. If the corn dealers, for instance, should refuse to suffer Jews to buy and sell corn or wheat, or the grocers to allow Germans to deal in teas and sugars, or the tailors to permit their journeymen to cut out breeches on their own account, or lawyers to tolerate ill-bred men in the courts, or doctors to admit duly licensed students to consultations, what a storm of ridicule would be showered on the heads of the would-be monopolists! Yet this is what the stock-brokers did successfully for many years.

When the suspension of specie payments in 1861 led to an increase of general business in stocks the brokers who were excluded from the Stock Exchange established a Board of their own, known to those days by the dingy title of the "Coal-hole." To the annoyance of the Stock Exchange business poured in upon the new organization. It was immediately determined to crush it out. Resolutions were passed forbidding members of the Stock Exchange from visiting the "Coal-hole" or sending orders thither. This vermilion edict was expected to annihilate the mushroom upstart. Within a month, however, a remarkable discovery was made. This was that speculators in stocks proposed to control their own business, and had no notion of being excluded from a market because brokers did not choose to deal there. Members of Stock Exchange discovered that if they would not send orders to the "Coal-hole" their customers would, and so, to avoid losing their business, they rescinded their edict.

Since then the "Coal-hole" has made way for the Open Board of Brokers, a vigorous and wealthy institution, with ample rooms, open to the public, and as many members as the New York Stock Exchange, for some time this Board has done more business than its older rival.

To cope with it the Stock Exchange has relaxed many of its rules. A man is not now necessarily excluded because he is a Jew or a German. He is not taken for black balls to exclude instead of five. And members of the New York Stock Exchange send their orders to the Open Board to be executed just as freely as to their own rooms.

All this, we hear, is to be changed when the Stock Exchange takes possession of its new building. Every effort will be made to kill off the new institution. Members of the Stock Exchange will be forbidden to send orders thither, to deliver stocks there, to receive stocks bought there, or to deal directly or indirectly with members of the Open Board. The wealth and prestige can do a great deal, if the Open Board will be done, and done with relentless purpose. It might have been supposed, in the light pursued in other trades, and the equities of the case, to say nothing of the obvious impolicy of provoking a conflict among brokers, that an effort would have been made by the New York Stock Exchange to conciliate all parties, and to gather under its ample roof all responsible persons engaged honestly in the business of stock-brokerage and exchange. But the old traditions, it seems, are too powerful to be overcome. In the eye of an old member of the Stock Exchange no man has the right to make a living as a broker outside of that body: perish the business rather than our monopoly!

So, within a month, dealers in stocks may look out for a "pleasant fight." The Stock Exchange offers to the public greater prestige and stronger rival. The latter proposes to do the business of brokerage at one-half its ancient rival's rates. The Stock Exchange transacts its business with closed doors in secret. The Open Board admits every body to its sessions; an operator sees his order executed under his eye. Whether under these circumstances the public will submit to be deprived of the markets now offered by the Open Board is—to obedient ears—the behest of the New York Stock Exchange—remains to be seen.

HENRY WIRZ.

THE guilty agent of the men who determined that one brave boy should die by cruel and horrible torture in the pen of Andersonville has been hung. He did not deny that somebody ought to suffer for those unimaginable crimes; and he trust that "COLONEL FORNEY, Master of the Guards," and all who believed with him that the horrors of rebel prisons were "a Federal device to fill the ranks with rebel wounds of HENRY WIRZ: "I admit that prisoners were brutally treated, but deny that I am the guilty party."

The real instigators of this atrocity will perhaps never be personally known. But history and the human heart will forever hold those morally responsible who in high positions and by the necessity of the case were familiar with all military details within the rebel lines. If rebel prisoners in our hands had been "brutally treated," as WIRZ confessed ours in rebel hands had been, by tens of thousands, until the land shuddered with shame and indignation, and

ABRAHAM LINCOLN had set plainly in the White House, and General GRANT had smoked calmly in his tent, and neither of them had stopped absolutely and finally those dreadful deeds, their names would justly be as infamous as now they are honored and beloved. No sophistry could conceal their guilty responsibility, and none can acquit the men who held corresponding positions among the rebels. Those are crimes against God and man which ought not to be forgotten, and those for which WISE suffered and of which his masters share the guilt are of them.

It is a curious and awful retribution; but these horrors of Andersonville were but the natural and almost inevitable result of the system of cery which this country so long tolerated. You can not deny his natural rights to any man without becoming indifferent to the rights of every man. When man, under any circumstances, is systematically regarded and treated as a thing or a brute, the supersession of the slave-code is exquisite and perfect that humanity itself pays the penalty.

The declaration of the late rebel slaveholders in the Southern States, that emancipation has been imposed upon them, and that caste shall be maintained, is another expression of precisely the same spirit which led the jailers of WIRZ, of Belle Isle, and Salisbury, and Andersonville, and which at this moment taunts and murders the colored soldiers in the streets. That spirit is the unclean devil which tortures this country, and there will be no national health until it is utterly cast out.

WHAT IS A STATE?

WHATEVER the differences of philosophy in the various views entertained of the present relation of the late rebel States to the Union, there are points that are realized by common opinions: one that of the late rebels themselves and the Northern Copperheads, which is, that the rebels in certain States having laid down their arms the States are by that fact restored to all their former rights and privileges in the Union; and the other that of the Republican and loyal men in all the States, which is, that they can resume their ancient position only by the consent of the Government and people as represented in it may impose. The grounds upon which this latter view is held are very many and even conflicting. But it would be difficult to find a clearer or stronger statement of one view than the one which we subjoin:

"A people having a government to, so long as it conforms to its idea of right, is sovereign within the limits of that State. So long and no longer, one year or a thousand years. When Rome had only Rome to govern, she governed Rome. When she had Italy, Italy was hers. When she had Poland, and Algiers, and Naples, and Mexico of the Montezumas, and Peru of the Incas, and Asia Minor, and Armenia, Peru and Mexico became possessions of Spain, and Naples of Victor Emanuel, and Algiers of France, and Poland of the partitioning powers, and Rome of the homeless nations and tribes that broke through her barriers. If the land they stood on has been subsequently lost, then those States would not have been more efficiently destroyed than under a war which had overwhelmed their armies."

Now, on the other hand, the Old Thirteen were there to explain until they acquired governments, then they became States, and in simply calling the Constitution the bond of the Union. So all the new accessions except Texas were first Territories, then States, then, on admission, States in the Union. Texas was not a clockwork-machine, but a machinery in it, or from which the machinery has been removed, a clock, or a people which never had a clock or government, or whose government has been destroyed, a State. To do so is absurd for obvious reductions. Last week the thousand feet above all other lands around is a mountain. Why, if we were to sink, leaving a lake in its place, that still is a mountain still?

"States to the Union" differ from States out of it only in certain relations they bear to each other. These relations ceasing in fact as to any one or more States, the difference in fact ceases also, and such States are out of the Union.

No doubt we lawyers often say very pretty things, and poetical things, on matters which have nothing to do with, to exist, as still existing in contemplation of law; and the unlimited field is then somewhat like, they not referring that law is not an intelligent being, but a mere machine based on the supposed unity, and, therefore, on the mere contemplate at all, though these who administer or talk about it may. Say, then, that the law contemplates or not—but what will it do? Is there no governing power? If there is in fact no State, or where there are in fact no relations of unity there is in fact no union.

"Five years ago, then, South Carolina was a State in the Union. By force, and not by any combining arrangements of the slightest, she broke up these relation, one and all, and said every officer, every one connected with every fort, and excluded every vessel of the United States. The other two did substantially the same thing, and formed a sort of kernel. The fact of a union between them and the United Sta.... as a status as between—say, upon unjust—then between the United States and United States. Not only a political separation, but that separation was guarded by three hundred thousand men under arms. That is the fact down to the day to defy dictionary and common sense.

"But a government still lingers, for they maintained their respective governments. For a time. At length that long line of armed rebels was met in a field and fired, driven back, and State after State overran, their governments in disorder, their laws inoperative, courts closed, and functionaries displaced, and generals and soldiers disposed merrily law alone under authority of the United States. Is a foreign government more a State than after the fall of Algiers there was an Algerine government, or after the fall of King Bomba, one Neapolitan? Those geographical spaces, once States, are now provinces of the United States, now governed and held by the sword.

"It is only in States in the Union that the United States are to guarantee a republican form of government. These are not to but only belong to the Union as Utah belongs to it. And when or whether they shall become States in the Union is just as much in discretion as when or whether Utah shall become one.

"Congress has never created nor attempted to create a State even as our own territory. That is the work of the people. Congress can only 'admit' States already existing. Tennessee I suppose to be such as forbade State, just as California and Michigan and all the other new States were such, having formed governments in fact on national territory by national sufferance. When admitted, this sufferance hardens into a title good against the United States in all circumstances except dissolution by force. In war, the great source of nations, municipal law furnishes no rule and the strongest take the verdict, and the vanquished are at mercy, with not a right on earth except rights to the violence and leniency of the victors.

"That is the condition of all the eleven now. And the whole subject of this is now open to Congress as it is much open in regard to them as is the question of what is due and humane in regard to the Indian tribes, except where Congress has power of exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, limited only by amendments to the Constitution.

"Those things being so, then,

"1. The States are unrestored loyal are the whole United States.

"2. The Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery has been adopted.

"3. Touching the extent of the Union majority in both Houses of Congress and the like majority in nearly every State Legislature, there would be no difficulty about any other amendments whereby distinctions of race before the law, and before all laws, may be obliterated, the amendment in the last proposed by Congress commending itself to common order and some limits imposed on military courts.

"No long important subject would remain for any vote in acts, nor a better time to dispose of them well soon to occur."

CLERICAL SOPHISTRY.

In the Weekly of October 7 we published a letter from a friend in Memphis, in which the object of a Methodist Episcopal Church "South of the Confederate dead," and a discourse in aid of it by the Rev. MR. ROGERS, were mentioned. The extract from the letter is reprinted in a small pamphlet, which comes to us with the respects of the Rev. J. W. ROGERS, setting forth the object of the sermon and soliciting subscriptions. To the remarks of our correspondent, Rev. MR. ROGERS says: "We render not thanks for rebel sentiments, but Christian duty, as will only add, by way of defense, the following sketch of Westminster Abbey." He then proceeds to show that, in the English cathedral, monuments to those of CROMWELL'S party are permitted to remain, and that FOX and PITT, the great rivals, sleep side by side, while a herd of WASHINGTON appears upon ANDRÉ'S monument.

The Rev. MR. ROGERS sophisticates himself sadly. Westminster Abbey is a national monumental church, in which, by his own showing, several "rebels" are incidentally and exceptionally commemorated. But the rebel dead, in the words of his pamphlet, is to be erected by "the people of the Southern States," to the memory of "heroic dead." Again, says the Rev. MR. ROGERS propose to commemorate in a cathedral the memory of LYON, of RENO, SEDGWICK, of M'PHERSON, of WADSWORTH, of WHITNEY, and Sidney of GENERAL ALBERT SACKSON and LIEONDAS POLK! Is his monument national or "Southern?" Is it built to the glory of the country or that of a section? The answer is written on the pamphlets which he sends us, "Please make your offering to Rome Confederate soldiers' Memorial Church."

When the Rev. MR. ROGERS says that the projectors of St. LAZARUS's cathedral, "while they weep over their heroic dead, exhibit no bitterness, accept in good faith, etc.," he speaks not as an American, but as "a Southerner," and his enterprise is intended to foster the sectional feeling which induces certain people who are not friendly to the Union to call some of the Southern States their "country." The Rev. MR. ROGERS should also understand that his country is the United States of America. If he wishes to honor the memory of men who died to destroy it, let him do it as he will. It is wise he will not justify a church in their honor by the example of Westminster Abbey.

MAKING HASTE SLOWLY.

THE President's reply to the Committee from North Carolina, hopefully urging the restoration of State as fully restored to the Union, and to ask from Congress a repeal of the test-oath, contains what we said last week of his views in regard to the unorganized States.

The President replied courteously that the North Carolina Legislature had not yet adopted the constitutional amendment, which was an essential condition of restoration, and he declined to answer specifically the other questions which a reply to the Committee would involve, but would continue to act as Provisional Governor until relieved from Washington, and not by the result of the election in every case of the Convention. In a word, said the President, "My action must depend upon events."

The Secretary of State, by the President's order, has also informed Provisional Governor PERRY of South Carolina that he will learn from Washington when he may cease from withstanding the election of MR. ORR; that the adoption of the emancipation amendment is a condition of the restoration; and that it "it is impossible to anticipate events."

These things all show that the measures adopted by the President are experimental. He is testing the condition of the unorganized States. He is ascertaining whether they faithfully accept the situation. Therefore he can not anticipate events. While he sees that South Carolina merely repeals the ordinance of secession, and does not repudiate the rebel debt, and does not voluntarily adopt the amendment; while he sees ... refuse to repudiate her rebel debt, notwithstanding his plain instructions to Governor JOHNSON; while he sees Mississippi elect an unpardoned rebel for Governor in place of a technical Unionist, and in North Carolina the Union candidates defeated; while he sees every where in the Southern States an animosity toward the freedmen which warns him and the country not to abandon them to the mercy of State laws, the President very naturally says to MR. REID of North Carolina that his action must depend upon events.

Meanwhile it is pleasant to know that the policy of the President receives the unqualified support of the friends of the late lamented Democratic party. Supported thus by his opponents, as well as his friends, the ora of good feeling must be at hand.

A SIGN.

WE have seen with pleasure the "Colored Man's Almanac," calculated by WILLIAM H. MILLER, of Zanesville, Ohio. It is peculiarly interesting at this time, when the pitiless and unmanly depreciation of the race to which MR. MILLER belongs makes it necessary to emphasize the plain fact that they are men like the rest of us, and ask nothing but the fair play which all the rest of us have. A book like this inevitably deepens the conviction that people who, under every disadvantage, accomplish themselves to such a point of exact mechanical skill as to be trusted like other business beings, and intrusted with the same privileges that we all enjoy.

THE STRENGTH OF A LITTLE FLOWER.

THIS INCIDENT IS RELATED IN THE "EXPERIENCES OF A PRISON MATRON."

From the wicked, woeful streets
The prisoner is come
To do penance for wicked and woeful deeds,
With the prison for a home.

She is callous, hard, and bold,
Reared in the ways of sin,
From her soul the woman seems driven out
And the devil entered in.

She has no belief in love,
You can not tell her by fear,
Speak to her gently in Christianwise,
The reply is an oath or jeer.

Dark night had fallen down
On the silent prison within
The prison's hard unflinching walls
That inclosed that world of sin.

I, in my nightly round,
Paused by that woman's door.
The silence of her stormy cell
Astonished me far more
Than oath or yell shout or song
Her lips were wont to pour.

Propped on her sturdy arms,
Her dark and sinful face
In her whole prison table bare;
At once I marked the place

Wherein her gaze was fixed,
And there before her lay
A daisy she had plucked by stealth
From out the yard that day.

And while I gazed her face
Contracted as in pain,
And o'er her coarse and swarthy cheeks
Down fell a tear like rain.

And on her linked arms
Her heavy head fell low,
And sobs convulsed the woman's frame,
Best with all of woe.

Months upon months went by,
When one day I, by chance,
Took up the Bible in her cell
And there my search did glance:

Between the pages spread
The withered daisy lay.
God has a language of His own
We can not write or say.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE ELECTIONS.

On Tuesday, the 7th, elections were held in the States of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Maryland, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. In every one of these States the Union ticket was successful by large majorities.

In New York, GENERAL DANIEL E. SICKLES was elected Secretary of State in 28,000. The rest of the Union ticket is elected by a majority of 30,000.

In NEW JERSEY Governor WARD'S majority is over 3000. What is chiefly important in the New Jersey election is the Union gain in the Legislature, securing the only ratification of the Constitutional Amendment.

In MASSACHUSETTS A. H. BULLOCK was chosen Governor by about 15,000 majority. GENERAL BANKS is chosen to Congress from the Sixth District.

In MARYLAND Governor Swann is elected Governor. MARSHALL is elected Governor in MINNESOTA.

In WISCONSIN, where the Union candidate, BASHFORD, was elected to the State Senate from Dorchester County. This secures a Union majority in that body.

RECONSTRUCTION.

President JOHNSON, having been so strongly supported by the recent elections, has given no clearer intimations as to the policy which he has decided to maintain. He continues to receive small farther assure the Provisional Governors of the South of his views, but upon this question, which was already becoming an exciting one, in regard to the rights of the States, he has given no intimation since the fall of Congress. He has also declared the ratification of the Constitutional Amendment no part of the Southern States necessary to their restoration. Governor SHARKEY has instituted a court of special equity for the freedmen of Mississippi, and the Legislature of that State have passed a bill enabling his action in the matter he has vetoed the bill.

In accordance with the demand of President JOHNSON in regard to emancipation, South Carolina, on the 19th, in both Houses of her Legislature, adopted the Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery. The first of the Southern States to recede, because slavery could not "live one more hour and be glorified" in this country, South Carolina is also the first to adopt the last step in the final abolition of the cursed institution.

GENERAL WADE HAMPTON, rebel-nation candidate, has beaten President GOVERNOR ORR under 5000 to 10,000 votes in the Democratic Union Caucus! Mr. HAMPTON, the Governor elect, is one of the "rebel" Congress, is elected to Congress by the Legislature, is already in Washington, and will soon be admitted to the Northern district over Lehman, who can take it.

JUDGE ROBERTS, Union candidate for Governor and Northern for Lieutenant-Governor have carried Texas by a majority of 5000. GENERAL GRANGER, of Mobile, in the First Congressional district, beats JOHN HANCOCK, of Galveston, 1000. MAYFIELD, in the Fifth, is elected by large majority.

The election for Governor and members of Congress and the Legislature in Georgia, on the 1st instant, for JOHN Baldger, it is rumored, has been elected Governor.

The members of the Florida Reconstruction Convention, elected on the 10th of October, assembled in Tallahassee on the 25th of October, and by the same day the whole machinery of Provisional Governor MARVIN was delivered and read to the body. The Governor does not think it would be wise at present to confer the privileges of voting on the negroes, and believes the majority will not demand the concession on the part of the States lately in revolt as an indispensable preliminary step to the admission of such representatives; but he urges upon the Convention, as a matter of the highest justice to a class of residents, that they be the most complete protection of the freedmen's civil rights by the laws, and that their testimony be received in the courts. Without these, he says, the colored people will have no ample safeguard for the enjoyment of their indisputable employers, and with them he thinks the emancipated people will soon appreciate the benefits of labor, and enterprising even in the absence of the presence of the whites. The Convention has also taken the action to declare the secession ordinance null and void, and annuls the adoption by the Legislature of the amendment to the National Constitution forever prohibiting slavery throughout the country.

TRIAL OF JEFF DAVIS.

Chief Justice CHASE has given his opinion in regard to the proposed trial of Jeff Davis in his circuit. He stated that the court would be convened by Congress until commences this year on the 5th of November, the present month, only one week before the assembling of the Supreme Court, when all the Judges are required to be present, allowing but little time for the trial. Under this fact, which, in the opinion of the Chief Justice, would be too much a term for the transaction of any other important business. But the Chief Justice adds that, were the facts otherwise, he could not, under the terms of the last Judiciary Circuit Courts of the United States in States which have been declared by the executive and legislative departments of the National Government to be in rebellion, and which have been subjected to military rule, and in which the operations of the civil tribunals conflicts with the rights and the supremacy of the military by the civil administration, and in which the unwilling to hold such courts in such States within his circuit, which includes Virginia, "until Congress shall have had an opportunity to consider and act on the whole subject."

NEWS ITEMS.

President JOHNSON has appointed General Judson Kilpatrick our minister to Chili. The Secretary of war has changed the name of Fort Jackson to that of Fort Gaines.

Tulu has been a great season for Generals, and what is a little remarkable, in no instance, perhaps, have we been aware of, has a soldier, who was running as a candidate of the Union party, been defeated. General Joseph R. Hawley, Colonel, Illinois; Fairchild, of Wisconsin; Marshall, of Minnesota; Bullock, of Ohio; Ward, of New Jersey; Sickles, of New York, have, as the candidates of the Union party, been triumphantly elected.

Alexander H. Stephens, rebel ex-Vice-President, having been admitted to the privilege of taking the oath of allegiance, his written a letter in which he positively declines to allow his name to be used in that connection. Mr. Stephens has also refused, though strongly urged, to be a candidate for Governor.

Colonel A. H. Bowman, of the United States Corps of Engineers, died of yellow fever in Aiken, South Carolina, on the morning of the 15th inst. He superintended the building of Fort Sumter, and, at the time of his death, was President of the Board of Engineers charged with selecting coast fortifications.

Major-General Thomas J. Wood has been assigned to the command of the Department of the Cumberland, and General Osterhaus, who succeeded General sloum in virtue of his rank.

A bill was introduced in the Senate of the Tennessee Legislature on November 2 to authorize the sale of the Hermitage estate, the home of General Jackson, which is the property of the State, excepting two acres containing the tomb of the hero, providing that the land be divided into lots and sold at public auction.

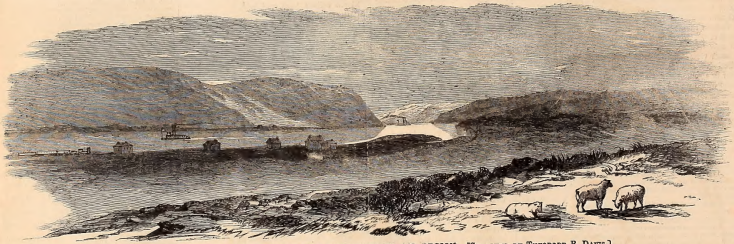
The ladies employed in the Treasury Department at Washington will receive an extraordinary claim as the respective introduction of a bill in Congress to dispense with their services. But even may be consoled by the large number of discharged soldiers now seeking place under Government patronage.

FOREIGN NEWS.

IT is now quite settled that Earl Russell is to be, for a time at least, at the head of the English Government. It is thought that Lord Clarendon will be Foreign Minister, and that MR. Gladstone will consent to retain his present position in the Government as Chancellor of the Exchequer.

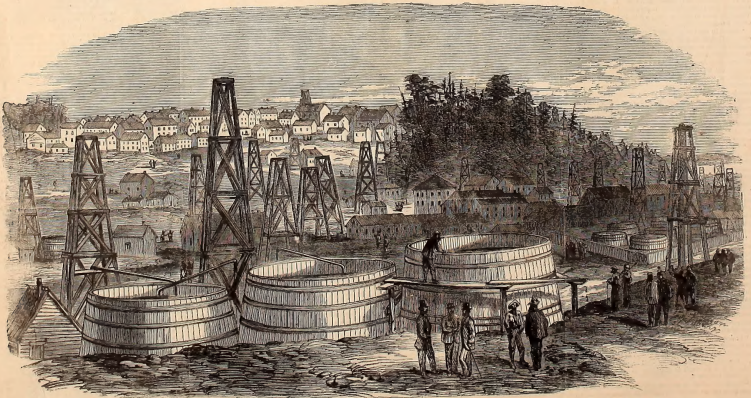
The Paris correspondent of the Times says: "It is generally reported that the Emperor has determined to abolish or withdraw by instalments, not less than by degrees or periods, the octroi duties on wine, and that he will shortly announce his intention to that effect. It is said that from a desire to afford no reasonable ground of complaint to the United States, but also on economical principles."

The cholera still prevails at Paris. The Government takes great pains to remove the sick from the city, and it is impossible to disguise the truth. The Emperor and Empress have given up their popularity by their frequent visits to the cholera hospitals, followed by large subscriptions. The Empress has contributed 100,000 francs, and the Emperor has given 200,000 francs.



The President Elect of Hayti has issued a manifesto in which he announces that ships of war, purchased for the Government in New York, are on their way to Hayti. All the other Haytien steamers, to the number of six, have been entirely repaired and armed. Thus the President hopes the rebel strong-hold, Cape Haytien, will soon be reduced.

A terrible conflagration, the flames spare terror, died, October 19, in the Limekiln Asylum of Panama, Italy. He had been insane two years.



Hiram Sibley, who has contracted with Russia and England for submarine telegraph route the world by laying Straits and Eastern Asia, is now in Paris making arrangements for the execution of the contract. He has all the materials, wire, etc., have been contracted for, and will soon be shipped to the United States.

EXCURSION TO THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA—LEAVING SCHAFFER FOR PIT HOLE CITY.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

RENO, THE FUTURE METROPOLIS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA OIL REGION.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA—PIT HOLE CITY, VENANGO COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

'CHAMPION NINE" OF THE ATLANTIC BASE-BALL CLUB OF BROOKLYN, L. I., 1865.

THE ATLANTIC BASE-BALL CLUB.

We give on this page portraits of the nine members of the Atlantic Base-Ball Club in Brooklyn, who were engaged in the recent contests for the championship with the members of the Athletic Club of Philadelphia. The "nine" of the Atlantic were victors in two successive matches—one played in Philadelphia, October 30, of which we gave an illustration in our last paper, the other a week later in Brooklyn. This latter established the claim of the Atlantic Club to the championship until some more successful rival shall arise to dispute it.

EXCURSION TO THE OIL REGIONS.

On page 740 we publish three interesting illustrations relating to the Oil Regions of Pennsylvania. A short time since invitations were issued by Mr. C. VERNON CULVER to the capitalists of different cities to meet at Meadville for an excursion through the oil region of Pennsylvania. The party, consisting of senators, bankers, capitalists, and a necessary number of the journalistic fraternity, visited Corry, where extensive refining of petroleum is carried on.

Thence via the Oil Creek Railroad to Titusville. The next place visited was Schaffer, near which the first oil was discovered. Here horses were in readiness to convey the excursionists to "Pit Hole City." The ride was a merry one despite the rain and mud. The arrival at "Pit Hole" was the signal for the inhabitants to enjoy a joke at the expense of the bespattered excursionists. They were designated as "Bummers," "De-Revs," "Raiders," etc.

Through the streets, where six months since there were no houses, we rode to the Pit Hole Creek. Here every thing was oil—thousand-barrel wells and hundred-barrel wells were plenty. Here we met men that hardly knew how much they were worth. "But the wells will give out," they said. Vast fortunes have been made by enterprising men who "went in" early. Messrs. DUNCAN and PARHAM associated themselves with several other gentlemen as early as December, 1864, in the purchase of the land interest in the Holden Farm, which contains 171 acres of land, selling the same in December last for one million and a half dollars.

The Second National Petroleum Company of this city bought the M'Kinney Farm, adjoining the H—den Farm, for $250,000, and soon after re—used $600,000. This land is said to be wonderfully productive. After resting at the "Mercy House" during the night the excursionists mounted their steeds for the journey via "Cherry Run" to Oil City.

It seems strange that such a common-sense race as our Yankees are should have built in such an impossible spot. Nature left the spot for a few oil wells, but no room for a city. Two miles more and we reach Reno, which place it is designed to make the metropolis of the oil region. Mr. C. VERNON CULVER owns the 1200 acres of land upon which the town is laid out. After a comfortable lunch, Mr. CULVER rose and proposed a very satisfactory scheme for persons desiring to invest their money.

"I propose," said he, "to stock this ground at $10,000,000. The money as paid in for the stock (which will not be sold for less than par) to be placed in the hands of trustees, and by them placed in the United States Treasury. The interest of this money up to $1,000,000 to be expended in developments of the property. I also propose to be ready at all times to return the par value of the stock when it is called for.

"If I can make this stock so satisfactory as to keep it out, which I am more than confident that I can, I shall be in the receipt of $600,000 each year, the interest of the stock at six per cent."

The proposition was received with great favor by the excursionists, and soon started in the train in waiting for Franklin thence to Meadville, where the comforts of the Mansion House were not to be forgotten.

Explosions are of frequent occurrence in the oil regions. One occurred very recently (on the evening of November 8) at Pit Hole City.

EXECUTION OF WIRZ.

In accordance with the sentence promulgated on Monday, November 6, Captain WIRZ, the Andersonville jailer, was hung in the yard of the Old Capitol prison at Washington on Friday, the 10th instant. Perhaps in no single instance on record has the execution of any criminal been so clearly demanded by justice. Certainly it is a rare thing for men and women to read the air with cheers as was the case when WIRZ was hung. In ordinary against cases this exultation would have seemed against nature; but in a case like this the processes of nature are reversed, and the shock usually incident to the spectacle of a violent death is overpowered by the popular rejoicing on account of the extinction of a monster of cruelty.

The execution, of which we give illustrations on pages 748 and 749, took place at 10.30 A.M. Since his arrest the prisoner had been treated in a manner befitting a great nation—distinguished, but lonely. He had had a fair trial; even the petitions and importunities of his counsel were allowed to have no harsh influence against him. When he was sick, though it could not be forgotten how he had treated the sick and the charge at Andersonville, every comfort necessary to his situation was cheerfully accorded. His cell was made cheerful by a grate. But, notwithstanding he withheld it could not comfort from our prisoners. This was as it should have been. Inhumanity is not to be answered by inhumanity—it must be doomed by the stern sentence of judicial authority.

The day before the death Wirz was similarly engaged in writing. His cell, "No.8—Wirz, H., Captain U.S.A.A."—was on the third story on the north side of the prison, commanding a view of the Soldiers' Home Cemetery and the West-Side Hospitals. The Herald correspondent thus describes it:

"The cell of the man over paupy white with limewash. His iron bedstead, with its army blankets, his small desk-table, his shelf, and his clothes scrupulously neat. The fire in the grate and the light-cotton vial of Kentucky tobacco on the shelf were evidently comforted the man, who could not relieve himself deemed. He was busy almost incessantly from the hour he entered those hours of his life, taking stimulants freely, but not to the excitement of the degree. Of course he was not allowed up to this very morning. This is now in the hands of his brief friend, Mr. Schade."

About two hundred and fifty tickets were issued, and the holders with a few officers comprised the entire audience in the yard. The immediate spot looking the yard and the trees in the vicinity were occupied with the various sets of the prisoner, for whom no considerable portion were soldiers who dained to see the last of "Andersonville."

The scaffold was erected in a distant corner of the yard, and around it is a hollow square were four companies of soldiers. While waiting for the appearance of the criminal many were the jocular, grim or jocose, made to Andersonville by the spectators.

A short time before his appearance in the yard WIRZ had an interview with DECK WEBSTER. "I cry, but I am not afraid. I am going, now. Those stories they have circulated about us are false. You will probably be made to suffer for a portion of these crimes; but try not to do so; but you are stronger than I, though just as much. Promise me, if you live, to do all in your power to wipe out this awful stain upon my character. Make my name and character stand as bright before the world as it did when you first knew me. Promise me that you will do something to assist my wife." WEBSTER, much affected, gave his promise, and they parted.

At a quarter past ten WIRZ made his appearance, accompanied by Fathers BOYLE and WIGGER. His nerves had been supported by a copious draught of whisky drunk in his cell, and he walked to the gallows without flinching, which was a hard thing to do in the presence of those soldiers calling out to him to "remember Andersonville." With the two Fathers on either side, preceded and followed by two police, he ascended the scaffold and took a chair which was offered him; Father BOYLE with a gold inlaid ebony cross standing on one side and WIGGER on the other. While there, engaged in spiritual advice Major HOWARD, the death-cap and superintendent—the record of his conduct and the solaces of a divine religion by a strange inconsistency falling upon the culprit's ear at the same time. After reading of the order for the execution, turning toward WIRZ, offered him his hand, saying he commiserated his fate, and deplored that this duty had fallen to his lot. WIRZ said, "I know what orders are, Major," and shook hands with him, whereupon the Major turned away, saying "I am hung for obeying them." He then shook hands with the priests, and they commenced saying the hands with the beads. He kissed the crucifix in the priests, and when Father BOYLE urged him to a confession he finally chose his hand, and said, "I am not guilty." They had, by Father BOYLE's recommend trying his feet, and he turned, and spoke to Father WIGGER again inquiring about his wife. Father BOYLE, twice kissed the cross. But his manner seemed to indicate that he was more moved by emotion and apprehensive than by any fear of death. Here WIRZ again spoke, saying, "I go before my God—the Almighty God—He will judge between us. I am innocent, and I will die so." Father BOYLE then turned to Captain WALDHORN, and said, "Good-by, Captain; I thank you and the other officers of the prison, for you have all treated me well." Again the priest urged confession upon him, and again he shook his head.

At half past ten the cap was drawn and the rope adjusted. Suddenly a spring was touched, the drop fell, and WIRZ struggle with the rope was still prolonged the lying man doubtless heard the shores which were tending in the current from the land such shouts as no victory in the battle-field ever elicited from soldiers rugged in his ears did the inhuman jailer have of life.

Captain WIRZ, whose birthplace was Switzerland. He came to the United States in 1849, settled in Louisiana. He went first to Connecticut and thence to Lawrence, Massachusetts, where he was employed in a shawl factory. After remaining there several years he went to Kentucky, where he married. At the outbreak of the war he was a physician on a Louisiana plantation. He enlisted as a private, and was made clerk of the Richmond prison. Soon after he became Captain and Assistant Adjutant General on General WINDER's staff. He was wounded, at Fair Oaks, was made Provost Marshal of Manchester, Virginia, and finally sent on an inspecting tour of Southern prisons. In 1864 he went to Europe for his health, and on his return was put in charge of Andersonville, Georgia. He admits that his prisoners were brutally treated, but denies that he is the guilty party.

The body of Captain WIRZ has been buried in the Penitentiary yard, by the side of the conspirators for the murder of LINCOLN.

The illustrations which we give of WIRZ's execution are from photographs taken by Mr. A. GARDNER of Washington, whose courtesies on this as on many former occasions we gratefully acknowledge. These photographs are published by PHILP & SOLOMONS, of Washington.

THANK THEM AGAIN!

THE VOICE OF LOYAL NEW JERSEY AFTER THE ELECTION.

THANK them again, the brave "boys in blue,"
The tried and proved honest, the faithful and true;
They have stood in the gap and to save us again,
Thank them! Oh thank those brave loyal men!

To the polls they are hieing with crutch or with cane,
Marked they on their brows are the furrows of pain;
They've suffered. "No matter, they'll suffer again,"
All citizens thank them—those brave loyal men!

Here a right hand is missing or hanging unnerved!
Had he minded the bullet it still might have served;
But it went to his country—it's the best he can do!
For the ballot: I'm maimed; but my heart is yet true."

Thank them again, a new battle is won.
The spots are wiped off from our great central sun;
Marked they on their brows are the scars of men,
And the folds in our flag float for freedom again!

We thanked them when blood and when graves marked their way,
When tears, like the bullets, were falling in showers;
Life was not too much to have given for victory,
For the battle was bloodless; the triumph of right.

Let us not recite in all the thanks we would give;
For soldiers may know that we love them well:
By good deeds let us show that our thanking is meant:
Applied with a purpose who sees of the spirit?

Set them up on the watch-towers we raise in the land;
Give them places of trust, where they're worthy to stand:
Let not on the last day the record be read,
For one returned soldier or maimed boy in bloo.

Don't say, now he's wounded, he's worth less to you;
His one hand, oh merchant! is worth more than two;
For one that is gone brought to battle-grounds saved,
Saved your home and kept open the channels of gold.

Let us thank them again when we pass through the street,
Prefer them when questions of interest shall meet;
Let us say how we love them, and honor and heed,
And blasted forever their progeny of wealth.

Then we'll thank them again, who our battles have fought;
Nor forget the high service their sufferings have wrought:
We'll commend them to God when we petition for rain,
And thank by our deeds the brave "boys in blue."

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXXII

WHAT TO DO NEXT.

THERE are some emergencies in which men must and can only turn to their own thoughts for guidance—emergencies in which the least experienced are better able to help themselves than others are to help them; in which the direct counsel of friends is of less value than that counsel which comes from within. Such was SARAH'S position when, in the terrible discovery of his cousin's baseness. He was stunned —crushed—bewildered. He neither knew what he must nor what he must not do. A danger and a shadow seemed all at once to have come over the face of the heavens. That simple faith in his fellowmen which, from his childhood upward, had been sweet, the present so sunny, and the future so rose-hued, was shaken to its foundations. He felt like one who is overtaken by a sudden earthquake. Where his home stood but a moment before there is now a heap of ruins and confusion. Where his garden lay, all bright with trees and flowers, there is now but a yawning chasm. He stands to-night on the edge of the abyss; and to-morrow, or the day after, he will be driven forward, lest the ground should open and swallow him. There is nothing before him, nothing behind him, but ruin.

As he had told Castletowers in the first outbreak of his anguish, it was not money. "The money" that he lamented. He would have given more than he had lost to believe again in William Thorndale, and know him to be a good man and true." It was not the money. He scarcely thought of it. He was rich without it, perhaps—for the time—happier. It was the wealth which had wrought all this evil—he loved him, loved him as he never still will have possessed it. No—it was that he had, in his simple, manly, hearty way, truly loved his cousin —loved him, loved him as he loved no other, explicitly. It was that he had been, all along, the mere blind victim of a gigantic fraud, deliberately planned, mercilessly carried forward, cruelly consummated. This was the blow. This was the wrong. This was the cause of it.

He had to bear it, to fight through it, to think it out for himself. He had, above all, to control and subdue the fierce thirst. That was the great problem—what to do next.

For he was determined not to have recourse to the law. He had made up his mind to that from the first. The money might go—was gone, probably. At all events, he would never feel the Thorndales name in a public court, or drag the man whom he had called to the sacred name of "friend" before a public tribunal. At the same time, however, might it not yet be possible to recover some portion of the money? William Thorndale believed that there, in the secret of doubtless calculated on the three months which Saxon had laid out for his northern trip. Was it not, at all events, possible that the lawyer had not yet taken flight?

The more Saxon thought about it the more he became convinced that his wisest course would be to hasten back to London, confront his cousin, and wrest from him whatever might yet be recoverable of the stolen millions. There were almost irresistible reasons in the way: but even in the face of these improbabilities the effort was worth making.

And then there was the Castletowers mortgage—But Saxon had already considered how that difficulty might be met.

Poor young John! He lay awake all night turning these things over in his mind; and in the morning, when the Alexandra was under way and stirring, he went down without even knocking at Lord Castletowers's door as he passed by, and cut into the saloon.

When he came back to breakfast his face wore a bright look of decision and purpose.

"I have been down to the landing-place, Castletowers," he said, "looking after the Alhola, and making some inquiries of the people about the quays. I think I ought to give up this Mediterranean tour and go back to England."

"I am sorry for it," replied the Earl. "I was about to suggest it to you myself if you had not proposed it."

"And if there well 'twere done,'" said Saxon, "'twere well 'twere done quickly.'"

"You will go by steamer, of course?"

"I would if I could; but the French mail left yesterday, and the Ostrland packet will not be in time (till several days hence) for anything else to be done is to stick to the yacht for the present. The wind is direct in our favor; the Alhola will skim along like a bird; and by hurrying forward at once to Malta we may catch one of the Italian boats. At all events we shall not be dragged with you. There is to be nothing in something, when one is so intolerably restless."

"I am sorry to part with you this very moment," said the Earl.

"Thank you," replied Saxon, with a sigh. "You must remember here, you know, that you have got rid of me, and go on to Cairo and the Pyramids, as we had intended before this happened."

"Without you?"

"Why not? I shall, of course, leave the yacht in your charge."

The Earl shook his head.

"No, no, Thorndale," he said. "The yacht can be sent home in the care of the master; but you and I must certainly not part company," unless you feel you would rather be without me."

"That's impossible; but—"

"But me no buts. Solitary traveling has no charm for me. If you reject my society I shall simply go home to Castletowers as fast as I can."

So it was settled. The friends should remain bark without an hour's delay, making direct for the nearest port in which a Marseilles steamer was likely to be found.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

HOMEWARD-BOUND.

THAT fate is always severe to a man in haste, that nothing important in this world is ever to be had at the precise moment when it is most needed; that the chance is certain to be half an hour late, or the watch ten minutes slow, when every moment is more precious than gold, and when being too soon is to be concerned on the one act of pushing forward—are facts which fall for no evidence beyond that which comes within the range of our own experience.

In obedience, then, to what may to called the Law of Disappointment, the Alhola just missed the steamer at Valetta by an hour and three quarters. Being told, however, that by running before the wind to Messina, without delay, they would be certain to catch the French mail steampacket for Marseilles direct, the travelers crowded all sail, and, on the 3d of January at Messina, they learned that their boat had started at noon, and would not be back again for a full day more.

There was now nothing for it but to go on to Naples.

They then landed their Sicilian surgeon, whose services were no longer needed, and again put to sea.

But the wind was no longer directly in their favor, and their progress was consequently so much the slower. Sailing laboriously against the Calabrian coast, they beheld all that wondrous panorama unfold itself before them as they passed: Reggio, Amalfi, Salerno, Pæstum, and, at last, the glorious bay, with its sentinel isles lying out to sea.

They landed at the Molo Grande. The white flag of the Bourbon was flying from the twin castles down beside the quay, from the arsenal, and from the battlements of the steamers in the harbor. There, pacing to and fro upon the broad, level flag-stones, were groups of white cross-belts—those same cross-belts at which Saxon and Castletowers fired so many shots at Palermo.

They soon found that the boat which they had missed at Messina was, above all others, the one which they would have taken. No other was due to Marseilles direct, and no other would go at all for at least a fortnight longer than the time of their arrival in the harbor. It was now Thursday morning, and the order of departure was as follows: there was the boat of the Messageries Imperiales, which left Naples every Tuesday at five P.M.; there was the boat of the Two Sicilies Mail Steam Navigation Company, which went every Wednesday at the same hour; and there were two boats every Saturday, besides the chance of a merchant steamer, which had no fixed dates for departure, but was expected to be ready that time. Saxon decided on one of these packets, without exception, touched at Civita Vecchia, but also at Genoa and Leghorn.

In short, they could not possibly get off before Saturday at noon, and even then must suffer loss of time by putting in at the Papal port by the way.

However, there was no help for it. Wait one whole day and part of two others they must; so Saxon determined to make the delay as pleasant as possible, and the Earl undertook to show Saxon all that could be seen of Naples in the time.

How they rattled down to Pompeii by rail, dined on the Chiaja; heard the "Barbiere" the San Carlo; stopped in the open air on the terraces of the Albergo della Villa di Roma; ate macaroni and ices in the saloons of the Galleria; and wandered on the Molo, watching the red glow above Vesuvius long after those honest Neapolitans whose reasonable hours are in their beds—needs no recapitulation here.

To a stranger the fair city seemed all careless gayety, mirth, and jollity. Who that knew not every inflection of the popular voice, every fluctuation of the popular pulse, could have guessed that there was revolt at the heart of that shouting, laughing, noisy crowd? Who would have suspected that the murmurs which welled up in the Largo del Mercato were only kept from preaching the "monotonity" by the sight of those crossbelts scattered here and there, among the crowd? Or that the Canta Storia on the Molo, chanting his monotonous stanzas to an eager circle of bootblacks and lazzaroni, was really the substitute the name of Garibaldi for that of Rinaldo wherever the safety was out of hearing? Who would have supposed that in every coffee-shop and trattoria, round every lemonade and macaroni stall, in every group of contadini immediately in front of the porch of every church, the one prevailing, absorbing topic on every lip was the advance of the national army?

Yet so it was. Garibaldi had crossed from Sicily and landed in Calabria only a few days before, and all Naples was boiling over with hope and exultation. The wildest tales, the most extravagant rumors were accepted as facts. Every man whispered "Viva Garibaldi!" in his neighbor's ear; but none had yet dared to give voice to the popular watchword. In short, the whole city in irrepressible under-current of revolutionary propagandism was beginning to agitate the surface of Neapolitan society. Though not yet opposed to the casual observer, this disposition was perfectly understood by the Swiss mercenaries, who were doing all in their power to keep it down by means of the strong hand. The guns of St. Elmo, the Castel Nuovo, and the Castel dell' Ovo were pointed ominously upon the town. Small bodies of military were constantly permeating the streets, and thoroughfares, marching in every crowd, and loitering about the places of public resort. Above all, in the front of the San Carlino, in the Largo del Castello, was shot up Saxon and Castletowers had gone down there, on their arrival, to engage something to pay a visit to Pulchinello; but they found the doors closed and a sentry pacing before them. That witty and patriotic drama had fallen a victim to his political opinions, and was now a state prisoner in his own little dwelling.

Such was the condition of Naples when Saxon made his first acquaintance with the beautiful city. That it was still at the Bourbon feet before the people were in a ferment; and Garibaldi was on the march.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

COLONNA'S HAND.

THEY were going up Vesuvius!

Happy moments, which can forget its cares so easily, and float with every tide! Here were two young men snatching a hasty breakfast on the terrace of a little inn at Resina, on the carriage which was to convey them to Resina waiting at the door. They had risen with the sun; they had come by the early train; they had seen they ate, and laughed more than either. Who would have supposed that either had been robbed of half his fortune, and the other deprived by the lady of his love? Who would have supposed that a cloud had ever come over it? And, above all, who would not covet that healthy elasticity of temper which enabled them to put their troubles behind them in the midst of the sunshiny present?

"Confound the arm!" said the Earl. "I don't know how I am to get up the cone without the help of it!"

"You must be carried," replied Saxon, vigorously attacking a fragrant "bifteck," surrounded by a golden fence of "pommes de terre frites."

"Carried—carried—carried indeed! You'll suggest something better."

"Ask Cossa to become a parcel!" exclaimed the Earl. "Never. Am I not a man and a biped?"

"Men and bipeds must occasionally do what they don't like. Presents, as well as women and quadrupeds," replied Saxon.

"There is one consolatory fact, of which I am quite certain," replied the Earl; "and that is that men and bipeds have the best of the bargain—at all events, in this world."

"Not always, of its. What splendid stuff this Lachryma is!"

"Stuff, indeed! a poor wretch down there, however, who looks as if his worldly bargain had been bad enough!" said the Earl, tossing a handful of carlini to a beggar who had been mumbling and bowing in the road below, ever since the young men had sat down to breakfast.

The waiter in attendance shrugged his shoulders and smiled.

"Sou' tutti lofroni, signore," said he, with a variety of saints to shower down blessings on the giver.

"God Heavens!" exclaimed Saxon, setting down the glass which he had just raised to his lips.

The Earl looked up in surprise.

"Why, my good fellow," said he, "what is the matter with you? You look as if you had seen a ghost."

But instead of replying Saxon turned to the waiter.

"Bring me a cup of strong coffee," he said. "Bring it immediately."

The waiter stiffened. Saxon at once laid his hand on his friend's arm, leaned closer to him, and said in a hurried whisper:

"It's Signor Montecuculi—that Montecuculi whom I saw once at Castletowers!"

"Montecuculi! Where? What do you mean?"

"There—the beggar yonder—don't you see? He has something to say to us!"

"But are you certain?"

"Certain. I saw his face quite plainly. Ha! What's this?"

The beggar had withdrawn a little into the shade of the road-side trees; but a stone came whirring through the air, and crashed down, in Saxon spoke, into the midst of the breakfast-table. There was a paper twisted around it when the Earl had barely time to secure before the waiter came back. As soon as that functionary could be again dismissed the young men have cured to examine it.

"Colonna's hand it" exclaimed the Earl as his eyes fell on the writing.

There were but three or four lines, and they ran thus:

"In great peril. Conceded near the coast. Enemies on the alert. Bring a sailing boat. Anchor off shore. Be a fine with the moon. Will be perceived with row-boat, and look out for signals about dusk."

"How lucky that we were detained here!" was Saxon's first exclamation.

"We must not think of Vesuvius now," said the Earl.

"Of course not!"

"We can say that we have changed our minds, and prefer a day on the water. It will be easy to cruise about the coast in that direction, fishing or shooting."

"Nothing easier."

"And we'll get him off somehow!"

"That we will, in spite of Francesco Secondo!"

CHAPTER LXXV.

ORTHODOX BRITISH TOURISTS.

THE Alinda coasted ostentatiously about the bay all the forenoon, but shortly after mid-day rounded Sorrento Point, and cast anchor at the point indicated in Colonna's note.

Her crew was now strengthened by the addition of a second lady, swarthy Italian sailor, with gold rings in his ears, and a scarlet cap upon his head. He was an "odd hand," whom Saxon had, apparently, picked up upon the quay; and he had not been on board five minutes before he had his sister surreptitiously handle a rope. This sailor was Montecuculi.

Himself proscribed and in hourly peril of recognition, he had been for three days vainly trying to get Colonna off from his hiding-place at Cumæ. Finding it impossible, in consequence of the vigilance of the police, to make the attempt by sea, he was in the act of organizing an armed expedition by land when he heard that an English yacht had just come into port. Going down himself after dark, he found, to his great joy, that the Alinda was lying on Trefalden's property, and that Lord Castletowers was with him at the Hotel Gran' Bretagna.

"I tried to see you last evening," said he, as they leaned, chatting, over the side of the vessel; "but Angelo heard of you at many places, I could find you at none. This morning, however, I was determined not to let you escape. I have been hanging about the Chiaja ever since daybreak."

"It was an act of great imprudence on Colonna's part to venture over to the main land before Garibaldi was in Naples," said the Earl.

"Imprudence! It was madness. Nothing less. I have been in Naples myself for the last three weeks, attending the meetings of the secret societies, and distributing the Dictator's proclamations; but then I am known only to our own people, and there is no price on my head. I heard some days ago that Colonna had been seen at Gaeta; but I did not believe it."

"At Gaeta!" repeated the Earl. "Nay, what could he expect, save danger, in a royalist stronghold like Gaeta?"

"What, indeed! Ma che volete? He has been running his head into the lion's mouth all his life."

"Heaven grant that he may not have done so once too often!"

"Were it not that no hand on earth could imitate his writing," said Montecuculi, "I should have suspected a trap; but of the genuineness of his note there can be no doubt."

"How did it reach you?" asked the Earl.

"It was left for me, somewhat mysteriously, at the little trattoria where I dine. The messenger was a boy whom nobody knew, and he merely gave it in without a word, and went off."

"But what was Signor Colonna doing at Gaeta?" asked Saxon.

The Italian shrugged his shoulders significantly.

"Garibaldi has only to enter Naples by one gate for Francesco to walk out by the other," replied he; "and Gaeta gave shelter to the Pope ten years ago. It is a difficult place to deal with, and, of course, if it could be gained over by treachery, our position would be materially beforehand, our position would be materially strengthened. But Colonna was not the man for such an expedition. A less precious life should have been hazarded."

"I wonder where he is now?" said the Earl, taking an anxious survey of the coast through his glass.

"I think I can guess," replied Montecuculi. "You see that volcanic hill lying back yonder from the shore? That is the Acropolis of Cumæ; and a regiment might find a hiding-place in the mysterious caves and passages with which it is perforated in every direction."

"I think I can see them," exclaimed Saxon. "They look like rabbit-burrows."

There are hundreds of them—all hewn in the solid tufa. They were ancient beyond all record in the time of Virgil; and no one knows whither they lead, or by what hands they were excavated.

It was now proposed that Saxon and Castletowers should land on pretext of sketching, leaving the Alinda at anchor about half a mile from shore. They put off accordingly in the small boat, and Saxon's English sailor with them, and leaving Montecuculi on board the yacht.

The scene was flat and swampy, fringed with tall reeds, and scattered over with fragments of very ancient masonry. Among these reeds they moored their boat, and, landing, found themselves face to face with a Neapolitan sentry.

Up till this moment no human creature had been visible upon the broad plain. Scanning it carefully from the deck of the Alinda, and detecting no sign of life for miles on either side, they had said to each other that nothing would be easier than to bring off the fugitive in open day; no one would find them out, and the sun had been their friend's danger stood boldly before them in the shape of an armed sentinel.

The soldier had challenged them upon opening their landing; but stood by, leaning on his musket, quiet and observant. Saxon and Castletowers, on the other hand, with an air of the utmost unconcern, lit their cigars, and began looking about for a favorable point of view.

Presently the Earl went up to the sentry, and addressed him.

"Scusate, amico," said he, "but what hill is that yonder?"

"È la rocca di Cumæ, signore," replied the soldier.

"Cumæ?" repeated the Earl.

"Sì, signore. Cumæ antica."

"Grazie tanto," said Castletowers, and immediately pulled a book from his pocket, and began rapidly to make notes. Childe Harold, no doubt, but the last edition of Murray could not have answered his purpose better. The sentry constituted himself a guide-book, and, like all such comers as inoffensive tourists, and took no further notice of them.

They had conducted a little way up the shore till they came to a clump of pines, in the shade of which they sat down. There Saxon, who was in truth no artist, proceeded to make a sketch.

Presently another sentry made his appearance. Like the first, he was a fierce Saxon, who was in earth, and yet made no show of watchfulness. Having paced slowly past the pine-clump twice or thrice, he halted, and drew out of the way of the young men, and there to a point of rising ground about a quarter of a mile distant, and there took up his position.

"Splendid," said the Earl, "we are watched."

"Evidently."

"What is to be done?"

"Heaven knows!"

"It is my belief that the pines swarm with soldiers."

"And I feel as if the very air were full of eyes and ears."

"Poor Colonna!"

Then, for a few moments, they were both silent.

"I'll tell you what I think we must do, Castletowers," said Saxon. "Seem to sail away, and then come back again at dusk."

Despite his anxiety, the Earl could not forbear a smile.

"Decidedly, my friend," said he, "you have no genius for intrigue."

"Isn't my plan a good one?"

"It is the most artless artifice that ever oozed from an honest brain. No, no. We must do something much more matter-of-fact than that."

"Then I fear you will have to invent it."

I think I have done so already. You must go on sketching for a little longer. Colonna must then pretend to be hungry—"

"No need for pretense on my part," said Saxon. "I'm as hungry as a hunter now."

"You will have to fast for some time, then, because it is my object to prolong our stay here till dusk; and, in order to do that, we must drive off the dinner question to the last moment. Having done so we will go to boddy to one of the sentries, inquire our way to the nearest inn, and get something to eat. By the time we have finished it will be dark, and then we shall only have to steal down to the shore and hide himself in our hold; and the object for which we are here will be triumphantly accomplished."

"It seems to me," said Saxon, "that we should have done better had we followed Colonna's own instructions more closely, and not come till after sunset."

The Earl shook his head.

"Our only course," he replied, "was to land openly—to skylark, as it were, and play the orthodox British tourist. By doing this we disarm suspicion; by stealing along the coast after sunset we should infallibly have aroused the suspicions of every royalist within half-a-dozen miles of the place.

"I dare say you are right," said Saxon; "but in the mean while I am starving."

"I fear you must continue to starve for the present."

"Then I beg you to understand that I decline to sit still under the treatment. Suppose we go over the ruins."

"Will you not finish your sketch first?"

"My sketch!" ejaculated Saxon, contemptuously. "Pshaw! my sketches are the most unsatisfactory daubs in the world. The more I finish them the worse they get. If I had put this down half an hour ago it would have been ever so much better than it is now."

The Earl still hesitated. Not knowing where Colonna might be hidden, he doubted whether they ought to go up to the ruins or not. At last they decided that orthodox British tourists would be certain to see all that could be seen; and so went across the bristling plain and up to the foot of the Acropolis. Massed Arrivoli, however, at the Arco Felice, they were met by a third sentry, who interposed his bayonet somewhat unceremoniously between them and the gate. The ruins, he said, were closed to the public, and could only be seen by order of the Royal Chamberlain.

They tried expostulation, they tried bribery; but in vain. The man was immovable, and Saxon had to make another sketch, and then another, to pass the time away.

At length the sun began to decline, and the Earl judged that they might proceed to the second step in their plan. So they went back to the sentinel at the Arco Felice, and inquired if he knew where they might purchase something to eat.

The soldier shrugged his shoulders, and believed there was no albergo nearer than Patria.

"How far are we from Patria?" asked the Earl.

"About eight miles."

"Eight miles! But, amico, we have not eaten since breakfast—we are starving. Is there no farm-house near at hand?"

"Oh, sicuro. There is a farm-house about a quarter of an hour hence."

"In which direction?"

"Following the coast-road toward Linterum."

"A thousand thanks. Good-evening, amico."

"Buona sera, signori."

With this the young men turned away, and hastened in the direction indicated.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NOTAS.—"Where are the opposite boundaries of Manhattan Island? R. What is the derivation of the word?" Manhattan is bounded on the north by a railroad bridge; on the south by the residence of the Governor; on the east and west by the North and Hudson rivers. The explains its name, "Manhattan," which is an Indian compound word. "Man-with-the-hat-on" is the name which is the tradition.

TOUCHSTONE.—This correspondent says: "In Dickens's 'Christmas Carol' Scrooge says, 'I don't believe,' returns my affection, and when I desire to wish you a merry Christmas, you say, 'Bah, humbug!' Now I think Mr. Dickens is quite wrong in this case. Can you advise me how to proceed?" Certainly. Proceed to Scrooge's residence, and in a case of attachment, and your remedy is by a writ according to the form given in the Revised Statutes, which are very ancient. Your next step is to direct your writ to the sheriff of the county, and request him to put the key entitles you to appear and plead to the declaration. In other words, to lay your action; and this course will give you the best chance of success. Vide Long Livers, by Adam Fitzadam. Your declaration having been put in, you await the answer of the respondent, and in the meantime keep your client well and well then. You will then proceed to court; and should you gain your case, you will proceed to execution upon the capias; in other words, try the effect of a few kind expressions. But if the opposite interlocutory proceedings judgment will undoubtedly go in your favor. Then proceed to the execution of the capias. You say:

EL LAUTO.—"I am a lawful voter of this city, but was not registered in time for last election, owing to the illegal neglect of the proper officer to call at my boarding-house. Can I vote at the approaching election?" You vote to be forced on election day. How can I now deposit it?"—Inquire at the Board of Aldermen, and, if sufficient cause, at the Board of State Canvassers. Albany, and deposit it in the mail-bag. If you can't get there yourself, it will have to be prepaid; and you are entitled to charge the postage to the State, and collect it from your next fat job.

CUCKOO.—"Is there not plainly an error in Scripture where it says that 'Solomon slept with his fathers'? Did not Jonathan sleep with his fathers?" How can he possibly have had four fathers? Did not Jonathan have an own father, a step-father, grandfather, and father-in-law. Your question, like those of many grammatical students, shows the ignorance of its author, not the fallibility of scripture.

MARIE.—"Is it true that you have been disinherited. None of the Messrs. Harper took kindly to the proposition.

TABLE DIGEST.

What dish may you always conclude to have been elected on manner on whose table you most is?—Pastried steps.

Which is the silliest you can put on the table?—Goosberry-fool.

Which is the fiercest?—Caper sauce.

Which is the quickest?—Many pudding.

And which is the coolest?—Ice cream.

Why should you not suppose the cook to have prepared in a regular but temper?—Whipped cream.

Which dish is esteemed after one of the fathers of the human race?—Ham.

And which after a country in Europe?—Turkey.

Buonaparte, the French Ambassador to Spain, was telling Henri Quatre how he entered Madrid. "I went in state, and all the people came to look at me." Ah," said Henri, "what an amusing sight—the biggest ass on the smallest mule!" "I was your Majesty's representative," was the rejoinder.

A lady, playfully condemning the wearing of whiskers and mustaches, remarked: "It is one of the hardships I do certainly set my face against."

Why is Chang the tallest man in the world?—Because, on account of his standing, he has the longest bed.

Seasonable clothes—Pepper and salt.

Pride goes before a (water) fall.

"How do you like the character of St. Paul?" asked a parson of his landlady one day during a conversation about the Acts and the Apostles. "Ah! he was a good, clever old soul, I know, for he once said, you know, that he would eat what is set before us, and ask no questions for conscience' sake. I always thought I should like him for a boarder."

The way in which words are often divided when set to music sometimes produces a rather ludicrous effect. A singer was once heard in hearing a congregation, mostly of women, crying out

"Oh Lo o mas!
Oh for a man!
Oh for a man-slain in the ekies!"

While on another occasion a girl was heard at the first shot ability:

"We'll catch the flee!
We'll catch the flee—
We'll catch the flee—ting hours!"

It is hoped nobody was bitten.

"Tat you call dem tings vit long bills aat fly and make a noise—fie—fie—what you call 'em?" exclaimed the other day.

"Woodcock," we replied.

"Woodcock! I kill de morning, before mine breakfast, twenty-five woodcock."

"Indeed you did! Where did you find them?"

"In mine chamber bed."

"Twenty-five woodcock in your bed-chamber! You must mean mosquitoes."

"Eh, him, I mean. I kill twenty-five mosquitoes."

Josh Billings says that "If a man professes to serve the Lord, he likes to see him do it when he measures onions as well as when he makes prayer-books."

If the wife of a Japanese don't suit him, he can send her back to her parents and try again. That is to say, all the new is "worn out" in Japan.

SMOKING IMMORTALITY.—How often do we hear of people lying at the point of death.

Tooth-drawing is an operation that should be performed at a distance from the patient's mouth.

In an Eastern village when the plate was being passed in church, a newly-populated editor said to the collector: "Go on, I'm a-land-lord—I've got a pash."

At a soirée the other evening one gentleman pointed out a disabled friend to another as his friend as a sculptor. "What!" said his friend, "such a looking chap as that a sculptor! Why, you must be mistaken, for I'm sure he must be the kind of cue you may mean," said the intimate friend. "Indeed, sir," she chiselled a tailor out of a suit of clothes last week."

At a recent masked-ball in Norwich a young lady was highly praised in newspapers. She made a good "impression."

A gentleman was once arguing with a lady, when at length he observed, "I'll not argue with you," said he, "I'll not argue with you any longer; you're not open to conviction." "I am open to conviction, sir," was the indignant reply; "I adore the inquisition, sir; I am open to conviction, sir," she added after a moment's pause, "show me the man who can convince me."

Brown is a married man now. A few days since he received a package from Paris. One of his friends meeting him in the street inquired, "Well, Brown, my boy, what are you doing?" "Nothing much, my boy, only my wife with you?" "No; it is a voyage of pleasure."

General Mowrie, after struggling through a Catalan sentence, turned to his companion, and said, "What an incorrigible native boy for it was to term firmas." "I don't know," she added, "I'm sure I've seen a good many of them."

NORTHERN MYTHOLOGY.

"A CHIEFTAIN TO THE HIGHLANDS BOUND."—Premises.

Fitzsharp is a queer place. The other day three men were found lying in the street, and two commenced catching all the the thieves, while the third ate the insects as fast as caught. It is a bad day when cod there quicker than his companions could catch them.

The young woman who was "driven to distraction" now has that she has to walk home.

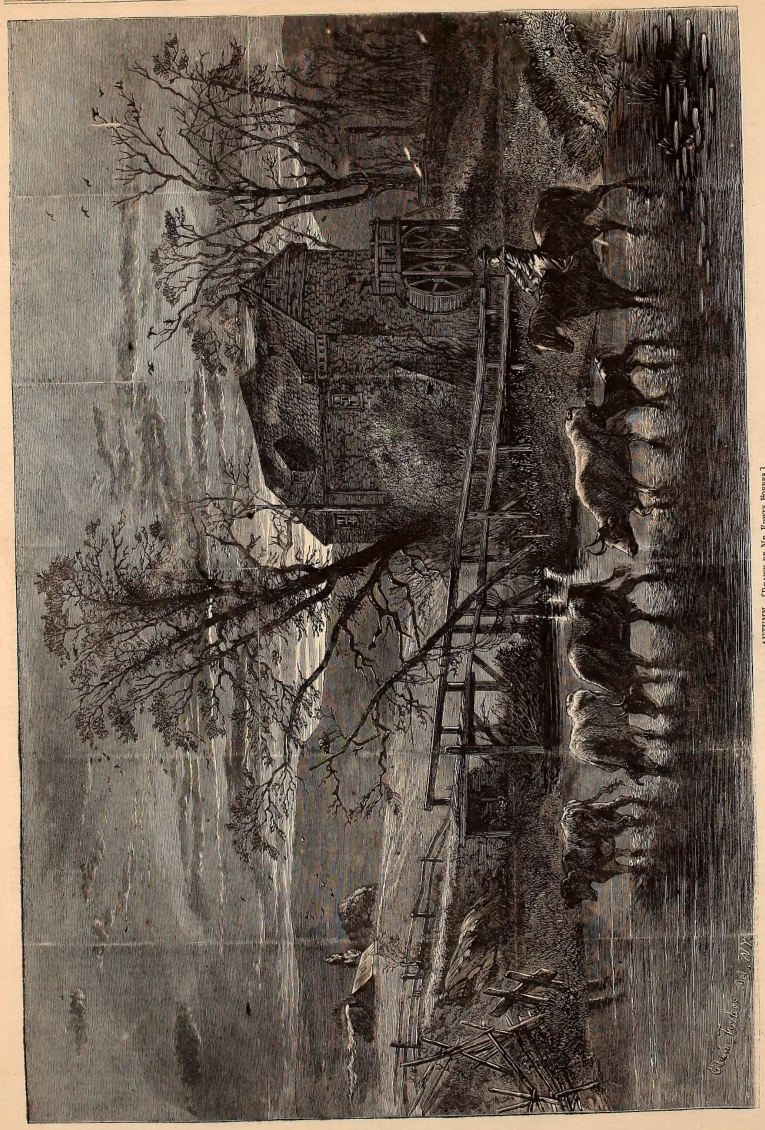
A robust countryman meeting a physician one day ran to hide behind a wall. On being asked the cause he replied, "I am afraid of being struck dead. I have sinned, and I am ashamed to look a physician in the face."

"Honesty is the best policy," said a Scotchman. "I know it, indeed," said another, "for I have tried both."

An Irish witness in a court of justice being asked what kind of "ear-marks" the hog in question had, replied, "He had no particular ear-marks except a very short tail."

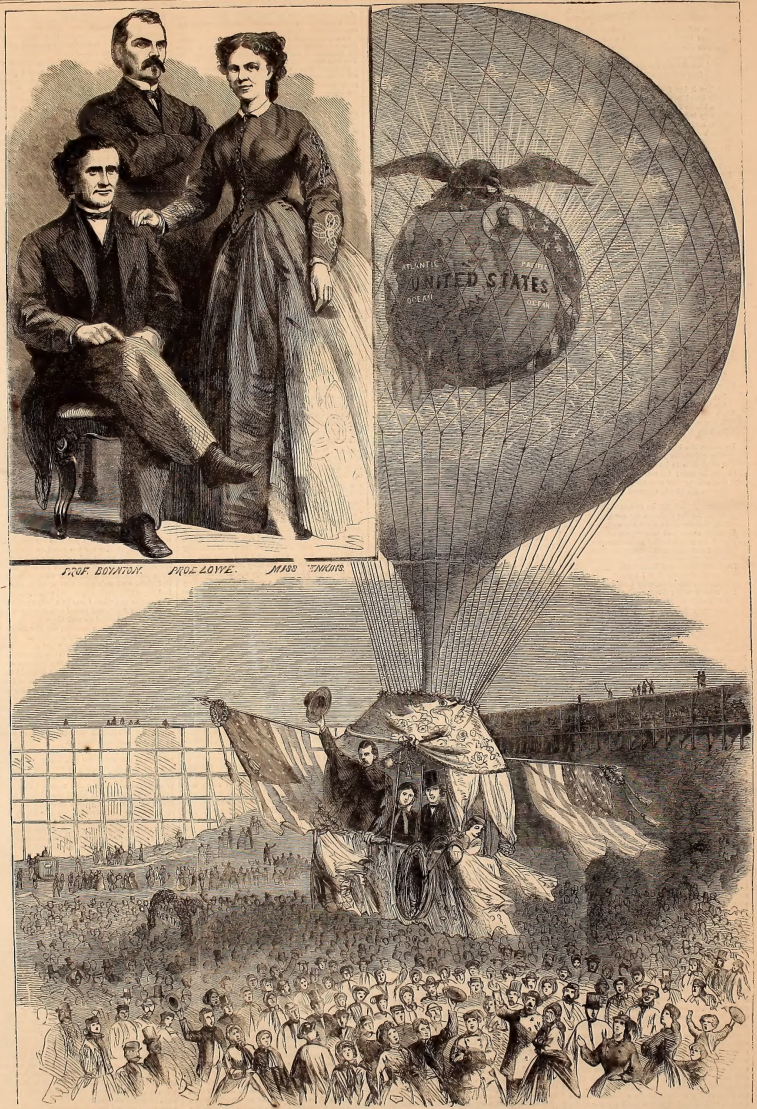
A butler advertises that he hath fit so easily upon the body that no master should ever find them. Unquestionably the best hath are not felt.

A BARE ASSERTION.—The naked truth.



Why are lawyers and doctors sole people by whom to take example?—Because they always practise their professions.

Tennyson speaks of "the angel of the rainbow." That angel must be an umbrella.



Why talk about not stopping a wink when people in their sleep never wink?

Preachers profess to teach people how to live. Lectures on the seabird would like to learn.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

AUTUMN.—[DRAWN BY MR. EDWIN FORBES.]

THE BALLOON BRIDAL PARTY STARTING ON ITS AERIAL TOUR FROM PROF. LOWE'S AMPHITHEATRE, CENTRAL PARK, NOVEMBER 8, 1865.
PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 746.]

WINTER COMETH.

Whence voice is that which sounds outside?
Whose footstep is it that I hear
Across the open plain draw near?
Who comes this way at break of day,
And knocks against the gable-door
To fright the children of the poor?

His face it has the look of death;
His beard is white with frost and snow;
No kindly sun his dull eyes fires;
His step is hid; his breath is cold—
Oh, hark! it is his tread I hear,
Each day it sounds more loud and near.

He passes not beside the way.
But like a conquering hero comes,
With gathering sound of muffled drums
From yonder night of dead of night.
When all besides is hushed and still,
His clarion tones the wide air fill.

In icy fetters strong as steel
He guards his torrent in its course
That through the chasm thunders hoarse;
Beneath his look the meadow brook,
Which babbled on through weeds and grass,
Grows on a sudden smooth as glass.

The stately palace windows shine
With glances warmth and brilliant light
To charm away the gloom of night;
And guests are there, the rich and fair,
Who to and fro on joyous feet
Move to soft strains of music sweet.

He enters not, but straightway goes
On to the hovel, damp and low,
Where sadness reigns and poverty
The old man greans; the mother moans;
The infant opens wide its eye,
And gives a low and piteous cry.

He threads the city's heartless streets
See where you lonely taper burns,
Up the steep flight of stairs he turns;
Where starry rays, around her fling
She wraps the coarse shawl, torn and old,
To keep her from the bitter cold.

He meets the beggar in his path,
Who shivers as the fire draws nigh,
And shrinks to let the tyrant by;
On on he goes; his cold breath blows
The pelting rain and stinging sleet
Adown the blank, deserted street.

On mountain heights he ranges wide;
There, by the darkness left astray,
The hunter sinks upon his way,
Helpless, alone, and weary grown,
And there half buried in the snow
The brave dogs and the lifeless form.

So comes the tyrant Winter on,
It is his footstep that I hear,
Each day it sounds more loud and near:
His voice is bold; his touch is cold;
Oh, hark! he knocks against the door
Now may the Great God help the poor!

THE BALLOON BRIDAL.

Our readers will find on page 745 some interesting illustrations of the bridal trip above the clouds, made by Dr. JOHN J. BOYNTON and his newly-married wife in Professor LOWE'S balloon, November 8. It was an occasion that had been much talked of and long deferred, and it attracted to Central Park a huge concourse of spectators. The marriage took place at the Fifth Avenue Hotel before the departure of the bridal party for Central Park. The bride's maiden name was Miss MARY WERY ZEMMER. We have a group of portraits, including those of Dr. BOYNTON, his bride, and Professor LOWE. Miss ZEMMER, the bride, was born in Northampton, Virginia, and is twenty-two years of age. When an infant she was made an orphan, and was adopted by Mrs. J. J. WERY, of St. Louis. She was educated at Monticello Seminary, Illinois, and displayed great ability in drawing and music. She has a fresh, clear complexion, dark hazel eyes, and in figure is tall and commanding. Of course the bridal outfit was peculiar, to suit the exigencies of the occasion. It was the usual gauze and tarlatan, displayed by a dress of the richest poplin, of the tint known as that of roses, trimmed with white velvet, somewhat darker in color, with a silk hat of the same shade, and gloves to match.

The bridegroom, Dr. JOHN J. BOYNTON, is from Syracuse, and has been known for some years as an able lecturer on geology. He was graduated at a medical institution, but is rather known as a geologist and practical surveyor, having served the Government frequently in this latter capacity.

At the time of the arrival of the bridal party not less than six thousand persons were present within the inclosure. The party in the balloon consisted of only four—the married couple, a sister of the bridegroom, and Professor LOWE.

The bridal car was composed of wicker-work, through which were interlaced the iron wires, to the hooks of which the ropes of the balloon were attached. Its dimensions were six feet long by four and a half feet wide and two and a half feet deep. The bottom of the car was covered with a cushioned seat, covered with rich green flowered satin, stretched round it, an was padded up to the edge. The cords from the circumscribing ring were of alternately red, white, ar d blue silk, wound round with colored cords and stripped with velvet. These cords were crossed by silken twisted ropes of red and green, thus making a net-work which combined great beauty with considerable strength. On the top a canopy of blue and silver damask covered the car, and needed to within about six feet of the bottom, from which point handsome lace curtains were hung, the whole surrounded by the Stars and Stripes. These curtains were gathered together at the corners by silken cords and tassels of Union colors. The car itself was draped with heavy folds of crimson and gold damask, which contrasted admirably with the other decorations. On one side a space was left, which formed the door, over which was suspended a heavy tassel of white and silver, while similar ones hung from each corner of the canopy. The appearance of the entire car was one tasteful and elegant.

The flight at length was cut from its fastenings and went skyward, at first taking a northwesterly direction, but at the height of two thousand feet veering round to the east. A morning contract was signed by the bride and bridegroom while on the voyage. This, according to its style, was a "sacred compact at high altitudes," and written above the clouds, floating in mid air, and in accordance with the laws of the Empire State."

A wedding cake was kindly presented by Messrs. STURGIS & BRADFORD, of the Casino, to the bride and bridegroom, and also to the balloon crew. The cake was ornamented with a fine representation of the balloon, with cords, car, flags, etc., complete.

After a delightful trip, rendered remarkably so by the clear and cloudless state of the sky, the balloon landed as gently as a snow-flake, and without any difficulty in Mount Vernon, at sunset. The party then returned to the city by the night train, and drove back to the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

DEATH—IN ACCOUNT.

It was very odd! It could not have been the freak of an ill-regulated fancy, for Mr. Ollapod was a man of system, and had nothing ill-regulated in the house. It was not an attack of the nerves, for Mr. Ollapod was an iron man. Mr. Ollapod was not drunk, for Mr. Ollapod had taken his pint bottle and his glass of sherry at dinner, as he had done for the last thirty years. Perhaps you will try to explain it away under the plea of an indigestion. However, Mr. Ollapod never had any illusions. Mr. Ollapod was a common-sense, that is unfeeling, practical, that is unimaginative, humdrum, that is money-making man. He sat in his arm-chair before his desk. His eyes were fixed upon a crackled counterpane ceiling, as it did every evening. There was a little light filtering through a globe, and heavy shadows lurked in the corners, and about the door, and making up strongly against the circle of fire-light on the polished floor; but the shadows were there every evening. Mr. Ollapod liked that half light; and, if you insist on your optical illusion, why did it occur on that particular night? Why not on another evening? Why not every evening?

You will find no explanation in the occurrences of the day. They had been pleasant—that is, Mr. Ollapod had made money—nor in his occupation. He was examining the Stock Exchange list, which had dried dollars in small bills; and that refutes another theory with which doubtless you are prepared; he was not asleep. He was standing in his memory, and broad awake, you see, when he found himself in that room. You ask me why? Because I am sure I have not the least idea. I do not think Mr. Ollapod himself could have answered that question as he stared about him in bodiless astonishment. Somebody's counting-room, for there were the high desks and the ledgers, but that is all I know. This is all he knew, though it was odd that he should have found himself at such loss, since there was not another Peter J. T. Ollapod in the Directory but it was Mr. Peter J. T. Ollapod whose name they quoted with such easy familiarity, as in accounts, in making entries.

When I say "they," I mean such a set of clerks as no one before Mr. Ollapod ever saw—just thumbscrews, pale, writing-office machines, precision and celerity, after the dictation of a tongue hanging from the ceiling, like the clapper of a bell, as thus:

Paid Mr. Ollapod.....Two Intermittents.
Paid " " .....Two Remittents.
Paid " " .....Ten Drunkids.
Paid " " .....Ten Habitual Zymbe.
Checked to his Account: See Book of the Receiving Angel.

Fancy Ollapod's astonishment!

"It is a case of brain-fever," he said, mourn ully, to himself. "I should die! I have overworked myself. What I should die! I have been tricked down as he thought of the loss—to himself. "But it was not so! hands were to be had out of a brain-fever! Nevertheless they would not! Mr. Ollapod was no officer! No need then of lordships, no rows about salaries, no bill-dog, no wife and family to discover in the way when any thing is to be done. If this be delirium it is a sensible one, and I should like to pat it on the head and then all would be angels and fevers. I must be very bad, after all."

"So you are, Peter J. T. Ollapod!" said the tongue, hastily. "Be quiet, sir! What are you stopping for? You there—write!"

Dr. D. P. J. T. Ollapod, for one undrained court. Dr. Tabb: Case gall of green stone. Dr. Ollapod: Scraps of garbage; one gutter overflowed; one mad alley.

Dr. to D. P. J. T. Ollapod, for one dwelling house without windows, called "Rooms to Let."

Dr. to D. P. J. T. Ollapod, for three muddy cellars, overflowed at high tide, called "Rooms to Let."

Dr. to D. P. J. T. Ollapod, for one dilapidated, unclaimed, ruined forever-and, called a "Tenement House."

Scratch! scratch! the thumbs and fingers setting all this down in black and white. Scratch! scratch! more thumbs and fingers counting off a pile of greenbacks smartly, and laying them out in rows. The one hundred dollars, in small bills, that Ollapod had just counted, and locked up in the third left-hand drawer of his walnut secretary.

"Are vouchers?" said the tongue. "Copy as I read out."

Four dollars from the widow in the little dark closet under the stairs, dying of consumption, brought on by starvation, bad air, and hopelessness.

Six dollars from the woman whose two children died of the surrounding nastiness—called, in their case, scarlet fever.

Eight dollars from the family who take boarders, and sleep fourteen to one small room at night.

Six dollars from an abandoned wretch, whose home is often overflowed, and is always green with mould, and who is drinking himself to death because he never has any comfort except when drunk.

Five dollars from a wicked creature, aged seventeen, born in dirt and vice, raised in dirt and vice, and who abandoned a virtue of which she scarcely heard, for Vice who nursed her.

Six dollars from a man whose wife and children died of the "fever-and," and who, finding no hope any where, is going desperately to the bad.

Eight—

"What of it all?" can Ollapod, not relishing the tone of the tongue. "Life is not full for all these people die or go to the devil? Do I oblige them to be vicious and dirty—or, for that matter, had I reason then to live in my house at all? Was in the world ever heard of such book-keeping before? In account for dysenteries, and typhids, black-balls, and the results of the wretches who live in them?"

"No one in the verld hears of such things—very true," returned the tongue, with a blandness that made Ollapod shiver; "and for your question the answer is not in my department. We deal in the office simply with the physical facts of the case; but speaking as an impartial intelligence, and for myself, I have no hesitation in saying that I believe the Receiving Angel, who settles these matters, will inform the views of that woman who is killing just now room 31 of your 'fever-nest,' you know."

Ollapod listened, and heard a weak voice saying, tremulously:

"I came here because I had trumped the streets for after day, and tracked the city, high and low, and there was nothing better for me. Rents are at such a pitch that poor folk can't pay them. Rooms are no dear that poor folk can't hire. My work was here, and if it wasn't here, where could I go with three little children? I knew that I had never been from one year's end to the other, and that the sickness was in the black ceiling, and the greasy floor, and the damp hall, and the rank and stench and mud all around it; but we couldn't stand out in the street—we must go somewhere. I have tried to be decent. I have tried to be economic. I would, anyhow, before I come here; but it is so discouraging to lie down at night and know that the next day's will be worse, and the next day worse than that, and the next day worse than that, and the next day worse than that. You say, sir, that the children; but who is to think of talking to them? They can't stay here in this little room, three children of them, and stifle all day long. If I open a door and whatever comes in, can, to be sure, but I can't keep out other folk's dirt; and somehow I can feel I am getting careless of those directions. That is the sin that will be laid, trying to shovel away one pile, when there's a bigger one behind it? And when I go out of trying to teach the children, when they learn outside more of the devil in one hour than I can tell them of God in one day, it is not for pleasure, for I am not used so bad; but they're worn down and worn out, the most of them, like me, and they have give up and give in. You ask me why I don't go away? How can they? They must crowd together, for they can't pay for room by themselves—you must, if you are so crowded you can't be clean if you try. I know, for I have tried it. And then look! Its poverty, sickness, and dirt over you; it is sickness and dirt on your right hand; it is wickedness and dirt on your left hand. Maybe there is, as you say, something better outside, but how are we going to know it—how are we going to feel and believe it—when we are and hear nothing but what I have told you, day in and day out? Top that with, part of the time, no food, no work, and always, always never any meat, and no decent clothes; and work, work, work forever, with no prospect of any thing better! Any one can see that I am trying to be a mire and slime?' Mr. Ollapod is our landlord, and I hear tell that he is a rich gentleman, and a deacon, and has gentlemen and gentlemen's gentlemen to charitable institutions, and goes in for reform; but if Mr. Ollapod would only reform its own houses a bit, he would be charitable to us! If for five hundred dollars a quarter he would take three hundred, or even two hundred and charge two rents, and make rules forbidding folk to cram themselves in his houses, three and four families at a time in one room, and I'm sure we could be genteel once. He could do it. He is rich enough to spare the time and money to do it. He could take only good and some of that money he gives away in cleaning out his fever-nests. If Mr. Ollapod would spend some of that money in the fever-nests of his houses, in putting in sewers and drains, and letting in the light and air of heaven; if he would spend a set sense of his money in hiring folk to look after his houses when done, and make those poor lynx-eyed creatures keep themselves clean; if he would only give us poor struggling wretches room and air—pure air! I don't know if he could put his name to the new tenement lists, or if he could get a seat any higher in the church, but I do know all we poor folk would bless him and pray for him every day of our lives! Yes, sir, we would!"

The tongue had no eyes, and yet Ollapod felt that it stared at him with a cold severity. The thumbs and fingers had no eyes, yet Ollapod angrily felt that they were waiting too.

"Is this a case for Ollapod," spluttered Ollapod, "and impracticable, and it is no answer at all. It is mixing up business and charity. I never mix charity with business. Next!"

"I should think not," said the tongue, dryly. "Write. Sundry cases. Eight dollars."

"Are you never going to have done with that stuff?" interrupted Ollapod, getting in a rage.

"The question is, are you never going to have done, Mr. Ollapod?" answered the tongue. "Eight dollars—from—the old man in the attic, and write him off." He started to death an hour ago, leaving the sum of money due on his rent, neatly folded in a paper, and addressed to his landlord, Mr. P. J. T. Ollapod."

Scratch! scratch! all the thumbs and fingers trying to write it down.

"I'll be hanged if this is a fever," quoth Ollapod, fuming and walking up and down. "No, Sir. Not even in the most reckless of delirums, or the most abandoned of nightmares, could so insult, could I so insult myself. It is joke; a practical joke, and it will be better for the—"

"Make out a receipt in full," pursued the tongue, relentlessly, "and the promissory note to Peter J. T. Ollapod and his heirs—payable—with compound interest—in dollars—six as much as now due."

"Good Heavens!" shouted Ollapod, and rushing madly toward the desks, was heading the pause in the tongue, when he was confronted with Peter J. T. Ollapod."

It was an optical illusion, it had vanished. If it was a dream, it had gone. If it was a warning, it has failed. Peter J. T. Ollapod started from his chair, rang the bells furiously, roused the lives, naked his feet, went to bed with ice on his head, and was very careful of breakfast for a week afterward. Ollapod had triumphed over his fever. For the fever-nests, the black holes, and the places where the drains and sewers should be, they are maturing the interest on that promissory note.

A RESURRECTION.

THOMAS UPHAM and myself had, in our boyhood's days, been school-fellows, and had thus formed a friendship that ever after-wards did not diminish. I had made friends of all the family, consisting, besides my friend Tom, of his parents and four sisters. Tom was my senior by some three or four years, and was now married. His latest bride had been a favorite of mine, as well, and the rest of the family now usually resided there in preference to their house in town. My friendship and intimacy with the family, though it led me to go with Tom, had during these years extended to the members of it, and I had been wont often to go to Westfield for a day or two, whenever I could persuade my business ties to make it convenient.

The Uphams were a somewhat peculiar family, and though, proximately speaking, I was nowhere, I was always treated as one of themselves. There was a sort of intimacy in a family which, for even four daughters had, as may well be supposed, made my feelings for one of them somewhat warmer in the seconds of my friendship—for do not mind now owning a fact, that I, some years since, guarded with a sufficient care, and in the most delicate fashion, Tom, notwithstanding my humble position, and great inferiority to the family, I was rash enough to fall into love with Miss Upham, and was in this was the fact, that my love was returned as heartily as it was given. My prospects were good at the time in question, for I had strong hopes—why, a certainty—of, in another two years, finding myself with an annual income of not less than £1500, and at not would rise to £1500. This, I knew, would not serve to keep Polly Upham in the position she had been in, or to give her the luxuries she enjoyed at home; still, as she did not throw cold water on our hopes, it was not for us to do so. Besides, there was no hurry—a long engagement I knew and could well wait some two or three years. I had hopes that Polly would be content to wait, and a favorable eye when I was in a better position to advance my hopes, and placed considerable reliance on the feeling I had given them.

So, for some fifteen months, did the secret engagement between Polly and myself exist till engrossed all health shattered my love to the future, and caused me to relinquish that situation from which I had hoped so much. We had corresponded frequently; but I knew thought it would be the only plan that I could honorably pursue to discontinue our hopeless engagement. I wrote to her judgment barely a match for the promptings of my heart; but Polly, though silent on the matter, could not have interpreted my letter as I had meant it therefore by our dearest hopes was upraised. Besides, we were apart, at the time, and whether all our reasonings would have convinced us

It may have been a foolish thing—after the disappointment of my hopes—to have gone to Westfield again to seek the company of one who should, for the future, only meet me as a friend. Yet, whether it was foolish or not, I did so repeat that I went down to Westfield and joined the Upham family. My greeting from each of them was cordial, and met hearty in the extreme. As usual with them, they had much company, and it was owing to this reason that Polly and myself had so few days kept apart, and therefore much unpleasantness for each of us avoided. Thus, though possibly on the same side in a game at croquet, or at chess, or at baratelle in the evening (and we somehow managed to get on the same side pretty frequently), we could prevent our chat from being on any but indifferent topics; and for some reasons I thought this a blessing, though I did not feel, I think, why other by Polly's side; and the thought that I used to be so favored came to my mind, and would cause me momentary pleasure, but I knew that reason that was for them pleasure. But of course this was not jealousy. Oh, dear no!—nothing of the kind. So things went on for some weeks, till, laying by all my former prudent resolves, I determined to try and find out whether Polly felt as much regard for me as before.

By this time some of the visitors had departed, and I had more opportunities of seeking Polly's society than had been before afforded me. I need not detail the steps I took; but suffice it to say, I found that, under all her assumed coldness, she cared for me as much as ever. I found that a proposal that had been made to her in my absence had previously had been declined; and, without pressing her for her reasons, I was pleased to find that recollections of myself had principally caused her refusal being given. We may have been foolish—are not love and youth always said to be so?—but without any fresh vows being registered, or any fresh engagement being entered into, we seemed as we have again entered upon our course of love. This, in our daily rides and walks, we indulged in the sweet converse that to ourselves proved so utterly delightful, but seems so insipid to those outside love's charmed circle. At night we found some opportunity of giving and taking a kiss as of old; and in every way possible I found myself head over ears in love, yet with no prospect of arriving at the desirable consummation of marriage. We were both, however, of determinedly independent spirits; and one day, being (or more correctly, we had overlooked) on opposite sides in a fiercely-contended game of croquet, one of those points of dispute to which the game so often is subject arose. Polly sided with her side, I with mine; the rules were produced, but did not seem to bear on the point; umpire party none; what was to be give way; the game was left unfinished, and I saw that a coldness between myself and Polly had set in. For days I strove most thoughtlessly did that best to widen the breach, which continued for upward of a week. There was to be a wedding in the family, and during the bustle and confusion of preparations Polly and I saw little of each other. The wedding-day arrived, the great manœuvre was to Polly's bridal-recess, I excused myself from being present. I thought over in my mind, that though this was an unintentional misunderstanding, it would be as well for me to take this opportunity of bringing my visit to a close.

With this object in view, as soon as the family returned from the wedding I made my preparations for departure, I succeeded in having a few minutes' private conversation with Polly, and told her that I seemed to be under the necessity of that pleasure (I knew not for what reason); I thought it would be better for us to part. I gave her to understand that, whatever hopes I had once entertained of calling her mine, my ill health seemed to have dispersed them, and that, in wishing her farewell, I trusted she never had the misfortune to repent her present cruel treatment. Her reply was in just as lofty language. She had, she said, been suffering the while from which she had been treated by me, she thought it better we should bring our engagement to an end.

Thus mutually satisfied that each of us had suffered very grievous treatment at each other's hands, we parted. Making a point to each of the Misses Bowles I left Westfield, and wondered whether I should ever revisit it. As I was carried away by the express-train I thought from the lofty stilts of illusage I had mounted, and was forced to allow by myself that many a little of the blame of our quarrel was to be attached to myself. But we had now parted; Mary Upham and I were to be no more to each other than if we had never met. Perhaps it was better that it should be so, now I had to do something for myself, and for myself alone.

I resolved to visit, at rare regrets, to endeavor to forget the history of the past few weeks, and to seek for some employment which would in a partially restore it health. In this last object I was successful; I met with a commission, which, without being any great affair, was sufficiently well-fitted to keep me comfortably, and nothing more. But I was content; the dream of my life some months before had left me, now, like a cloud, and, in fact, I found all I required was the gratification of my bachelor wants. I had not forgotten Mary Upham, nor did I think I ever should; but the enjoyment of everyday business, and the thorough change of my habits, had worked wonders in my spirits, and deadened the activity of all painful remembrances.

So time swept on in the great City, as it was doing elsewhere all the w ld over; Christmas was at hand, and I had determined to spend it with friends in New York. It was on Christmas-eve: it thought I would spend the evening with a friend, and set off to do so. The clouds were heavy when I started, and before I had got half-way to commence a downpour of rain. I did not take a carriage, for I knew I should not find one waiting at home before a certain hour of the evening, but turned into the first restaurant I came to, and ordered some tea. While my tea was preparing, I looked placed over the daily papers; suddenly my eye was caught by the sight of the name of Westfield. Though all my ties with the place were severed, I read the fragment of news with interest. It gave an account of a terrible gale that had recently raged round the Eastern coast, and went on to say that a stranger had, some days before, been found dead and ill-ground from one of the cliffs. He was supposed he had literally been blown off the cliff by the violence of the gale. I perfectly knew the spot referred to, and my thoughts wandering to my friends at Westfield. I pictured them to myself with a happy fall of company for the festive time. And Mary Upham, or Polly as I had delighted to call her, what was she doing, who was she ing about? My thoughts, which during all this festive season have been charitable to all the world, were for some unaccountable reason full of bitterness. I pictured Polly (lately my Polly) flirting with some fresh face; no sooner off with the old love than on with the new. "No," said I, "she is not." "I was right when I expressed a doubt of her ever recruiting her sorrowful treatment of me when we parted."

With these thoughts in my mind I took another cup of tea, and gave the paper a contemptuous Afredo- dardo! here my eyes rest upon the list of deaths, and what is it I see? Though marriages and births share the honor of being the only portion of a paper that the ladies think it worth their while to study, what inducement can I have to glancing to be a casual reader of deaths, find in it anything the list of deaths? But it is sufficient for me now to state that I was caught my eye, and I may say literally ray took my breath away, was the announcement of my own death! Yes, there it was, in plain, staring black letters, on a white ground, and the longer I looked the larger it seemed to become:

"Died, in Hampton Hospital, on the 18th inst., Charles Gilbert, formerly of Boston."

"Hampton Hospital! I was never in the place in my life!" But my name was Charles Gilbert, and my native place was Boston. "It must be some one of the same name," said I, and with this I endeavored to dismiss the thought. But the idea came into my head, and calling for ink and paper, I wrote those few lines in haste:

"To the Editor of the Westfield News:

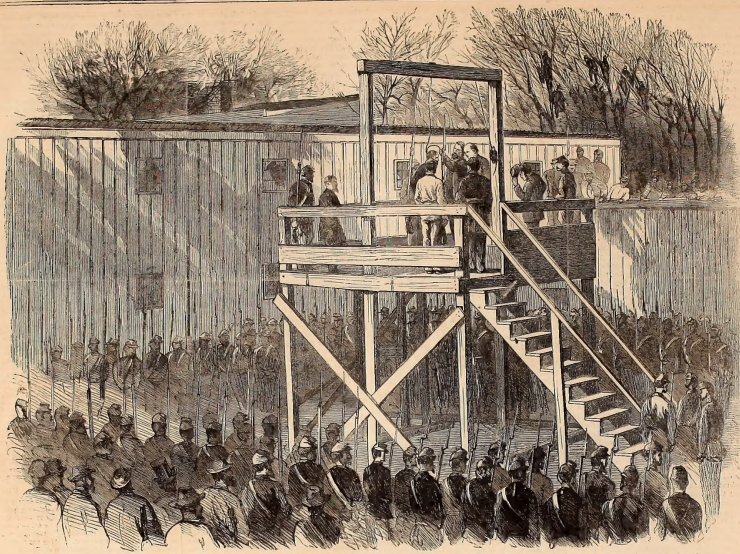
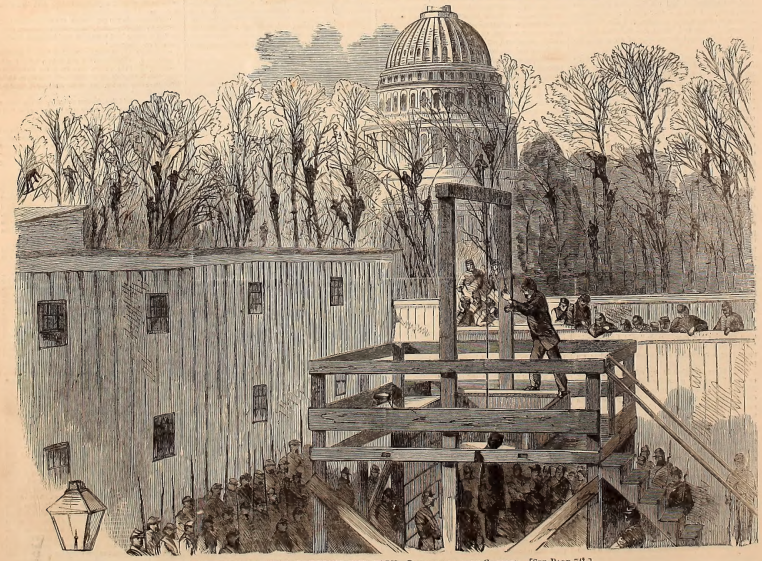
"SIR,—Please insert this notice of death to your issue of Friday n st. Yours, etc."

After writing as above I cut out the notice from the New York paper, and inclosed it with the note I had written, and all the postage stamps I had with me. Having paid my reckoning, I found the rain had ceased, and set out for my friend's, posting my letter on the way. I well knew that the Westfield News was read by my Eastern friends, and trusted the announcement would meet Polly's eye. Should it eye, for at the moment I felt much incensed against her.



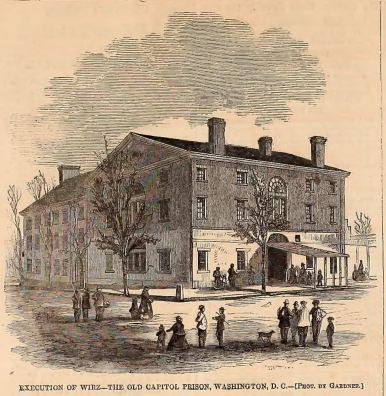
Christmas passed, and with it all thoughts of my recently-announced death. I was still in New York working my commission; but a change was coming.

Many of my relatives had a firm conviction that a large amount of very valuable property had fallen to our family. Lawyers were consulted, and all the proper processes were gone through; but still the trial did not come on. So great did my cause had this affair been coming on and successive terms; when, thoroughly disgusted with the pleasure-uncertainty of the law, I gave up all hopes I had entertained when I first heard of the impending trial. I had now been nine years at it, nursing my thing about it, and wishing I might not have the heartache till I came into my share of the property. But all these things were to have come off, and we were victorious. The spoil which now came into my hands had to undergo a number of divisions, and was consequently comparatively. But it made a considerable difference to myself; for while I had at the approach of the proceedings had been reduced to a small salary, I this year saw the same season approach having no occasion to put my hand to the pen. This was the fortunate possessor of an annual stipend of $2000.



But there was to be a great gathering of all the branches of the Gilbert family at Boston, where I had kept most royally among us. Our festive season made us good friends; and at the festive season we mutually laid aside all former differences that existed among us. For a time I visited one or another of my relations, but I determined eventually that time and distance had weakened, if not severed.

But I soon began to long for a change, and determined to spend a few weeks in New York. Here I looked on many who had forgotten me, and half remembered many more. I was again launched into lor life. One evening, tired and thirsty, I turned into a restaurant and ordered tea. While my tea was being prepared I sadirally remembered that it was from here I had sent that remarkable announcement of my death. It was the first time for the first time that it might have caused pain to those whose eyes may have seen it. A flood of memories swept over me. I remembered all the recollections of all my kind friends at Westfield were presented vividly to my mind. I thought I would go to the post-office, and determined I would the next day go down to Westfield, stop at the hotel, and see my friends before they could be informed to them. This being determined on, and having made my few preparations, I took ticket for Westfield on the morning of the 18th inst. The 18th! yesterday: so when I arrived I took up my quarters at the hotel, and resolved I would not leave it for the next twenty-four. I intended beholding the Upham family from my seat at church, and flattered myself that the attendance at church on that day would screen me from discovery and prove my incognito. I must own to a degree of nervousness the following morning as I dressed for church. I was arraying myself for church. I tried to reason to myself, arguing that Mary Upham was now no more to me, and with very indifferent success. I wondered whether I should be known, and, though my features were somewhat altered by growing a mustache and drooping beard and whiskers, which were novelties since they last saw me, would effectually disguise me. I was in a perfect state of trepidation, I set off. I was late; the service had begun; and somewhat vexed with myself, it was some minutes before I could find a convenient pew. I felt at entering a place of worship during service.



When I had recovered my equanimity I looked round the church, and there they were in their old place, all but the eldest daughter, who I knew was married. There was Mary Upham, a young-at daughters, a cousin (female), and last, but foremost in my eyes, Polly, looking paler, more delicate than I ever saw her, and, to my eyes, more lovely than ever. I was in a great measure out of their view, and remained so till the close of the service. Then I rose to leave, being sure I noticed her eyes fixed on me, her face ghastly pale. I hurried from the church, and, calling for my horse, I rode to go, and by the action faced Polly Upham. A full look of recognition lights her face; but it instantly passes, and she looks at me as to save her from falling, but others are before me, and finding I can do nothing, I leave the building. I remained in the town a few days, but I was

EXECUTION OF CAPTAIN HENRY WIRZ—ADJUSTING THE ROPE.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER.]

EXECUTION OF WIRZ—LOWERING THE BODY.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER.—[SEE PAGE 743.]

EXECUTION OF WIRZ—THE OLD CAPITOL PRISON, WASHINGTON, D. C.—[PHOT. BY GARDNER.]

MEMBERS OF THE PRESS AWAITING THE EXECUTION OF WIRZ.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER.]

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

The costumes represented in the engraving are a morning dress in violet silk—a color quite in vogue now, and lately worn by her Majesty the Empress—its shape, the "Gabrielle," is to the last degree becoming; the trimmings at the back of the bodice and on the shoulders are in insertion of gimp with angles; the shoulder-knots and tabs being of the same material, with pendent buttons. The dress of set thin introduced display to advantage the elegant simplicity of this costume. At the bottom of the skirt one row of the same trimming is mostly preferred, which is similarly carried along the seam of the sleeve. In front large buttons, of the same pattern, in gimp insertion, reach to the bottom of the dress.

In the second figure will be found a "Toilette de Visite," in reps-pomme silk, with jacket and skirt of the same shade. It will be observed, however, that the pattern of the jacket is modified, the edges being cordoned with lace; if below this a trimming of Mechlin lace is added a very pretty effect is produced. The jacket is trimmed like the skirt.

The bonnet is very elegant. The front and inside being in black velvet considerable brilliancy is given to the gold pendants by this dark ground. The aigrette is black, and, with a spotted lace veil, completes agreeably this article of attire, which, if slightly flattened over the forehead, has a most coquettish air.

The third toilet approximates to a winter dress. The form of the cloak in black velvet, with passementerie of the same color, is very graceful, the lower border being trimmed with lace. The color of the dress is "havanne," the ribbons being in white taffeta, covered with black guipure insertion. The lappels upon the flounce, as well as the circular trimming shown in the engraving, are of the same material, and set off admirably this very distingué toilet. The bonnet is in black velvet, in the style known as the "Empire," trimmed with white feathers. Bonnets generally remain very small, and the "fanchons" pattern is especially worn at concerts and theatres in fantaisie legere.

In jewelry cameos will be especial favorites, and complete "parures" are already exhibited by the leading houses. These gems in variably command the admiration of all persons of taste. The settings must, however, be simple and chaste, to coincide with the prevailing gout.

Russian buckles, ornamented with little chains, will be much worn over dark dresses of every shade.

Dresses without plaits, but with gored skirts, are quite in vogue, while passementerie, with white bugles or jet, is much used in trimming. Walking dresses are, of course, looped, and display petticoats trimmed to correspond with the dress itself.

In "coiffures" the back hair is not being worn so low as it has recently been; corsets and curls are being generally adopted, these styles suiting so many different classes of features.

"Pardessus" are demi-saison, so as only to define but not fit the figure. They are ornamented with "capuchons." The materials used are of considerable substance, and those speckled patterns now made in every variety of color are much in request.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER, 1865.

Do not WASTE your Money buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even in the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BARNUM'S

NEW AMERICAN MUSEUM, Broadway, between Spring and Prince Streets.

LIFE-LIKE ATTRACTIONS! MUSEUM! MENAGERIE! DRAMA! LIVING HUMAN WONDERS!

1,000,000 CURIOSITIES!

Open at all hours.

A five establishment, a live management, live audiences! Always something new, pleasing, and wonderful! Nobody is disappointed! Instruction and amusement combined! Polite attention for only 10 cents. Nothing half-done! The most fastidious, but everything to gratify both the curiosity and refined taste.

TWO PERFORMANCES EACH DAY.

An ENTIRE DRAMATIC COMPANY and a FIRST-CLASS CIRCUS TROUPE. Celebrated riders, Clowns, Acrobats, Horses, Ponies, etc. At 2 o'clock and 7½ P.M. Don't Dearie, Pat Winans, Living Skeleton, Circassian Girls, &c., &c. Admission 10 cts.; Children under 10, 5 cts.

MATILDA TOOTS.

NEW COMIC SONG, 25c. With picture, colored ..... 50c.

I CAN NOT SING THE OLD SONGS ..... 25c.

SUNLIGHT WITHIN MY HEART ..... 25c.

HAVE YOU SEEN HER LATELY? (comic) ..... 25c.

SOLDIERS' LAST PRAYER. Marseilles ..... 25c.

IT WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE ..... 25c.

Mailed postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME,

208 Broadway, New York.

Make your own Soap

WITH R. T. BARRETT'S

Pure Concentrated Potash,

OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other, regardless of price in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 25 gallons of rich soap. No lime is required. Customers will find this the cheapest potash in market.

R. T. BARRETT,

64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money is the JOHNSON PEN—manufactured for any writer in the world. Also, every variety of Pen-holders on hand. Pens repaired on receipt of 25 cts. Pens sent by mail. Send for Circular. E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office No. 29 Maiden Lane, New York.

A SCHOOL MAGAZINE FREE!

CLARK'S SCHOOL VISITOR.—VOL. X.—1866.

Seventy-five Cents a Year.

Rendings, Dialogues, Speeches, Music, Poems, Mathematics, Grammar, Enigmas, Science, &c.

The Publishers will present a copy of CLARK'S SCHOOLTIY, in order to reach all parts of the country, will send the VISITOR ONE YEAR FREE to any School that will act as agent. AT ANY POST-OFFICE in the United States.

Address, with full name, for particulars,

J. W. DAUGHADAY, Publisher,

1102 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

 Exchange copying the above, and sending a marked copy, will receive the Visitor for one year free.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? OUR CHEMICAL Compound will force them to grow on the smoothest face or chin in a few weeks. Sent on mail ready for use. Address WARNER & CO., Box 118, Brooklyn, New York.

FOUNTAIN PENS. No Inkstand required; one filling will last 12 hours. Also Gold Pens, 50 cts., or gold mounted, $1. Pens repaired for 50 cts. Send stamp for circular. G. F. HARRIS, Publisher and Gold Pen Manufacturer, 25 Nassau St., N.Y.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES OR other fruit. The BUSINESS SECRET (complete). Information of importance to Ladies, and persons manufacturing such knowing will be found in the "BOOK OF WONDERS." For copies send 20 cents to the PUBLISHER, Box 1,000, Boston, Mass.

GREENBACKS ARE GOOD—ROBACKS ARE BETTER.

The best tonic and agent preventive in the world. 50,000 bottles sold annually. Sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per Bottle & Co., Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Robacks, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

THE PHANTOM OF THE WILDERNESS —EMERSON BENNETT'S NEW Novelist will be commenced in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST on the first of January. Mr. Bennett now writes one novel for THE POST. Also a host of other popular writers. WHEELER & WILSON'S 850 SEWING MACHINES are given as PREMIUMS. $2 for 3 years. Specimen 25c. Light and one profits, 10. Sample copies, containing full particulars, furnished gratis. Add to H. PETERSON & CO., 319 Walnut Street Philadelphia. Single numbers for sale by the News Dealers.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own Homes. Thousands can realize a hundred dollars weekly. No outside required except in our found. We supply everything. You'd a 100 per cent. Samples sent free. To the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of 3 cents. Address at once, MORRING & BROWN, 611 Broadway, New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

(ESTABLISHED 1830).

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO HAVE.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00
100 Gold Watches	60 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	20 00
1000 Revolving Castors	$15 00 to 18 00
1000 Drinking Cups	7 00 to 10 00
5000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	6 00 to 10 00
5000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	6 00 to 10 00
50 0 Ladies' Californian Diamond Rings	5 00 to 8 00
5000 Sets Sleeve Buttons and Studs	4 00 to 6 00
10000 Gold Pens, silver-mounted Holders	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Pencils	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	6 00 to 10 00
5000 Pair Ladies' Gaiter Boots, per pair	12 00 to 15 00
5000 Dozen Coin Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 18 00
5000 Dozen Spoons	14 00 to 18 00
5000 Opera Glasses, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
10000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one has been valued at, are first put in envelopes, sealed up, and well mixed, so that no one can tell what any one contains, or what it is worth. They are then sold, without regard to value, and there is at your option to send one dollar and take the chance of getting what you may, or you will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; 160 for $20; 325 for $40.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to labor and goods to act on sale. Full list and terms for circular, which gives special terms, full list, and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 158 Broadway, N.Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by troops, sold by the SOLDIERS' AID EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Splendid Jewelry, Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of DOANGER, FISHER, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened an Agency in the City of N. Y. for the sale of their celebrated Jewelry, Watches, &c.; and for the purpose of making their goods so extensively known and appreciated in the United States as they now are, and have been for years in Europe, they have decided to operate on a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the advantage of these splendid articles. The Company in this world remark that they manufacture and sell no tawdry Jewelry or Watches. THEIR NAME IS A GUARANTEE FOR THE HIGHEST WORKMANSHIP.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant succession of new and recherche styles and patterns with which we shall keep them fully and promptly supplied.

We have adopted the plan of sale, now so popular, of charging a uniform price, and the price will invariably be $5 for any article of Jewelry, Watch, or article of Vertu. The expenses of conducting our New York Agency are the making both of Certificates and Envelopes containing the various articles. The Certificates are sold at 25 cents each, and are mixed with the Envelopes, so that no one holder the particular article he or she may obtain.

$6 WATCHES FOR THE HOLIDAYS. $8

An extensive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, especially adapted for Christmas presents, of fine finish and rich design, at greatly reduced prices.

An unusual VARIETY, in fine gold-plated double cases, richly engraved, English full plate jeweled movements, adjusted to position, improved winders and balance bridge, fine enamel white dial, and fancy hands. Compare THOMPSON'S, with any case, gold FULL WIRE chain, with beautiful ONYX LOCKET (double hunting case) for two likenesses, all complete, a beautiful Christmas present, sent free by mail for only $8.

A handsome GENTS' WATCH, correctable pattern, in heavy double cases; small size, same as $8 watch; with key, case, chain, gold locket, &c., complete, sent free to any part of the country for only $6.

The Interior of Watchmen, a Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, containing a beautiful and correct working Diagram of the movements of a Lever Watch. Everyone is interested, such in Detail, and a Reliable Calculator, indicating the value of month, week, day, hour, minute, the Watch a perfect Secret, Hint, and Time Indicator, and of great value to every one. Sent free to any address on receipt of postage Stamp. This valuable Work is secured by Copyright. Address THOMPSON Monroe Square 19 Iron Corner (the corner next leaving it) San Gabriel Hall, late cases of Solid Gold Compounds, richly engraved, with Fund for Jewels, Ornamental Gold Chain, Locket, Charm, Action, M. J. Tobias manufacturer, Polished Lever Cap, Self-Acting Jewel and Stem Click, Improved Patent Independent Action, and in exact resolution of a $20 Watch used by the ROYAL Dragoman and Officers of the Line, Instant Aneut. Warranted one year. Price per single case, all complete, with Case, Key, &c., and any style of Watch, $20. FINE SILVER Lepines, Hunting Cases, $15. Ivorine Dresser, $20. Genuine AMERICAN LEVERS, $25. Full Stem Winding Watches, $30. PATENT LEVERS, $30. Ladies' Fine Ornamented watch, stemwinder, $25. All styles of GOOD WATCHES for PRESENTS. Catalogues sent free. Address CASTLEY BROTHERS, Importers of Fine Watches, 119 Nassau St., New York. (Established 1855.)

THE LADY'S FRIEND—

The best of the Monthlies—devoted to Fashion and Literature. $2 50 a year; two copies, $4: Eight and one sent, $16. WHEELER & WILSON'S SEWING MACHINES given as Premiums. Send 10 cents for sample copy to DEACON & PETERSON, 319 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

Single numbers for sale by the news dealers.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER
ONE DOLLAR EACH
PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 20, 1865.

An ENGLISH and AMERICAN Pocket Timekeeper for Ladies and Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the latest approved Astronomical Principles, and warranted to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute correctness for all time to come. More reliable than the most costly and elaborate timekeeper of modern mind can produce. Simple in construction. It requires no key or winding up; never runs down, and can never be lost or out of order. It is a most convenient article. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is secured by a Royal Patent. Sent by mail, on receipt of one dollar, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, for $1. Sent, postage paid, in any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Special terms to Agents. Liberal discount to the trade. All persons are LEGALLY PROTECTED from infringement, all persons are cautioned against counterfeiting or selling for less than genuine, under no matter what ALTERATION or NAME or they will be liable to Fine and Imprisonment. Any person in this section, who intends the advertisement with a view to swindle, will be prosecuted to the extent of the law. Send for a single specimen of genuine article to INSURE our genuine Timekeeper. Address all orders to EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER CO., Sole Proprietors, 204-206 Broadway, N.Y.

Ladies' and Misses' Hats,

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' HATS, FEATHERS, FLOWERS, ORNAMENTS, FURS.

The forgoing, embracing of importations from London and Paris, with all of the latest styles of Fashionable styles of American manufac ure, for sale by

THOMAS KELLY,
509 Canal Street, near Broadway.

E. & T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our extensive manufacture of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are constantly on the lookout for the following articles:

Stereoscopic and Microscopic Views.

Of these we have an immense assortment, including

TWO OF THE WAR,

Obtained at great expense and forming a complete

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT REBELLION IN CONTEST

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,
Yorktown,	Fredericksburg,
Gettysburgh,	Hanover Junction,
Richmond,	Lookout Mountain,
Savage Station,	Chickahominy,
Fredericksburgh,	City Point,
Fairfax,	Nashville,
Richmond &	Petersburgh,
Pemp Station,	Belle Plain,
Manitoza,	Chattanooga,
Fort Morgan,	Atlanta,
Charleston,	Mobile,
Florida,	Strawberry Plains,
	&c. &c.

American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, &c., &c. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent on application on receipt of stamp.

Photographic Albums.

We were the first to introduce these into the United States and have always maintained the lead in their manufacture. Having had a practical experience of many years, we still have the superiority of workmanship to boast, and therefore offer them to the trade with confidence as to their quality.

☞ FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER. ☜

The Trade will find our Albums the most Saleable they can buy.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over Five Thousand different subjects to which additions are continually making of Stereoscopic Anthentic, &c., viz: about

1,000 Cities,	450 Statesmen,
100 Ruins,	1,000 Authors, 125 Divines,
250 Colonels,	75 Navy Officers, 225 Authors,
40 Actors	1,000 Miscellaneous,
	1,000 Heads of World's Fair Buildings,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c. Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp. An order for One Dozen Persons from our Catalogue, will be filled at the rate of $1 per dozen. Address as above.

Photographers and others supplying goods E. & T. A. & Co. cannot insure the prompt execution of the orders with their order.

☞ The price and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy. ☜

TO CLAIM AGENTS.—Send $8 to J. H. H. Woodward, Louisville, Kentucky, and get 200 different specimens of the best claim cards and 500 circulars sent out in the United States. Address Box 1926. Catalogue with price list will accompany.

$150 A MONTH MADE BY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS and others, with Stencil Dies. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vermont.

Metropolitan Enterprise.
GREAT GIFT SALE
OF THE
NEW YORK AND PROVIDENCE
Jewelers' Association.
Capital.....$1,000,000.

An immense stock of Plated, Watches, Jewelry, and Fancy Goods, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you see what you will receive.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed.

These envelopes will be sent by mail, regardless of choice, as fast as ordered, together with the following prices:

1 for 25 cents, with a premium picture, worth 25 cents.
5 for $1, with a splendid steel engraving, worth $1 00
11 for $2, with a silver napkin-ring, worth 2 00
27 for $5, with a gold pen and pencil, worth 5 00
55 for $10, with a gold locket, worth 10 00
112 for $20, with a silver watch, worth 20 00
196 for $35, with a good silver watch, worth 30 00
300 for $50, with a silver hunting case watch, worth 50 00

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then if you choose to pay the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may then obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Fine Jewelry, Silverware, or any Set of Jewelry or one list, for $1; and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks.

Circulars mailed. Great inducements to Ladies and Gents, who will act as such.

Don't fail to send for circular, giving full particulars.

Address C. M. DUNN & CO., Managers,
No. 5 Dey Street, New York.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST—

A First-Class Literary Paper—Edited by Mrs. Bella Z. Spencer, with Several Assistants. Its writers exclusively for it—with a host of other talented and popular authors. $2 50 a year. Two copies, $4. Seven copies (and one gratis), $16. WHEELER & WILSON'S CELEBRATED SEWING MACHINES given as Premiums. Send 10 cents for specimen copy to DEACON & PETERSON, 319 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

Single numbers for sale by the news dealers.

1866. THE LADY'S FRIEND—

The best of the Monthlies—devoted to LITERATURE and FASHION. $2 50 a year. We give WHEELER & WILSON'S celebrated $50 Sewing Machines on the following terms:

Twenty copies and the Sewing Machine.....$70.
Thirty copies and the Sewing Machine.....$85.
Forty copies and the Sewing Machine.....$100.

Send 10 cents for a sample copy to DEACON & PETERSON, 319 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

AMERICAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER.
FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most correct scientific principles, and warranted to denote solar time with greater accuracy than the most costly and elaborate gold or silver repeater, while the price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every one. It is unlike any other Pocket Timekeeper in the world. Neat, cheap, and warranted perfectly accurate: can never get out of order. It will last a lifetime. Is worn in a gilt, with white enameled dial in gold or silver gilt, 50 cts. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION.—The invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturers, and all persons are cautioned against purchasing any of the base imitations, under no matter what ALTERATION OF NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N.Y.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief. Its effects is permanent. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. WM. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

OF THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Pathitis, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.

$10,000 Dollars will be paid for advice for a better remedy. It contains no opium, calomel, or mineral poison, and can be safely taken by the most delicate infant.

DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS strikes at the root of the disease at once. The most distressing cough is frequently relieved by a single dose, and broken up in a few hours' time. The first dose will have a trial, and no other bottle before they find whether this remedy will afford relief or not.

This is no FAMILIAR PREPARATION, but one which, if used as directed, will relieve the most distressing cough. The effect dose in numerous cases where the most skilful physicians in the country had tried in forgo have been employed, and have exercised their skill in vain. Cases of from ten to twenty years' standing, and pronounced INCURABLE BY PHYSICIANS BEYOND A DOUBT, having the patients themselves give up, and make a home to their friends, have been cured by DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and the victims of consumption" and given vigorous health and strength among us. And those cases are not isolated ones; they are numerous, and can be satisfied only by personal application. Over one million bottles already has been tested. Full directions accompanies each bottle. Price One Dollar.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
No. 380 Canal Street, New York.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR
KEY'S AMERICAN UNION WRITING FLUID.
THE BEST WRITING FLUID in the WORLD.

ARCANA WATCH.

At elegant, durable, and reliable as the finest gold watch. Gents' size, Hunting case, Lever, $25. Ladies' Hunting case, Lever, $18. ARCANA WATCH CO., 62 Fulton Street, New York.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.

The CELEBRATED MACHINES we can recommend to the public, confident that they do all the IMPROVEMENTS which EXPERIENCE has proved to be requisite in the best Sewing Machines. We shall be interested to call and examine THE ELLIPTIC before purchasing. Warerooms, 508 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations. By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician. Just sent free by mail. Address, for 25 cents.

Address Mrs. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

Curl your Hair. One application will curl your hair like Ringlets, and last 6 months. Price 50c. by mail. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Agents Wanted.

$10 A Day easy made $10.

By selling Engravings, Oil Photographs, and Stationery Packages. Also, Agents wanted to canvass for Photographs, combine paper, envelopes, pencil, pens, &c., and jewelry worth a dollar at retail. Price only 25 cents. We will send Agents 100 STATIONERY PACKAGES and a SILVER WATCH for $15. We also publish splendid steel engravings, very popular and salable. Will send a sample lot for $5 by express. Send stamp for Catalogue, Terms, &c. HASKINS & CO., 35 Beekman St., N. Y.

AGENTS, LOOK AT THIS.

A simple and catalogue of articles every body wants, sent for 10 cents. Address

H. RIVINGTON & CO., 69 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS and DEALERS in FANCY GOODS—a sample box and profitable article. Send 25 cents for sample and trade-list. W. C. WRIGHT, 275 Broadway, New York.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Manufactured during the past 12 years, are fully warranted. Monthly payments received for the same. Second-hand Pianos at bargains. Prices low for cash. Wholesale and Retail Warerooms, 481 Broadway, N. Y. Agents wanted. Illustrated Price List sent free. Address HORACE WATERS.

AGENTS and DEALERS in FANCY GOODS—a sample box and profitable article. Send 25 cents for sample and trade-list. W. C. WRIGHT, 275 Broadway, New York.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.
The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

"Originally patented May 13, 1856; Improvement patented June 6, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with its many additions and improvements, is now complete. Started heavily, it sustains its operation, and the strength of its motion, to the last stitch, with the same unvarying certainty of ACTION. Nailed bed, and with perfect regularity and precision the SPRINGING-SPRING MOTION, which is peculiar to this machine, and with unerring certainty, making SURE SUCCESS to each evolution of the WHEEL, and to each stitch, is SURE, SWIFT, SEW, and SILENT. It also requires no change of stitch; is not liable to get out of order; runs light, and is unsurpassed for simplicity and LIGHTNESS. It is no experiment—a sure thing—patented, tested, and proved at Staten Island Fair, and with the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have used them.

"For the dressmaker it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Lady's Book.

"It runs a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can run it."—Tribune Gems.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the run stitches exactly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of $5 per Machine. Send Address in a plain hand, and every where.

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
No. 600 Grand Street, New York.

$1,000,000 Worth
of
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and to be paid for only after you know what you are to receive.

Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each $125 00
5-9 Silver Watches ..... each $9 00 to $35 00
Ladies' and Gents' Silver Cases ..... each 5 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description, which, with Certificates, are placed sealed ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:

Certificates naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail as follows, viz:

1 for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

Agents wanted to whom a liberal cash premium will be paid.

A. H. BROWN & CO.,
36 Beekman Street. P. O. Box 5,643.

$25 A DAY. AGENTS WANTED to sell a new and valuable SEWING MACHINE, the only cheap one licensed. Address

SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH. AGENTS WANTED for six entirely new articles, just out. Address O. E. CHAPIN, City Building, Biddeford, Maine.

UNITED STATES STEEL PEN WORKS,
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.,
STEEL PEN MANUFACTURERS,

WAREHOUSE, 400 Arch Street, Philadelphia,
AND 91 John Street, New York.

SAMPLES AND PRICES ON APPLICATION. LOTS MADE TO ORDER AT SHORT NOTICE. Trade supplied.

Caution: These Pens are of genuine American manufacture, and equal in finish, elasticity, and firmness of point to any Pens made in England. The public are begin the semblance of the American public. The footing on which our business is conducted precludes foreign imitation.

We are not retail by all stationers throughout the country.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.

PARLOR ORGANS.

The HORNET PREMIUM, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to the Great Fair of the Franklin Institute. It prevents over all competitors for the last instruments.

A GOLD MEDAL was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument on exhibition—a most just decision. The award for the second and largest number of this class was made to James M Pelton, exhibitor of Pelton's Patent Organ Action, and the third and last given to Mason and Hamlin.—WATSON'S Art Journal.

I can speak of them in the highest terms.—GEO. W. MORGAN.

The best instruments of the class I ever saw.—JOHN P. BRISTOW.

The best instruments of their class.—WM. A. KING.

These are to be recommended—for in reference of any others.—Professor ALEXANDER CHARLES FRENCH.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 57 East Twenty-third street,
New York.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of Approved Advertisements at their discretion, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half page, $125; one page, $200. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
Two Copies for One Year 7 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The BOUND VOLUMES of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Volumes now ready ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 9 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

The Volumes for 1863, 1864, and 1865 are for sale by all booksellers and the Author and Publisher. Cloth Cases for the volumes can be had for 50 cents each.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE ELECTION IN NEW JERSEY.

NEW JERSEY UNIONIST. "Now we've beaten you, I want to know what made you vote the Democratic Ticket?"

NEW JERSEY DEMOCRAT. "'Cause They paid my Poll Tax; and They said if we didn't beat the 'Constitutional Amendment' we'd all have to Marry Colored Wimin."

N. B.—The Poll Tax on Single Men in New Jersey varies from Six to Thirteen Dollars.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall,)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL.....$1,000,000. SURPLUS.....$1,100,000.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on favorable terms.
J. L. WORTH, Cashier.
NEW YORK, August 21, 1865.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie-Crust, eaten with impunity, and no fear of the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PIONEER YEAST POWDER. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 162 Front St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

$20. G. & S. CRYSTAL D. P. $20.
$1000 If your ear be faulty, or dental gilding and purging up the crystal Door Plate, Agents wanted. Stock, Tools, and Instructions sent $20. L. L. TODD & CO., 20 Nassau Street, New York.
SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

Shattered Constitutions Restored by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co. CHAMPAGNE
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and connoisseurs acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold by bond or duty paid by A. W. NITSCH, 62 Beaver St., N. Y.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
Measuring Card,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a PERFECT FIT.
BOOT AND SHOE EMPORIUM,
No. 575 Broadway, New York.
E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 697 Broadway, NEW 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

CHOICE MEDICAL BOOKS. Send for Catalogue to FELDHEIM & CO., 13 Court street, Boston.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCHU,
Cures diseases of the STOMACH AND KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, &c. PRICE ONE DOLLAR. Sold by D. BARNES & CO. and F. C. WELLS & CO., New York. BURLEIGH & BOOTHS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
BOSWELL & WARNER'S COLORITIC colors beautifully and natural. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory Dey St., N. Y.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

Agents Wanted
To canvass for our new, beautifully illustrated, and thrilling interesting volume of army experience, CAMP FIRE AND COTTON FIELD, by Gen. W. Kirke, Harold Correspondent. Full of startling incidents, amusing anecdotes, ingenious stratagems, life in camp and bivouac, together with ample and reliable directions to those who design engaging in cotton culture at the South. Send for circular. HURLOCK & CO., 19 Beekman St., New York.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 20 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Thereof on the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

SEND $1 50, by mail, to TOWNSEND, Navy Dealer, Meadville, Pennsylvania, and receive the best MAP of the PENNSYLVANIA OIL REGIONS, Free, by Mail.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemen's Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

IRON RAILING.
"JENKINS'S PATENT COMPOSITE" IRON RAILING, formerly sold by Hutchinson & Wickersham, is now for sale by the manufacturer's agency, HUTCHINSON, DAVIES & CO., No. 467 Broome Street, New York.

"American Union Company,"
MANUFACTURERS OF THE NEW CHEAP TOWER PIANO, EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY. Warranted in every particular for all time. Wareroom and "Agency," 467 Broome Street.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
469 Broadway (cor. Lord & Taylor's) and 184 Fulton St.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed effects.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to plain or old-fashioned "Butterflies," "Cabinets," Bows, &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the elegance of finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., FIELD & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
BROWN BROTHERS.....Chicago, Illinois.
LOWMAN & FIRL.....Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HAESCH.....Cleveland, Ohio.
SCHMIDT & CO.....Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CATON.....365 Broadway, New York.
W. A. SCHOLFIELD.....1 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BENHAM & CO.....Detroit, Michigan.

LAVADENTEM.
WHOLESALE AGENTS, BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give both a vigorous feeling, and enable you to sleep well.

BEAUTY—Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of DR. HALL'S BALM FOR HAIR. LE CHEVELURE, the most wonderful preparation ever used to nourish and restore hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. The hair will grow luxuriantly on the palms of the hands if rubbed with this Balm. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Four pints or circulars on receipt of stamp. Address BARRIE, SHILTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, P. O. Drawer 21, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

WHISKERS and MOUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEMPHRONIUS STARTAVEUR CAVIL-LARE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an entirely new principle. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Testimonials and purchasers will be supplied, a certain satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials free. Address BERGEN, SHILTZ & CO., Chemists, Post-Office Drawer 21, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Goose" (our own make) 10 CARB. SODA.
SODA ASH—Gumbler, 2, Hutchinson & Co.'s, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
CAUSTIC SODA—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Megarat Brothers', and Hunsley's.
BAL. SODA—Newcastle and other brands; also our own make.
SALERATUS—Pyrgeon, Excelsior, and Double Refined, made at our own works.
Perfectly pure Green Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Flor. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Terra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Bamboro Palm Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Rosin, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are "first hands." Established in 1847.
OFFICE—186 and 188 Cedar St., New York (west side).

DEMULCENT,
HONEY, GLYCERINE AND PALM
SOAPS,
J. C. HULL'S SON,
32 EAST 29th STREET, NEW-YORK,
Manufacturer of 100 different styles of Soaps.

TRADE MARK OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All goods of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patent of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 8 Chambers Street, New York.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $3, and $5 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $5, $4, $6, and $8 a set. Ivory and Pearl 16-lb Buckles, $1 50 to $8 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELDING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 571 Broadway.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed direction for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

25 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with catalogue of terms to agents. Address
HAYWARD & CO.,
229 Broadway, New York.

THE WEBER PIANO
Is considered by the leading Musicians, by the Nobility, Piano Manufacturers, Academies, Conservatories of Music, and other Musical Schools, the Best Piano-Forte Manufactured,
because of their GREAT POWER, SWEETNESS AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE, PERFECT EQUALITY, ELASTIC TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.
Warrooms 429 Broome St., New York.

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.
Our Ladies' Collar is out free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

Portable Printing Offices.
For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Also, Printing Materials, Stocks of Type, Cuts, &c., &c. Catalogue, 16 pages, sent free. Address ATLANTIC TYPE FOUNDERY, 16 Ann Street, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 466.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

BURNING OF REV. DR. TYNG'S CHURCH, CORNER OF SIXTEENTH STREET AND RUTHERFORD PLACE, NEW YORK, NOV. 14, 1865.—SKETCHED BY A. E. WARD.—[SEE PAGE 766.]

POPULAR NEW BOOKS

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

☞ Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

1.

NOTES FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of HENRY WARD BEECHER. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By AUGUSTA MOORE. A New Edition, revised, and greatly enlarged. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

2.

RICHARD CODDEN, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade: His Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MCGUFFIN. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

3.

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Florence, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AMORY, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

From the N. Y. Daily Times.

The book exhibits all the various phases of rebel treatment of their prisoners. Its revelations are almost too painful for general reading, and with the illustrations form a picture that must never be forgotten. Lieutenant Abbott's book is indispensable to a comprehension of the spirit in which our war was waged by our adversaries.

From the N. Y. Express.

One of the most vivid and thrilling histories of the late war yet written. A simple story it told, which is more powerful from its simplicity.

From the Brooklyn Times.

Told in simple but effective language, the history of the sufferings at the Libby, at Macon, at Columbia, and other places, is harrowing in the extreme, but on every page beam internal marks of authenticity.

From N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

This handsomely illustrated volume is a tale of terrible trial and suffering of our imprisoned men, and of the fiendish attempts to break prison. There personal narratives fill up the last years of the official record, and verify the horrible stories that are in circulation in regard to rebel prisons.

From the Union, Springfield, Mass.

A valuable contribution to the literature of the war. It is a stern arraignment of the rebel authorities and rebel prison-keepers.

4.

THE STORY OF THE GREAT MARCH: Diary of General Sherman's Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas. By Brevet Major GEORGE WARD NICHOLS, Aid-de-Camp on the General Staff. With a Colored Map and numerous Illustrations, and an Appendix, containing Major-General SHERMAN'S Official Report of his Campaign, and Quartermaster-Rel Sessions's Report, &c. Twenty-second Edition. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

From Major-General SHERMAN, U. S. A.

"I have read the volume, 'Story of the March,' by Major GEORGE WARD NICHOLS, and have much interested in it; so it is the faithful record of one of the marches of Sherman, and should command the attention of the country."

W. T. SHERMAN, Major-General."

From Major-General HALLECK.

"For freshness and piquancy of style, for accuracy of statement, and for clear delineation of the character of the country and people, there has been no book published upon the war equal to Major NICHOLS'S 'Story of the Great March.'"

W. P. HAZEN, Major-General."

5.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. By CHARLES DICKENS. Complete. With Illustrations by MARCUS STONE. 8vo, Paper, $1 60; Cloth, $1 80.

6.

CARLYLE'S FREDERICK THE GREAT. History of Friedrich II., called Frederick the Great. By THOMAS CARLYLE. Author of a "History of the French Revolution," "Oliver Cromwell," &c. Vol. V. With Portrait and Maps. 12mo, Cloth, $3 00.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1865.

SECURING PEACE.

IT is pleasant, although not surprising, to know that Mr. M'PHERSON, the Clerk of the last House of Representatives, will not enter upon the roll of members of the new House the names of those who claim to be representatives from States lately in rebellion, and which are still in a purely exceptional condition. Had he adopted any other course Mr. M'PHERSON would have stood singly to declare that the United States have resumed their original relations with the Union, and that persons who were yesterday traitors to destroy the Government may to-day administer it upon equal terms with its friends and supporters. The utter absurdity of such an assumption we have heretofore considered.

But this position, gravely defended by those whose sympathies were practically with the effort to overthrow the Government, should serve to warn us what is to be expected. The spirit which was baffled in the rebellion will seek to achieve its ends by political stratagems and intrigues. The party in the Southern States which asserts "State sovereignty" will try to unite with it the party which asserts "State rights" in a tone which is not unfavorable to the Southern claim. Under the plea of conformity to the executive constitution the Southern wing will claim to be allowed to resume their relations and settle their interior questions, meaning the condition of the freedmen: and the Northern wing will insist that we must assent to this demand.

If we do, two results will follow. In the first place, the Union men at the South will be dishonored. As the dominant party in the Southern Conventions and Legislatures were noted when the elected Senators were those such—as the distinctively "Union" candidates have been generally defeated, it is plain that to have been known during the war as a friend of the Union will ruin a man's political prospects; while to have been a conspicuous friend of "the South" will commend him to popular support. In the second place, under the form of vagrant laws and codes for freedmen, the men who have been freed by the United States will be unfairly treated by the separate States.

We trust, therefore, that Congress will proceed with the utmost deliberation. It is impossible, indeed, to destroy the dogma of State sovereignty. Men who have lived in that doctrine are not cured of it by compulsion. Civil war does not immediately remove theories, although it affects action. But in every conceivable way the spirit of State sovereignty should be prevented from controlling the local governments. For example, the mere repeal of an act of secession is an insult to the United States, which has spent the time and money of a civil war to establish the opposite assumption that such an act can have any validity whatever. Congress should require upon this point the most explicit declaration that the ordinance of secession was unconstitutional and intolerable, and that the only right which any citizen of the United States can have to resist the Government was by disproving, which the war has indeed settled this point, but the plainest confession of that settlement should be an indispensable step toward the restoration of a disaffected State.

Then it is equally plain that the freedmen can not be left by the war to the local State legislation. Universal testimony shows that the morbid feeling both among the white and the colored population will long render any other than a strictly overfull enough to enforce justice. We have little doubt that this view also will be entertained by Congress.

The forgive and forget policy is not to be persistently preached in some quarters, is mere political insanity and suicide. The people at the South are profoundly exasperated. We suppose that there is any vindictive feeling among Unionmen; but they are still more fatally deceived if they imagine that the Northern affection tends of the Union are blind to the plain necessities of the situation. They mean to secure what they have won. They would not—at least the body of the people—think of throwing a single man for a political offense after a bloody war; but those are the very men who would insist upon the severest penalty against possible war hereafter. The Union men of the North truly commiserate those whose wicked folly has ruined their fellow-citizens, but they are neither weakened by their pity nor deceived by it into criminal carelessness. They would willingly give bread to the hungry rebels who starving, but they will be infinitely wary of giving them the ballot.

To call this "cruelty," or promoting "bad feeling between the sections," is simply folly. The war was not a pretty episode in which each side showed its heroism. It was a contest of principles, in which Liberty and Union won, and in the settlement of which Liberty and Union are to be secured, as the only foundation of permanent national peace.

THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN.

In the criticisms upon the policy of the Administration toward the unorganized States there has been often a tone of censure as if it were too lax and well deserved by fear of blackdomination and by injudicious legislation. Capital thus avoiding the island, the last two years of communication with the main land the unemployed negroes half-starved and desperate; and they have risen not only against the white but also the white population.

Nothing is proved by the Jamaica troubles but that ignorance and wretched men, when ground by hunger and privation to the last degree, will desperately turn like wild beasts. Their ferocity and their crimes, however, are not dependent upon their color, and men who are not black are not white, but are only maddened by passion, are often guilty of equal enormities. The horrors of the late war in the Southern States, the fiendish acts of the rebels, and the untold crimes of the mob in the streets of New York two summers ago, had not the excuse of ignorance and poverty, and the atrocities of the French Revolution were more pardonable than what we have ourselves witnessed upon our own soil.

Crime is crime, wherever and by whomsoever committed. But the attitude of the colored race in this country during the rebellion presents infinite reasons for its unmerited and inhumanity than any crimes committed by the starving blacks of Jamaica prove against them.

Meanwhile the suppression of the rebellion in Hayti, which is evidently imminent if not already accomplished, shows that other governments than those of "white men" are competent to maintain civil order. And why should any American citizen be unwilling to recognize with pleasure every proof that men of all races under fortunate conditions are capable of maintaining stable and humane governments? The example of France could be an example of what white men are not equal to a free popular system as that of Jamaica or Hayti to show that colored men are unfit for political trusts of any kind whatever. Liberia is an outpost of civilization, but its government is in hands of African descent. It is placed under peculiar disadvantages, but even so situated it has compelled respect from the neighboring native tribes which now come to the Liberian courts to settle differences. The unity of the world must ultimately be established upon the mutual good-will of races. And if we are long in learning the lesson, we shall yet learn it, and the world have peace.

THE FINANCIAL POLICY OF GOVERNMENT.

WITHIN ten days after these lines are read the Secretary of the Treasury will have laid before the people his Annual Report containing a specification of his policy and his recommendations to Congress on the subject of the National Finances. It is no exaggerate to say that it will possess an importance second to no Treasury report ever issued. The holders of $2,000,000,000 of Government securities; all the capitalists of the country, who are now keeping their money idle in dread of contraction; the South, which pleads earnestly for money in order to raise its shattered industries; the West, which is being swiftly developed by greenbacks, and which fears the withdrawal of its life-blood; the merchants and manufacturers, to whom contraction means collapse, and further expansion the highway to ruin; the laboring classes, the bankers, and every man in short, high or low, rich or poor, looks for the forthcoming Treasury report with eagerness and anxiety.

The last authoritative expression of opinion from the Secretary of the Treasury was the celebrated Fort Wayne Speech, in which Mr. MCCULLOCH stated that his theory of no method by which the premium on gold, and consequently the price of commodities, could be reduced except by a curtailment of the currency by funding legal tenders into long bonds. He proved his sincerity by funding $50,000,000 of legal tenders (exclusive of interest-bearing) into Five-Twenty bonds @ 103. As might have been expected, the operation produced a temporary stringency in the money market. A call compelled a number of individuals and banks to turn the Government securities they held into money. This involved a decline in Five-Twenty bonds, which were actually taken at par less a fractional discount, to 96 per cent.; and in the new Five-Twenty bonds, which were subscribed for at 103, to 100 per cent. The fall would have been heavier but for repeated official assurances from Washington that no further "funding" operations would be issued prior to the meeting of Congress.

Should the Secretary reiterate in his report the opinions expressed in his Fort Wayne Speech, and call upon Congress to authorize further conversions of currency into long bonds, with a view to the permanent withdrawal of the former from circulation, the result will, of course, be a further decline in the market-price of Government securities. No man, possessed of ordinary intellect, will continue to hold Five-Twenty bonds or Ten-Forty bonds or Seven-Thirty notes at present prices when he learns that further issues of United States bonds are forthcoming—and forthcoming in a way which will involve stringency in the money market, and consequently depreciation in the current value of all classes of securities. There will be a rush to sell, and possibly a panic. To what point Government securities would decline in this event it is impossible to say. The funding of $50,000,000 of inert interest-bearing notes caused Five-Twenty bonds to fall from 103 to 96. The funding of a second list of fifty millions might depress the bonds to 94 or 95, and a third batch to 90 or even lower. It must be borne in mind that the Fort Wayne Proposal for Funding" took the financial community rather by surprise, and that very few persons realized what would be the effect. But the holders of the first fifty million Funding Loan foreseen its effect on the money market, and consequently on the price of securities, and how would have subscribed at 103; had the holders of Government bonds and notes throughout the country foreseen the result, how would have hastened to be beforehand with the Treasury Department, and would have placed their securities in market.

A decline—however sudden or severe—in the price of Government securities, seriously as it might embarrass the Government and the national banks, would perhaps be cheerfully endured were it accompanied by a corresponding decline in the premium on gold, and in the market-price of commodities. But it seems by no means certain that the funding process recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his Fort Wayne Speech insures a fall in gold. When the "Proposals for Funding" were issued gold was 145; when the loan was closed gold was 147. Notwithstanding a subsequent reduction of $80,000,000 in the legal-tender currency, and a monetary pinch which caused Government securities to fall 3 @ 4 per cent., gold rose instead of falling, and consequently either rose or remained stationary. It is pretty difficult to explain this anomaly otherwise than upon the theory that the people at large do not believe in the ability of the Government to contract the currency in any material degree, and, guided by such experience, are led to expect that greenbacks and violent efforts made by the Treasury Department to restore the currency to a specie standard will, in effect, operate to debase it still further. Are there any grounds for believing that new "Proposals for Funding" would prove more successful than the last proposals in reducing the premium on gold?

The country is now generally prosperous. Our foreign trade is large. Our material wealth, as measured by the business of the jobbers, the traffic reports on the railways, and the internal revenue receipts, is beyond all precedent. For the four months ending 1st November, Government is said to have received from internal revenue nearly $115,000,000. The receipts of duties will yield this fiscal year over $100,000,000 in gold. At this rate, Mr. MCCULLOCH would be enabled by 1st July, 1866, to pay off £ 95 per cent. of the whole debt besides meeting all his current obligations. Is it wise to disturb this condition of things? Is it prudent to make experiments which may or may not result in a decline in the premium on gold, but which are sure to embarrass trade, to ruin the holders of Government securities, to place the National Banks in a position of danger, to vastly diminish the demand for and wages of labor, and so largely to reduce the proceeds of the revenue as to cause a policy to necessitate new loans to meet current expenses and pay the interest on the debt? Is it safe to pursue a policy one of the first results of which would be to reduce importations, and consequently to diminish the customs revenue, on which holders of national securities rely for the interest due in July? How would the public credit stand if the revenue from duties fell back again to $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, which would be the case if the rates were generally compelled to curtail their discounts?

Suppose we let things be. It is very bad, certainly, to have gold worth 147, butter worth 65 cents, and boots $17 a pair. It would be far better to have gold at par, butter at 40 cents, and the best calf-skin boots at $6. But, meanwhile, the men who eat the butter and wear the boots are getting wages which enable them to buy the present high prices, and easily as in former times they paid low prices. There is no want anywhere. On the contrary, labor of all kinds, skilled and unskilled, was never so much in demand. No cry of distress reaches the ear. No soup kitchens are projected; no relief bills proposed. The Treasury basement to attic has adjusted itself to a depreciated paper currency, and is getting along very well, better by far than it did with gold at 40 or 150. The paper currency was not depreciated at all. Cui bono, then, disturb matters?

If the Government should quietly resolve to make no more fateful attempts to lower the premium on gold, but to leave that article to find its own level, and meanwhile devoting its whole energy to the collection of the largest possible revenue from taxes and customs, should use the excess of its revenue over its current expenditures in the repayment of the debt, extinguishing first those obligations, legal tender or not legal tender, which first mature, and gradually reduce the volume of unfunded interest; would it not be pursuing a policy which would commend itself to the approval of clear-headed mercantile men? The result would be the avoidance of any shock or financial crisis, such as would inevitably follow a pursuance of the funding policy; the liberation and employment of the large amount of capital now locked up in dread of contraction; a continuance of the prevailing activity of business and consequent fair demand for labor of all kinds; large revenue from taxes, and a general willingness to pay them; a reduction in rents, and in the cost of all articles which now rule high largely through the want of competition; and a steady appreciation of Government securities. The effect on gold, though not so immediate as we might desire, would be none the less certain. The premium on gold is but the measure of public distrust in the Government promises-to-pay. Let it once be clearly seen that the public revenue is in excess of its expenditure, that the people are paying taxes willingly, and that there are to be no further attempts to "fund" our debt, and it will not be long before those "promises-to-pay" command as high a price in gold as the promises of other solvent and prosperous Governments.

PRESTON KING.

THE death of PRESTON KING is peculiarly and keenly regretted by universal party among which he inspired. Many men in office are faithful, industrious, exact. They perform their duties thoroughly and satisfactorily, but they are automatic, mechanical, and give the impression merely of good officers. But Mr. KING overflowed his office with his genial personality. Whoever came to see him went away left with a kindly regard for the man. And all such persons will feel a shock in hearing of his melancholy end, which is so touching and lovely relative to the man.

Mr. KING'S exquisite sensitiveness to responsibility or reproach sprung from the same amiable and affectionate nature. He was simple, frank, genial, and the base aspersion of his motives in regard to a failure in the relief of some Americans during the Canadian troubles of 1838 wounded at that time as a laceration of mind. But his judgment was sound and his counsel wise, and with the purity of his nature and his fortunate training of his principles, he was an invaluable public officer.

He was, doubtless, sadly harassed by the impossibility of effective action in the face of the successful will resolutely refuse to be worried as he was. Of course, if a man takes office under express pledges, he can not help himself but he has nobody to blame if he succumbs to their pressure. It is the difficulty, also, of the Collectorship of the Port, that, by tacit understanding, is a property a leader who in all his patronage must be governed by partisan considerations. If Mr. KING'S successor will also declare his independence of such rule he will promote his own comfort and the public welfare.

Such a course would keep thousands of honest people industriously at home and at their occupations instead of tempting them by the hope of a prize into the disappointing lottery of public employment. The cruel and dreary pursuit of a place from which the fluctuations of politics or party necessity may exclude him in four years, and then leave him helpless to any man. And the deplorable fate of the late good Collector will be truly serviceable if it shall save the Republic from the fatal and fatuous resolution of his successor not to tolerate it.

THE SUFFRAGE.

THE suffrage question has many aspects. It is both denied and asserted with equal vehemence that political rights are natural rights; but every American at least must be very wary how he commits himself to the negative of the proposition. If Government justly exists by the consent of the governed, it is rather difficult to show that there is no higher claim to a share in political power than the consent of those who already enjoy it. That it may be withheld is very possible. That it can be justly withheld is not evident.

But in the question of impartial suffrage in the late rebel States we may descend from the heights of abstract right, and regard the point in the purely ex post facto light. That is very fairly enough, whether in the condition of public opinion in the loyal States, as shown in the Connecticut and Wisconsin votes, or in that of the defeat of the same proposition in Wisconsin by a majority of ten thousand in the popular vote, while the Union party carried the State by eight thousand; and in the disabling suffrage laws of many of the other States, it is advisable to insist upon impartial suffrage as the basis on which are to be reorganized. We say this question is fair and natural enough, but the subject must be regarded from the point of view of the making of welfare.

Thus, in a State like Connecticut, which is indisputably faithful to the Government, it is not directly essential to the national safety that the two thousand colored men should be allowed to vote. It is a pitiful disgrace to the State; but it is not essential to the nation, because the non-voters are so few, and because the political power remains steadily in patriotic hands. So also in Wisconsin and Illinois. But in States like those in Carolina or Mississippi the considerations are very different. In those States the question of impartial suffrage involves directly the question of safety. The point of inquiry is, whether if political power be intrusted exclusively to the late rebels with their present disposition, they will maintain that intimate and hearty relation with the National Government which is indispensable, and whether the dangers of rebellion will be as great as or not very much more than balanced by those of partial suffrage?

It is not a question for passion or rhetoric, but for the calmest and most thorough deliberation.

A NEW CLUB.

THERE is a new Club just established upon the Fifth Avenue. It is called the "Manhattan," and its object is "the dissemination of Democratic principles."

What are "Democratic" principles?

If JOHN BIGELOW and JOHN LAIRD should arrive together in New York, which would go instinctively to the Manhattan? and he who would —the man who built the Alabama for the rebels, or the man who stood straight and sure for the Union?

If every English Lord who sneered at the Government and sympathized with the "gallant gentlemen of the South" should come here, would he go naturally to the Manhattan—and why?

If it were desirable to find the gentlemen who approached the British Minister with overtures of foreign interference in our war, would or would not the anxious inquirer knock at the door of the Manhattan—and why?

What are "Democratic" principles?

THE STARS AND STRIPES.

THOMPSON CLARK, of Mississippi, who is a famous rebel, lately wrote a very bitter reply to an invitation to address the Legislature of that State, in which he said of the national flag: "With all of you I marched under that flag in a foreign land, and it was victorious. With all of you I marched against it, and it was victorious. It again waves over us, is our flag, and may it ever be victorious." Amen!

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

To the Editor of Harper's Weekly:

IDAHO SPRINGS, Colorado Territory, October 16, 1865.

I HAVE been much interested and gratified by your kindness in reproducing in your last issue a poem of mine entitled "Andersonville—The Prophecy," which you are pleased to designate "a remarkable prophecy." I would call attention to what I wrote in the second stanza of my introduction. First, my name is not MR. HENRIETTA WELLINGTON SMITH, but MRS. HENRIETTA WELLINGTON SMITH.

Second, for more than seven years I have been very sage. It was written in 1858, the year I was married, and it appeared in the columns of that year. There were three verses more to it originally, which seem to have been lost on the passage from the pen to the printing the last sixteen years. I would not trouble you, only I prefer my own name to be what it rightfully is, and there seems to be many painful recollections that I at least would not endulge having it changed. I wish the verses of the "Prophecy" were not at all true of the little effusions of my early life to be given to another, and reproduced under the name of BOOTH.

I am, dear sir, very truly,

HENRIETTA WELLINGTON SMITH.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

In South Carolina the Convention has been at work modifying the slave code. Measures have been introduced by parties who have long been active in the secession. The following resolution has been adopted:

"Resolved, That the Portland Governor be requested to convey to the President of the United States immediately the assurance of the General Assembly that the continuance of colored troops in this State subverse no public interest, but, on the contrary, tends to increase the demoralization of the colored population; that it is the desire of the white and the colored people themselves that the condition of antagonism resulting from the presence of these troops should be removed as speedily as possible; that if any good reason existed for the removal of these troops from the interior of the State where the white population predominates, a much greater necessity exists for their removal from the coast of the State where the colored population is largely in excess."

A petition has been introduced to prevent free negroes from "keeping open shops and other marts of trade within the State."

General GILLMORE has lately issued an important order declaring that the Freedmen's Courts shall be duly authorized and put in operation in the State of South Carolina. In this order he declares his purpose to afford full and ample protection to refugees and agents of the Freedmen's Bureau in the exercise of their official duties. All civil officers and magistrates are notified that they will be held responsible for any failure to arrest, hold in custody or agents, or to issue any writ of injunction or other process, prescribed by law, for the protection of them in the discharge of their official duties.

The Legislature will probably send three rebel generals to the United States Senate.

On November 20th the President received the following address from the Legislature of Governor MORTON of Indiana:

"The Convention has annulled the ordinances of secession, repudiated the rebel debt, and abolished in all the States of the State, without distinction of color, are free; that the rebel debt is incompetent to control the action of the citizen on account of color, is, no matter wherein a colored person may differ from a white citizen, that the State debt, contracted in support of the rebellion, amended the Constitution in such respects, and adjourned."

GENERAL GRANT IN NEW YORK.

During the fortnight of General GRANT'S stay among our citizens he was the recipient of triumphal honors. The reception given him on the evening of the 20th at the Academy of Music was the most splendid every way in the worthy of the city as it was due to the Lieutenant-General. It is altogether likely this reception again in a manner more pleasant to our readers.

THE HONDO DOCTRINE.

The appointment of Major-General John A. Logan as Minister from this country to the Republic of Mexico seems to us eminently wise and judicious. He is known in our military record Maximilian. This General is well known in the State of Illinois. He also left his home at the order of General M'DOWELL strides directly at the Jefferson Davis. Of course, he is familiar with the usual examinations of war. The sea-ports are all in the hands of the French, and the City of Mexico itself, but also the west, or California coast. Of course the only remaining channel of trade is by the Rio Grande. Governor HOGG'S peculiar warlike supplies from San Francisco; and the capture of Matamoras and of El Paso make this route still more desirable and feasible. But General M'DOWELL, whose command is in California, maintains that intimate and hearty relation with the National Government which is indispensable, and whether by the dangers of Governor HOGG'S route or not, will not very much more than balanced by those of partial suffrage?

It is not a question for passion or rhetoric, but for the calmest and most thorough deliberation.

A NEW CLUB.

THERE is a new Club just established upon the Fifth Avenue. It is called the "Manhattan," and its object is "the dissemination of Democratic principles."

What are "Democratic" principles?

If JOHN BIGELOW and JOHN LAIRD should arrive together in New York, which would go instinctively to the Manhattan? and he who would —the man who built the Alabama for the rebels, or the man who stood straight and sure for the Union?

If every English Lord who sneered at the Government and sympathized with the "gallant gentlemen of the South" should come here, would he go naturally to the Manhattan—and why?

If it were desirable to find the gentlemen who approached the British Minister with overtures of foreign interference in our war, would or would not the anxious inquirer knock at the door of the Manhattan—and why?

What are "Democratic" principles?

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE "SHENANDOAH."

OUR latest news from Europe indicates that the notorious pirate Shenandoah has surrendered to the British man-of-war Donegal and arrived at Liverpool November 6. Captain Waddell took great pains to communicate immediately with Earl Russell. Notwithstanding the well known fact that he has been guarding informant of the close of the war Captain Waddell appeared very anxious to get some definite information on this important matter.

The crew of the Shenandoah numbered 183 men all told, and, as soon as she was surrendered, Captain Waddell, together with some of the officers, separated. Steps are being out on her work of destruction the Shenandoah has destroyed 38 vessels, the majority of which were whalers, and these were destroyed after the cessation of hostilities. On board the Shenandoah were found a number of rebel sailors, some of whom had a number of accounts collected for them, but, with the exception of a few, all were ready to respond to be part of the proceeds of Waddell's late raids among the whalers. It is said that the Earl Russell still remains a large quantity of ammunition, together with six rifled guns and a large variety of arms.

The London Star says: "The feeling of the country and the impression of the law officers of the Crown is that officers and crew should be put on their trial. Although we have had during the war abundant evidence of the active energy of the customs authorities to oppose, in any country of the world, the fitting out in the interests of the vessel not accepted, the exploits of the Alabama and her consorts have shown the imperfections of the Government being taken. If these defects have been added to in the interval, and permitted in connection with these privateers, is only to prove the more necessary that we should learn more energy and vigor about their navigation."

The London Times considers the reappearance of the Shenandoah in a British port as the present juncture "an impropriety of the most serious kind." The Times adds: "Captain WADDELL and his 120 men can not be treated even as accessories of the piracies and depredations committed with that of the war being at an end. Nor can any such pretension be set up as is given over to the United States. They might politely be prosecuted under the Foreign Enlistment Act, but our officers are shown the extreme difficulty of establishing offenses of that nature. The offenses of the crew of the Shenandoah are of a staggering character to have wilfully incurred the intermission of the British law of piracy—all the more staggering as it is possible that they may be apprehended and tried before an English court of justice."

THE PERSIAN EXCITEMENT IN CANADA.

Although the Persian excitement is quite over in England, the echoes of them bring the cry from Canada. Here there is great commotion. A battery of artillery has been ordered from Toronto to Prescott to reinforce the Kingston. From Montreal a company of Chasseurs Canadiens, and another company of infantry, with a detachment of the company has been ordered out, and military orders have been issued to the effect that all the men belonging to the military school are required to take the oath of allegiance.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EARL RUSSELL, Foreign Minister, and EARL CLARENDON, as Minister of Foreign Affairs, were formally installed into office by the Lord Mayor of London, in the City of London Girl Clarendon received the whole of the diplomatic corps at his residence.

THE French people evidently don't like the vicinity of the Prussians on the Rhine frontiers. A correspondent says: "According to the Independance Belge, there is some talk of the Emperor NAPOLEON paying a visit to Algeria, on board the Federal cruiser Rivolta, on a tour of visits to our possessions on the coast of Africa. He will be absent during and distinguished American seaman contemplate a visit to the same coast; so it is quite a coincidence that the interior questions in case of a rupture should break out."

A dispatch from Madrid says that the troops who are now sailing frolicsome in the vicit of so determined a sea-captain.

A dispatch from Constantinople has announced the fact that all his forces be withdrawn from the outposts and concentrated at Candia, Canea, Retimo, the City of Candia, and San Iuli Pokes. He will make these three places his headquarters, and the negotiations will proceed with the arrival of his expected reinforcements.

The Egyptian Government and the French have quite abandoned Shaken, except that 800 troops held the city and fortress. There is a large Mussulman force in the interior, the following will be the strength of the political

The Egyptian contingent, 5,000 men.

The Mexican delegation has left Rome, and the evacuation of the city by the French troops goes on rapidly. The troubles in Algeria are quite formidable. The Algerian correspondent of the Times says that the insurrection is not at an end, and that the Arabs are in possession of the whole south side of the Tell Atlas.

In the late Italian elections the Government of KING VICTOR EMANUEL has a decided majority. The Italians have been re-elected members of the Chamber of Deputies.

The Spanish Government, Marquis PIDAL, Generals CALONGE and RIOS, and Signor RETIZARO, PANZANI, MIGHETTI, PEPOLI, and CASTELLI, Ministers of the Kingdom of Italy, Yrissari, Patin, Jacini, and Crispi. The majority of the Ministers are Piedmontese, having to do with the Piedmontese party. The following will be the strength of the political

The Spanish Government, Marquis PIDAL, Generals CALONGE and RIOS, and Signor RETIZARO, PANZANI, MIGHETTI, PEPOLI, and CASTELLI, Ministers of the Kingdom of Italy.

FUNERAL OF LORD PALMERSTON.—THE PROCESSION TO THE GRAVE IN THE INTERIOR OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—[SEE PAGE 758.]

REV. GEORGE W. GORDON, RINGLEADER IN THE JAMAICA RIOTS.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY DUFFELY BROTHERS, KINGSTON, JAMAICA.]

THE LATE HON. PRESTON KING.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

THE JAMAICA INSURRECTION.

IN a former issue we gave some details in our news column of the negro insurrection in Jamaica. The trouble has now been settled for the most part, and those participating in the outbreak have suffered condign punishment. As in the Fenian movement, so in this rising of the negroes in Jamaica, it is clear what must have been the motive, though it is hardly possible to find any justification. The negroes of Jamaica have not only been petted, but they have been allowed political franchise. They have been made the dupes of fanatics and would-be revolutionists, who have persuaded them that their violent uprising would result in their obtaining possession of the entire property of the island. The plot exploded before it was fully ripe, not over the whole island, but in the eastern portion, in the parish of St. Thomas.

Though the English are so ready to enter a plea for mercy in behalf of rebels against any other Government upon earth, they are most unwilling to show the least tittle of that divine quality to the infatuated wretches who dare for a moment to disturb their peace of mind. They have inaugurated a series of executions in Jamaica which have no parallel in history outside of British annals. These punishments may have been deserved, but it would be difficult to prove them to have been in all cases necessary, or even judicious. In regard to the ringleaders in the late outrages, however, there can be no doubt as to the justice of the penalty inflicted upon them. Especially is this the case with regard to the execution of GEORGE W. GORDON, whose portrait we give on page 757. Yet even here there was needless cruelty in compelling the victim to witness the execution of his confederates in crime, his own execution not being simultaneous with theirs.

Reverend GEORGE WILLIAM GORDON, the master-mind of the insurrection, was a Baptist minister, a man of wealth, nearly white, and a member of the Legislature, elected for seven years. He was executed on the 23d of October, himself and eighteen other insurgents being hanged on the same gallows. The prisoner was marched under a strong guard of the Sixth Royal Regiment to the place of execution. With an apparent firm step but a sorely-troubled mind he, mounted the ladder placed beneath the centre arch of the burned court-house—the rope hanging from the same—and stood on the barrel prepared as a trap-board. Standing thereon, gazing beneath him on the loyal hearts assembled, as well as the prisoners paraded to witness the deed, he so justly merited, and an eighteen of his brothers in crime, who were hanging below. On his arms and legs being held to be pinioned, he handed his spectacles to a sailor of the Wolverine. The Provost Marshal then uttered the words "sentenced to be hanged;" the order was given, "Pull away," and the traitor was launched into eternity.

THE LATE HON. PRESTON KING.

UNDER the influence of insanity the Hon. PRESTON KING, Collector of the port of New York, terminated his life by drowning on the morning of November 13. For some days Mr. KING had suffered from mental derangement, of which he was himself well aware, and had been attended by a young relative on that account. It was not the first attack of the kind, though more serious than any previous one. His illness was probably due to the cares and responsibilities connected with his position, which upon an uncommonly sensitive temperament had more than their ordinary effect.

There was a degree of method in Mr. KING's actions on the morning of his death which proves conclusively that deliberation is consistent with insanity. He arose before his attendant was awake, and leaving his room at the Astor House, was not again seen by his friends. His absence gave rise to the most painful conjectures, which were in the course of the day only too surely confirmed. From sources unknown it was ascertained Mr. KING had in the morning jumped from the deck of the Hoboken ferry-boat Paterson, and had perished before he could be rescued.

Mr. B. G. CAMPBELL, ferrymaster, who was on duty in the Christopher Street ferry-house on Monday morning, declares that at a few minutes before nine o'clock a man, whom he describes as being stout, thick-set, with smooth face and gray hair, genteelly dressed in a suit of dark cloth and dark blue clothes, and who, he judges, would weigh between 250 and 275 pounds, jumped from a Hudson River Railroad horse car, and came into the ferry-house. The man paid his fare, asked a few commonplace questions, and then went on board the ferry-boat Paterson, which started a few minutes later. He states further that two small children who were on board the boat saw the same man, when about two hundred yards from the New York side, walk toward the stern of the boat, take off his hat and set it down on the deck, and then, while closing his mouth with his fingers, jump from the stern of the boat and sink immediately. The boys gave the alarm, and the boat was backed up as quickly as possible; but no trace of the man could be found. The hat was taken by one of the boat hands to the Superintendent of the ferry company, and it was shown to Mr. Kisko, who at once recognized it at once.

DREDGING THE HUDSON RIVER FOR THE BODY OF PRESTON KING.

It was afterward found that Mr. Kisko had before his appearance on the ferry-boat purchased twenty-five pounds of shot, which he had secured about his person, and which prevented his reappearance after the fatal plunge.

Up to the time of his writing Mr. Kisko's body has not been recovered. We give an illustration of the dredging process, showing the machine in its course over the bottom of the river. The machine consists of a chain to which a large number of grappling-hooks are attached, and is dragged by parties in boats, against the tide, to sharp on the parties. After dragging for some distance against the tide, the boats drift back and resume the process.

BURNING OF Dr. TYNG'S CHURCH.

It frequently happens that a fire occurs in this city involving much greater pecuniary loss than was suffered in the destruction of St. George's Church, November 14, but rather less than the city ever before lost in a single number of property. The destruction of St. George's Church, November 14, but rather less than the city ever before lost in a single number of property. The loss of a mere tasteful specimen of architecture.

The occasion of the fire, which we illustrate on our first page, was the carelessness of the workmen making repairs in the roof of the church. The fire broke out first in the roof, and was observed at about half past two o'clock. In an hour the whole roof fallen in and the edifice was a complete ruin.

The church of St. George, situated at the corner of East Fifteenth Street and Rutherford Place, was entirely completed in 1859 by the efforts of the Reverend Doctor Tyng, formerly pastor of St. George's Chapel in Beekman Street. The cost of the building and ground together was $250,000, the towers of the church alone costing $70,000. The style of architecture was of the Byzantine order, employing the rounded arch. The architect is Mr. Emlen, who has also designed the Church of the Epiphany of Music. Though his original plans were not strictly adhered to, he yet gave to the church of St. George's perhaps the most symmetrical and imposing specimen of church architecture in New York. The body of the building, which was of massive timbers projected slightly in advance of the facade, and were—as they still are—surmounted by the three towers, the middle one being the representation of Trinity Church.

The entire basement an impressive spectacle, the towers and spires still standing. There are also singular evidences of the freaks of fire. For instance, high up on the north side of the church still several handsome foliated ornaments quite unhurt by the heat; and the pulpit is preserved, at least in outlines, for it looks charred and disfigured. It still remains, with the tiny wooden balustrade still around it. This is the only consecrated article in the interior of the church that is not utterly destroyed.

The organ was built in 1853 by Erben, at a cost of about ten thousand dollars, and was the second instrument in point of size in the city, ranking next to Trinity. It was one of high grade, containing fifty-four feet high, thirty-six wide, and nineteen deep. The central front pipes were colored blue, and those on the side silvered. The case was depressed in the centre to allow the light of the fanciful rose-window to enter the church, and the front was, from the body of the Church, was one of the handsomest sights of the kind in existence.

Dr. Tyng was present at the commencement, and although his congregation is more than wealthy enough to rebuild the church, he was of course much affected by the spectacle.

LORD PALMERSTON'S FUNERAL.

Lord Palmerston was buried in Westminster Abbey October 27. The funeral pageant would have lost a part of its pomp if the ceremony had been at-id out, and Lord Palmerston had been buried in the family vault at Broadlands. That vault, indeed, had been already opened when, by the express desire of the Queen, it was arranged that the late Minister should be interred in the Abbey.

All parties united to honor the memory of Lord Palmerston, and although his name had not, like that of Peel or Cobden, been connected with any particular measure for the benefit of the working-classes, he had ever participated to a great degree in the general expression of national grief. This being the universal state of affairs, it would have been a severe disappointment to all the Londoners if they had been deprived of the opportunity of greeting with silent observance the funeral procession of the most popular of English statesmen; and it would have seemed to the whole country a sort of desecration, from the respect due to his great office of dying as he did in the actual possession of the Ministry, he had not been buried in the venerable north of Westminster which is consecrated to the glories of English history as well as to the sanctities of Christian faith.

The coffin in which Lord Palmerston was buried was one covered with rich crimson velvet, thickly studded with gilt nails, and having gilt handles, with its lid displaying a large gilt plate bearing the Temple arms, the shield being surrounded by the Garter motto, and the supporters resting upon the Temple motto, "Fiecit non fregit."

Various corporations headed the funeral procession. After the hearse came a long array of state carriages, close up to the line, including, among many others, those of her Majesty the Queen, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Inverness, the Queen Dowager, the Russian Ambassador, and many others. The route was along Piccadilly, down Parliament Street, Pall Mall to Charing Cross, down Whitehall and Parliament Street to the Broad Sanctuary in front of the great door of the Abbey, a distance of perhaps a mile and a half. The ordinary traffic in these streets had of course been stopped. The side-pavements were every where crowded; at the windows, in the balconies, and sometimes on the roofs of the houses was a great multitude. The Abbey was opened at 1 o'clock P.M. The great bell of the Abbey was continually tolling, and surrounding the building was the people to the stern fact of death, ever relentlessly repeating, like a fatal monosyllable, the same deep, unmalleable tone. Several thousands of persons, of all sexes, of all ages, and of different classes, filled the whole available space, and saw the proudly-decorated hearse draw up to the entrance of the nave. The crimson coffin lifted out covered with that large black and white pall of velvet and satin, which some of the most illustrious men in England stood ready to bear. The central part of the floor of the nave was kept clear and open for the procession to pass up from the west door to the transept, but the side aisles were filled with a closely-packed congregation, all dressed in black. Immediately in the nearest to the coffin, as it was borne along, were thirty or forty of Lord Palmerston's servants and retainers, who had come to London from Romney and elsewhere, who had come to London that morning or perhaps the night before.

Our engraving on page 756 illustrates the scene in the interior of the Abbey. In full view was the extreme grave which was to receive the mortal remains of the departed statesman. The vault in which the body of Lord Palmerston was to rest was opened but in front of it a large monument of marble statuary erected to the memory of three naval officers—Captain Burdett, who died on board Admiral Rodney two years before Lord Palmerston was born. But this is properly the Statesmen's Corner. Here are buried Pitt, Fox, Canning, Castlereagh, Wilberforce, and Charles James Fox are buried there, on the right hand of Palmerston; while Castlereagh, on his right, commemorates the authors of the Treaty of Vienna, and Wilberforce, from whom he imbibed his earnest philanthropy, is close to the slave-trade, in on his left hand; and his feet are close to the grave of Canning, who, more than any other statesman, prepared the way for Palmerston, the latest follower of these illustrious statesmen, was about to descend, his coffin was let down with reverence and solemnity by the surviving members of the Cabinet and the nearest relatives of the deceased took their last sorrowful look. Then all at his reading-desk above, waited until the singers, ranged on a platform at the other side of the transept, had finished singing the solemn and beautiful hymn of the burial-service which are set to the most solemn and affecting music; and as the last note of the unaided human voice died away the coffin was lowered into the vault; the mourners, drawing jewelled rings from their fingers, dropped them down in token of affection for the dead; the voice of the Dean was then heard, uttering "Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God to call to His mercy our brother, our dear brother here departed," and so on with the rest of the service. Then the choir sang Handel's anthem, "His body is buried in peace, but his name liveth for evermore." As this ended the spirit lighted at the top of the lofty pinnacles of the Abbey, and, flung from the vast interior of the venerable Abbey, was suddenly exchanged for the deep gloom of a passing cloud. The procession then moved off with a benediction from the Dean; and while the "Dead March" in "Saul" pealed from the mighty organ the congregation slowly dispersed.

THE CLOSED STAIRCASE.

BY AN ENGLISH UNIVERSITY STUDENT.

I was waking up and down the cloistered cool of St. Oswald's, with my friend Tom, returning early in the Lent Term of 185—. It was only my second term of residence, and as Tom was quite at the point of taking his degree, I regarded him with a considerable amount of respect, not to say awe; for he is one of the kind that can lay rule of thumb freshmen upon him, and saved me, by many a timely hint, from several of the errors and gaucheries incidental to the undisciplined freshman's first term. I had fagged for him at school, and the mutual friendship then begun there, and interrupted for a space of three years by his residence at the University, had now sprung up again more warmly than ever. And now, therefore, I was in the position, which he had spent in hard reading in his college rooms, there was the usual comparing of notes on every possible subject between the impeccible graduates from skating to politics, from politics to theology, and thence round again (taking in the origin of evil, and the intermediate state of existence by the way), to the nearest meal-to-be and of obtaining a large quantity of the former. At last it seemed as if we had pretty well exhausted every thing "conversable;" the current of our Life had dried in shallow and stagnant places, and we were on the point of separating for the night, which was far advanced, when a casual question of mine alarmed the whole course of affairs, and kept us out of our respective beds for a considerable period longer. It arose thus: from the court, at regular intervals, staircases opened, each one leading to three or four different sets of rooms, all with their occupants, as there was never a set of rooms vacant for any length of time in college. But in one part of the staircase, at the south corner, where, in the natural course of things, one would have expected to see a staircase likewise, there was simply a door, shut close. Passing it for perhaps the hundredth time in our circuit of the court, I carelessly kicked against it, found that it was fast, and had no handle, keyhole, or other means of opening; and turning to Bryce, asked what this door was for. He was surprised to answer useful or ornamental by the intelligent architect of the court. To which he replied with rather a surprising smile:

"Decidedly useful in this case, if tradition is to be believed."

"What," said I, "is there some special and peculiar vintage of old port, reserved for the most solemn carouses of most ancient fellows, to which this door is opened by a secret spring, known only to the hereditary and inviolable butler?"

"No," said he, laughing. "Bottles, if any be behind that door, must deserve the adsit we give to empty ones, as we roll them into the corner of the room at midnight—'dead men.' And however, if you choose to hear the story as it was told me by my old Tutor, who was a junior fellow of St. Oswald's when the event occurred, I'll tell you the closed took place" (here he gave it another kick, which made one roll to my toes), "and if you will sit down on the floor, I think I am not presuming on your ingenuous innocence, I can entirely at your service."

Of course I gladly assented, and though I had felt so sleepy five minutes since, at that moment I could have remained for hours awake for a week. Bryce started off with the story, which I give in his own words as far as I can remember them:

"I think I may have been better limitated than most men in the lore of the university, owing to old Johnson, who spent at least half the time when he ought to have been publishing up his Greek Iambics, in reciting thrilling tales of his own undergraduate life, to his admiring, undutiful, pupils of those days, and much better fun than composing a dialogue (as long) after Sophocles; none of them ever, I am convinced, were so much read or known as the one connected with, or rather sealed by, that door. It appears that one of his most intimate friends, a commoner of Trinity, lived into those rooms only a short time before his degree, having previously kept in the town. The college was very full that year, as many other colleges, which have now sunk into comparative insignificance by the side of the huge modern establishments with its point of numbers; and he chose these rooms as being in a quiet and retired corner of the court, where he might study undisturbed and undisturbed, and generally unsuccessful, experiment of making up for three years' laziness by three months' reading. He had got comfortably settled in the rooms, and had begun carefully to parcel out the day, as is the custom of those who have been idle all their lives, to exercise. One evening, it was the 15th of November, 17—the had every reason to recollect them, he had been reading very late, rather later than usual, having been detained at his 'couch's rooms' over an unusually refractory and hysterical Greek prose, and was engaged in ascending the stairs to his rooms an unusual illumination in the sitting-room. Not being aware that any one might not have left his candles burning, or whether his bed-maker, who was not averse to trendy, had fallen a victim to some unusual temptation, and was in unwilling holocaust on his hearth, he hurried up and in, when a most remarkable sight presented itself. The room had been brilliantly lit up by wax candles, both in sconces against the wall and in massive candelabra, evidently old-fashioned things, which were set on the table. The table itself extended from end to end of the apartment, and on each side were seated young men in the dress of the end of the seventeenth or early part of the eighteenth century, carousing much after the manner of their descendants of the nineteenth. The whole chamber was occupied by a remarkably handsome young fellow, somewhat older apparently than the rest, and with a certain air of command about him, a remarkable touch of dissolute living, and who seemed every now and then trying to sing some song which thought would have had its brow, though he was the life of the party, and seemed to be continually firing off fresh witticisms to keep them going. Over his head was suspended a wig and there; he kept glancing at the door as though expected for the first time to see some one enter. Before he could recover himself, and ere the wig had found the host was vacated. No sooner had he noticed this fact than he fell with a crash upon the floor, but with every faculty save that of speech (at its extremest tension) than the seat was filled, and filled by a figure, whose head, whose boyish and innocent cast of features strangely contrasted with that of the head of the table. Over the face of this last was a mask of unutterable evil, expressed in the malicious smile, as he lifted his glass and pledged the new-comer. While this was going on Maunders was not conscious of having any sound, nay, by a sort of double sense, while kept alive to the quasi-reality of the scene before him, he was also in a shadowy back-ground, his own body, surmounted by his own bust of Plato, which looked far more beautiful than it ever appeared before.

"And now the drinking seemed to become fierce; the youth on the right hand, who at first refused to drink, was now yielding to the entreaties of his next neighbor (who again and again motioned to the servants to replenish his glass) and was gradually becoming flushed and heated. The whole company appeared to get disorderly, healths were drunk with great rapidity, and all the well-known accompaniments of undergraduate suppers in their most advanced stage, seemed to be taking place; and just at this time Maunders was aware of the appearance of all the others, with the exception of the fair guest, were such as would stamp them as undergraduates whom we should call the 'worst set,' and their expression was not improved by intoxication. At last all seemed to be either asleep or maudlin, save the host and his next neighbor, who, doubtless from the lateness of his arrival, together with his abstemiousness at first, had thus held out. But now he too seemed rapidly becoming like the rest, when on a sudden the host rose, went to a small cabinet (for the servants had quitted the room), and took thence a small bottle labeled 'Tokay.' Filling a glass, he handed it to his friend, who drank it off with a sort of foolish, half-spiy smile; but in one instant the whole changed, for the youth gave a cry, the cry of terror, and then, as he caught the eye of the host fixed in his malicious smile, he sank in one of indescribable hate. Making a violent effort to rise from his chair, and a fruitless one to clench his fist and strike him in the face, he would have risen and fell forward; and at the same moment there was a hideous groan, and the whole sight—supper, guests, drunkard, and host—vanished, and he was left alone in utter darkness.

"Maunders awoke to find himself in his bed, diligently attended by his old bed-maker, who was giving him and herself alternate spoonfuls of brandy-and-water.

"The state of insensibility in which she had found him, required, alas! no explanation from him in her eyes, as he was not a very uncommon specimen of hers to discover her 'young gentlemen,' one or more of them, prone on the floor, rather late on the Sunday morning, after the arrivals in the early mornings, and had she sought for or expected any account, Maunders was by no means the man to give one. At first, indeed, he made up his mind to tell nobody, and of course, ten minutes afterward, when his friend Johnson came to see him, he detailed his strange vision of the preceding night at length. Said he to Johnson's countenance expressed the belief that Maunders had entered for one night at least to the somewhat reckless orgies which had adorned the latter days of many years of close suffering in consequence thereof, and his only comment on the story was, 'My dear fellow, if you will go on getting drunk in the way you appear to have begun, you will most undoubtedly be plucked.' So Maunder said no more, and merely contenting himself with writing to his friend to say that on no account he himself knew not how to account for, he did the most outrageous thing under the circumstances, and tried to forget all about it. A month rolled by, the term waned, all but a few steady readers were departing, or had already departed to their homes for Christmas. The fifteenth of December was just closing in, gloomy and dang, and Maunders settled, with a sweet sense of the security of all, to read, as it not uncommon at two-and-twenty, to his books. Wonderful to relate, he had been reading for several hours flew by without his relaxing his attention. However, on looking at his watch, and seeing it was past eleven o'clock, he thought of proceeding to go to bed, when on a sudden his whole room seemed to become illuminated. He was at the time standing at an open window, with his back to the interior of his room, and instantly faced about. To his horror and astonishment he beheld the same scene already described of the supper party, the drinking, re-enacted in every particular. ♦ ♦ ♦ ♦ ♦

"'Johnson,' as you rather soon, old boy,' said Johnson to him, as he bent over him about a fortnight after the above date; 'but you have succeeded in making yourself into a brain-fever, and may consider yourself lucky that you have escaped with no worse consequences than temporary baldness and the appetite of an orchid.'

"Maurden replied by two questions:

"'What day of the month is it? and when can I be moved?'

"'It is the second of January, and in about a fortnight's time you will be able to leave here.'

"To Johnson's surprise, and almost alarm, Maunders sprang up, or rather half sprang up, in bed, and, seizing him by the arm, said:

"'If you don't get me away in less than a fortnight you may spare yourselves the trouble, for I undertake to die the job more satisfactorily.'

"Johnson endeavored to quiet him, thinking, not unnaturally, that the fever was not yet left him, and indeed he was worse for some hours afterward. But later in the evening he repeated the request, and as the doctor was of the same opinion, and Johnson sensibly informed the doctor, when he called, of his friends dread of a repetition of the same scene on the corresponding day of January, if he were suffered to remain so long; and with considerable difficulty Maunders, happily unacquainted with bad results, he was moved out on the fourteenth of that month.

"The rooms have never since been occupied."

"Well," said I, as Bryce paused here, "had no one the courage to brave the spectral symposium?"

"Well," said he, "the next night Johnson made a point of sitting up in the rooms, but he unfortunately had taken so much in the way of goods himself as to prove him for the expected terrors that he awoke, after a somewhat uncomfortable nap in the arm-chair, with a violent desire to go back to find himself in profound darkness, and with a violent colt in the head."

"Is that all?"

"All!" said Bryce, "was no explanation ever offered of the extraordinary scene of which Maunders was witness?"

"Why," replied Bryce; "some weeks afterward, when he was slowly recruiting his health at his father's house in the country, he found among a bundle of old papers in a disused room, a strange confession of an ancestor of his, whom he had heard of as a boy, and who, in his youth, had been sacred down, gone abroad, and turned monk, but of whose history but little was known. The manuscript contained a very ordinary account of loves and jealousy, induced by a handsome young rival in the affections of a certain young lady, ending with an obscure vow of vengeance against him. Then came a blank, and afterward these singular words:

"'Thanks to God! I have escaped from the most horrible evening again? Not a soul but myself knows or suspects that I had any thing to do with the death of —. God! God! I have been drinking and excitement; and here am I forced by some frightful fate to commit the same ghastly crime in spirit as each thereafter day of the month comes round! Forgive me, O God!—but I knew it can not be. I must carry about a living hell within me till I die! Here the MS. ceased abruptly. Whether its contents were intended to be made known by the unhappy man (who before the end of the year had quitted England forever), or to be left in obscurity, it is impossible to say. As after the separation it was not found till the time I mention, and I need hardly say materially retarded Marsden's recovery. He was never able to ascertain whether the vision had appeared to others before his time, or whether, as a descendant of the murderer, he had been specially haunted by his ancestor. Nobody else ever repeated the experiment, which failed in Johnson's case, for the story came to the Marsdens only as told in the house occupied by Marsden were not particularly convenient or particularly wanted, and as he had a perfect dislike, as he said, to further adding the brains of undergraduate members of the college by any additional distraction, he caused the door you see at the bottom of the staircase to be fixed firmly in its place; and it hasn't, as far as I am aware, occurred to any succeeding college tenant of rooms to have it opened since. But I do not despair of a source being held there yet, as there are one or two of the old panes of glass in the window still left sort of thing—and in nothing else. But come," concluded Bryce, "I ought to have been off to bed an hour ago, for I am not hopelessly subsided, we will contrive a small jog of 'Bishop' before we turn in."

THE MERCHANT'S STORY.

As my story will be a very short one, I will commence at once, without any unnecessary introductions—plunge as neatly—as, which I suppose is the best way of coming round the jump," and first forcibly stirred by some sharp fellow who despised the Greek character of the Italian nationality. I will commenced life twice—once when I went into business on my own account, and the second time when I got married. I don't count my entrance into this world, disliking introductions, as I said before.

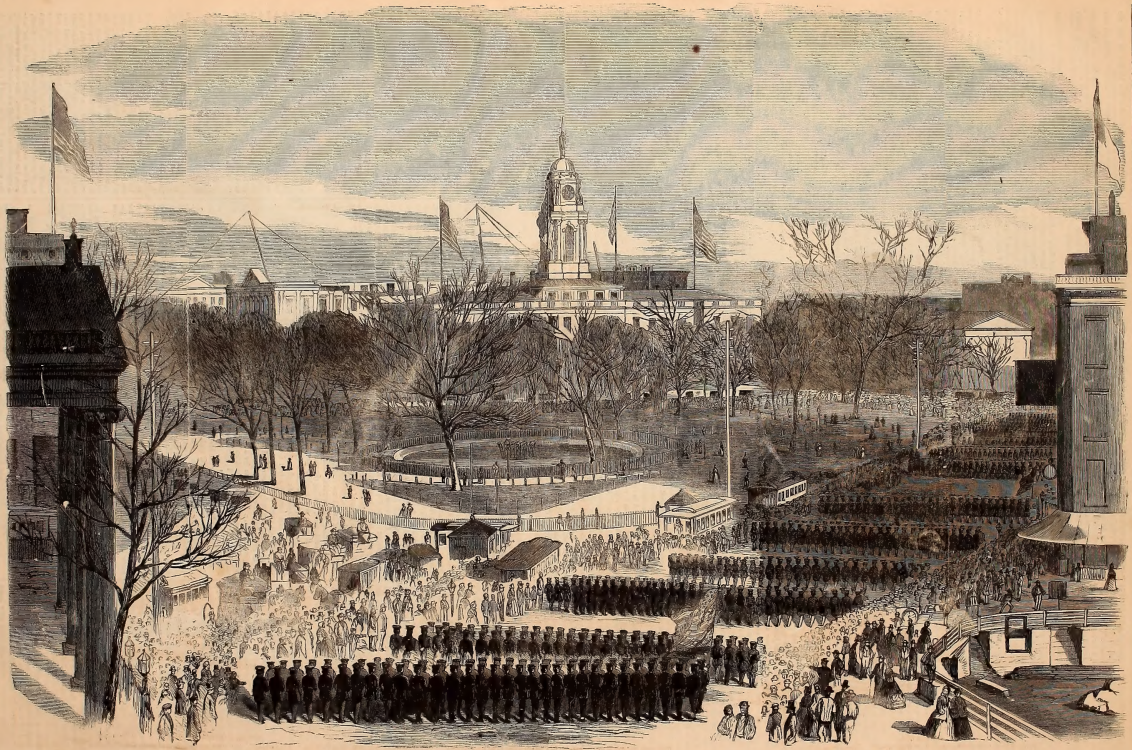
Ten years ago I got married. I was then twenty-one, my wife, Emma hair—golden, as the poets would say, but, being a matter-of-fact business man, I deem it my duty—as a decent citizen—to describe her as I then existed and present; therefore I my distinctly—down hair! I must confess, however, that I was not quite well fit as to my circumstances ever her face (well, perhaps I can admit the poetry in this case, with the proviso that it is not to be considered a precedent), and when, I come to speak upon it it was pure gold—not a merchant—to be sure—not one that would have been—but a gentleman—and was something to consider at, and make even a vagabond artist a sensible man, by forcing him to put down such a sum as would buy a most skill. She was a prudent little creature my wife, quiet, and of a stature that could have been stated only in inches, as one could not say that she was so many per high. Perhaps if I suggest Titania's Court, and leave it as one of imagination to the fairy tales, I shall be the shelter of violets in a storm, I should convey something like the fancies that occur to one when, in a vulgar way, one says that I caught a glimpse of her occasionally before our marriage. I am not admitting here the respectability of meeting a young lady under cover of dust.

She was an orphan, and lived under the sway of Tippoo Saib in peninsula, as they call it, of India. I knew how she made her mind to marry me, as I was so entirely matter-of-fact; but I have a faint recollection of my once asking her if she had a will on which pedestrian fret terminated at a church-door, through which we passed five people, and come out as man-and-wife, and that was all. A sorcery had not entirely vanished. It is not at all pertinent to the story to say that she had a mother who was a widow, and a friend: that she was an artist, poor, and lived principally upon dreams; that I loaned him a sum of money—a very trifling one, transactions, as I took no note of hand for it, that he was a delicate creature, that he fell into a consumption, and wandered and wandered about in his own cloud-dreams: that I watched with him by night, and lured him at last under the wild-doves' Tower (dove!). In the world's estimation he would have been a great man if he had lived. He was better than that, and died—a good man and a Christian: and when he died he grasped my hand, looked at his little sister, who was silently weeping over him, and gave me a glance which I could not fully read, "Take care of her; she will be alone in the world, with no companion but her better memories." He said this expressly to me, the fact that we many months afterward Alice and I walked quietly to the church.

Alice told me that I was desperately in love with her, but being a mere matter-of-fact business man, I must maintain that the idea was a pure impossibility. Every one will readily admit, when I state that I was in the Queen's wars, glass, and porcelain line, the opposition to have been grossly improbable, to say the least. However, matters—as I left Tippoo Saib to her solitude—a sovereign without subjects; were so mercilessly put to the test in Spain, where we still live, and as all stories end, or should end, with a marriage, I might end mine here, excepting for the fact that, from a worldly point of view, the story would go too short—to say nothing of its being slightly deficient in point, plot, time-honored, adventurous characters, and incidents, and not at all a business-like transaction.

Alice was a most unusual little creature, and living known poverty, was continually gazing at a mental landscape, the principal feature being a steep declivity at the foot of which stood a fortified, ding-dooking alms-house. Nothing during the first year of our marriage could dispel the illusion that this was to be the terminus of my miserable career; a sacrifice of the household furniture, and a permanent imprisonment in the establishment which had provided for reckless paupers. My little wife, however, fought steadily against this foreshadowed horror, and kept watchful watch and ward over those insidious marauders, the household expenditures; while the solitary servant received lectures, in a quiet way, such as would have doubtless astonished and confounded Adam Smith himself. I can safely say that nothing was wasted except on beggars, and they flocked to the house in regiments and battalions. Professional beggars they were, every one of them, farmed out upon the public by some Italian or other vagabond foreigner. I dislike beggars myself. It is a business-like way of getting a living. I don't object to feeding the hungry—in fact, I protest energetically against the starving of them, but I can not attend to business on an empty stomach; but, as I pay my taxes, I am opposed to the city fathers allowing a set of vagabonds to make a trade of begging, and extracting sixpences from the unprotected females of the community through a revival of Christian charity. A firm belief in the outrageous romances invented by these ragged harpies was an unhappy weakness of Alice's, and there were few days always instantaneously awakened at the first whine of a surly mendicant. The moment one of these professional beggars approached the alms-house was forgotten, and away went the savings of economical housekeeping. Her liberality in this respect was so startling that I was obliged to put a stop to it at last by borrowing all her subscription money at the beginning of the month, and exchanging the pretext of begging for a handsome check of cutting off further supplies. This was compelled to succumb, however, as I couldn't endure Alice's tears, and "she gave in to everything," being "all she had" (see another of the disreputable poets); so fearing that the drawing-room would be given away to "poor objects," I gave up, furnished the supplies, and tacitly encouraged the impostors—one of the most unbusiness-like transactions I ever was guilty of.

One of the consequences of this morbid dread of poverty entertained by Alice, on her part, of indulging in a species of practical economy the point of which I could never thoroughly see, but which insist on the advisability of making her purchases of dresses and such woman-gear from peddlers—a race of people who do assist themselves to a fair livelihood, by the most obnoxious specimen of the race who constantly haunted the premises was a Portuguese Israelite, the possessor of a villainous face, an uncatchy grin, and a Babelish tongue, equal to confounding the Father of Lies himself. He was distinguished in my business-like way with a huge white bundle on her back, suggesting the startling supposition that she had removed from the premises a considerable quantity of the household effects, and which, on being opened out, revealed a heterogeneous assortment of articles, which, what I can only suppose to be the contents of the white bundle, which, like Pilgrim's, seemed constantly glued to the old woman's back. It is my opinion she was a witch.



There was one class of these wandering vendors from whose inflictions I could myself shield her. This confidence that Alice would never exhibit that almost universal weakness of her sex shown in acquisition by the purchase of all the useless knickknacks offered by dealers in vases, cut-glass bottles, etc.—those pictoriglic vagabonds who sell you a penny penny, but do not give it back. My confidence in this respect was based upon the fact that I myself was supposed to understand the value of articles of china. The history of sieges shown, however, that it is the unguarded strong point which often falls before the enemy, and so two things startled irreverent Frenchman has traced a parallel in this respect between a fortress and a woman; I, however, quote the Frenchman, as he precedes his fanciful comparison, for the best of all possible reasons, I have forgotten its exact phrase, and as there is no judgment in my language will no doubt lift up their hands in thankfulness. I shall content myself with the observation, that I myself can not recollect whether it was suddenly brought to my mind in the most unexpected manner only to discover one of the defects in my wife.

I was sitting one morning near the front-door of my establishment, reading the morning paper, when Alice was accosted by a man at the street-door. Upon my way. Looking up I saw standing on the threshold a few yonder of Bohemian appearance, and a small quantity of crockery. The man evidently had been to several mansions before he had selected a flaw in two small red vases exhibited in the shop window, which he had evidently determined to purchase for the ultimate benefit of some unscrupulous mortal of the gentler sex. I said them for a trifle. I was in a good humor, as I had had a run in the way, and I saw him no more forever. I regret to say that I heard of him afterward.

I returned home to dinner the first objects that struck my eye, and filled my soul with direful misgivings, were a pair of vases on the hall table, gaudy and glared at them with something of the same feeling of the irruption who designs the evil-doer in the Inferno, and who is seized in the anger in the air. By a strong effort I managed to approach the fire-place. The fire-place was empty, and on the ultimate benefit of some unscrupulous mortal of the gentler sex. I said them for a trifle. I was in a good humor, as I had had a run in the way, and I saw him no more forever. I regret to say that I heard of him afterward.

I returned home to dinner the first objects that struck my eye, and filled my soul with direful misgivings, were a pair of vases on the hall table, gaudy and glared at them with something of the same feeling of the irruption who designs the evil-doer in the Inferno, and who is seized in the anger in the air. By a strong effort I managed to approach the fire-place. The fire-place was empty, and on the mantle-piece stolidly stood the blood-red vases I had parted with to the Jew, and I knew by the look that if the subject was broached at a test of its worth, I was then gazing at my most expensive chattels.

A sensation from this mental inventory of my suddenly-acquired wealth by the opening of the room door, where a gleam of sunshine burst into the room,

GRAND PARADE OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE IN NEW YORK CITY, NOVEMBER 16, 1865.—SKETCHED AND DRAWN BY J. R. CHAPIN.—[SEE PAGE 762.]

SOLUTION OF THE LABOR QUESTION IN THE SOUTH.

EX-SLAVES.

"Why, Master, we's gwine to draw." "Draw what?" "Draw rations, Sir."

INQUIRING STRANGER.

"Well, now the war is over, what are you people going to do for a living?"

EX-DOMINANT RACE.

"I reckon we'll run—" "Run! After what?" "O! we'll run for offices of some sort—Congress, Legislature, Constables, or Notary Public, or any thing!"

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE PARADE.

We give on page 763 an illustration of the grand parade of the Metropolitan Police, which took place in this city November 17. The Police force, eleven hundred strong, paraded through the principal streets of the city, and were reviewed by Governor Fenton at the Battery, and by the Mayor of New York and Brooklyn at the City Hall.

The procession was formed under the direction of Captain Copeland, of the Broadway squad, who handed them over to Superintendent Kennedy. The body was formed into four battalions, of eight companies each, at half distance. Among those present at the Battery were Inspectors Carpenter and Leonard, and together with Inspector Chace of Brooklyn; also John Hubbs, Chief of the Boston Police, and Captains Myers, Wyckoff, Jourdan, Carmichael, Irving, Taylor, and Hogan, of the same force. The gathering also included a number of officers and soldiers from the different military stations, who seemed to take a great interest in the marshaling of the Metropolitans. The procession comprised twenty-six carriages, sixty-two regulars, one thousand and sixty-two patrolmen from New York, and one hundred and twenty from Brooklyn.

The men looked well, and executed their manœuvres with much precision. The column was headed by Donaworth's brass band and a mounted escort. At the conclusion of the review by Governor Fenton, which took place at the Battery, the procession moved up Broadway and through Park Row to the City Hall, where a marching salute was paid to the Mayor and the heads of departments.

From the City Hall the column moved up Broadway—saluting Tiffany & Co., the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, and the Commissioners of Emigration—to the Metropolitan Police Fourteenth Street and Fourth Avenue, up Fourth Avenue to Twenty-seventh Street, through Twenty-sixth Street to Fifth Avenue, and down Fifth Avenue to Fourteenth Street, where the men were dismissed.

A marching salute was paid by the Governor at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and to Moses Taylor at his residence in Fifth Avenue.

The thoroughfares through which the procession marched were lined with spectators. The parade was the finest ever made in this country by a police force, both for number and the appearance of the men, and elicited much credit upon the department. The men were full looking, their uniforms were handsome, and their marching was admirable.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By Amelia B Edwards,

Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

CHAPTER LXXVI.

THE CRY OF THE CHIC.

There path lay down by the shore, and the sun was low before they reached the house of which they were in search. It was a large, rambling, old-fashioned place, with the dovecote plaster all scaling away from the walls; an old stone trough standing out in the broad cobble-way, and bundles of sacked hay and straw sticking out through the shutterless windows of the basement story. A few half-starved poultry and a lean pig about on the scant sward behind the house; a rock strutted on the dunghill before the door; and two sickly-looking women plied their needles under the shade of a vine in a crazy little pergola, overlooking the sea.

These women dropped their work with alacrity when accosted by Lord Castletowers, and hastened to provide the travelers with such poor fare as the place afforded. And it was poor enough: as omelet, a loaf of rye bread, a plate of salted fish, and a bottle of wine, all that they had to offer; but Saxon and Castletowers had not fasted all day for nothing. They feasted as heartily at a bare table had many times sat in the best hotel in Naples, and emptied a bottle of the thinnest country wine with as keen a gusto as if it had been the long imprisoned Falernian or "fiery Falernian."

When at length they had eaten and drunk and were satisfied, and had recompensed the good woman of the house for their hospitality, it was quite dusk. The magical effect of the early autumn evening in south Italy, when the earth is folded to rest in a deep and tender gloom which only serves to make the light of the stars the more lovely, and the air kindling with fire-flies, and the sky one vast mosaic of stars.

The difficult part of their undertaking was now at hand. Even in traversing the open road between the podere and that point where their boat lay moored, they had to exercise all the discretion of which they were capable. It was important that they should neither attract, nor seem to avoid, observation. They had to tread lightly, without risking the appearance of caution; to walk neither slow nor fast; to avail themselves of the shelter of every rock, and wall, and bush along the road, and yet not to seem as if they were creeping in the shade; and, above all, to keep eyes and ears, and all their senses open for fear of surprise.

Going along thus, they soon left the solitary podere behind. There was no moon; but the darkness was strangely transparent, and the mountainous outlines of the two islands, Ischia and Procida, were distinctly visible on the far horizon. Where the lanugid sea just glided to the shore a shifting phosphorescent glean faintly came and went upon the margin of the sands; and presently, lying a little off, with her sails still furled like the folded wings of a sleeping bird, the Alfonia came dimly into sight.

They paused. All was profoundly quiet. Scarce a breath disturbed the perfect stillness of sea and shore. Now and then a faint shiver seemed to run through the tall reeds down by the water's-edge; but that was all. Had a pebble fallen, the young men must have heard it where they stood.

"I don't believe there's a living soul on this beach but ourselves," whispered Saxon.

"Heaven grant it!" replied the Earl in the same tone.

"What shall we do next?"

"I think we can not do better than go down to the boat, and there lie in readiness for whatever may happen."

In the mean time the boat just where they had left it six or seven hours before, and their sailor lying in it at full length, fast asleep. Without rousing him they crouched down in the shelter of the reeds, and waited.

"You have your revolver, Trefalden?" whispered the Earl.

"Yes, in my hand."

"And you can pull an oar if necessary?"

"Of course."

The Earl sighed, impatiently.

"This coming and going," said he, "renders me more helpless than a woman. Hush! did you hear a footstep on the sand?"

"No: I heard nothing."

"Listen."

They listened breathlessly; but all was still, like death.

"There is something awful in the silence," said Saxon.

"I wish to Heaven we knew what the signal would be," muttered the Earl.

And then they lay a long time without speaking or moving.

"I feel as if my limbs were sniffing," whispered the Earl by-and-by.

"And I never longed so much in my life to hear a human voice. I would stake my life on it."

"No, no."

"I tell you, yes. It is the signal."

The Earl would not believe it; but Saxon imitated the note, and it was echoed immediately.

"There," said he, "I told you so!"

"Nonsense; all owls will do that. I have often known a screech-owl answer a whistle."

But Saxon pointed eagerly forward.

"Look!" he said; "look, close under that wall yonder. Is there something moving?"

The Earl stared into the darkness as if he would pierce through it.

"I think I do," he replied; "as something—a shadow?"

"Shall we not show ourselves?"

"Suppose it is a sentry?"

"Try the cry again."

Saxon tried the cry again, and again it was promptly echoed. He immediately roused the sleeping seaman, and stepped out cautiously beyond the shelter of the reeds.

As he did so the shadow under the wall became stationary.

Then it bounded, advanced a few paces, treading so lightly and swiftly that the sand scarcely showed the print of its feet, and having wavered about half the intermediate distance, came to a halt.

He had no sooner halted than the shadow was seen to move again, and steal a few yards nearer.

And now Saxon, watching the approaching form with eyes trained to darkness and distance, was struck with a sudden recognition. It was not a human figure at all—but his doubt flashed through his mind the shadow stopped again, and a low, distinct, penetrating whisper came to him on the air:

"Chi è?"

To which Saxon, quick as thought, replied:

"Montecucoli."

Instantly the shadow lifted its head, cried aloud: "Chia ella! chia!" three times in succession, and, leaving the gloom of the wall, came bounding over the sand to the boat; but Saxon, with rough kindness, thrust him back.

"You young fool!" said he, authoritatively, "sit still."

At the same moment they beheld the gleam of a distant torch, heard a rush of rapid footfalls on the beach, and saw a man running down hastily toward the sea.

Saxon darted out to meet him.

"Courage!" he cried. "This way."

But the fugitive, instead of following, staggered and stood still.

"I can not," he gasped. "I am wounded. Save yourselves!"

A tossing fire of torches was now visible not a couple of hundred yards away, in the direction of Cumæ, and more than one bullet came whistling over the heads of those on the beach.

In the mean time the boatman had taken Colonna up bodily in his arms, and strode with him to the boat, like a young giant.

As he did so the full discovery broke from the lips of the pursuers. On they came, firing and shouting incessantly, but only in time to see the boat shoved off, and to find a broad gap of salt-water between themselves and their prey.

"Viva Garibaldi!" shouted Saxon, firing his revolver triumphantly in their faces.

But the lad in the blouse snatched it from his hand.

"Give me the pistol," he said, "and help with the oars. How can we tell that they have no boat on hand?"

The boy now spoke in English, but Saxon scarcely noticed that in the overwhelming excitement of the moment. The voice, however, sounded strangely familiar, and had a ring of authority in it that commanded obedience. Saxon relinquished the weapon instantly, and flung himself upon his oars. The boy, heedless of the bullets that were whistling into the water all about their wake, leaned over the gunwale and discharged the last round of cartridges. The soldiers on the beach, looking gaunt and shadowy by the waving torch-light, fired a parting volley. But the pursuers, as the boat moved forward under the double impulse, and in a few more seconds they were, if not beyond range, at all events beyond aim in the darkness.

CHAPTER LXXVII.

A WET SHEET AND A FLOWING SAIL.

Pulling swiftly and strongly, the rowers threw a fierce energy into their work that soon left the coast behind far enough behind. Each moment the glare of the torch-light grew fainter on the shore. Each moment the hull of the Alfonia seemed to become bigger and blacker. In the mean while no one spoke. The boy, having fired out all Saxon's cartridges, crept to Colonna's side, and there crouched silently. The Italian had sunk exhausted in the bottom of the boat, and lay with his head and shoulders leaning up against the side; Castletowers steered, and the two others bent and rose upon their oars with the precision of automatons.

Presently they shot alongside the yacht, and were hailed by the familiar voice of Saxon's human master. Ropes were flashed overhead, a rope was thrown and caught, a ladder lowered, and in a few seconds they were all on board.

"Thank Heaven, you're safe!" exclaimed Lord Castletowers, turning to Colonna, as soon as his foot touched the deck.

But the Italian leaned heavily upon his shoulder, and whispered:

"Hush! let me be below. I am wounded."

"Wounded?"

"Not so loud, I implore you—not a word here!"

"But not badly?"

"I don't know. I fear so!"

"Good God, Colonna!"

The crew were busy hauling in the boat and fastening her on. Even the boy and Montecucoli were doing what they could to help; for life and liberty depended now upon the speed with which they could get the yacht before the little breeze was blowing. They must get away, no matter in which direction. It was the one signal, imperative, of pressing necessity.

Under cover of the haste and confusion on deck Lord Castletowers helped his friend down the cabin stairs, assisted him to the sofa, struck a light, and hastened to examine his wound.

"Where is it, Colonna?" he asked, eagerly.

"Look the door first."

Wondering somewhat at the request, the Earl obeyed. Having done so, with his own hands opened the bosom of his shirt, and Castletowers saw that he was wounded just above the left breast, about an inch below the collar-bone. The spot where the ball had penetrated was surrounded by a purple margin; but there was very little blood, and scarcely any laceration of the flesh.

"It does not look so bad," said the Earl; "and seems scarcely to have bled at all."

"It is bleeding inwardly," replied Colonna, feebly. "I shall die a little faint."

The Earl bestirred.

"I am not sure that you ought to have it," he said.

"I must have it—I—I—"

His voice faltered, and a ghastly look came upon his pallid face.

"I will call Montecucoli," said the Earl, with a throb of exultation in his heart. "He understands these things better than I do."

Colonna half raised himself upon the couch.

"No, no," he gasped; "wait—wait—do not alarm—"

Then, making a desperate effort to articulate, he pointed to his throat, and fell back insensible.

At this moment some one tried the cabin door on the outside, and, finding it bolted, tapped loudly on the panels.

The Earl rushed to open it.

"Run," he cried, seeing the boy whom they had just brought off from shore: "fetch some cold water—an ingot Montecucoli! Quick—the Colonna is badly wounded, and has fainted away!"

But the lad, instead of obeying, thrust the Earl aside, uttered a piercing cry, and flung himself upon his knees beside the sofa.

"My father!" sobbed he, passionately. "Oh, my father!"

Lord Castletowers drew back, full of amazement and pity.

"Alas!" he said, in a low, tremulous tone, "Miss Colonna!"

In the mean while, those on deck were moving heaven and earth to put as many miles of sea between them as possible before the dawn of day. The breeze was languid and fitful; but, such as it was, they spread their sails to it, and, taking a short tack, made some little progress.

By degrees the shadowy outline of the hills faded away in the darkness, and shortly after midnight a brisk southwest wind sprung up, as if on purpose for their service.

All that night they ran before the breeze, making close upon fifteen knots an hour, and bearing right away for Corsica. All that night Giulio Colonna lay in his little cabin below the deck of the Alfonia, sometimes conscious, sometimes unconscious, passing from fainting fit to fainting fit, and growing hourly weaker.

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

THE SORROWFUL ROMAN OF THEM ALL.

Pale, silent, unconscious, Olimpia sat beside her father's couch through all the hours of that dreary night, wiping the cold dews from his brow, binding up his wound, and watching over him with a steady composure that never faltered. Sometimes when he moaned she shuddered; but she did not weep.

Toward dawn the Earl beckoned Saxon quietly from the room, and they went up on deck. The morning was now gray above their heads, and there was no land in sight. The breeze had dropped with the dawn, and the Alfonia was again drifting but little way. Both sea and sky looked inexpressibly dreary.

"How has it seem now?" asked Montecucoli, hastening toward them.

The Earl shook his head.

"Sinking slowly, I fear," he replied. "The fainting fits are longer each time, and each time leave him weaker. He has not spoken for twenty-seven minutes, and he has not spoken since."

The Ferrureo threw up his hands despairingly.

"Dio!" he exclaimed; "that it should end thus!"

"And that it should end now," added Castletowers. "Now, when the great work is so nearly accomplished, and the hour of his reward was close at hand."

"How does the signora bear it?"

"Like a Roman—nobly."

"I will go down and share her watch while you remain on deck. It is something to look upon when death is yet afar off."

With this the young Italian stole gently down the cabin stairs, leaving Saxon and Castletowers alone.

"Alas, Trefalden!" said the Earl, after a long pause, "this is an ominous dawn for Italy."

"Do you not think he will live the day out?"

"I think that he is going fast. I do not expect to hear him speak again in this world. I scarcely expect to see him alive at noon."

"If we had only kept that surgeon with us one week longer!"

"Ay—if we had!"

"Poor Giulio!"

"Poor Olimpia, indeed! I dread to think of all she has yet to suffer."

And they were silent again.

"I can not conceive what we are to do, Trefalden, when—when it is all over," said Lord Castletowers, presently.

"Nor I."

"He ought to rest with his own people; and it must be our task to convey his poor remains to Rome; but, in the mean while, what is to become of her?"

"I can escort her to England."

"Impossible, my dear fellow! You have not the time to travel so far. You could not expect to be night and day upon the road; and, do what you will, may still be in London too late."

"Nay," replied Saxon, quietly, "I can suggest a plan. I know of two ladies—English ladies—who are now residing at Nice. They would receive them well; and if Miss Colonna would consent to accept their protection till such time as you had returned from Rome and could take her to Castletowers—"

"An excellent idea, Trefalden. Nothing could be better."

At this moment Montecucoli came back, anxious and agitated.

"Do you not better come down," he said, in a low, awe-struck tone. "I think he is dying."

"So soon?"

"Indeed, I fear it."

They went. Colonna still lay as when they saw him last, with his head supported against a pile of pillows, and a blanket thrown across his feet and knees; but it needed no second glance to see that a terrible change had passed over him in the last half hour. A ghastly, gray hue had settled upon all his face; his eyes appeared to have sunk away into two cavernous hollows; and his very hands were livid. For two hours he had not moved hand or foot. For more than two hours he had not spoken. His heart still beat; but so feebly that its action could with difficulty be detected by the ear, and not at all by the hand. He still breathed; but the lungs did their work so languidly, and at such long intervals, that a stranger would have taken him for one quite dead. Now and then, not oftener than once in every fifteen or twenty minutes, a slight spasmodic shudder, like the momentary rustling of still waters, passed over him as he lay; but of this, as of all else, he was profoundly unconscious.

"Has he moaned of late?" asked Lord Castletowers.

Olimpia, with one of her father's cold hands pressed between her own, and her eyes intently fixed upon his face, shook her head silently.

"Nor moved?"

She shook her head again.

After this, the Earl stood for a long while looking down upon the face of Colonna's friend. As he did so his eyes filled with tears, and his heart with sorrowful memories—memories of days long gone by, and incidents still more forgotten. He saw himself again a boy at Colonna's side. He remembered boyish pleasures promoted, and vacation rambles shared. He thought of classic readings under summer trees; of noble thoughts, and done, and hoped for; of high and heroic counsel solemnly given; of privations uncomplainingly endured; of aspirations cruelly, of virtuous labor unrewarded except of a patriotism which, however mistaken in many of its aims, was as gallant and seldom as that of the noblest Roman of them all. Remembering these things—remembering, too, the open hand, the fearless heart, the untainted honor which had characterized the dying man in every relation and act of his unselfish life, the Earl felt as if he had never done justice to his virtues till this moment.

"Alas, poor Italy!" he said, aloud, and the tears that had been slowly gathering in his eyes began to fall.

It was a fatal word—that omnipotent word which for so many years had ruled the beatings of his heart, colored his every thought, and shaped his every purpose—a word of strange and terrible thrill swept over Colonna's face. A livid mask but the instant before, it now seemed as if lighted from within. The eye yields upward, his lips moved, and a faint sound was audible in his throat.

"Oh, God!" cried Olimpia, flinging herself upon her knees beside him; "he is about to speak!"

The Earl held up his hand in token of silence.

At that moment the dying man opened his eyes, and a rapt, radiant, wonderful smile came upon all his face, like a glory.

"Italia!" he whispered; "Italia!"

The smile remained; but only the smile. Not the breath—not the spirit—not Giulio Colonna.

A DANGEROUS CURE.

"TOM, my dear Tom, you are mistaken—indeed you are, said Harry, with a forced laugh.

"I—"

"Mistaken!" interrupted Tom; "don't, indeed. When did you ever find me mistaken, Harry? No. I'm a great deal too clear-sighted for that. I never in my life beheld such a change as I see in you since—since, in fact, it's no good mincing the matter—since you were inissus enough to marry. There, that's the truth. Why, my good fellow, you are no longer the jolly, merry, good-tempered fellow going to flow you were, but a miserable, wretched, dejected, cast-down—"

"Tom, for goodness' sake, stop!" exclaimed Harry, excitedly. "I shall go distracted, mad, if you continue in this manner. You have been annoying and worried lately. I'm not in a fit state to stand chaff. But, as regards my marriage, I believe I'm as happy as most married men; in fact, as all married men would be complete, but—"

"But—but, that's it, Harry; we are coming to the point now. That little word 'but' tells a long tale. Chaffing aside, Harry, old friend, there is a change in you, a lamentable change. Come, now, you had better unburden your mind; whatever you tell me, rest assured, will be kept strictly private.

Harry remained thoughtful a moment. He certainly was in a very awkward position. To confess that his wife was getting very self-willed, and almost unmanageable, was not at all pleasant; and yet it was evident Tom guessed something was wrong; he was such a sharp, shrewd fellow, it would be perfectly ridiculous attempting to disguise the truth any longer. So in a hurried manner he related his domestic grievances, how he was almost worried out with the continual eruptions which disturbed his domestic happiness. The slightest opposition on the most trivial subject would send his wife into violent hysterics, till at last he was obliged to give in for the sake of peace and quiet; in fact, he might say his life was becoming a burden to him.

"Yes, and so it will be," said Tom, "unless something desperate is done."

"Desperate!" reiterated Harry, in an alarmed voice.

"Yes, desperate," answered Tom; "but don't alarm yourself unnecessarily. What I mean is this: yours is a desperate case, and therefore requires desperate means to effect a cure. Now, take no advice, the next time your wife creates any disturbance, or you see any signs of a coming storm, instead of giving in, and bathing her head with Eau-de-Cologne, and calling her by pet names, clearing out the sal volatile, and burning yourself a brute of a husband for causing ever calling little wife such unhappiness, and kissing away her tears, promising that in the future she shall reign supreme, and all kind of absurdities—take in a loud voice; say your patience is worn out with such nonsense; you'll stand it no longer; something must be done; it will be impossible to go on living in that wretched state. You might, in an undertone, but audible enough for her to hear every sentence during such a separation; then wind up by putting on your hat to go out, but take care before you go to do a jug of cold water over her head, that is a marvelous effect of lavishing hysterical people to their senses, particularly if nature has not beneficially bestowed a becoming wave to the hair, and art supplies its place. Ring the bell in a decided manner, and place her under the maid's care, with strict orders not to spare cold water. But be sure, my dear fellow, to lung the street-door loudly after you, so as to leave the impression that your temper is seriously aroused, and that it would take some time and great alterations in her conduct to bring you round again. The great object to be achieved is to make her fear the consequences of exciting you into a passion. Once do that and you'll have very little trouble with her afterward."

"Impossible, Tom! I could never do it. Indeed I could not. Little as I see of her, I know my treatment would kill her."

"Kill her, nonsense! Women are not so easily killed as that. But I'll tell you what, Harry; if you don't take my advice you'll repent."

* * * * *

"Lilian, dear?"

Lilian was buried in the luxurious cushions of the sofa, reading, and did not, or would not, hear her husband.

"Lilian!" he repeated, in a louder tone.

"Good gracious, Harry, how you startled me! What?"

"I was thinking, dear, we ought to go and see my mother; it is long since we have been, and I am afraid she will think something is the matter." Harry spoke nervously, having a vague idea that his suggestion would not be received kindly.

"My dear Harry, what is the matter with you to-day? Why put the paper down, and be quiet, and let me have a little peace? I shall never finish this book if you keep interrupting me. No, don't!" she unsettled poor man as he was never seen contented. The idea of going out this cold day to see your mother! No, I can't go."

"But, my dear Lil, it is quite a month since we saw her: I should not like to think she is neglected."

"Oh! well, Harry, if you persist in making an imperative duty, pray don't let me prevent your discharging it; but I do not consider it wise to spend a long cheerless evening in a cab, as you are always tempests me by asking if I know the last new stitch in knitting, and giving me recipes for infuse extraordinary cordials."

Harry was astounded. Was it possible that was Lilian—his darling—speaking in that disrespectful, light manner of his saint-like mother? It was more than he could put up with.

"Madam," he exclaimed, passionately, "you strangely forget of whom you are speaking; for the future, if you can not speak in a different strain, I beg you will not speak at all." He looked deadly as he word the sofa. What a change he beheld in his wife's fair face! The closed eyes, and passionmodic workings of the mouth and throat, he knew too well foretold a coming storm, and it was not long before forth in all its violence it burst. Lilian was in hysterics stronger than he had ever witnessed before. What was to be done? Suddenly flashed across his mind Tom's friendly advice. In battling Tom had assured him positively it had, why not now? any how he would hazard it. No time was to be lost in hesitation. He acted at once. He could be consumed by walking hurriedly up and down the room, with his hands clasped in a distracted manner. He told her it was useless carrying on those ridiculous scenes any longer, that they had caused him quite ill, and that he would not stand it; made up his mind what course to pursue, and hinted as an undertone, as Tom suggested, the probability of a husband's murdering a wife. Then he cold water over her and placing her under the maid's care, made his hasty exit, with a tremendous bang of the street-door.

"Oh! Jane," she cried, in a despairing voice to the maid, who was busily engaged in bathing her mistress with cold water, "I feel so—so ill—so wretched!"

"Yes, ma'am, I dessay yer does. My last young mistress used to feel just in the same kind o' way, so to say, and would go off into fits of her—let me see—'attacks,' I think she called 'em."

"Did—did she suffer like me?" asked Lilian, plaintively.

"Lor bless yer soul! she was afflicted awful but with 'stericks, I never see the like of 'em. Poor master had a hard time of it with her."

"But I suppose he was very kind and gentle, Jane?"

"Well, ma'am, he was for a time; but gentlemen ain't got much patience: they don't seem to understand them kind o' things at all. I shall never forget one day if I live to be a hundred years old. Mistress was in awful sterics, I bathed her and, and gave her all volatile, and all sorts, but nothing seemed to do her good, she went on a screeching louder than ever. When all of a sudden up jumped master, like a madman, and gave her, O lor! such a shaking: it was a mercy he didn't shatter the very life out of her."

"Oh, how dreadful! did she die?" asked Lilian, in a frightened voice.

"No! bless yer soul, no. 'Stericks don't kill."

"No, no. But the shaking, didn't that kill her, Jane?"

"Lor, no, ma'am; it seemed to do her a world o' good: she never hed 'em after the shaking."

"But, Jane, he must have been a very passionate man."

"Well, no, ma'am, he was generally looked upon as a very kind, peaceable gentleman; but yer see he had a great deal to worrit him, and it was more than he could stand."

"It was a very sad case indeed," sighed Lilian.

"Poor thing, how I pity her; it would have killed me. I'm sure I'm not strong enough to have survived that. But, Jane, you don't think that what your master would ever—whew me, do you?"

"Well, really, ma'am, I shouldn't like to say; but when gentlemen gets into passions, there's no knowing what they won't do. Passion is a awful thing. Bless me! I remember my grandmother telling me of a man in a fit of passion, who—"

Lilian was in despair. Good gracious! was Jane going to relate any more atrocities? She should go frantic, she felt convinced, if she had to listen. She must find a better plan out to the conversation at once by pleading fatigue.

"Jane," she said, wearily, closing her eyes, "I feel very tired; I think if I were alone I might try and sleep a little."

When Lilian was alone, instead of sleeping, as she had led Jane to believe she should do, she began seriously to reflect on the past. The more she thought of Harry's conduct, the more extraordinary it seemed. She felt sure he would return home penitent; he would see that he had acted wrongly and rashly, and would beg and implore her forgiveness in such touching, heart-sending language that it would be impossible not to forgive him. But of course she should impress upon him the heinousness of his doings, and that if such things ever happened again he can not look to her for mercy. But listen—yes! that was his step; the culprit was in the hall. Harry's heart beat wildly. What a long time he was hanging up his hat! How different to what she had expected; she thought he would have rushed in suddenly, thrown himself on his knees, and vehemently besought her pardon. What could it mean? But there was no time for further meditation. Harry was now coming into the room; she raised her eyes to his face; that one look was enough: it told her plainer than words could have expressed that penitence was not there. Then it was not momentary passion that had caused him to act in the way he had. No, no; he must have meant all he said and did; or why would he not speak now? Why look so cold and stern? Oh, that she could die! yes, that very minute. What had she now to live for? what would the future be to her?—a dark and dreary.

Dinner passed over in gloomy silence, and the evening commenced in the same way. Harry sat in his easy-chair, reading the paper, as if unconscious of his wife's presence. Lilian watched him anxiously, expecting every minute that he would throw some symptom of contrition; but no, hour after hour passed by, and still Harry's heart remained hardened; at last she began to doubt if it ever would soften. But she would wait no longer: it was hopeless to think he would be the first to speak, and to go on living in that wretched state she couldn't do it. She would appeal to his feelings. She felt sure, if she told him how much she had suffered, the wretched suspense she had endured, he would relent. And she would beseech him never to act so again.

"Harry," she said, in a low, quivering voice. No answer.

"Oh! Harry, dear Harry! Do speak to me! I'm so very, very miserable."

Harry rose slowly from his chair, and sat down by her side on the sofa.

"Well, Lilian," he said, gravely.

"Oh, Harry! I've only knew all I have suffered, how wretched I have been, I'm sure you would feel for me. Promise me you will never behave to me again as you did to-day."

"Lilian, I shall only promise on one condition, that is—remember—that you never give me cause to do so."

"I will try, indeed I will," answered Lilian, earnestly.

"Well, my darling, if you really try, I'm sure you will succeed."

And Lilian did succeed in overcoming her little weakness. Whether it was her determination to conquer, or the fear of a good sound shaking, still remains a mystery. But suffice to say, Harry is never troubled with any more "scenes," and his home now is a perfect elysium.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A RULE FOR RAILWAY TRAVELING.—"Will you allow me, Sir, to offer you a cigar?" "Thank you, but I never smoke." "Have you any objection to my lighting one, Sir?" "Oh! no, none in the least." This plan is infallible with the most Fortunio-looking fellow-traveler. Never think of putting the second question first. The production of the cigar and the generous offer are sure to disarm all cruity objections. Try it.

A dashing young bachelor lately appeared in Central Park with two handsome ponies, whose hill were thought to look like a lady's waterfall, and escaped up in small fat ness. The reconciliation was capital, and the team created a great sensation.

As a jubilee meeting in Richmond, one week after its evacuation by General Lee, a colored church-member related his experience as follows: "Brethren, I'se jis one week and a half old in haven three times. For I was haven occasion to die in sin, when I come into de world. Den I was haven de sin of sperit, when I was converted. Last of all I was haven to labor under de same sin. So I jes let a week go, I quit my sperit, come out at 6 o'clock, and goes out to mill and smaller the fresh in de air. Oh, it is sweet!" A friend of ours is crowing the State of New Jersey lately, found the people all unite before election, but after election they would all shred friend, were adjuring the "elegant" free frish air.

"I don't like to patronize this line," said a culprit to a police magistrate the other day, "was the reply, "it will soon suspend its operations."

"John," screamed a country girl, seated by the side of her dull lover, "leave me alone!" John, astonished, cried, "What's it a bunding you?" "No," replied she, "but you might have done—if you liked."

"Poker Sharps says his wife is equal to five 5's flu." Doubtless, stud-ish, arm-ful, truthful, and—full.

At a young lady's seminary recently, during an examination in history one of the not most promising pupils was interrogated: "Miss Mary, did Martin Luther die a natural death?" "No," was the reply, "he was excommunicated from the church."

DOUBLE FOR.—The man who was hemmed in by a crowd has been troubled by a stitch ever since.

A wag, speaking of the cruel treatment of a child by its mother, says: "The child certainly should have the careful attention of some one, or it will be prematurely added to the kingdom of heaven, and thus, perhaps, permanently separated from its kindred."

A tall fellow, standing in the parquette of a theatre, was repeatedly asked to sit down, but would not. Then a voice from the second circle called out, "Let him alone; he's a taller, and he's resting himself!"

A very disagreeable era—the civil-era.

THE RICHMOND Times says of waterfalls: "We have heard them extensively discussed, and they have been growing larger every Sunday, and the tails of the bonnet of the young ladies' pass six grades steadily."

To remove stains from the character—get rich.

An exchange gives reasons for not publishing a poetic effusion, as follows: "The rhythm sounds like pumpkins rolling over a barn floor, while each verse seems to have been measured with a yard-stick, and others with a tenfoot pole."

Some of our religious exchanges tell a story about a woman being relieved from speechless grief by a hymn. We have known a number of cases to be strongly affected and greatly benefited by hims before this.

A young candidate for the legal profession was asked what he should do first when employed to bring an action. "Ask for money on account," was the prompt reply. He passed.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CLOTHING—Habits of business.

A man, being reproved for swearing, replied he did not know there was any harm in it. "No harm in it!" said a friend, "certainly not. Why, don't you know the commandment, 'Swear not at all?'" "Why, I do not swear at all." "No! what do you call those oh's you are always

A good motto for young women whose beaux don't toe the mark—Double or quit.

An amusing debate took place between Mr. W., a skeptic on religious matters, and a German Lutheran. The skeptic, ridiculing the truth of certain passages in the Bible, and opposing his antagonist almost screamed in anguish, asked him if he believed Balaam's ass ever spoke like a man. The Lutheran was silent for a moment, and then said: "Me mad tell Balaam he bin one ass, Balaam bet he schackass, and she spake dhust like a man. Me believe dat. Me never hear a schackass speak like a man myself, but me hear a good many man speke dhust like a schackass."

It is said that "waterfalls" are prohibited by the English game-laws. The clause which applies to them runs as follows: "Nothing in the laws shall be punished by fine and imprisonment," etc., etc.

A little girl, four years old, was one day home from church with her father when they passed a boy splitting wood, and the father remarked, "Mary, do you see that boy breaking the Sabbath?" The child made no reply, but walked home very thoughtfully, and nesting her mother, exclaimed, "Oh, mother, I saw a boy breaking the Sabbath with a big axe!"

THE FENIAN JOAN OF ARC.—[BY OUR CANADIAN ARTIST.]

"Arrah, Johnny Bull, we're after you! Whillaloo! Whist!"

FRANCIS SOLANO LOPEZ, PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY.

FRANCIS S. LOPEZ,

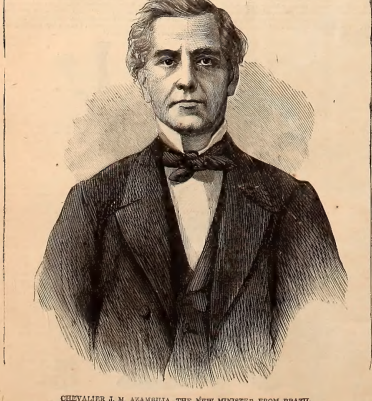
PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY.

On the death of his father, CHARLES A. LOPEZ, in 1862, FRANCIS SOLANO LOPEZ became President of Paraguay—each Paraguayan President having the right to appoint his successor in case of his death before the expiration of his term. The Government of Paraguay is dictatorial, and the President wields an immense amount of power. To all intents and purposes LOPEZ is Paraguay. The extent of his power both naval and military is shown in the war which he is now waging with Brazil and the Argentine Republic. His subjects obey his will as that of a master from whose mandates there can be no appeal. That they can also die for him, and bravely, is shown in the sanguinary resistance offered by the Paraguayans in the Battle of Yatay under the leadership of DUARTE, the warrior monk—a resistance which did not cease even after the issue of the action had been decided against them.

It now seems that Paraguay will be subdued—an event which will be followed by the disposition of her territory according to the will of her conquerors. LOPEZ's power will certainly be broken, whatever may become of Paraguay herself.

The value of the imports and exports of Paraguay for 1859 was estimated at over $3,000,000, the imports being somewhat in excess of the exports. The revenue of the country for the same year was $2,438,499. Paraguay has a population of nearly a million and a half.

GEN. BARTOLOME MITRE, PRESIDENT OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.



GEN. BARTOLOME MITRE,

PRESIDENT OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

BARTOLOME MITRE, the President of the Argentine Republic and Commander-in-Chief of the allied Brazilian, Argentine, and Uruguayan army, is now in his forty-fourth year. He belongs to the class of "self-made men," like LINCOLN, DOUGLAS, and JOHNSON. General MITRE is a member of various scientific societies both in Europe and America, and is now recognized as a poet of good repute in the Spanish language. Born at Patagones, on the extreme frontier of the State of Buenos Ayres, a military post for defense against the Indians, he was compelled to make his own way. Early engaged in the war against the Dictator ROSAS, MITRE was exiled to Chili, where as a periodical writer he still carried on the war. Thence he went to Bolivia and served with distinction. But upon the final uprising of Brazil and the Plata countries against the sanguinary tyranny of ROSAS, MITRE returned to his country, and took a distinguished part in the victory of Caseros which overthrew ROSAS.

The Government of URQUIZA, which succeeded that of ROSAS, was not satisfactory to the people of Buenos Ayres, who called MITRE to their head. He defended the city against two assaults of URQUIZA, and in 1854 gained the decisive victory of Pavon, which secured the peace of the country, and MITRE was unanimously elected President under a liberal constitution framed upon that of the United States.

His career as a statesman has been illustrious.

CHEVALIER J. M. AZAMBUJA, THE NEW MINISTER FROM BRAZIL.

H. E. DOMINGO F. SARMIENTO, MINISTER OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

He has healed the wounds of forty years of civil war, and has fostered every kind of internal improvement, keeping the peace with all the world, until LOPEZ, the Dictator of Paraguay, indignant that the Argentine Republic would not allow the passage of his troops across her territory to attack Brazil, seized two Argentine non-of-war and marched an army into an Argentine province. There was then no alternative. MITRE signed the triple alliance between Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay, and is now at the head of the allied army of 80,000 men, by far the largest force ever collected in South America. His old antagonist, General URQUIZA, commands a corps in the army. At the last accounts the allied forces continued to be successful, and should final victory crown their arms no name in South American annals will be more illustrious than that of BARTOLOME MITRE.

CHEVALIER D'AZAMBUJA,

THE NEW MINISTER FROM BRAZIL.

IN two ways has Brazil during the past year shown her willingness to enter into a closer relationship with this country. In the first place, she has just joined the United States in subsidizing a line of steamers to run between New York and Rio de Janeiro; and, secondly, the Emperor has nominated Senhor J. M. D'AZAMBUJA to represent the largest country of South America at Washington.

In Senhor D'AZAMBUJA's past history we have a guarantee that the United States will have a friend as well as Brazil an efficient minister. In 1836 he was a judge in the important province of San Paulo, and had then attained the degree of LL.D. In 1840 he was appointed Brazilian Secretary of Legation at Washington, and the next year he became Charge d'Affairs and Consul-General—the duties of this latter office requiring him to reside mostly in New York, where he is still remembered by many of our older citizens. In 1842 he was recalled to take the place of Chief Clerk of the State Department at Rio de Janeiro, and five years later was appointed to the responsible position of Under Secretary of State, which he has maintained through various changes of cabinets until March, 1865, when DON PEDRO, in addition to other previous honors—such as conferring upon him the knighthood of the Order of Christ, making him Commander of the Order of the Rose, etc.—appointed him Brazilian Minister to Washington.

We look upon the sympathies of the Chevalier D'AZAMBUJA for the United States, and his love for our literature, as happy auguries in respect of the future relations between the two countries. We welcome him to our shores at a time when a great social problem is being solved. Brazil has been quietly doing away with slavery by the mild process of her laws since 1850, but the complete downfall of the "institution" in our land has led the South American Empire to consider the best means to be more speedily rid of that which weighs like an incubus upon any country. We have reason to know that Senhor D'AZAMBUJA has devoted especial attention to this subject.

H. E. DOMINGO F. SARMIENTO,

MINISTER OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

MR. SARMIENTO was born in 1811 in San Juan, one of the fourteen States comprising the Republic. He has been prominent in the public affairs of his country since the age of eighteen, although part of the time an exile, while the Dictator ROSAS held the government in his merciless grasp. While Mr. SARMIENTO's military record is most gratifying to his friends, his chief ambition has always been to promote the education of the people, and to this cause he has given most of his life, one of the main objects of his present residence with us being to study in person the school systems of the different States. During the past six months Mr. SARMIENTO has written in Spanish the Lives of Abraham Lincoln and of Horace Mann, which are now in press, and will be extensively read in all Spanish South America.

DANCING BY LUNATICS.

THE Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island was the scene of a most interesting and remarkable spectacle on the night of November 6. The completion of the first of a series of four frame buildings was celebrated by a ball, in which the patients of the Asylum were the dancers, "tripping the light fantastic toe" after a fashion even more fantastic than MILTON dreamed of in "L'Allegro."

The new buildings were rendered necessary by the increased population of New York city, and the consequent increase in the number of the insane. The accompanying illustration gives a fair idea of the festivities, as well as of the interior of one of the new structures. A prominent fiddler, himself a patient, is lost in ecstasy in the sounds which he produces, and in their influence upon his fellows. Every variety of "pigeon wing" is being cut by the active dancers. Now and then there darts out one who enchains the attention of all her sesquinatance by her excellent execution of the most difficult pas. Miss FANNY L—— may be considered to have carried off the honors of the evening by her Highland Fling, Sailor's Hornpipe, and Spanish Cachuca.

The reader will have trouble in descrying beauty in any of the countenances in the sketch, and had he been present at the actual scene he would have succeeded no better. The faces are not caricatures, but good character representations. Wild action was to be expected from such a gathering; extravagant gesticulation and absurd antics were common enough, but of real impropriety there was nothing.

Occasions of this sort no doubt tend in a great degree to relieve the chagrin melancholy which too close confinement or too monotonous surroundings are apt to produce in our institutions for insane people. It is often the case that isolation renders incurable diseases of the mind which a more cordial rain treatment might ameliorate, or perhaps entirely relieve.

DANCING BY LUNATICS.—BALL GIVEN TO THE PATIENTS OF THE INSANE ASYLUM ON BLACKWELL'S ISLAND, NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 6, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY W. H. DAVENPORT.]

SEWING MACHINES.—We are having a great many inquiries for Sewing Machines from various parts of the country, and as we can not conveniently reply to them all by mail, we have thought it proper to state our opinion in regard to them in this public manner. We have used WILSON'S patent, manufactured by the WHEELER & WILSON Manufacturing Company, No. 625 Broadway, and we can say in regard to it that it is without a rival. It is simple, not easily put out of order when in proper hands, and in point of effectiveness and finish no other machine stands ahead of it. This famous Sewing Machine is highly appreciated the world over. We state this much in regard to this excellent machine upon our own responsibility.

This Company have made and sold during the last three months about 10,000 machines, and are now producing and selling 150 per day. The very low price from $50 to $100, and the liberal terms ones sell best. In their business there is over $1,000,000 invested, and they keep 600 men regularly employed manufacturing machines. The system pursued is the same as that adopted in the manufacture of arms: every piece is made to a gauge, and consequently the parts of any machine may be transposed with those of another machine of the same kind, or, should an accident occur, the broken part can be immediately replaced on application to the office.

There is not an establishment in this country, whose stitching of any kind is required, in which the Sewing Machine is not employed; and there are few private families in which it is not an acknowledged article of furniture. This Company have just won the highest premium at the International Fair, Dublin, exhibiting their 200,000th machine, beautifully ornamented with the American coat-of-arms.—Scientific American.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose stock of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORRISON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MATILDA TOOTS.

NEW CORNU SPOR, 15s. With picture, colored ..... 30s.
I CAN NOT SING THE OLD SONGS ..... 30s.
SUNLIGHT WITHIN MY HEART ..... 35c.
HAVE YOU SEEN HER LATELY? (comic) ..... 30c.
SOLDIERS' HAPPY RETURN, MAZOURKA ..... 30c.
IT WAS MY MOTHER'S VOICE ..... 25c.
Mailed postpaid.

FREDERICK BLUME,
203 Bowery, New York.

MOORE'S PATENT RUBBER SCOURING AND SHIELDED PEN is unsurpassed of the hands and joints, and rubbing off the nib and will glide over the roughest paper as can be done in any other needs, and will retain more ink than any pen ever made. Price, $1 00 each, sent by mail, postpaid. Send size of hand one inch from point of the fingers. MOORE & CO.,
171 Broadway, New York.

STOECKEL'S
P. G. B. & V.
For Druggists' and Physicians' Use.

Holiday Presents,
MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing from one to sixty-six different tunes, and costing from $5 50 to $500 00. The most complete assortment ever offered for sale in New York. Fine ornaments for the parlor, and pleasant companions for the invalid. J. F. PALLARD & SON, Importers, 21 Maiden Lane (up stairs), New York. Musical Boxes repaired.

HOPE.

There is yet hope for the dyspeptic. Do not despair. If you have been unable to find relief, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS will cure any case of Dyspepsia. It will cure every case of Liver Complaint. It will restore a sallow and unwholesome face to the skin and eyes. It will restore the nervous system to its original vigor, and give entire health to the body. For sale by all druggists. They are not used as a beverage.
H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York Agent.

CHAPPED HANDS AND FACE, SORE LIPS, CHILBLAINS, &c.—HEGEMAN & CO.'S CAMPHORINE WATER AND GLYCERINE CREAM are the most immediately, and will keep the skin soft and smooth in the coldest weather. Sold by druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail for 35 cents. HEGEMAN & CO.,
Chemists and Druggists, New York.

SEDENTARY HABITS.

There is no class of the community more subject to disease of the digestive organs than those whose business compels them to be comfortably sitting down, and carried at a desk, or standing behind a counter. Hoofland's German Bitters will prove a true friend to this class of persons, and enable them to fulfill the duties of their station with a spirit and activity unknown to the sufferer. The bitters can be had of any druggist. They are not a nostrum for sale by the trade. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, Agent, New York.

MME. YALE'S superior, beautiful, and reliable TOILET PREPARATIONS. LILY BLOOM for the complexion, 25 cts. DEPILATORY for removing superfluous hair, 50 cts. CURLING CREAM for the hair, 50 cts. PERFUME PACKET, very durable, 50 cts. Mailed free on receipt of price. Mme. HEGEMAN'S Emporium of Fashion, No. 489 Broadway, N. Y. Sold by all the Druggists.

In those cases of scanty, retarded growth the present one 16), the Baloom of the Tennessee Stump Orator has been found to certainly restore the whiskers, &c., to a fine and vigorous growth. (See Testimonials.) The History and a sample bottle of this Baloom sent sealed on receipt of return postage.
JOHN HAWLINS, 9 & 10 Broadway, New York.

MISTRESS. "Why, Bridget, what are you doing—nailing those biscuits down to the tray?"
COOK. "Yes, faith, Mum, or they'd be affher lift in' the tops off your oven, Mum—this Yaste Powdher's so misty powerful."

The Pioneer Yeast Powder is manufactured by Taylor & Young, No. 186 Front Street, New York.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.
PATENT APPLIED FOR. June 20, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved Scientific PRINCIPLES, and warranted to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute correctness and the utmost precision. More truthful than the most costly and elaborate timekeeper of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. It requires NO KEY or winding up; NEVER NEEDS POWN, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is secured by PATENT. LETTERS PATENT. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Sale delivery guaranteed. Specials secured. Our unusual action being the only one LEGALLY PROTECTED from infringement, all persons are cautioned from buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under no matter what ALTERATION OR NAME; as the Agents of AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Trop, N. Y.

$25 A DAY. AGENTS WANTED to sell a new and wonderful SEWING MACHINE, the only thing one Needed. Address
SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH. AGENTS WANTED for six articles just out. Address
O. T. GARLY, Clay Building, Biddeford, Maine.

Make your own Soap
WITH B. T. BABBITT'S
Pure Concentrated Potash,
OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 14 pounds, 7 pounds, 4 pounds, and 1 pound, with full directions in English and German for making hard and soft soap. One pound will make 10 gallons of soft Soap. No boiling required. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash to purchase.
B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

GOLD PENS.—The best Pen for the least money is the Johnson Pen, warranted for one year—14 carrie Gold. Also, every variety of Pen-holders on hand. Pens reduced on receipt of 6 cts. Five and ten per cent. Send for Circular. E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office No. 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? Our Grecian Compound will force them to grow on the smoothest face or chin in 6 weeks, or hair on bald heads. Price $1, or three packages for $2. Sent by mail any where. Address VARNER & CO., Box 128, Brooklyn, New York.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR
KEY'S AMERICAN UNION WRITING FLUID.
THE BEST AND CHEAPEST IN THE WORLD.

Curl your Hair. One application will curl your hair like ringlets, and last 6 months. Price 50c., by mail. Address M. A. JAQUES, Colleton, Ill.

Window Shades, Curtains,
AND CURTAIN M. TERIALS OF ALL KINDS, at
KELTY'S, 330 Broadway.

We Illustrate the use of J. BALL & CO.'S CATCH INPROVED EYE-CUPS. These CUPS will RESTORE your EYESIGHT in case of loss by OLD AGE, SHORT-SIGHTEDNESS, all kinds of WEAKNESS, INFLAMMATION, ULCERATION, &c., &c. They permanently CURE the WORST DISEASES of the EYE, and preserve them through life so as NEVER TO USE GLASSES. The best Physicians and Oculists recommend their use in practice. 5000 Certificates are exhibited at our office. The Eye-Cups are put up in neat cases, and will be forwarded, with directions and Pamphlet, to any person, by mail or express, on receipt of $6 00. Give the name of your Post-Office Town, County, and State. Money can be sent by Mail or Express. Or send Fifteen Cents, for a Descriptive Pamphlet, to
J. BALL & CO., 10 John Street, New York. (Box 91 Post-Office.)

J. H. Winslow & Co.
(ESTABLISHED 1850).
100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE DISTRIBUTED TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00
100 Gold Watches	75 00
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	20 00
200 Invisible Gaiters	$15 00 to 20 00
3000 Drinking Cups	2 00 to 10 00
2000 Gold Plated Cased Bracelets	10 00 to 20 00
3000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Ingle Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Plated, Silver-Mounted Holsters	4 00 to 10 00
2000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Sets Studs and Sleeve Buttons	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, and Table Spoons, per dozen	12 00 to 24 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per dozen	14 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
3000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
3000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put in an envelope, sealed up and mix-d, and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving a fair chance to all. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 6 for $1; eleven for $2; 32 for $5; 65 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to ladies and gents to act as such. Full nut to send for circular, which gives special terms, Price List, and particulars.
Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCANA WATCH.

An elegant, durable, and reliable as the finer gold watch, Arcana, Glass, Hunting case, Lever, Key Wind, Hunting case, $25 sent by mail. ARCANA WATCH CO., 62 Fulton Street, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
Of Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, sent by EXPRESS. SAUNDERS EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

THE SALEM LEG.

All who desire an artificial leg, untrivaled for comfort, strength, durability, appearance, and cheapness, will apply to THE SALEM LEG COMPANY, 23 HOSE STREET, SALEM, MASS., for circular No. 4, containing full information concerning this original, ingenious, thoroughly tested, and unrivaled leg. Soldiers entitled to Government aid receive this leg without charge. Manufacturing facilities having been lately increased, all applicants are supplied with promptness.

$3 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasps—for 50 $3 photographs. Sent by mail or $3 40.
$5 ALBUMS—very handsome—arms brass bound—two $5 gilt clasps—for 100 photographs. Sent by mail or $5 50.
Articles, postcards, Yankee notions of all kinds. Everybody send for catalogues. W. G. WILKINS & CO., Boston, Mass.

Agents Wanted.

$10 A Day easy made $10.
By selling Engraved Portraits of Washington and Sothron. Our stationary Packets contain all others; each Package contains Portraits of Washington, Lincoln, and a pocket worth a dollar at retail. Price only $2 cents. We will send Agents 100 Stationary Packets on receipt of a Waiver Watch for $17. We also publish splendid steel engravings, very popular with the Army and Navy. Send for $5 that will sell for $15. Send stamp for Catalogue, &c. Address, HOWARD ASSOCIATION, Philadelphia, Pa.

AGENTS, LOOK AT THIS.

A sample and catalogue of articles every body wants, sent free for ten cents.
H. IRVINGTON & CO., 609 Broadway, New York.

Brandreth's Pills.

They expel the poisons which threaten life. Every time a sickly person takes a dose of this wonderful pill he has less vitiated humors, and more life and vigor, as any one can prove by taking a single dose. Persons of pale brides and sickly complexions will find using them for a time we rent a few days or weeks from the purgation we make new fluids from our food, which replace the unhealthy ones that the Brandreth Pills have caused to flow. Each time we repeat this process we expel further quantities of impurities, which are again replaced by fluids less and less impure, until, by a few months' faithful persistence in this treatment, we bring back the whole mass of fluids or humors to a standard state of purity, when the health of Brandreth's Pills only take away humors which are unsound.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See name in B. BRANDRETH on the stamp.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

FREE.—A 48-page Catalogue of Articles all want. Address BLAKE & CO., 713 Broadway, New York.

CURL YOUR HAIR.

A sample of BARRY'S CURLING FLUID will be sent FREE to any address. The Curling Fluid will curl the straightest hair, the first application. Curls, not ringlets. Circulars, testimonials, &c. Address, with stamp, PROF. B. ROSE, Parkman, Ohio.

POSTAGE STAMPS.—A complete priced Catalogue of American and Foreign Postage Stamps mailed free for 10c. by W. LINDELL, Jr., Postage Stamp Dealer, 64 New Oxford Street, London, England.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.

These CELEBRATED MACHINES we can recommend to the public, combining as they do all the IMPROVEMENTS which EXPERIENCE has proved to be essential in the perfection of Sewing Machines. We invite all intending to call and test a machine before purchasing elsewhere. SILENCE, 537 Broadway, New York.

THE LADIES

Use PERRY'S Moth & Freckle Lotion, which is prepared only by DR. C. PERRY, 49 Bond St. Sold by all Druggists. Price $2 a bottle. Send for Circular

Metropolitan Enterprise.

GREAT GIFT SALE

OF THE

NEW YORK AND PROVIDENCE

Jewelers' Association,

Capital.....$1,000,000.

An immense stock of Pianos, Watches, Jewelry, and Fancy Goods, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be sold for more than one dollar when you will receive.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed.

These envelopes will be sent by mail for 25 cents, regardless of choice, or last as ordered, or in club rates, together with the following premiums:

5 for 50 cents, with a premium picture.

8 for $1, with a steel-engraved picture, worth.....$1 00.

11 for $2, with a silver napkin-ring, worth.....2 00.

17 for $3, with a gold pen and pencil, worth.....3 00.

50 for $5, with a gold locket, worth.....5 00.

65 for $10, with a large gold pen, worth.....10 00.

100 for $15, with a good silver watch, worth.....15 00.

200 for $30, with a silver-plated tea-set, worth 30 00.

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your choice to pay the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain, as a gift, Pianos, Gold Watches, Sewing Machines, or any Set of Jewelry on our list, for $1, and in no case can they receive less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks.

Agents wanted. Great inducements to Ladies and Gents. You will act as such.

Don't fail to send for circular, giving full particulars.

Address G. M. DUNN & CO., Managers,

176 Nassau Street, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers & Photographic Materials,

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our usual business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are headquarters for the following,

Stereoscopes & Stereoscopic Views.

Of these we have an immense assortment, including

VIEWS OF THE WAR.

Obtained at great expense and forming a complete

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT CONTEST

Bull Run, Dutch Gap,
Yorktown, Pontoon Trains,
Gettysburgh, Hanover Junction,
Fair Oaks, Lookout Mountain,
Savage Station, Chickahominy,
Fredericksburgh, City Point,
Fairfax, Rockville,
Richmond, Petersburgh,
Deep Bottom, Belle Plain,
Monitors, Chattanooga,
Fort Morgan, Atlanta,
Mobile, Charleston,
Wilmington, Sherman's March
Florida, &c. to the Sea,
&c. &c.

Assortment and Foreign Orders and Lookingglass Screens, Stereoscopes, Albums, Chemicals, Apparatus, and all articles necessary to photographic operations. Our new Catalogue, prepared to suit the requirements of Stamp.

Photographic Albums.

We were the first to introduce them into the United States and we are constantly increasing our assortment in every variety, being in price from 60 cents to $50. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of containing more specimens of superior workmanship than any other. They are made in CASE, tastefully gilt and ornamented.

The Trade will find our Albums the most Saleable they can buy.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains over 1,000 Subjects. Operators differing entirely from those usually kept by dealers in Photographs, &c., viz: about 300 Female Figure Studies, 200 Statesmen,

180 Boy Figures, 180 other Officers, 120 Divines,
144 Groups, 100 Actresses, 70 Authors,
84 Actors, 70 Opera Singers, 70 Generals Women.
8,000 Copies of Works of Art,

including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, Groups, &c., &c. Our Catalogue, which we send free to the trade, contains over 80 pages of fine print. Persons from our Catalogue, will be filled on receipt of $1 00, which can be sent by mail.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D., will please remit $5 00 on account, as we do not like to send goods C. O. D. unless we know the parties.

All Our prices are quality of our goods considered, low.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HIGHEST PREMIUM, a SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, the highest premium ever awarded to any Reed Organ of the American Instruments, and also specialized by the Judges of the Great Fair of the Franklin Institute, held in Philadelphia, awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instruments exhibited—a most just and well merited compliment. The award for the second best instrument of this class was made to Dubois & Stodart, also a Gold Medal and agent of the Philadelphia organ; and the third award was given to Mason and Hamlin.—We quote from the report:

"I can speak of them in the highest terms."—G. W. MORGAN.

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.

"We have examined with much interest many of our organ instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,

No. 97 East Twenty-third Street,

New York.

GREENBACKS ARE GOOD—ROBACKS ARE BETTER.

The best tools and agate mortarsin the world. 50,000 bottles sold yearly. 50 by dealers every where. Depmas Barnes & Co., Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Robsch, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

TO CLAIM AGENTS.—Send $6 to J. H. Woodward, Louisville, Kentucky, and get 200 different specimens of the best claim agent ever published in the United States. Address Box 1026. Catalogue with price list will accompany.

$150 A MONTH MADE BY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS and others, with Stencil Tools. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vermont.

JOSEPH GILLOTT & SONS' STEEL PENS.

$6 WATCHES FOR THE HOLIDAYS. $8

An extensive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, especially adapted for Christmas presents, of fine finish and rich design, at greatly reduced prices.

AN ELEGANT WATCH, in fine gold-plated double case, finely engraved, English full jewel jeweled movements, adjusted regulator, engraved pallets and balance bridge, non-magnetic white dial, fine Roman figures, Connecticut TRAVELLER, with key, case, quite FINE VERY CHEAP, this beautiful gold-plated WATCH (visible running case) for two thousand, all complete, a beautiful holiday present, sent free by mail for only $6.

A HANDSOME SILVER WATCH, reversible pattern, in heavy double cases; small size, sent for $8 with key, fine case, chain, gold locket, &c., complete, sent free to any part of the country for only $8.

THE IMPERIAL TIMEKEEPER, a Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Ingenuity, and a perfect Time Keeper and working TIMEKEEPER, so accurately adjusted Marine's Chronometer as to indicate the time of day, the month, the number, indicating day of month, week, &c., rendering this a perfect timekeeper, and a beautiful ornament, in cases of great value to travelers, farmers, and others desirous of a perfect TIMEKEEPER, sent free by mail, Key Sparing Gold, or finely finished DOUBLE HUNTING Gold, inner cases of fine solid Gold throughout, richly engraved, with cases of Solid Coin Silver, English Improved Jeweled Patent Jas. Swiss movements, WARRANTED, Hunting Case, Solid Gilt, polished steel Clock, Equal Balance, Independent Second Hand, Chronometer Balance, and Lever and Levers, the ROYAL TIMEKEEPER and Officers of the Revenue, LARGE SIZE, Hunting Case, Solid Gilt, Stem winding and set, all complete, with Case, Key, &c., sent any where by mail. ALL FIVE DOLLARS EACH. SEND FOR CIRCULAR. ADDRESS DUPLEX, 239. Genuine AMERICAN LEVERS, $30. SEE VICTORIA WATCH, $20. PATENT LEVERS, $25. LOCKET Fancy Enamelled mail watches, $20. All styles of goods WARRANTED for twelve months. SEND FOR CIRCULAR. CAVELY BROTHERS, Importers of Fine Watches, 103 Nassau St., New York. Branch, Chicago, Ill.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. 10 and 12 per cent. discount to the clergy. Monthly payments received for the same. Second hand pianos at bargains from $60 to $100. Sheet music and waverooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

PALMER'S LOTION

THE GIFT OF BEAUTY TO THE SKIN. Cures without fail every kind of unsightly eruption of the face, or tinting, irritating, or distressing cutaneous disease in any part of the person. DEMAS BARNES & CO., Wholesale Agents, New York.

Only This,

AND

Nothing More.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine or send for circular. Sent by mail for 50c. Or for a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 161 Canal Street, New York.

UNITED STATES STEEL PEN WORKS,

JERSEY CITY, CAMDEN, N. J.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO,

STEEL PEN MANUFACTURERS.

WAREROOMS, { 400 Broadway, Philadelphia.
{ 61 John Street, New York.

SAMPLES AND PRICES ON APPLICATION. LOTS MADE TO ORDER OF ANY DESIRED PATTERN.

Caution: These Pens are of genuine American manufacture, and equal in finish, elasticity, and firmness of point to any imported. They are offered to the trade to gain the confidence of the American public. The forgeries of foreign manufacturers are unworthy of the English imitation.

To be had retail by all stationers throughout the country.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.

$1,000,000 Worth

OF

Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....each $125 00
500 Silver Watches.....each 25 00 to 50 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases....." 5 00 to 8 00

And a assortment of Jewelry, Silverware of every description. The method of disposing of these goods at ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms and premiums. Address A. D. EVENS & CO.,

26 Beekman Street. P. O. Box 4376, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Automatical Engravings, with Explanations. By an Experienced Lady Teacher of Penmanship. Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for Fifteen Cents.

Address Mrs. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it. Sold by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

SELL NO BRASS OR SO-CALLED PLATED JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD, OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, it is the object of manufacturers, as a one-price average system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Fancy, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Diamond and Gold Jewelry,

Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000,

All to be sold for one dollar each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSURING THE DOLLARS WORTH FOR $2.

IN THIS WAY.—We propose to send any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $2, a splendid PHOTOGRAPH of our great Sailor-Dick or Tailor, size plate, valued at $10, or a beautiful 50-picture Stereoscope Photograph Album, without an $8; and you have a possibility of getting a

Fine Gold Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for our Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which you will mixed and sent, as regardless of choice, will be sent, which will inform you what you can get for $2; from a Patent Lever Gold Watch, worth $10, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also will be sent our circular, containing a list of 1000 articles, arranged in three terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered. Five envelopes sent for $1; 11 for $2; 30 for $5. Address

CALKINS & CO., Managers,

No. 208 Broadway, Room 3, New York.

Or, if nearer you, 36 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo.; or 109 Lake Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. W. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Pathisic, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.

$10,000 DOLLARS Reward is offered for a better recipe. It contains no opium in any form, and is warranted to be as safe to take as by the most delicate child.

DR. W. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS strikes at the root of the disease at once. The most distressing cough is relieved by one dose, and a single bottle will cure in a few hours' time. The afflicted do not have to take bottle after bottle before they can realize their remedy in a satisfied relief or not.

THIS IS NOT A SECRET PREPARATION, but one which, if used in season, will save the lives of thousands. It has effected many of the most severe cases where the skillful physicians in this country and in Europe have been exhausted, and have pronounced the case beyond cure, which they have PRONOUNCED INCURABLE, and pronounced a sure and speedy CURE. Consumptives, do not be deceived by the many worthless preparations that are now before you, and can be obtained only at the druggists, where the best remedy has been tested. Full directions will be found in pamphlet which will be sent free to any address.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

To Book Agents and Canvassers,

AND PERSONS DESIRING LUCRATIVE EMPLOYMENT.

THE PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF

THE WAR FOR THE UNION.

By Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS.

Sold by Subscription only.

The immensely popular work is now issued and ready for Canvassers. The first edition from 20,000 copies of this work as a great success, and the daily increasing demand for it, while the southern tide of the history of the War can be more popular than this from the pen of Mrs. Stephens. Address,

Persons desiring districts to canvass must apply at once.

BEALE, W. HITCHCOCK,

14 Chambers Street, New York.

PRINCE'S

IMPROVED FOUNTAIN PEN.

ONCE FILLING, WITH PEN FOR HOURS.

New York, November 28, 1864.

I take great pleasure in commending PRINCE'S FOUNTAIN PEN. After several months' use, I find it to be one of the most useful articles I have come to regard it as indispensable. I am satisfied that one series of this kind is far cheaper than a pen constantly to repair, and has no notion of having once thoroughly proved a convenience like this. Any Water Reservoir Pen would willingly five without it.

Sent to any address, postage, stamped and addressed, on receipt, by JOHN CASEY, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 352 Broadway, New York.

1000 AGENTS WANTED,

Christian Men and Women Preferred.

To sell the new, beautiful, grand, and popular Book of CHRISTIAN ART, indorsed by the Bishops and most eminent divines now, extant, and has no rival. Clergymen, church officers, and members are making $5 to $15 per day on this work. Pleasant employment for any one of the best citizens. Terms liberal, and exclusive territory given to agents who can furnish satisfactory testimonials. For particulars, address I. GOWLES, Publisher, 143 Fulton, New York, (Corner Nassau Street.)

TREES, SHRUBS, and PLANTS.

Now is the best time to plant them.

Celebrated Linnæan Nurseries, Flushing, L. I., Near New York City. All kinds of Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Grapes, Shrubs, Plants, &c., of best quality and at low prices.

FANCY FOWLS.

Pure bred fowls from recent importations. 12 varieties. Swan, Brahma and China Geese, Bronze and Fantail Turkeys, Dorkings, Hamburgs, Polands, Game, Spanish, Bantams, Fancy Pigeons. Address

R. H. HAINES, Box 98, Elizabeth, N. J.

FIRST PREMIUM

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5

MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1861; Improvement patented June 6, 1865. The unprecedented SELF-ACTING GEM SEWING MACHINE, with changing attachment, a most wonderful and exquisitely constructed Novelty, is now in full operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, sews with both or single thread, makes the LOCK STITCH, the reverse-action more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making extreme success to each evolution of the Wheel. Will SEWSEAM, HEM, HEMMING, SEWING, RUFFLE, GATHERING, &c. &c.; requires no change of stitch; is NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will run through one hundred yards, and not a LOOPSTER. It is to all intents and purposes an easy acher patent. It has taken from the Franklin Institute, and received the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have examined it.

FAMILIES FROM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

Gems from European Picture Galleries.

Fifty highly-finished engravings on steel, after the most celebrated old masters, in one portfolio. Sent free to any address on receipt of price.

J. C. BUTLER, 624 Broadway, New York.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.

TERMS: $2 50 a year; 3 copies for $6; 5 copies, and 1 to getter-up of club, $10. Single Numbers for sale by News Agents throughout the country. Specimens sent on receipt of 15 cents.

Two Engravings will be issued in January and July. Address

T. S. ARTHUR & SON,

323 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

COMMENCEMENT OF VOL. XXXII.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR DECEMBER, 1865.

CONTENTS:

MAKING THE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Franklin Square Print.—The Cliff Dwellers.—The Mechanism of Books.—The Court-Yard.—Notes on Engravings.—A Type.—Copperplate Engraving.—Steel Engraving.—Bible Illustrations.—Introduction to Vaulot.—Franklin's Press.—The Difference between Drawing on Wood or Drying-Stone.—Process of Hydraulic Press.—Made Ready.—Not Made Ready.—Mode of Working.—The Hydraulic Press.—Sailing.—The Main Waterroom.—Parties of a Book Room.—The Power Cylinder Press.—The Hoe Rotary Press.—Sheets and Trimming Machine.—Folding.—Binding.—Marbling.—Burnishing.—Section of Manufactory.

A CHAPTER ON WIGS.

THE NATURAL WEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Bay at Mine.—The Mines and Works.—Shaft Driving. Waller Gold Mine.—The Sand Cut.—The Gold Agitator Mine.—View from Chimney, Fluvanna County.

THE ROYAL PORTRAITS.

THE LAST: A RETROSPECT.

NAMES OF MINE.

THE DAY OF APPOINTMENT.

ASPIRATIONS.

ASLEEP. By WILKIE COLLINS.

BOOK THE FOURTH.

CHAPTER XI. The scenes between them.

CHAPTER XII. What was caught in the Trap that was set.

CHAPTER XIII. Terrors and Tribes in General.

CHAPTER XIV. Last. The Voice of Society.

CHAPTER XV. The Voice of Society.

AT CHRISTMAS TIME.

A VILLAGE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

HAPPY AND HAPPY MARRIAGES.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year.....$4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers.

Single Numbers, 15 cents each.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for Magazine, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $35; one half, $70; one page, $135. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year.....$4 00

One Copy for Three Months.....1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or a Copy for $20 00. Postmasters generally to advertise.

The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding.....$7 00 per Volume.

Half Morocco.....10 00

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

Cloth Covers for Binding, 50 cents each, by mail, postpaid.

Terms for Advertisements.—Under one line for inside, and Ten Dollars and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements, according to position.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

MAGNETIC.

PATRIOTIC YOUNG LADY. "Is it possible to send a Kiss to General Grant?"
CLERK. "Oh yes, Miss; but it must be repeated two or three times to make quite sure!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL...$3,000,000. SURPLUS...$1,703,600.
This bank will issue certificates of deposit bearing interest on favorable terms. J. L. WORTH, Cashier.
NEW YORK, August 21, 1865.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway,
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Fin-Cruit, eaten with impunity, and so fine as the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above batters, if made with Prescott's Yeast Powders. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Tryon & Young, 188 Front St., N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 607 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for circular. Pipes $6 to $20 each.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE on receipt of $10. CIRCULAR FREE FOR 3 STAMPS.
Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 239, Boston, Mass.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co.
CHAMPAGNE
Is top-rated from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and connoisseurs acknowledge it to be most delicious and delicate. Sold in bond or duty paid by A. W. NITSCHE, 29 Beaver St., N. Y.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
Measuring Card,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a PERFECT FIT.
BOOT AND SHOE EMPORIUM,
No. 575 Broadway, New York.
E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for Ladies, Gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
BY HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
Bought and Sold on Commission.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostate glands, stone in the bladder, retention, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCKU,
Cures diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, DYSPEPSIA, DROPSY, &c. PRICE ONE DOLLAR. Sold by BARKER & CO. and F. C. WELLS & CO., NEW YORK. DURGIN & SNOW, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
ROSWELL & WARNER'S COLOSPHIC colors beautifully and natural. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 9 Dey St., N. Y.

Pro Bono Publico is a motto "more honored in the breach than in the observance;" but, attached to Holloway's Pills, and Ointment, it is indicative of their value throughout the civilized world. For the cure of asthma, coughs, colds, cutaneous eruptions, and bankrupt constitutions, they are the sheet anchor of the sick.

"American Union Company."
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, PRICE $175, if not TWICE as good as any PIANO in the country, particular for all time. WAREROOMS and "Agency," 467 Broome Street.

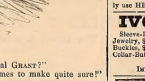
BALLOU'S DOLLAR MONTHLY,
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME CIRCLE.
The January Number of this FAVORITE MONTHLY MAGAZINE will issue early in December.
Now is the Time to Subscribe.
BALLOU'S MONTHLY is too well known to require much explanation of its merits; therefore we take this occasion to simply say that BALLOU for 1866 will far surpass any previous year in interest. Arrangements have been made with the best writers to furnish for each issue AN ENTIRELY ORIGINAL TABLE OF CONTENTS, unsurpassed by that of any other publication in the world. The engravings will be FRESH and ORIGINAL, forming a pleasing feature of this
GENUINE HOME MAGAZINE.
TERMS: $1 00 A YEAR; SIXTH COPIES, $5; TWELVE COPIES, $10 00. A COPY WILL BE SENT GRATIS ONE YEAR FOR EACH CLUB OF TWELVE.
SPECIMEN COPIES WILL BE SENT FREE, upon receipt of a two-cent stamp for return postage.
Address ELLIOTT, THOMES & TALBOT, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
459 Broadway (adj. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemen's Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

IRON RAILING.
"JENKINS'S PATENT COMPOSITE" IRON RAILING, formerly sold by Hutchinson & Wickersham, is now for sale by the manufacturer's agency. HUTCHINSON, DAVIES & CO., No. 461 Broome Street, New York.



MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

Agents Wanted
To canvass for our new, beautifully illustrated, and thrillingly interesting volume of army experiences, CAMP FIRE AND COTTON FIELD, by Thos. W. Knox, Herald Correspondent. Full of startling incidents, amusing anecdotes, ingenious stratagems, life in camp and bivouac; together with ample and reliable directions to those who design engaging in cotton culture at the South. Send for circular. BLELOCK & CO., 19 Beekman St., N. York.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore do the sick and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $1, $4, $6, and $6 a set. Ivory and Pearl Bell-Buckles, $1 50 to $6 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 671 Broadway.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented.
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to metal for holding "Butterflies," "Grapes," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt bottom.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by the superior ease and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
HARCH BROS., PEIRCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
BOWEN BROTHERS.....Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOOMAN & BRO.....Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HADDUP.....Cleveland, Ohio.
CAMMETT & CHALFANT.....Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CAPEN.....325 Broadway, New York.
W. A. GUTTERSON & CO.....Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BUSHMAN & CO.....Detroit, Michigan.

Stammering
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive Pamphlet, &c., address DR. BATES, 577 W. 23d St., N. Y.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous disease. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Gown" cour own make Bi Carb. Soda.
SODA ASH—Gamble's, J. Hutchison & Co.'s, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
CAUSTIC SODA—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchison & Co.'s, Muspratt Brothers', and Huntley's.
SAL SODA—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
SALERATUS—Pearson, Excelsior, and Double Refined. Made at our own works.
Perfectly pure Cream Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Zinc, Sulphate, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Nitrate Indigo, Terra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Sterling Cotton-Seed Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Soaps, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
WORKS "Grof Ameda." Established in 1847.
OFFICE—136 and 138 Cedar St., New York (west side).

MUSICAL BOXES.
See Advertisement on Page 706.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
TWO PRIZES AT ONCE.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL
JUST AWARDED BY THE
AMERICAN INSTITUTE
FOR SCORING
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
OVER ALL COMPETITION, TO
GEORGE STECK & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS,
113 AND 115 WALKER STREET, NEW YORK.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are for sale by trade in each place, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 75 Chambers Street, New York.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

BEAUTY—ADONIS, Golden, Floxen, and Silicon Curls produced by the use of Prof. DE BREUX'S FLUIDE LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of all there are into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, P. O. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

WHISKERS and MUSTACHIOS made to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTORATIVE CAMELLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the roots of the hair in a decided but natural manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London for many years, with flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction does not result in two months, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars sent free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, P. O. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free every where.
S. W. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

SCHILBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for Piles, Old Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, and Skin Diseases, &c. 92 Bowery, New York.

25 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with catalogue of terms to agents. Address
HAYWARD & CO.,
239 Broadway, New York.

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS.
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B. WAY. N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 467.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

GRAND RECEPTION OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY, NOVEMBER 20, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 774.]

COLUMBIA'S THANKSGIVING.

1865.

THANKSGIVING! our Thanksgiving! After years of toil and pain,
Years of watching o'er the living, and of mourning for the slain;
It has come just when the glorious sun has hid the tenpest cease,
And the voice of War is mute, before the coming in of Peace.

With outstretched hands Columbia stands giving her children greeting;
From East and West—from North and South she bids them to the meeting:
She stands upon no party line, she gives no partial call,
Beneath the flag of Liberty her welcome is for all.

Fill all the glasses to the brim! Bring up the Old Thirteen,
And let the other States stand round and fill the space between!
One hand about our starry flag for friendship's sake we'll hold,
And pledge anew with swelling hearts "The days of auld lang syne."

If, in the fury of the fight, both North and South did wrong,
If lust of power or gold have crushed the weak beneath the strong,
If sometimes we have both drawn back where we should have been true friends—
Whatever debt each owes to each let this day make amends!

Thanksgiving, our Thanksgiving! See the Old World's sages and sweet singers!
How they dread the sound of revelry Columbia's children make!
Let's fill our empty glasses fresh and give them clear cause for cheer!
For our land is all our own to-day, we crown no monarch here!

Then, with our hands still on our flag, toward Heaven uplifted our eyes,
We'll give the toast of another sort—let none but free men rise!—
"May Peace and Union, hand in hand, strike every cruel croaker dumb, Binding our hearts to freedom in the days that are to come!"

But hush! Who rises in our midst with grave and lordly brow?
Two servant of the only King to whom we ever would bow!
One reverent glance brasenward he sends, then motions us to stay,
And kneeling there beneath the flag he murmurs, "Lord, remember me!"

And not alone he seems to be, for gathering close around,
The souls of all the martyred dead seem with him—
Sharing his every thought,
Of spirit voices do we hear, but standing by his side,
We know they too are praying for the Lord for which they died.

And now the prayer is ended—softly let the curtain fall
On the White-robed Penitent Thanksgiving Day of all!
When Columbia's scattered children have gathered round one knee,
And the harvest of Peace has been offered to the Lord

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1865.

THE HUMANE AND INEVITABLE POLICY.

WE occasionally receive public and private suggestions from the late insurrection ary States that it is mean, as a letter before us says, "to heap abuse upon a prostrate foe." We agree heartily. It is the sign of a coward and a dastard. But it is neither cruel, nor base, nor insolent, nor unmanly for a nation which is still panting with a hard-won victory in a civil war to consider earnestly and profoundly how it can secure peace.

That conciliation is desirable and essential is surely no reason for disregarding facts. There seems to be a large body of people in the South who suppose that all is settled because they acknowledge themselves to have been overcome by force. If it be proposed to consider upon what terms revolted States should be reorganized—if testimony be elicited as to the actual feeling of the Southern population—if the country be warned not to believe every thing said by men who confess that they speak under moral duress—if we ask for calm discussions to be sure, and not to allow their impulence of prudence to warp their judgment, but to look everything and see what is the wisest course—we are denounced as mischief-makers, enemies of the Union, promoters of ill-feeling between the sections; and one South Carolina paper, in the modesty to expose our motives, adds that we are bitterly opposed to the reconstruction policy of President JOHNSON!

This kind of misrepresentation, and possibly misapprehension, is, of course, unavoidable. But we beg our Southern fellow-citizens to remember that it is for the very reason that they fought so long and so well, because they insist, as a correspondent says, that the war "was decided only by superior courage and superior numbers," because they still frankly declare their feelings unchanged, because all testimony shows that it was unchanged, and because we have learned by long years of sharp experience that they are skilful and audacious politicians, it is for such reasons that we obey the dictates of common sense and intend to do just what "the Confederacy" would have done if it had succeeded; namely, take every wise precaution against further trouble.

If the South heartily accepts the situation, as it declares, it will join us in its good work. If, for instance, it sincerely acquiesces in emancipation, it will take every step necessary to make the late slaves an intelligent, self-respecting, industrious, and respectable part of the community. If it does not—if, while it proposes to assent to an act of the United States Government, and even adopts the Amendment, it still does its best to continue the confusion of the country by a legislation which virtually repudiates the Amendment, it need not quarrel with us for looking at acts rather than words. Governor HOLDEN recently telegraphed to the President that if the colored troops were withdrawn the State of Mississippi would allow the freedmen to testify. The President replied that the troops would be withdrawn as soon peace and order could be maintained without them.

That is the whole case. The United States must by the necessity of the situation directly control the unorganized States until it is plain that they may be safely left to their own control. That can be determined only by observation, study of disposition, pledges, and laws. This is the policy which we have supported in President JOHNSON. This is the policy which the people have ratified at every election of the autumn. It is neither mean nor cruel. It is humane and inevitable.

A SATURDAY SERMON.

IF there could be a law restricting manual labor to six hours a day and securing constant and ample employment upon those terms, with increased wages to the laborer and higher profits to the capitalist, who would not favor it with all his heart? So if there could be a law by which disease could be abolished and the limit of the dog-days and the cold of mid-winter mollified, who would be so inhuman as to oppose it? Yet one of these laws is as practicable as the other. All the laws of nature are effective only so far as they re-enact the higher law of nature. When they are opposed to them society pays the penalty in misery. It is useless to legislate against the attraction of gravity or of cohesion, or to attempt to redistribute the oxygen and nitrogen of the atmosphere.

The laws of political economy are not less absolute than other laws. They are not determined by our wishes any more than by the actual condition of society. The rate of wages will always depend upon the demand for labor. Capital will always invest itself where it can count upon the highest return. These are axioms or indisputable truths. That capitalists are often unjust, and that labor is oppressed, is true; but that fact does not affect the great law of the relation of wages to the supply of labor and of capital to profits.

Therefore, in the legal regulation of the labor question, we must always bear in mind the inflexible laws which we do not make and which control those laws. The most fashionately Political Economy like all other sciences is capable of development. There are truths already discovered, and there are others which may yet be ascertained. For instance, the exact amount of manual labor measured by time, which may be most profitably performed by the average laborer under certain conditions of climate and other calculable circumstances, is a fair subject of investigation and experiment. But when it is determined, the result can not be disturbed. It must be accepted and treated as a truth.

Now labor is a commodity like cotton or corn. Its price must depend upon its supply. Where the supply is greatly in excess of the demand the price will be low. Where it is scarce it is inadequate the price will be high. Every man can understand that proposition. He is not at all disturbed by the statistics of every man not to be overworked, and to have time for education and recreation. Suppose there be a law of New York restricting by a law restricting the working-day to four hours, upon the principle that, if every man in the world did his fair share of the work of the world, four hours would be enough, what would be the consequence? The demand for labor in the city would cease, and, with its ceasing, wages would cease. And how could that result be avoided? Would you pass a law compelling employers to pay the same wages for four hours' work that is for eight hours' work? Certainly you would not; and even if you did, and enforced your laws, the inevitable consequence would be the destruction of capital. You may forcibly compel capital to remain in one spot, but no law can force him to use his sagacity to his own disadvantage.

The laborer then who wants a mere drudge, and shall the great mass of mankind who must always live by the work of their hands be hopelessly doomed to mental darkness, expansion, the delights of art, and of intelligent leisure, which we call mental culture? Surely not, unless the world is a total failure and the deepest human faith a lie. But there are no short cuts to happiness. The British laborer is to-day a better man, in a certain sense, and without any individual responsibility, defrauded of many of his birth-rights as a man. But our Parliament legislates him out of poverty and ignorance into comfort and intelligence? The British laborer drudges fourteen hours a day for a pittance. Why? Simply because the supply of labor is in that excess of the demand. Let the laborer see that in this country or elsewhere he can get higher wages for a shorter day, and he will come here. His result would be that wages would ultimately rise in England and fall in the United States.

Where, then, is the daybreak? In what direction lies hope? It lies, first, in the growing intelligence of mankind; and, second, in invention and science. As we come to see that the comfort and security of every member of society depends upon the general welfare selfishness will be checked, or, if you choose, refined, while increasing wealth will ease misery and facilitate labor. The cure for all social evils lies in the moral elevation of society in the increasing spirit of fraternity and co-operation. And that is as sure as it is slow.

CORNERERS CORNERED.

THE verdict in the case of CARE vs. KENDALL, which was tried ten days ago in the Superior Court in city, is of considerable importance to operators and brokers in stocks. The facts were simple, but not devoid of interest.

Some months ago the stock of a concern, called the Napoleon Oil Company, was placed upon the list of the Petroleum Stock Board. The Company, as was subsequently established, owned no land, and no oil-wells, but held a lease of certain property in Kentucky, upon which it was supposed that oil might be found. Under these circumstances the promoters of the concern, who desired, as all projectors do, all the loaves and to interest the public in their enterprise, found it impossible to tempt the greenest of the Wall Street greenhorns to invest money in their scheme. They did not, therefore, abandon it. By no means. If the public would not buy, perhaps they would sell. To plan people engaged in legitimate trade this experiment may seem gratuitous. But in Wall Street people are always ready to sell the thing which they have not got, if they think it is selling above its real value. And it was a chance that the operators in petroleum stocks who declined to buy Napoleon at any price might be induced to sell it. If, in the first place, its worthlessness were sufficiently vouched for; and if, secondly, the stock could be borrowed at a moderate rate. It seems that the managers of the Napoleon Company did their best to realize these two conditions. No secret was made of the extremely meanie show of assets. According to the last estimate the stock might be worth 5 cents a share. It was selling for $2. Half a dozen prominent petroleum brokers were anxious to lend it. No Wall Street speculator could resist such a temptation. Quite a number of persons sold the stock "short," and borrowed it of the confederates for delivery.

But the game did not stop here. By employing a multiplicity of brokers the promoters contrived to make the stock active; large sales and purchases were reported daily. It is well known now that these transactions were wholly fictitious, and that the brokers, i. e., the nominal buyer and seller being in collusion. The "washing" process was made the instrument of increasing the short interest. The stock was sold by one broker to sell 500 or 1000 shares, and these orders would be countermanded in a night and the stock sold to another broker in time; he would then be privately advised to take the sale for his own account; and the whole process would leave him the owner. Again, orders would be sent to a broker to buy 500 or 1000 shares; and these orders, like the orders to sell, would be hastily countermanded in a night and the stock intimated that "in consequence of recent news from the Company's property the order to buy was revoked." In this case, the confederate would sell stock to the broker in time, and generally had the effect of tempting the broker, if he were a man of a speculative turn of mind, to sell a few hundred shares short on his own account on the strength of the "recent news from the Company's property."

When, by all these various devices, the promoters or confederates of the Napoleon Oil Company had succeeded in inducing the public to sell a good many hundred or thousand shares of the stock for future delivery, the trap was sprung. The stock was "bid up" at the Board. No one had to sell but the confederates, who held aloof. From $2 it was bid up to $10 a share. Calls were then made upon the parties who had borrowed stock to "mark it up" to the market-price. Then it was "bid up" to $20, and further calls were made upon the borrowers of stock. Then it was "bid up" to $30, and further calls were made. There is no saying how high the stock might not have been carried, but for the fact that the Petroleum Board interfered, investigated the subject, and discovered that, so far as could be ascertained, the entire capital stock was still in the hands of the original owners, and that the purchases and sales which had been made at the Board were sham and fraudulent. On this the stock was struck from the list, one at least of the promoters was elbowed out of the Board, and contracts in Napoleon were outlawed.

Fortified by this decision the Plaintiffs in the case above mentioned—who had been borrowers of stock from the Defendants, and had "marked up" the price to $30 a share—sued for the money which they had paid out, under the ruling of Justice GARVIN recovered the entire amount claimed. The Judge charged that, if there had been but one sale by which the market-price of the stock had been advanced, the Plaintiffs must recover; the only held that the sale had been fraud, and gave the Plaintiffs a verdict.

It will at once be perceived that the principle involved in this case will go far toward covering every "Wall Street corner." In the famous case of Harlem there can be no question but that the stock was forced up far beyond its real value by manœuvres which, if they were not fraudulent, were certainly not straightforward in the mercantile sense of the term; and in the more recent case of Erie and Chicago similar operations caused the stock to advance from 60 to 256—a figure far beyond the intrinsic value of the property. Of course the Napoleon oil case was more gross than either of these. But still, under Justice GARVIN'S ruling, it would seem that the stock might be even cornered in Harlem or Prairie du Chien and paid thousands of dollars to the cornerers might recover their money by a suit at law.

It may, perhaps, be questioned whether this verdict will be sustained on appeal. Common sense tells us that no man can be compelled to pay his win of money on a disputed bet, and with it as that price, unless it be required for the uses of the commonwealth. If BROWN undertakes to settle JONES'S bonus account in his to ROBINSON without having previously bought them or secured the refusal of them, he can not compulsorily make JONES pay him the half a million for the house or $500 for the hat. He had no business to make a contract which he had not the means of fulfilling.

This case of "corners" will ere long become more generally understood than it is at present. No amount of punishment will deter the old members of the Stock Exchange and their associates from selling stocks short when they rise, and the prospect is that we shall see certain railway "corners" in the future. If the parties cornered can resort to the courts and recover the money they pay to the cornerers, very serious difficulties will arise.

A NEW FACT ABOUT THE "ALABAMA."

MR. GEORGE BEMIS, whose faithful and indefatigable study of international relations has been so serviceable in the debate upon British neutrality, and whose plain expositions of law and fact "Historicus" has vainly sought to answer, has just contributed another chapter in the history of the Alabama to the Boston Advertiser. Upon a careful investigation of the Parliamentary testimony Mr. BEMIS has discovered, and presents the official proof, that the Alabama sailed from British waters after the confession of a part of her crew to the British officers that they were in the way to join the gun-boat," and after an order from the Foreign office to detain the vessel had been issued.

On the 30th July, 1862, our active and faithful Consul at Liverpool, Mr. THOMAS H. DUDley, wrote to Lord RUSSELL that information, according to Earl RUSSELL'S statement, had been ordered on the 29th to detain the Alabama, that the steamer was ready, with her armament and the privateer out of the harbor, had returned to Liverpool, and was at that moment at the wharf taking on board men and coal. The Alabama, which was then cruising off Point Lynas.

On the same day Mr. MORGAN, the Surveyor of the port of Liverpool, wrote to the Collector that he had seen the Alabama when she had nothing suspicious on board—no guns or powder; but that there was "a considerable number of persons on deck who, from appearance, he thought that they were "a portion of the crew, and were going to join the gun-boat." Notwithstanding this information the Hercules was suffered to leave, duly kept its appointments with the Alabama, transferred the men while the Alabama lay in Bouzanda Bay, from time to four miles from the shore, and the privateer, having completed her enlistment within British territory, departed to prey upon the United States. When she was safely off the British official activity was prodigious; but every fresh ray of light upon the case has only made more manifest the culpable remissness of the authorities.

The truth is, that the British Government could not be fairly neutral. It had prejudged the case. It anticipated, without the least regret or doubt, the overthrow of the United States Government. It really sympathized with the best terms with the great new "nation" of MR. GLADSTONE'S and JEFFERSON DAVIS'S declaration, and therefore allowed the legitimate stock to check its activity. MR. BEMIS'S vari-one elucidations of this matter—and the documents in his last article are now for the first time published in this country—are essential to a thorough knowledge of the question. Certainly no nation ever went before the world with a fairer claim than we have made upon the British Government. If its conduct in the affair of the Alabama should become a precedent every power in the world could become a silent but most efficient belligerent in any war made upon another nation, and could effectually assert that she had done all her duty. The course of Great Britain annihilates international comity. It threatens not only the power of British name, but to imperil civilization, for international usage is a moral treaty for the peace of the world. Whatever power flagrantly disregards it is an offender against mankind as well as curiously blind to its own interest. Thus Great Britain is a maritime nation. She absolutely refuses redress for the losses caused by privateers equipped and manned in her ports. The United States may remain silent. She may not enforce the claim she urges. But what is Great Britain to gain by her refusal? She can not protect against her own precedent; and although the United States in any quarrel to which she was a neutral would doubtless remain in good faith a neutral, yet in every case she has studied the nature of her laws to the detriment of Great Britain that power by its own conduct has bound itself to silence.

OUR FRENCH-MEXICAN RELATIONS.

THE President's Message is anticipated with universal and profound interest, both for what it will say and for what it will not say in domestic affairs. It will inevitably have one most desirable result, for it will put an end to the uncertainty of the public mind as to the probable policy of the Government in the matter of reorganization, and it will speak plainly of our British and French relations.

Upon the latter point the signs of the times are very clear. The nomination of General LOGAN as Governor of the Republican department in Mexico, after his very plain talk at the Brooklyn Academy, the emphatic reply of General GRANT to Mr. BERNHAM at the Union League Club, and the significant publication of a dispatch of Mr. SEWARD to Mr. DAYTON now first made public, and, of course, by the Government—all show that the Administration is not favorable to the establishment of an Austrian emperor in Mexico by the arms of France.

But it is less clear that the Government expense to France of the Mexican occupation, the inability of MAXIMILIAN to keep the country in order, the plain refusal of the people by the popular will, the unpopularity of the enterprise at home, and the undisguised hostility to it in this country indicate that the Austrian tenure is weak, and that at any moment the imperial bubble may burst.

The Emperor of France will, we presume, be reminded by the traditional policy of the United States upon this continent, which is unrelenting hostility to the planting of monarchies along our borders by European arms. With the interior policy of the other American powers, when it is determined or debated, either in monarchies or on the republican side, we have no right of interference until our own safety is plainly involved. But the interference which we do not claim ourselves we shall certainly not tolerate in a European power which evidently coerces the will of the population. If, in the case of Mexico, it could be made clear to the sumpathies of MAXIMILIAN to the throne was truly the popular wish, we should have no reason for interference, however much we might regret the fact. But in that case the MEXICANS would be his body guard. They would be the first to resent the presence of foreign troops. And the fact that the MEXICANS who asked the Prince over enlisted upon foreign arms to support him upon his throne is sufficient proof that they do not represent the MEXICAN people, and that the Austrian empire in MEXICO is exactly what we called it at the time of its establishment—a French conquest. And the UNITED STATES are endangered by a French conquest of MEXICO.

It is indeed not doubtful that the original expedition was conceived in the most hostility to this Government. We have had no earlier enemy than LOUIS NAPOLEON. It was he who incessantly urged ENGLAND and SPAIN to interfere. It was he who proposed the armistice to which RUSSIA would not accede and LOUIS NAPOLEON's own unquestionable terms of terms of the armistice from the rebel agents in PARIS, who were in favor at the TUILERIES. His operations in MEXICO were made under the direful flank movement for the rebellion. They were leveled at the UNITED STATES, and the UNITED STATES are not likely to forget it.

There is no question, therefore, that the official tone of this Government will be very resolute. The French Emperor will be left in no doubt that we expect him to leave. But we do not believe that he will be peremptorily ordered to quit this country. We are wise, and we are quite ready to go to war again? We shall not unnecessarily impose a disagreeable dilemma upon any other power. A hint is as good as a kick, and produces the same result with much less friction.

THE PRESIDENT'S FIDELITY.

THOSE of the friends of the President who have feared that he would imperil the advantages won by the war by a fatal leniency, or still worse, by joining a party which has been bitterly rejected by the people of the country, have allowed their fears to obscure their perceptions. Whatever the President has said has been full of a determination that the rights of freedom which the war has conferred upon a certain class of the Southern population, and the class which is most friendly to the Government, shall be maintained. He expresses himself in his own way, but he never varies the strain.

Thus, to the Governor and Legislatures and Committees of the unorganized States he has constantly said: "Certain things are essential. The emancipation amendment and equality before the law are among them. Father I say nothing. My action will depend upon events." To MR. STRADER he said that, as a citizen of Tennessee, he was for the ballot of negro suffrage there under certain conditions. But he has said nothing better than what GENERAL FRANK CARPENTER in speech in Brooklyn. The General went to the White House to offer his resignation. The President said to him:

"People say sometimes I was born a fool, and I am not trust the negro as a freeman. I mean and desire to carry out the views of the great and good ABRAHAM LINCOLN, and I see that they require the negro to have their freedom. I may not believe with you in their ultimate enfranchisement, but I mean to secure a fair chance. (Cheers.) I wish the people of the North knew what I had to contend with. They have no conception and letters from all parts of the South of dreadful import. If they could but see me and read my letters, they would say that I am not give me their prayers.' This he said with tears in his eyes; and I asked him if the President's Proclamation was not irrevocable. He answered: 'I am ready in his hands—and he said to me, 'Go back; go to your work, and let justice done to both white and black. The President's Bureau will only cease to exist when the Southern States are ready to do justice to the negro, and by these freedmen.' (Applause.) And I came away from his presence with prayers of faith and hope in ANDREW JOHNSON more than I have ever had."

It is apparently forgotten that during the war ANDREW JOHNSON was at the front. He was with his own troops in the details of the struggle. He measured the spirit of rebellion. He knew the conduct of rebels, and he knew also that of Union men. He knew the value of their fidelity as every other Union soldier proved it. It was ANDREW JOHNSON who marked from the seat of war the course of SEWARD and the other conspirators in the Senate, and shook his finger in their faces, denouncing men who should lift what they called their arm against the life of the President's friend the chief of MOSES.

Such a man is not easily seduced. The blandishments of his enemies are not likely to dazzle a man who has looked behind the servile manner and the smiling mask. No man knows better than he that the party which sought to use him, and monopolize his influence, has no regard for him and support of his policy, in order to carry an election, and which disastrously failed, is a party which has no interests or forgives. It would no more adopt him as a candidate than it did TYLER or FILLMORE. The future of ANDREW JOHNSON is bound with that which he has done, and where the war party while the war lasted, and who intend, now that it is over, to plant peace upon justice, and exalt the Union by liberty.

CONSOLIDATION.

THE fear of consolidation or centralization which haunts some honest minds in this country curiously obscures their vision. They ignore the plain inscrutable way the city of Washington and the national Government may play the same part among us that Paris and Berlin do among the nations of Europe. The bugbear of "centralization" vexes their sleep. "What," they cry, "would you touch the sacred ark of State rights, the vital system which is the very palladium of our liberties?"

Here is a palpable confusion. The Government of the United States is the service of the United States. It is not a power independent of the people and hostile to it and maintaining its own standing army—it is the whole body of the people themselves; and no natural right, like that of personal liberty, for instance, is any where safe if it be not guaranteed by themselves. If, then, the people of the general government be sound, that the people ought to govern, because such a method is the surest pledge of popular liberty, and if the will be misdirected by confiding it to the whole people instead of a part of them?

If the national Government stood in the same relation to the States that a medieval feudal baron did to his dependents, or a prince to a circle of free cities, the fear of centralization or of some form of governmental tyranny would be more natural. But as it is, it is a misconception of the most necessary character and tendency of our system. The counties of a State might as well fear the centralizing power of the State as the State fear that of the Union. The people are the source of power in all of them.

As a matter of fact the local State governments have never been the security of our personal and political rights. All the assaults upon the principles of our institutions, all the great outrages upon personal and political rights have been the work of States. For the whole people is wiser and nobler than any portion of them. And hence the overpowering importance of the Emancipation Amendment. Its very object is to place the personal liberty of every American citizen beyond any local or subordinate power whatever, because such a responsibility can not be safely delegated. The abolition of a State's rights, but the people of the United States have rights, and the protection of a citizen of the United States can not be intrusted to any other authority than that of the Government of which he is a part.

FACES ON A BATTLE-FIELD.

THE celebrated report of Dr. Chenu on the mortality caused by war, contains some interesting information concerning the appearances presented by some who die a violent death on the field of battle. One surgeon says that, wandering over the battle-field of the Alma on the third day after the fight, he observed with astonishment a number of Russian corpses whose attitude and expression were entirely different from those of the rest. Some did certainly present an aspect which showed that they had suffered severely just previous to dissolution, but these were few in number compared with those who wore a calm and resigned expression, as though they had escaped away in the act of prayer. Others had a smile on their faces, and looked as if they were in the act of speaking, or had been surprised while they were silent. One, he was lying partly on his side, his knees were bent under him, his hands were clasped together, and resting upon his breast, his head thrown back, and he was apparently still praying—evidently he was in the act of doing so at the moment when he received the fatal spark. Another medical man relates that after the battle of Inkermann he found a number of the dead still very much the faces of many of them with a threatening expression. Some lay stretched on their backs as if friendly hands had prepared them for burial. Some were still resting on one knee, their hands grasping their muskets. In some instances the cartridge remained between the teeth, where the marker had bitten in the bend, and the other was uplifted as though he were of a blow, or speaking to Heaven. The faces of all were pale, but not livid, nor cut in marble. A wind swept across the battle-field it waved the hair, and gave the bodies such an appearance of life that a spectator could hardly help thinking they were about to rise to continue the fight.

Another surgeon, describing the appearance of the corpses on the field of Magenta, says that they furnish indubitable proof that man may cease to exist without suffering the least pain. Some remained on the head generally lay with their faces on the ground, their limbs retaining the position they were in at the instant they were struck, and most of these still held their rifles: showing that when a ball unexpectedly breaks the nervous centres the contraction of the muscles that there is not time for the hand to loose its hold of the weapon before death. Another peculiarity observed is that those who receive mortal wounds in the brain, was the suddenness with which they did not appear to suffer pain. A case in point: During the battle of Solferino a fifeman was wounded in the head by a ball which passed through the temple, and buried itself in the brain. His wound was dressed, and he was stretched on straw, with his head resting on his knapsack, like all the wounded around him. He retained the full use of his faculties, and chatted about his wound, almost with indifference, as he filled his pipe and lay smoking it. Two hours after, before he had finished it, death came upon him, and he was found lying in the same attitude, with the pipe still held between his teeth. He had never uttered a cry, or given any sign that he was suffering pain.

In most cases the ball entered the heart, nearly the same appearances were presented as in the cases of those who had been struck in the brain; death was what is called instantaneous, but it was not quite so swift as in the former case; there was generally time for a movement in the act of dying. There was a Zouave who had been struck full in the breast: he was lying on his rifle, the layount was fixed, and resting in such a way as to show that he was in the act of charging when struck. His head was uplifted, and his countenance still bore a threatening appearance, as if he had almost stumbled and fallen, and were in the act of rising again. Close by him lay another Zouave, mortally wounded in the abdomen, and upturned eyes, who had died in the act of praying. Another foot-soldier had fallen dead on the field of fighting. His features were closed, one arm was in the act of warding off a blow, and the other was drawn back in the act of striking.

On another battle-field, several French soldiers lay in a line, with their bayonets pointing in the direction of the foe they were advancing against, when a storm of grape mowed them down. On the left hand of this line, Dr. Chenu, several days after, came by dead. Some of them were remarkable for the noble expression of their faces, the extreme neatness of their dress, and the calmness of their persons. Most of them had fair hair, and their countenances bore the stamp of manly resignation.

The best opportunity of seeing the aspect of the masses who died on the field was when they lay stretched beside the trenches which were destined to be their final resting-place. So far were their features from presenting the livid appearance and the expression of despair which painters are in the habit of producing in pictures of battle-field, that a spectator could hardly help calling to their companions to rouse it little before covering them up. They were so like life.—All the Year Round.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON has replied to Governor HOLDEN's request that the United States soldiers be withdrawn from Mississippi to the following effect: "The Constitution of Mississippi, the President says, will be place wherever it is found in operation will assure to the United States all the rights to which it is entitled. It assures the people of Mississippi that there is no disposition on the part of the Government to violate its obligations. rity with them. Only a loyal compliance with the laws and Constitution and the inauguration of such measures as will insure full civil protection to the freedmen are required; and these, it is hoped, will in such measures prove beneficial to all concerned. There must be mutual confidence. the President adds, between the National Government and the people of the lately rebellious States, or all will be lost that the war and the work of reconstruction will be thrown away.

The Alabama Legislature met, November 22, at Montgomery. Governor PARSONS in his Message urges the immediate adoption of the Constitutional Amendment. He is opposed to the slave code which has been proposed, and recommends a civil rights act, the provisions of which will bear upon blacks and whites alike.

HON. C. J. FAULKNER has been elected unanimously Governor of Georgia.

RESULTS OF THE CITY ELECTIONS.

THE TAMMANY Convention met on November 21, and nominated Recorder JOHN T. HOFFMAN for Mayor and Richard CROKER for Corporation Counsel. The same day the MOZART Convention nominated John HECKER for Mayor and GEORGE OPDYKE for Corporation Counsel. The nomination for Mayor was first tendered to FERNANDO WOOD, who declined it. The Union Republican Convention have nominated the present Mayor, A. OAKEY HALL, for 1866. November 24 the Union Convention nominated Gen. SICKLES, who has been elected unanimously Governor of Georgia.

NEWS ITEMS.

President Johnson has received the order of Major-General Thomas, standing up the Episcopal churches of Alabama until such time as they could conform to the ritual prepar for the President of the United States.

The Indian Territory, Kansas, Nebraska, the command of the Western District has been assigned to General Sheridan. The General thinks he can do what has been assigned to the Department of Columbia, including Washington Territory, Oregon, and the Territories of Idaho—land-quarters at Fort Vancouver. Letters received from Victoria, Vancouver Island, dated the 6th ber 23, state that it was very sickly among the troops. General Steele commanding upwards of 1,000 men than half his officers, were down with the broken-bone fever.

Reports from Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri the rebel Choctaws and Chickasaws are busily recruiting for service.

Crime is fearfully on the increase in Nashville, Tennessee, robberies, assaults and murders of the most atrocious, and special measures have been taken to put a stop to these outrages.

On the night of November 23 a horrible murder was committed in the house of Mr. Fay Pyrl, No. 7 Jones, was Jose Garcia Olero, who not long since drew a prize of $15,000 in the Havana Lottery. He was slain for the money that he was murdered. He came to New York to purchase goods for a new business in Havana. Cuba. Gonzales and Pollner, the alleged murderers, have been arrested.

A New Bedford paper gives a list of forty-six arctic whaling vessels, with a total of 14,000 tons and 1,000 men. Of these, two barks of, destroyed by rebel pirates during the war, and the Nassau, which was burned in the Confederate States, and the Rockland, which was lost on the coast of Labrador. Of the remainder, twenty-three are now in the Arctic Ocean, and the remainder are expected to arrive in the spring. Three vessels are now fitting out for the Arctic, and two more will be added to the fleet in the spring.

Miss Caroline Waddell, of the Shenandoah, reached Liverpool, and returned to Earl Russell the money sent to her by the Secretary of the Navy.

"In obedience to orders I found myself in the Arctic and Okhotsk seas, far removed from the ordinary channels of communication with civilization, and under circumstances I was engaged in acts of war until the 28th of June, when I received from the commander of the Confederates and the total abstention of the Government under which I had so faithfully served for two years. I could not believe that the downfall of the Confederate cause on the 10th of August was the result of the action of the Government I had served, and therefore I continued to cruise in the Arctic ocean until after the 2d of November, when I was convinced by the testimony of several vessels that I met that the intelligence was true, and that I had been actually left alone in the Arctic ocean. I then took counsel with my officers, and finding that there was no country upon the statements of the officers, I diligently sought for a port where I could surrender the ship, with her guns, stores, and apparatus, to the United States Consul, and by her own Minister, or should deem proper."

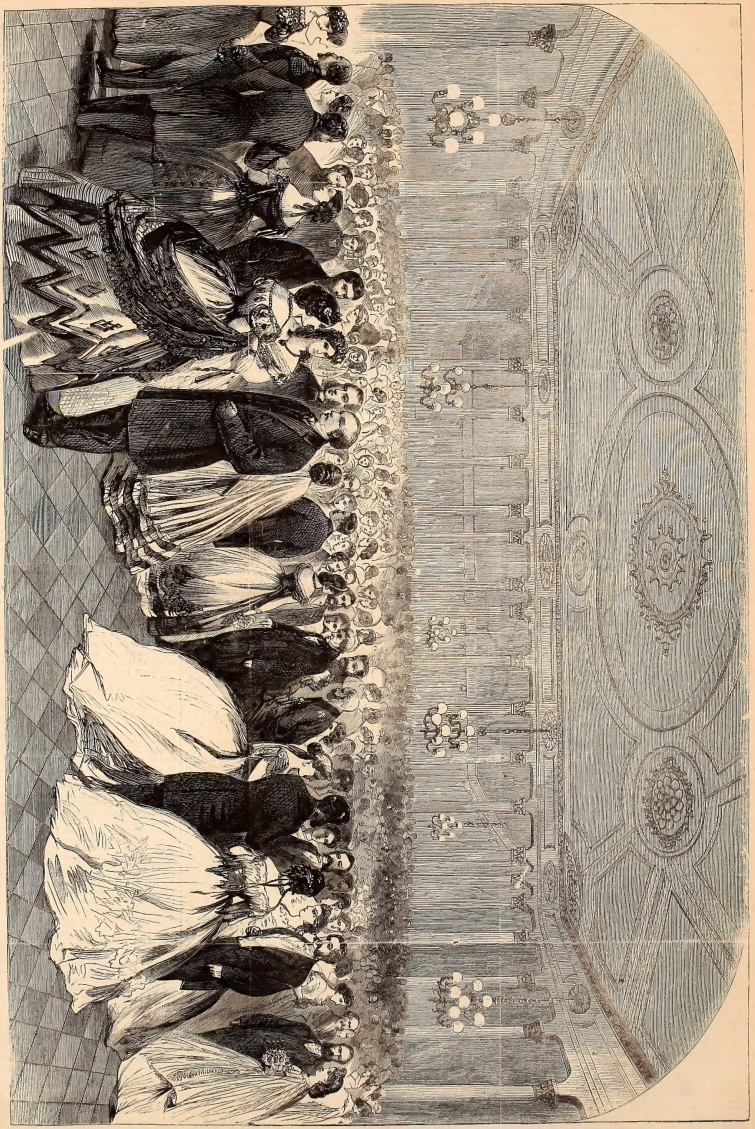
The officers and crew of the Shenandoah have been released unconditionally by the British Government.

The Fenian Brotherhood have an office in Nassau Street and Chili. It should be remembered that the greatest of Spain figure in the Fenian Brotherhood, and have been and apparently settled, when Admiral Persig arrived at Valparaiso, September 17, 1865, with the ultimatum of the Spanish Government, and received the Spanish demands, treasure, and the Spanish flag. The affair has not been concluded with. The demands were refused peremptorily by the Chilian Government and the Spanish fleet left for Callao before the Diplomatic Corps received their dismissal. The Corps sent to Callao and Lima, demanded their passports immediately after the departure of the fleet from Valparaiso. On the 7th, Congress received the declaration of war, and authorized the construction of a loan of twenty millions dollars. On the 27th more than two hundred of the foreign merchants of Valparaiso presented a memorial to Rear-Admiral Pareja in which they said Admiral Pareja's high-handed injustice had caused a loss to themselves of millions, and to the rights and duties of the representative of civilized nations. The memorial was signed by all the leading houses under the influence or command of the foreign consuls, in those cities, and by the British and Spanish consuls. The Spanish

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE cholera is flying out of Malta, where of 2378 persons attacked in the month of July, 1865, 1,600 died; and in January, 1866 have died. The last account reported only one case daily among the troops. The illness is now commanding great ravages in Jerusalem. The streets and bazars are deserted. The Governor and the other principal officers of the population taking flight in all directions. The Pashaw, the Governor, the Greek archbishop, and the foreign consular agents, with the exception of the French consul, have been the first to fly. A fatal example of cowardice which has done only remain at Jerusalem those inhabitants who are too poor to leave the city.

Miss Caroline Waddell, of the Shenandoah, reached Liverpool, and returned to Earl Russell the money sent to her by the Secretary of the Navy.



"In obedience to orders I found myself in the Arctic and Okhotsk seas, far removed from the ordinary channels of communication with civilization, and under circumstances I was engaged in acts of war until the 28th of June, when I received from the commander of the Confederates and the total abstention of the Government under which I had so faithfully served for two years. I could not believe that the downfall of the Confederate cause on the 10th of August was the result of the action of the Government I had served, and therefore I continued to cruise in the Arctic ocean until after the 2d of November, when I was convinced by the testimony of several vessels that I met that the intelligence was true, and that I had been actually left alone in the Arctic ocean. I then took counsel with my officers, and finding that there was no country upon the statements of the officers, I diligently sought for a port where I could surrender the ship, with her guns, stores, and apparatus, to the United States Consul, and by her own Minister, or should deem proper."

The officers and crew of the Shenandoah have been released unconditionally by the British Government.

The Fenian Brotherhood have an office in Nassau Street and Chili. It should be remembered that the greatest of Spain figure in the Fenian Brotherhood, and have been and apparently settled, when Admiral Persig arrived at Valparaiso, September 17, 1865, with the ultimatum of the Spanish Government, and received the Spanish demands, treasure, and the Spanish flag. The affair has not been concluded with. The demands were refused peremptorily by the Chilian Government and the Spanish fleet left for Callao before the Diplomatic Corps received their dismissal. The Corps sent to Callao and Lima, demanded their passports immediately after the departure of the fleet from Valparaiso. On the 7th, Congress received the declaration of war, and authorized the construction of a loan of twenty millions dollars. On the 27th more than two hundred of the foreign merchants of Valparaiso presented a memorial to Rear-Admiral Pareja in which they said Admiral Pareja's high-handed injustice had caused a loss to themselves of millions, and to the rights and duties of the representative of civilized nations. The memorial was signed by all the leading houses under the influence or command of the foreign consuls, in those cities, and by the British and Spanish consuls. The Spanish

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY F. GUTEKUNST, PHILADELPHIA.—[SEE PAGE 774.]

RECEPTION OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY—GUESTS IN THE REFRESHMENT-ROOM. [See Page 774.]

DAISY STARS.

Two little daisy stars shining on me,
Out of a letter from over the sea.

Shed their soft lustre o'er the dim track,
Into my childhood's haunts all the way back;

Into green meadows fringed white with the spray
Of blossoming thorn-bush decked with the May,

Where the dear daisies grew, spangling the sward,
With silver and gold for Peasant and Lord.

Beautiful vision of long-buried years;
I see it again through eyes dimmed with tears!

There's never a hillside, never a lawn,
Unspent with the daisy where I was born.

But searching in vain 'neath Western sky,
No glance of the crimson-tipt flower I spy.

Here are meadows and vales of emerald hue,
But never a daisy is wet with their dew.

The Prairie's broad beauty with blossom is gay;
But "Ah, those old daisies!" no pilgrim can say.

From ocean to ocean, from fir-tree to pain,
No daisy in spring-time claims its low pleasure.

While those I left England each season will sod
Looks lovingly up through the day's eye to God.

Thickly the blossoms gleam in the church-yard,
And the young grave with their light is starred.

Thus am I looking beyond the great sea,
Lighted by daisy stars shining on me.

Thus am I living my childhood again,
Linked to the Past by a frail daisy-chain.

Rhymes for her daisies, my friend asked of me;
So we change trifles across the wide sea.

RECEPTION OF GENERAL GRANT.

GENERAL GRANT is a man not more characteristic for his military ability than for his simplicity of character. There is nothing pretentious or assuming about him, and such a man in public and entertainments parade is distasteful. It was, therefore, on the part of General GRANT, a great favor to consent to a public reception in this city. Although there were some things to mar the occasion, it was one which will ever be remembered by all who were present. It was an event in which the mass of the people did not participate except by sympathy. Only the wealth, fashion, and, in high degree, the intelligence of the metropolis were represented. The place in which the reception was held—the Fifth Avenue Hotel—was the most expensive of New York gold-solidity.

Circulars were issued beforehand to one hundred and fifty gentlemen of the city, who each contributed $100 to defray the expenses of the reception. Invitations were issued for the hour of duration, and every preparation was made in view of imparting all possible splendor to the occasion.

Early on the evening of the 20th of December the guests began to congregate. Between rows of policemen they passed up the grand stairway, where chandeliers and dressing-rooms were in readiness. Soon the corridors were crammed, and the large and elegant parlors, which were richly adorned with flowers were distributed among the gentlemen, and flowers were given to the ladies. After making their arrangements to conform to the law which limited the crowd of twenty-five hundred people, the Committee amused themselves by making cordites hither and thither, and doing all in their power to obviate the the noisy promulgation of orders impossible to be obeyed. General FRANCIS C. BARLOW, the head man of the Committee, particularly distinguished himself. Now he stood on a chair, and with vigorous elocution called out, "Order!" and again he would rush fiercely against the crowd, crying aloud, "Make room here! why will you crowd so?" and then subsiding for a brief moment he would distribute partially broken bouquets to his friends near him.

The reception room was one of the parlors of the hotel, at the further side of which a dais had been placed, on which were several chairs. The only decoration in the room was a magnificent $500 (the cost was a prominent topic of conversation) arrangement of flowers, presented by Harper's Weekly. It was made of tuberoses, jasmines, forget-me-nots, camellias, and heliotropes, representing on either side an American flag, with the letters U. S. G.

In this room a favored few were gathered together in the enjoyment of comparative comfort, while the crowd in the corridors were being momentarily and still larger crowd outside was being drenched with rain.

At last it was whispered that the General had arrived. General WETMORE seemed to think so, at any rate. Opening the door he announced, "Gentlemen, I'll say," "Make room here; the General is coming!" and then holding because his orders were not obeyed. General GRANT entered then, accompanied by five ladies, and was escorted to the dais, followed immediately by the Committee, and more clamorously applauded. The General was accompanied by his daughter, Miss NELLIE GRANT, and his three boys. In the procession of ladies next to General GRANT there was the most ludicrous disorder. Says the Times reporter:

If one had gazed solely away from the hot and badge room, and had endured for an hour and a half the presence of thousands of the crowd, he would have found at the door of the reception-room, on the very threshold of his destiny, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury CHITTENDEN, turning to another, aimed by a third, and opposed by a fourth, who asked him in a voice of "WINDSOR," and "Mr. CHITTENDEN," repeated the committee man; the guest bows to the crowded lobby, and then, turning to the committee, begs the predicter he finds himself pushed before Mrs. GRANT, who smiles gayly at his awkwardness, and then at the sole rear remnant him. Before he fairly knows who he is, he is ushered in by the committee, he is passed on by a deputation of excited members of the committee, who mistake him for some one else, and then—for my dear fun, forgive up, pose on; this is no time for "after speeches." On he goes, and in the face, perplexed in the midst of a hundred to help, and every way unlucky.

In front of the flowers stood General GRANT, with the committee at his left, and the ladies with a large space just by and at his right were Mrs. GRANT and other ladies unnoticed; at his left were Mrs. GENERAL HOOKER, Mr. EDGAR ALLEN, General WOOD, JOHN VAN BUREN, Miss IDA, General CORBIN, and occasionally General GRANT and the members of the press. In front was the multitude shoulder, jostling, hot, tired, cross, and excited, badgered and bullied, and pushed and pulled by the infelicitous committeemen. As each couple approached a little man seized their names; he generally managed to get them wrong, and announced to the General all queer kinds of expressions, which were so amusing to the parties presented as they were unintelligible to the General, some of the people offered prayers for him as they passed, and others pledged him the opportunity of making good their promises in the future.

"I'm so glad to see you, General. God bless and preserve you always."

"General, this is my eldest son, WILLIAM MASON—WILLIAM, GENERAL GRANT—GENERAL, WILLIAM MASON. Say for him every night." (WILLIE attempts to do so, but is bored on every side by the committee-men.)

"I had a brother in the Twenty-ninth Connecticut. I wonder if you knew him?"

After the reception there was a select banquet given in honor of the General.

Notwithstanding the confusion which every where prevailed, we are able through the facilities kindly offered to our artists by HIRAM HITCHCOCK, Esq., to give our readers illustrations of the reception. But for Mr. HITCHCOCK'S courtesy the public would have been deprived of any faithful pictorial representation of the affair, for it was impossible to illustrate.

The portrait of Lieutenant-General GRANT, which we give our readers on page 772, is from a recent photograph by F. GUTEKUNST, Philadelphia—the best that has been produced.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNOR PERRY, OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

BENJAMIN F. PERRY, Provisional Governor of South Carolina, and lately elected to the United States Senate, was born in Greenville, in Pickens District, South Carolina, November 20, 1805. His father fought in the Revolutionary army. In 1826 he was admitted to the office of Judge EARLE. He was admitted to the bar in 1827.

Mr. PERRY was originally not an opponent of nullification in 1832. He was delegate to the Union Convention which met at Columbia in that year. He opposed secession, and published a majority of only sixty votes as a Union candidate for Congress. In 1836 he was elected to the State Legislature, and was re-elected in the following year. In 1844 he was elected to the State Senate. In 1850, when the disunion feeling again rose high, Mr. PERRY published a Union paper at Greenville, and persevered in its publication, though at great personal risk. A speech which he made in the Legislature was widely published throughout the North and South. Mr. PERRY'S speech and President JACKSON'S action against nullification led to a sitting-off secession in South Carolina, and when in 1851 an election was held for a State Convention to dissolve the Union nobody but the Union men voted, and the State did not secede.

Mr. PERRY has taken strong grounds in favor of the admission of the Southern representatives to Congress before the organization of that body. In this regard PRESIDENT JOHNSON coincides with him. Although we can not coincide with many of the opinions expressed by Mr. PERRY since his appointment as Provisional Governor of South Carolina, we are not now prepared to say that he has not acted as a regards the illegality of secession, and that whatever else he may be he is not a Democrat after the fashion of our Northern SEYMOURS and VALLANDIGHAMS.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXXIX.
O DELLA ETA DELL' ORO!

CAREWORN and intent, his lips pressed nervously together, his brow contracted, his eyes, dark, and apt, all traveling swiftly in concert, William Trefalden bent over his desk, working against time, against danger, against fate. All that day, long before, and long after, he had been sitting in the same place, laboring at the same task, and his work was now drawing to a close. Piles of letters, papers, memoranda, deeds, and account-books crowded the table. A waste-paper basket, full to overflowing, was placed at his left elbow. Within reach was a large cash-box to the right of his desk. Although it was early in the morning, the atmosphere, and the warm evening sunlight was pouring in through the open window, a fire burned in the grate. The Tregunnions, and all the house, and the charred tinder heap below indicated plainly enough for what purposes that fire had been kindled.

The sun sank lower and lower. The sullen roar of the great thoroughfare rose and fell, and never ceased. Now and then, however, voices up for a few moments and grown suddenly garrulous, chimed the quarters, struck the hours, and, having discharged that duty, dozed off again directly. Then the last glow faded from the housetops, and the evening lamps began to gleam even in City streets and stifling offices—came gently over all.

Still Mr. Trefalden worked on; his eager pen now flying over the page, now arrested at the close of a calculation, now hurrying with aside to several minutes at a time. Methodically, resolutely, rapidly, the lawyer pursued his task; and it was a task that required no ordinary application, demanding all the patience of which he was master, and taxing his memory to the uttermost. He had told his clerks that he was going out of town for six weeks, and was putting his papers in order before starting; but it was not so. He was going away, far away, never to set foot in that office again. He was turning his back upon his profession, upon England, upon his cousin Saxon, for ever and ever.

He had intended to do this weeks before. He had planned it when all was safe enough in advance. He was to have been in Madeira, perhaps many an ocean-league farther still, by this time; but fate had gone against him, and here, on the fifteenth of September, he was yet in London.

Mrs. Riviere was dead. They had believed her to be gaining strength at Sydenham, and she had seemed to be so much better that the very day was fixed for their journey to Liverpool, when, having committed some trifling imprudence, she caught a severe cold, fell dangerously ill, and, after lingering between life and death for weeks, died passively in her sleep, like a sick child. This event it was that delayed William Trefalden in his flight. He dreaded, he wanted, he burned to be gone—but in vain; for he loved Helen Riviere —loved her with all the depth and passion that were in him. To leave her, to go, could no more have tet her in her extremity of grief and apprehension than he could have saved her mother from the grave. So he waited and waited on, week after week, till Mrs. Riviere was one day laid to rest in a sheltered corner of Norwood Cemetery. By this time September had come, and he well knew that there was danger for him in every rising of the sun. He knew that Saxon might come back, that the storm might burst and overwhelm him at any moment. So he hurried on his final preparations with feverish haste, and thus, on the evening of the fifteenth, was winding up his accounts, ready to take flight on the morning.

Now he united a bundle of documents, and, having addressed it to their indorsements, consigned them, unread, to the waste-paper basket. Now he opened a packet of letters, which he immediately began to tear into countless fragments, thrust into the heart of the dull fire, and watched as they burned away. Deeds, copies of deeds, bonds, letters, returned checks, and miscellaneous papers of every description were thus disposed of in succession—some being consigned to the flames and some to the basket. At length, when table and safe were both thoroughly cleared, and the cash-box deposited into that, Mr. Trefalden lit his office-lamp, refreshed himself with a draught of cold water, and sat down once more to his task.

This time he had other and pleasanter work in hand.

He drew the cash-box toward him, plunged his hands into it with a sort of eager triumph, and ranged the contents before him in order. Those contents were of various kinds—paper, gold, and precious stones. Paper of various colors and sizes—bank-notes, checks, thick, semi-transparent, bluish, yellowish, and white; gold in rouleaux; and precious stones in tiny canvas bags, and in a small red tape. Money! Money —all money; or that which was equivalent to money!

For a moment William Trefalden leaned back in his chair and surveyed his treasure. It was a great fortune—a splendid fortune, a fortune realized off, as it were, at the sword's point. He had his own audacity, his own matchless skill to thank for the whole of it. There it lay, the half million of money!

Was he satisfied? Was his satisfaction troubled by no shadow of remorse? Not in the least. If some fresh lines had shown themselves of late about his mouth and eyes, it may be safely presumed that they were summoned there by no "compunctious visitings." If William Trefalden looked pale and haggard, it was because he felt trembling of the mine beneath his feet, and knew that his danger grew more imminent with the delay of every hour. If William Trefalden exhibited a regret, it was not because he had robbed his cousin of so much, but rather that he had not taken more.

Two millions of money! Pshaw! Why not three? Why not four? Two millions were barely his own rightful share of the Trefalden legacy. Had not Saxon inherited four million pounds sterling, and two-and-sixty thousand pounds, and in simple fairness should not he, William Trefalden, have received at least seventy-five hundred and eighty-eight thousand for himself?

There was one moment when he might have had it—one moment when, in a moment's pause of a word, he might have swept all, all, into his own hands! That moment was when Saxon gave him the key of the safe in the library of Castletowers. He remembered that his cousin had even proposed with his own lips to double the amount—a proposal which, Fool! overcautious, apprehensive fool that he had been to refuse it. He had shrunk from the deed at the moment he grasp at the whole of the golden prize. He had dreaded lest the young man should not keep the secret faithfully—lest suspicion might be excited among those through whose hands the money must pass; lest something should happen—some accident, some delay, should be done to bring about discovery. So, fearing to risk too much, he had left a certain chance slip through his fingers, and now, when he might have secured all, he had to be content with less than half.

Well, even so, had he not achieved the possession of two millions? As he thought thus, he looked round upon the wealth before his eyes, as he saw before him not mere gold and paper, but a dazzling vision of freedom, luxury, and love. His wife, his children, the Adelaide, and her—in a new world, among a new people—he saw himself surrounded by a gorgeous home; in lands, equipages, books, pictures, slaves; adored by the woman whom he loved, and surrounded by all that makes life beautiful. Nor did he omit from this picture the respect of his fellow-citizens or the affection of his dependents. The man meant to live honestly in that magnificent future; nay, would have preferred to win his own million of money by fair means, if he had been fine a taste, too keen a sense of what was agreeable, not to appreciate to its fullest extent the luxury of an unsullied conscience. He liked, he liked a clean conscience as he liked a clean shirt, because it was both comfortable and gentlemanly, and suited his notions of refinement. So he fully intended to sin no more, but to cultivate all manner of public and private virtues, and die at last in the odor of popularity.

This delicious dream indulged through his mind in less time than it occupies in the recital. Hopes, regrets, anticipations followed each other so swiftly that the smile with which his reverie began had scarcely faded from his lips when he again took up his pen and proceeded to note down in their order the various items of his wealth.

For months past he had been quietly and cautiously disposing of his money, not selling out the whole two millions at once, but taking it a little at a time, placing some here, some there, and transferring the greater portion of it under his assumed name of Forsyth to foreign securities.

One by one he now examined each packet of notes and shares, each rouleau of gold, each bag of precious stones; returned each to the cash-box; and entered a memorandum of its nature and value in the pages of his private accountbook. This account-book was a tiny clasp volume, fitted with a patent lock, and small enough to go into the waistcoat pocket. Had he lost it, the finder thereof would have profited little by its contents, for the whole was written in a cunning cipher of William Trefalden's own invention.

English bank-notes to the value of thousands and tens of thousands of pounds; notes of the Banque de France for tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of francs; American notes for tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars; Austrian notes, Russian notes, Belgian and Dutch notes, notes issued by many governments and cities of the highest denominations; certificates of government stock in all the chief capitals of Europe; shares in great Indian and European railways; in steam vessels; in companies, insurance companies, gas companies, docks, mines, and banks, in all parts of the known world—in India, in Egypt, in Rio Janeiro, in Ceylon, in Canada, in New Zealand, in the Hebrides, in Australia, in New Granada, and Java; rouleaux of English sovereigns, of Napoleons, of Frédrichs d'or; tiny bags of diamonds and rubies, such as are used for a pleasant gift in money, money, in a thousand channels, in a thousand directions; it lay, palpable to the eye and the touch; there it lay, and he entered it in his book, packed it away in his cash-box, and told it over to the uttermost farthing.

He alone knew the care, the anxious thought, the wearisome precautions that those investments had cost him. He alone knew how much it had been to choose the safe and avoid the doubtful; to be perpetually on the watch for one letter, then in that, without attracting undue attention in the money market; to transact with his own unaided hand all the business connected with those purchases, and yet so to transact it that not even his own clerks should suspect how he was employed.

However, it was all over now—literally all over, when, at half past nine o'clock in the evening, he at length turned the last page in the last rouleau, and noted down the last sum in his account-book.

Then he took a deed-box from the shelf above the door, locked the cash-box inside, and put the key in his pocket. That deed-box he inscribed in white letters with the name of a former client —a client long since dead, called "Mr. Forsyth."

Having done this he placed both in a large portmanteau, lined throughout with oil-cloth, and fitted with a curious and complicated padlock—a bag which he had made for this express purpose a fortnight or two before. Last of all, having strapped and locked the bag; locked the empty safe; stirred the ashes beneath the grate to see if any fragment of paper were left to ruminel; cast a farewell glance round the room in which so many hours of his life had been spent; put out the lamp, and put it by, that William Trefalden took up the precious carpet-bag, and left the office, as he believed, forever.

But it was not forever. It was not even for ten minutes; for, behold, when he had gone down the gloomy staircase and unbolted the house-door at the end of the passage opening upon the street, he found himself face to face with a tall young man in a shabby hat and a shabby coat, who, having rung the housekeeper's bell—a tall young man with a sunburnt face and the lamplight and barred the way, exclaiming:

"Not so fast, if you please, cousin William. I must trouble you to turn back again, if you please. I have something to say to you."

CHAPTER LXXX.
FACE TO FACE.

OLIMPIA'S fortitude broke down utterly when all was over. She neither sobbed, nor raved, nor gave expression to fear as to sorrow as were to do; but she seemed suddenly to loose her hold upon life and become lost in measureless despair. She neither spoke nor wept. Consigned nor thirsted; but remained, hour after hour, pale, motionless, and silent as the one for whom she mourned. From this apathy she was by-and-by roused to the sharp agony of a last, heartbreaking farewell. The wooden coffin in which corpse was removed at Civita Vecchia, and Lord Castletowers left them in order to attend the poor remains to their last resting-place in Rome; but this trial over, and her disguise exchanged for mourning robes befitting her sorrow and her sex, Miss Colonna relapsed into her former lethargy, and passively accepted such advice as Saxon where she had to offer. Under his care she went on to Nice, where, in accordance with Saxon's suggestion, Olimpia was to await the Count's return.

It is unnecessary to say that Saxon cast an chor in vain in the picturesque port of that pleasant town. In vain he called upon the English consul; in vain applied to the chief of police, to the postal authorities, to every official personage from whom he conceived it possible to procure the information of which he was in search. The name of Riviere had not been heard in the place.

He examined the visitors' list for the last three months, but found no record of their arrival. He inquired at the bank with the same success. At factory result. It was the slack season, too, at Nice—the season when visitors are few, and every stranger is known by name and sight—and yet no ladies answering in any way to his description had been seen there that summer.

Having spent the best part of a day in the prosecution of this hopeless quest, Saxon was forced at last to conclude that Mrs. and Miss Riviere were most assiduously unobservable in Nice, but that they had never been to Nice at all.

And now, he asked himself, what was to be done? To leave Miss Colonna among strangers was impossible. To remain with her at Nice was, for himself, equally impossible. Moreover, Olimpia cut the knot of this difficulty by announcing her desire to be taken at once to England. She had friends in London, dear and tried friends, who had labored with her in the Italian cause for many years, among whom she would now find tender sympathy. She expressed no wish to go to Castlemere, as she would surely have done a few months before; and Saxon, knowing the cause of her silence, dared not propose it to her.

So, having written a hasty line to Lord Castlemere, informing him of their change of plans, Saxon dispatched his yacht to Portsmouth, bade farewell to Monteneuil, who was now hastening back to south Italy, and conducted Miss Colonna back through France as fast as the railroads could take them. On the fifteenth of September, at four o'clock in the afternoon, they landed at Dover. At seven o'clock that same evening a young man had conducted the lady to the house of a friend at Chiswick, and, having dispatched a hasty note to the club, found himself standing face to face with William Trefalden.

"This is indeed a surprise, Saxon," said Mr. Trefalden, as they withdrew into the passage.

"I fear and regret to intrude upon you, Cousin William," replied the young man, sternly.

But the lawyer had already surveyed his position, and assumed his line of defense. For a moment, his heart failed within him, he betrayed no sign of confusion. Quick to think, prompt to act, knowing the trouble that lay before him, he answered promptly, he became at once master of the situation.

"Nay," he replied, quite easily and pleasantly, "how should it be other than agreeable to welcome you back after three months of silence? I scarcely expected, however, to see you quite so soon. Why did you not write to tell me you were coming?"

But to this question, Saxon, following his cousin up the staircase, made no reply.

Mr. Trefalden unlocked his office-door, lit his office-lamp, and led the way into his private room.

"And now, Saxon," said he, "sit down and tell me all about Norway."

But Saxon folded his arms, and remained standing.

"I have nothing to tell you about Norway," he replied. "I have not been to Norway."

"Not been to Norway? Where then have you been, my dear fellow?"

"To the far East."

He looked hard at his cousin's face as he said this; but Mr. Trefalden only raised his eyebrows the very least in the world, seated himself carelessly in his accustomed chair, and replied:

"A change of programme, indeed! What caused you to give up the North?"

"Chance. Perhaps fate."

The lawyer smiled.

"My dear Saxon," he said, "you have grown quite oracular in your style of conversation. But why do you not sit down?"

Saxon paused, and I am friends no longer," replied the young man; "because you have betrayed the trust I placed in you, and the friendship I gave you, because you have wronged me, lied to me, robbed me; because you are a felon, and I am an honest man!"

Mr. Trefalden turned livid with rage, and grasped the arm of his chair so fiercely that the veins swelled upon his hand, and the blood almost stood out white beneath the skin.

"Have you reflected, Saxon Trefalden," he said, in a deep, suppressed voice, "that this is such language as no one man can forgive from another?"

"Forgive!" echoed Saxon, indignantly. "Do you talk to me of forgiveness? Do you understand that I stand—all—all—alone—utterly ruined by all your baseness? I know that your Overland Company is a lie. I know there are neither directors nor shares, engineers nor works. I know that the whole scheme was simply a gigantic fraud devised by yourself for your own iniquitous ends!"

The lawyer bit his lips, and his eye glittered dangerously; but he kept his passion down, and replied, with forced calmness:

"You know, I presume, that the New Overland Route scheme was a failure. I could have told you that. I could also have told you that I have not the honor to be the contriver of that bubble. On the contrary, I am one of its victims."

Saxon looked at him with bitter incredulity; but he went on:

"As for your money, it is all safe—or nearly so. You have lost about sixteen thousand pounds by the transaction—I am sorry hundreds."

"If it were not that I can scarcely conceive of so much villainy as would be implied in the doubt," said Saxon, "I should say that I do not believe one word you tell me!"

"You will repent this," said Mr. Trefalden, grinding the words out slowly between his teeth.

"You will repent this from your very soul!"

Saxon put his hand to his brow, and pushed back his hair in an impatient, bewildered way.

"If I only knew what to believe!" he exclaimed, passionately.

Mr. Trefalden looked at his watch.

"I will not waste the goodness to come here to-morrow at twelve," he said, "I will send one of my clerks with you to the Bank of England, to satisfy you of the safety of your money. In the mean while, I do not see that any thing is gained by a conversation which, on both sides, at least, consists of mere vituperation. Have you any thing more to say to me?"

"Yes. Where are Mrs. and Miss Riviere?"

"Mrs. Riviere is dead. Miss Riviere has returned to Florence."

"Is she married?"

"I believed it when I told you so, but I was misinformed."

"One more question, if you please. What have you done with the twenty-five thousand pounds paid to Mr. Behrens's claim?"

The lawyer rose haughtily from his seat.

"What do you mean?" he said.

"Simply this—what have you done with the twenty-five thousand pounds placed in your hands by Lord Castlemere, for the purpose of the payment of Mr. Behrens's claim?"

"This, I presume, is meant for another insult?" said Mr. Trefalden, "but I refuse to reply to it."

"You had better reply to it," cried the young man, passionately. "For your own sake, I counsel you to reply to it. To-morrow will be too late."

The lawyer took another minute to himself, and flung it disdainfully upon the table.

"There is Mr. Behrens's card," he said. "Go yourself to his solicitors, and get another bill of mortgage has been paid off or not."

Saxon snatched up the card, and read: "Ottavius Behrens, Solicitor, 19, Bread Street, E.C."

"God forgive you if you are again deceiving me, William!" he said.

But Mr. Trefalden only pointed to the open door.

"Whatever more you may have to say to me," he replied, "it will best be written."

Saxon lingered for a moment on the threshold, still looking earnestly, almost imploringly, in the lawyer's face. Then, once more saying "God forgive you if you are deceiving me!" he turned away, and went slowly down the stairs.

CHAPTER LXXXI.

HOW MR. BECKWITCH PASSED THE SUMMER HOURS.

RETURNING to his chambers weary and anxious, Saxon found it particularly delightful to find his dear friend, Mr. Laurence Greatorex, in possession of a sofa, making himself thoroughly at home with a newspaper, a cup of coffee, and a cigarette. Somewhat over-demonstrative at the best of times, the banker's greetings were more than commonly oppressive on this occasion.

"I happened to drop into the club," he said, "and, hearing that you had left town, went home today, I wouldn't lose an hour in coming to see you, my dear boy—not an hour!"

And then he shook hands with Saxon for the twentieth time, and again protested that he was never so glad to see any one in his life—never, by Jove!

"But you don't look much the better for your Norwegian trip," he added.

"I suppose I am tired," replied Saxon, with a glance at the time-piece. "I have been travelling incessantly for many days."

"I hope you are not too tired to hear something that I have to tell you," said the banker.

"What is it about?"

"Well, it's about your precious cousin in Chancery Lane."

Saxon shook his head impatiently.

"Oh, Mr. Greatorex," he said, "that will wait to-morrow."

"I am not so sure that will. I am not sure, Trefalden, that you have come one day too soon."

"Has the Overland Route Company in a bubble," said Saxon, gloomily, "I know it already."

"You do?"

Saxon nodded.

"And knowing it?"

"Yes, some."

"All that Mr. Trefalden undertook to invest for you?"

"No; less than one hundredth part of it."

Only sixteen thousand pounds!" exclaimed the banker. "Why, a hundredth part of it!" repeated the banker. "By all the powers, then, you had invested him with something like two millions of money!"

"Just two millions."

"What has become of the remaining nineteen hundred and eighty-four thousand pounds?"

"It is re-invested, I presume, in Governments stock."

"You presume? What do you mean by saying you 'presume?' Don't you know so?"

Saxon shook himself, not an hour ago. He said he would send one of his clerks with me to-morrow to the Bank of England, that I might satisfy myself as to the safety of my money.

Mr. Greatorex got up and took three or four turns about the room, thinking profoundly.

Then he told me he was going shortly out of town?"

"No."

"And you took him by surprise, did you not?"

"Quite by surprise."

"Hump! Made an appointment with you for to-morrow?"

"Yes."

"Where?"

"At his office."

"What hour?"

"Twelve."

Mr. Greatorex struck the table sharply with his open hand.

"Then he won't keep it!" exclaimed he. "I'd stake my head that he won't keep it!"

Saxon, looking at him moodily upon his hands, was of the same opinion.

"Now, my dear Saxon, Trefalden," said the banker, excitedly, "I have had my suspicions of your cousin all along. You know that; but some things have come to my ears of late. Do you know where he lives?"

"No."

"I do. Do you know how he lives?"

"Not in the least."

"I do."

"How did you come by your knowledge?"

"By means of his own head clerk—a fat fellow with a waxy face and a face like an overboiled apple-pudding."

"I know the man—Mr. Beckwitch."

"Beckwitch. And now, if you will just listen to me for five minutes, I'll tell you the whole story from beginning to end."

Then Mr. Laurence Greatorex related all about his interview with the lawyer, telling how William Trefalden had declined and changed colors at the latter mention of the new Company; how speciously he had explained away Saxon's statement with regard to investment; and how, at the close of the interview, the banker found that he had not really advanced one step toward the accomplishment of his friends. About a week or ten days, however, after this interview, Mr. Abel Beckwitch presented himself in Lombard Street, and, with a little deal of caution and circumlocution, gave Laurence Greatorex to understand that he would be willing to open negotiations with him. Then came a string of strange disclosures. It appeared that, at the same time, the banker learned the mystery of the lawyer's private life. A long course of secret and profuse expenditure, of debts, of pleasure, of reckless self-indulgence, was laid open to his astonished eyes. The history of the fair but frail Madame Duverray, the actress and the protégée of Elton Hope, down to the annual sum-total of Mr. Trefalden's wine-bill and the sale of his French cognac, was unfolded with a degree of method and precision eminently characteristic of Mr. Beckwitch's penchant. He had learned every thing which it was possible for any man not actually residing within the walls of Trefalden House to know. He had followed Madame's elegant little brougham to the parks, listened to her singing in the stillness of the summer evenings, and watched his employer in and out of the house over and over again. He had ingratiated himself with the Rousquon people; he had made an acquaintance with the tax-collector; he had even achieved a ponderous, respectable, church-going reputation with his employer's housekeeper, who was a serious person, with an account at the savingsbank. In short, when Mr. Beckwitch sought Mr. Laurence Greatorex in Lombard Street, he knew quite enough to be a valuable coadjutor, and Mr. Laurence Greatorex was only too glad to grasp at the proffered alliance.

"And now, my dear boy," said the banker, "the most important fact of all is just this—William Trefalden is preparing to bolt. For the last two days he has been posting up his accounts, clearing out old papers, and the like. He tells the people in Chancery Lane that he is going out of town for a week or two; but I don't think he'll believe it, and no more do I. He has his eye upon the Stars and Stripes as sure as your name is Saxon Trefalden!"

CHAPTER LXXXII.

THE BLIND MAN RECOVERS SIGHT.

OBITUARY.

DYER.—On Monday last, Mrs. Dyer's, in this city, of a jet black, Mr. James Grizzlebury's whitener, in the prime of his youth and age. Deeply regretted by all who knew them.

Also, on the same day, at No. 792 Broadway, Miss M'Elmsley's merino shawl, aged thirteen years.

Sent out on a visit and stole here

To whiger to us "Then went dear."

Why is a drowned donkey like a horse-doctor?—Because it is a wet-ass-dentist.

Sheridan was walking in the suburbs of London one day arm in arm with a bosom companion. A passer-by recognized him, and whispered to his friend, "That is Sheridan, is that Sheridan." "That fellow has murdered his own language," observed Sheridan. "Oh, no," replied Sheridan, "he has only knocked an eye out of it!"

A man coming home one night rather late, a little more than usual one even, was suddenly startled, beyond a glow of water and drunk it. In doing so he swallowed a small ball of silk that lay in the bottom of the tumbler, the end of the thread catching in his teeth. Feeling something in his mouth, and not knowing what it was, he began to pull at the end, and the ball ball unwinding, he soon had seventy yards of thread in his hand, and still no end, apparently. Terrified, he shouted at the top of his voice, "Will! will! I say, wife, come here! I am a-unravelling."

It is easy to say "Know thyself," but who is to introduce you? Persons may live through life without making the advantageous acquaintance in question.

SAINT PATRICK AND KILPATRICK.

Saint Patrick had a neat estate,
His very pride and joy;
They called it Jersey, but of late
'Twas Camden and Amboy.

Saint Patrick's title's the sword's secure;
From out his sainted bed
He dumpt the bribes, fix'd and sure,
Or changed them with his nod.

His hand wand that laid the snakes
Republican did slay;
In every race he swept the stakes
As in a sure play.

But soon another Patrick came,
With sweeping arm and will;
He drops the "saint" and mends the name
With dirt, properly still.

The hand rod once reptile spared—
The Copperhead lived still—
But changed into the fate declared
Her Patrick should be Kill.

Hibernia Patrick gave a Kilshed,
And Killed outright is Ronyon;
The Irish speak a queer tongue indeed
And Wakned by the Union.

A WICKED SORT.—When is a fisherman like a candle? When he's a-bait-in'.

"Sire, one word," said a soldier one day to Frederick the Great, when presenting to him a request for the bravest of lieutenants. "All in my way," answered the King. "I will have you hanged." "Sire," replied the soldier. The King shortly, whistled, and signed.

Two Dutchmen once got into a dispute about the English language, each one contending that he could comprehend the law. They made a bet at length, and appointed a judge to decide between them, and accordingly they went. "Well, Cheny," said the judge, "what is it you tomorrow?" "I shall think it vash," said John. Wasn't that going to a quandary?

"I knew a young lady who said she didn't like turtle soup. Affectionately rebuking her, I was answered, pleasingly, that it made her sick. I went to the taste, but that she thought it so cruel and wicked to kill turtle-doves."

A miller had his neighbor arrested under the charge of stealing two bushels of corn. The neighbor was with difficulty enabled to clear himself of the charge, and the miller asked him how he could manage to do it. "Well," says he, "I have had you arrested for stealing my wheat; I can't prove it, and so you must go free."

EXCUSE FOR CITY CLERKS.—A run on a bank.

THE ADVENTURER'S PARADOX.—Puffin Island.

At a school examination a young tyro in declension, when asked to parse by the teacher that he must genticize into according to rule, in connection with which sentence "The cruel Mohawk in fiery toil," lifted the toil of his coat to a horizontal position, causing a roar of laughter.

FIG AND LETTUCE.—What's the difference between Typhus and small-pox? Just enough.—The one is good enough for the sage's cave and the other for the sausage.

TO PROVE DOWN BY THE WORLD.—Try the new Hotels: they will give you a bill.

WHITE BAIT.—Widows caps.

The newest thing out is "plompers" for hollow cheeked damsels. The plumper is made of porcelain, pear-shaped in form, the large end being placed in the mouth the other. They fit on the inside of the cheeks, giving a round, plump appearance to hollow cheeks and sunken eyes.

A thrifty wife wonders why the men can't do something useful. Mighn't they as well amuse themselves in mending the roads as in smoking cigars?

There is said to be something consoling for every ill in this life. For instance, if a man is bald-headed his wife can't pull his hair.

A lady, very fond of her husband, notwithstanding his ugliness of person, once said to Rogers the poet, "What do you think of my husband's looks?" "Why, he would look very well for a baboon on purpose to please me." "The dear little man," replied Rogers, "he is a perfect Adonis."

If a shoemaker, in approaching his end, cannot cold and gives up his soul, what will become of his sole if he can not finish his last?

LITERARY NOTE.—People have been greatly puzzled to understand the changes in the name of the firm of Longman, Brown, Green & Longman. It is explained—Mr. Brown has a Green. But now the mystery is explained—there is a Brown in the firm.

A little girl being sent to a store to purchase some dye-stuff, and forgetting the name of the article, said to the storekeeper:

"John, what do folks dye with?"

"Why, some dye with rheumatism," replied John.

"Well, I believe that's the name. I want to have three cents' worth."

The following is said to be the private recipe of a Washington editor—but we don't believe it: "Take one pint of whiskey, and one pint of new-milked cow; then add one gill of whiskey, and one gill of whiskey, and one gill of whiskey. Fill a large bowl with water, and sprinkle the powder in the bottom of your pash. Take a tea-spoonful of powder into two spoonfuls of water; pour out the whole into a jug with whiskey, and add to the above. Flavor with whiskey to your taste. A dose: three 'fingers' every half hour."

HOW TO LEARN TO LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.—Play at Croquet.

Robbers come just like rain—they fall on the just and the unjust.

NEW NAME FOR A STEALER OF WATCHES.—Procrastination.

A satchmed judge had a very sleepy wife. On one occasion she received a friend of your coach. She came with a single candle. "Be pleased, my dear," said his honor to her, "to have a second candle, that we may see where the other stands."

Milk makes a man fat, but whisky makes him lean.

"It is never too late to mend," as the old lady said when she took up with 12 yrs. to darn her husband's stockings.

Why is the letter R the embodiment of every American party's political principle? It is the end of war and the commencement of re-action.

"Do you like cod's balls, Mr. Wiggin?" Mr. Wiggin, hesitatingly: "I really don't know, Miss; I don't remember attending one."

"Pa, how many legs has a dog?" "A dog has no legs, my child." "Why, pa, the paper says a dog has four."

It was told Lord Chesterfield that a lady, who was a great favorite of his, was married to a gamester, on whose life lordship said "that cards and fortune made the best matches."

PEACE & UNITY.

FRUITS OF AN ABUNDANT SEASON.

NATIONAL TH

DECEMBE

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLA

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God, during the year wh try from the fearful scourge of civil war, and to permit us a great enlargement of CIVIL LIBERTY; and

Whereas our Heavenly Father has also, during the year, g ilence, and famine, while OUR GRANARIES ARE FULL OF THE F

Whereas righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a r

Now, therefore, I, ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the Uni they do set apart and observe the First Thursday of Dece the Universe for THESE DELIVERANCES AND BLESSINGS.

And I do further recommend that on that occasion the His infinite goodness, and with one heart and one mind li and holiness.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my Hand, and at the City of Washington this twenty-eighth day of dred and sixty-five, and of the independence of the U

By the President,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

ANKSGIVING,

L V. 1865.

WASHINGTON, October 28, 1865.

MATION.

ch is now coming to an end, to relieve our beloved coun-to secure the blessings of PEACE, UNITY, and HARMONY, with aciously averted from us the calamities of foreign war, pest-

UITS OF AN ABUNDANT SEASON; and
proach to any people;
ed States, do hereby recommend to the people thereof that ober as a day of National Thanksgiving to the Creator of whole people make confession of our national sins against plore the Divine guidance in the ways of national virtue caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done

October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hunnited States the ninetieth.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

PLENTY OF WORK.

THANKSGIVING HYMN.

Tune weary night of war is gone,
Its shadows grim and ghastly flee;
The day her robes of Peace puts on,
And chants her matins, Lord, to Thee!

The morning's song that soars to heaven,
We join, O God! with voice and heart;
At Thy command the chains are riven,
Thou smilest and our woes depart.

When the red tide of blood ran high,
And Treason like a demon raged,
Our banners drooped not in the sky,
For Thy great cause our battle waged.

Before its front, where fiery hail
Fell thick and fast, our Ark we bore,
Twas Freedom's death it we should fail,
And Life, or Death, the choice no more.

In the blue heaven of Peace we see,
Serenely shining, orbed and great,
The quenchless Star of Liberty,
That pours its beams on every State.

For broken chains that fettered men,
For flags once torn that flutter free,
For bonds of Union forged again,
Twixt States at Freedom's altar wed:

And more than all, for holier Peace
Than that the Sword can hope to win,
Our grateful songs shall never cease,
Till Praise in Death's sad silence sleeps.

FARMER BELL'S THANKSGIVING.

A cozy, comfortable home was Farmer Bell's. Originally it was one of those old-fashioned, square houses which are pretty much all kitchen," and that kitchen as delightful a spot to pass a winter evening in as you would find in a day's ride. But he prospered Farmer Bell had built a modern front to his house, so that he now had a parlor, where there was a stuffy carpet, some surmounted by two vases filled with dried grasses, and a center-table covered with books and daguerreotypes, and a fashionable stove to make the couple on the floor. On great occasions, such as Thanksgiving Day and Christmas, the parlor was ventilated and opened; and throughout this goodly land there was no man who observed Thanksgiving Day more religiously than did Farmer Bell. Every day had never passed over his head without its every item of customary observance—from the going to "meeting" in the morning, down to the evening sermonizing which no holiday turkey is a perfect success. And it was even so with Farmer Bell's cheerful host that Thanksgiving Day had never passed over his head in gloom. But this year the great man looked forward to the coming of that day with painful feelings, for it promised to be accompanied with little comfort. Farmer Bell had been unfortunate.

In the spring Mr. Bell, looking forward to his son Leonard's contemplated marriage with Miss Emily Sutton, the prettiest girl within ten miles of large, had resolved to risk his all in a great speculation that would, inside of a year net him a good thousand dollars of clean profit, and that was to be Leonard's marriage portion. So Farmer Bell commenced buying up lean cattle. Owing to the stray demand for them, they were brought up from almost all over the country, and prices were very high. At that time there was a good prospect of an abundance, and when fat prices held on as they were he would make an excellent profit. He mortgaged his farm to Squire Grips, a land and old fool in the village, who refused to take a mortgage for a full year on the house, but agreed to transfer it to the cattle in the field if the money was not ready to pay; and Farmer Bell was not the kind of man to trouble himself about such a matter. Though I said his resources were fabulous, it was no act of his own to order of enterprise which flourishes in Wall Street; it was simply that if prices held on as they were he would make an excellent profit. He mortgaged his farm to Squire Grips, and also sold out to the duty of being good to the poor, and leading to the Lord, and go on just like a printed book.

Well, one morning, when I was right in the middle of my talking, I heard one of those little tinklings at the bell that always seemed to say I hain't no business to ring, and I hope to goodness they won't hear. I knew it was one of my pets with a stomach like a Dutch oven and empty, of course, so I didn't stir. But of course she heard it and called me. Then I had to go, and I suppose I did speak a little piece of my mind all to myself as I went upstairs, and Aunt Sally she must have heard me, and was just coming enough to follow me to the door for fear I would drive one of her saints away. When I opened the door there was a little girl about eight years old, and, though it was freezing weather, she hadn't a mite of a shawl or cloak on, and looked so pitiful and that, if I hadn't been so hopping mad, I shouldn't have been so ugly as I was, for I just burst right out; and says I to her, 'you just clear right off from that door and go along home; and if you haven't got any home, you can go to the poor-house, for you can't come here.' Then when I heard Aunt Sally's voice. "Jerusha, how can you speak so to this poor lamb?" "Well, mum," says I, "she can come back in two or three hours after the bread is baked, for there isn't a morsel of any thing to eat in this house; that last ragged saint that was here stole or ate every bit of it." But Aunt Sally didn't take the slightest notice. She actually pushed past me, and had taken the child's hand and carried her right into the parlor. I had got half-way down stairs again when I heard her call me, and I went back into the parlor. "Jerusha," says she to me, "did you ever?" "Yes," says I, "often;" but says she, "did you ever see?"

"Yes," says I, "and never expect to see any thing else." All the time the little thing was standing near the hearth and looking wistfully, first at Aunt Sally and then at me; and as Aunt Sally was about to speak to me again the little girl took off her hat and kneeled down and buried her head in the folds of Aunt Sally's bombazine dress and burst out crying. Aunt Sally she looked a little more pleased, and I didn't know what on earth to do; but Aunt Sally she took her in her great motherly embrace, and put her hand gently on the little thing's head, and never said a word to her at first, until by-and-by the poor little thing seemed to stop all of a sudden and looked up and tried to smile, and made such an effort that, says I to myself, she's got the real stuff, and I'll let a cookey-cat be drawn in pill if I don't behave civil too when she gets to be an old woman.

Aunt Sally looked at the child and seemed to be dead beat. "Jerusha," said she, "did you ever see such a likeness?"

"Whose likeness?" said I.

"Oh! I forgot," said Aunt Sally; "but she is wonderfully like—"

"Well," said I, "I think she is."

"Who?" said Aunt Sally, rather startled.

"Why," said I, "she's wonderfully like one of those little things in the cathedral that I see sitting up in the clouds. No, I don't mean sitting up, cause, goodness knows, they can't do that, for they haven't got any thing but heads and wings."

"Yes; she is a perfect little cherubim," said Aunt Sally; "and I wonder I never saw it myself when I felt just like saying dito to that: for, come to take a good look at her, she was just prettier than any wax-work we have in a Noah's ark, with all the biggest and the bluest eyes, and the most splendid head of curls golden hair that curled down all over her shoulders—well, I never did see any thing half so pretty in a picture."

Aunt Sally was just as cunning as the serpent in the Scripture that was as harmless as a dove; for she never said one word to the child till she saw she was able to speak without bursting out crying. Then she said to her, says she, "What is your name, dear?"

The little thing looked steadily up at her, and says she, "My name is Etta, mum."

"Etta!" says Aunt Sally.

"Yes," says the child; "they called me Etta, but my real name is Juliet."

When she said that, Aunt Sally just caught her right up in her arms and kissed her, and almost burst right out a-crying herself. "Etta—Juliet," says she, "what a coincidence!"

"Yes," said I, "it is indeed;" though what a coincidence was I had no more idea than the Pope.

"Jerusha," says Aunt Sally, "you can go down to your work."

"Yes, mum," says I; "but perhaps the poor little critter is hungry;" for I had no idea of going down till I found out all about her.

"No," says Aunt Sally, "I don't want any thing. I want to see my father and mother. Oh, what has become of them! I shall never see them any more!" And she had her head down in Aunt Sally's lap, and though she didn't make a bit of noise I could see that she was crying all to pieces. So I thinks I to myself, that's the first beggar I ever saw that was troubled with a father; but that child ain't no beggar, and what she is to turn out in the end cut; and though I ain't a bit curious, and never ask no questions of my body, yet I did feel kinder anxious to know all about it myself, and my body with half an eye could see she was something out of the common way.

Well, it turned out that the little girl's father was an artist, and she had lived in Italy all her life, and could speak Italian as well as any organ-grinder. It gave me quite a turn when I found out she was a foreigner, cause I never could abide them, as it showed in me that every one of them that came to this country was a beggar, and goodness knows how they all got here unless they walk. But she wasn't exactly a foreigner neither, cause her father and mother were both Americans, and they lived in Italy for it was cheaper. So the little girl told the story, how her father and mother and herself all went on board of a ship where they made Laughing, and sailed on and on, and became to come back to America. And after they got into the Atlantic Ocean there came on the dreadfullest storm that ever blew since Noah, and the ship fell overboard, and the Captain cut away the masts, and after every body was nearly drowned drinking salt-water the ship got up, and then they found it was leaking dreadfully, and 'twan't no use pumping, for the water poured in faster than they could pump it out. So they had to get into the little boats, and the most dreadful part of it was that the little girl's father put her into one of the boats, and was going to put her mother in, but the boat-hooks were pushed away from the ship with every body that was in it; and then her father and mother got into another boat, and away they went, was, and they had to wait to lower the water and provisions in, and the other boat drifted away clean out of sight. The little girl never guess she'd see them again, and she never saw her father or mother afterward.

I declare I don't know whether Aunt Sally or I cried the most when that pretty little critter was telling her story, and when she got done she just screamed after her mother, and begged the sailors to take her back, and how she could hear her mother calling her to come. And they picked up the next day—I mean the boat that had the little girl in it, and by an American brig that was homeward-bound—and after a long voyage they arrived in New York, and the Captain, who was a clever old critter, he brought the little girl as well as he could to where his wife lived, and where he lived when he was to home, and he had been to home about a week, and thought that he'd better inquire a bit that very city once they couldn't find out any thing about the child's relatives, for you see it turned out afterward that he was a stranger there, and the little girl didn't know any thing about her father's folks, and the old sea-captain had just made up his mind to adopt the little girl as one of his own little thing and was an orphan, and by a special providence the Captain's wife was childless.

But the child couldn't forget her father and mother, and was always thinkin' of them, and was always crying for them, and would wake up in the night and say she saw them on the water in a little boat, and they looked so sad, and her mother was always crying, and she was a little angel, and she went to go to them, and would go on dreadfully, and at last the whole family thought that she would die all this afterward, when we came to know that old sea-wife brought her home.

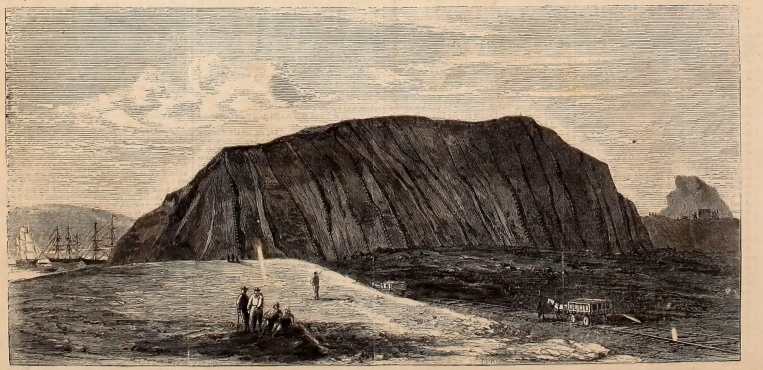
That very same night the first thing ran out of the house, because they told her he pa and ma had gone to heaven, and she wouldn't see them any more in this world, and that they had gone across the city and had rung at folk's doors, and they had turned her away, and it was when she had got fairly bothered out of her wits, and was crying in the street that I suppose she couldn't think of any thing but wanting her head down in Aunt Sally's lap, and crying from weariness and heart sickness and sorrow.

"Now," says Aunt Sally, says she, "Jerusha, I've made up my mind to keep this child, and I'll do it." "Dew tell," says I. "I've made up my mind, for I feel as if I had a right to." "Why, Aunt Sally," says I, "you've got no right at all, for the child is my relation of yours?" "I don't know about that," says she. "Why how on earth can that be?" says I, for I was that flabbergasted and convinced that it was old Hic's grandchild. "Why," says I, "actually, Aunt Sally, you don't say so! I never was married, how was it possible that little girl should be his grand-daughter?" If ever I was struck all of a heap it was then, and I thought the old Hic had been married after all, and his wife had died and left a little girl a year old, and that little girl had grown up and was the prettiest little critter I ever saw that ever lived, and that old Hic and Aunt Sally thought there was nothing in the world good enough for her, and they just petted and spoiled her to death, and she fell in love with a young man who was a regular out-and-outer, and they married, and him, because old Hic wanted her to marry a rich man when she didn't like, and Aunt Sally didn't even know his name, and old Hic disowned her and wouldn't allow her name to be spoken, and Aunt Sally never could learn any thing about her, which showed how artful she was, for she was at first cross and savage, and then changed all of a sudden—because she was a woman—and was absent old critter that I don't believe he knew his own name all the time, and served him right, too.

Now there was a regular knock-down argument to the door, and Sally brought in the little girl that I didn't say any thing about, because I forgot it had any thing to do with the matter. "Jerusha," says she, "license in our street—No. 42—a real pretty fellow. He was six feet two inches high, and had dark curly whiskers. Well, I believe he was a sort of a beau of mine—least I guess so; for Hiram Doolittle used to call there, and he was a regular fright. Well, very well; for he pulled Hiram up more than twenty times for stopping on the crossing, and at last he asked Hiram's leave to call, and Hiram let him, and 42 pitched into him, and they both got a good whipping. Now if there was a part of his beat that 42 paid attention to it was Sally's door-step, and I'm sure as you live, when I opened the door when that little critter came to it, she looked so like a picture of the street with his brazen face. He grinned when he saw me, and winked one of his eyes, just to intimidate me, I s'pose, for he was a real impudifyer, for I was mortal afraid he would give me some of his impudence before Aunt Sally. But I mustn't have been so awful bad looking, for the policeman was just cute enough to bamboozle old Satan himself. Says he, says he, 'I've got a letter for you,' says his face, "Jerusha," says he. "What?" says I. "I've been watching that child, and it's my opinion she's lost. Now I'm off my beat, and I'm off duty, and I'm going to see after her." And with that he

THE CHINCHA (OR GUANO) ISLANDS—DUMPING THE GUANO INTO SHUTES.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D. C.]

SPAIN AND CHILI.



ONE civil war furnished to the Emperor NAPOLEON an opportunity to invade the republic of Mexico, and to establish, temporarily at least, an imperial form of government. Spain also, deeming that a similar opportunity had come to her, invaded San Domingo, and on the slightest pretext seized the Chincha Islands, belonging to Peru. What the result has been of the first of these attempts on the part of Spain is well known to our readers. Unable to sustain the burden of expense and the sacrifice of blood involved in the conquest of San Domingo, Spain withdrew her armies, and accepted humiliation in preference to bankruptcy and ruin.

In regard to the difficulty with Peru the result was different. Peru was compelled to pay an indemnity of four millions of dollars to defray the expenses of the cowardly attempt made by the Spanish Government. Stung with humiliation by the ill-success of her attempts to embroil the South American republics in war, Spain then turned her threatening face upon Chili, because the latter had refused coal to Admiral Pareo's marauding fleet, and had offered moral encouragement to Peru.

This has led to a rupture between Spain and Chili. The latter refusing to be intimidated by the Spanish demand for indemnity, the harbor of Valparaiso has been blockaded by Admiral PAREJA. What may grow out of this threatening movement is as yet uncertain. The recent speech delivered at Panama by Señor MACKENNA, Special Envoy from Chili to the United States, is of great importance. With much eloquence this gentleman dwelt upon the disinterested sympathy which Chili had always given to her sister republics, and for which she is now attacked. He said that the time was not far off when a stronger power would not be allowed to make war unjustly upon a weaker. Chili had already won half her victory by taking her position so bravely on the side of right. There remained only the physical conflict to be decided—a conflict which she would gladly avoid if she could do so with honor. He said that Spain was fighting for the possession of the Chincha Islands, and that all the republics of America should unite to avert the disgrace, and to avenge the insult which was intended for them all alike. The Isthmus of Panama should close all her ports against the Spanish fleet, and if they should thus become involved in the war, they would not fight alone. "There will fight by your side every man of courage who has come to reside in this city, the centre of the universe from its furthest extremities; there will fight with you the English, the German, the Scandina-

LOADING LIGHTERS WITH GUANO FROM SHUTES.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER.]

GREAT GUANO HEAP OF TWO MILLION TONS, ON THE CHINCHA ISLANDS.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER.]

BENJAMIN F. PERRY, PROVISIONAL GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SEE PAGE 774.]

MARCUS L. WARD, GOVERNOR ELECT OF NEW JERSEY.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAMSON, BROOKLYN.]

vian, the Italian—and, above all, there will fight with us those sons of North America whom I perceive here in a considerable number; for all those men adore in their hearts that sublime motto, the Isthmus of gold, as eternal as the Isthmus of land on which we tread, and which must always unite the two continents of America in one single group, in one single family, in one single home—the doctrine of Monroe—America for the Americans.'

It is a matter of some interest that at such a crisis General KILPATRICK has been sent as a Minister to Chili. The appointment becomes more suggestive, followed as it has been by the appointment of General LOGAN as Minister to the republic of Mexico. Not one of the least important matters which will come up for the consideration of the next Congress will be the attitude which this country is to take toward Mexico and the South American republics.

We give on page 780 some illustrations relating to the shipment of guano on the Chincha Islands. The property of these islands is estimated at a thousand millions of dollars. Guano, or Huano, is the Peruvian name for manure, and is applied to the solid excrement of carnivorous sea-birds, which is found in immense quantity on the coasts of South America and in other tropical countries, as in South Africa. This substance, though brought to Europe for the first time in 1840, has been employed by the Peruvians ever since the time of the Incas. The chief sources of supply are the Chincha Islands, off the coast of Lower Peru. So ignorant were the Governments of Peru and Bolivia of the value of this compost that they sold to private parties a nine years' monopoly of its shipment for the trifling sum of $40,000. This contract was broken in two years, when the value of guano was more fully appreciated. But the commerce in this article soon returned to the hands of monopolists, where it has since remained. The photographs from which our illustrations on page 780 are taken form a portion of the "Rays of Sunlight"—a collection of interesting photographs by Mr. A. GARDNER, recently published by Messrs. PHILP & SOLOMONS, Washington.

GOVERNOR WARD, OF NEW JERSEY.

WE give our readers on this page a portrait of MARCUS L. WARD, recently elected Governor of New Jersey. Mr. WARD is not in any sense a politician, having never participated prominently in purely political affairs. He has at the same time always maintained decided convictions, acting uniformly with the party opposed to the Democracy. In 1860 he was a delegate to the Chicago Convention which nominated Mr. LINCOLN, and in 1864 was again a Senatorial delegate to the Baltimore Convention. His relations with Mr. LINCOLN were always of the most cordial and intimate character.

When the war broke out Mr. WARD at once took a decided stand, and from that time down to the present has given his time, resources, and energies to the promotion of the national cause. He was the first man in the country to devise and organize a system for collecting and forwarding the pay of soldiers in the field to their families at home; and during the war over two millions of dollars were thus sent to the homes of New Jersey, New York, and New England troops. All this was done without the loss of a single dollar, and without a dime's expense to those benefited—Mr. WARD giving his whole time and attention to the work, employing clerks and paying, out of his own pockets, all the cost incurred in the great charity—abandoning his personal business to labor in behalf of the nation's defenders. This fact added vastly to his popularity, the soldiers of the State voting almost unanimously in his favor. As exhibiting the estimation in which he is held at home, it may be stated that he carried his ward, city, and county by larger majorities than were ever before cast for any candidate—his city (Newark), which has heretofore been largely Democratic, giving him 1760 majority, and his county a majority of 2505.

Mr. WARD has always been a liberal patron of the arts, and is a gentleman of culture and admitted breadth and solidity of character.

NO ACCOMMODATIONS!

SOUTHERN CONGRESSMAN ELECT TO CLERK OF THE HOUSE. "I should like very much to secure my Old Seat. Governor Perry says I'm entitled to it."

CLERK OF THE HOUSE. "I am very sorry, Sir, but we can not accommodate you. All the Old Seats were broken up, and are now being thoroughly Reconstructed."

THE OLD RIP OF THE "SHENANDOAH."

CAPTAIN WADDELL (AS RIP VAN WINKLE). "Law! Mr. Pilot, you don't say so! The war in America over these Eight Months? Dear! dear! who'd ever a' thought it!"

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even of the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"Stand by the Flag!"

REGULAR

Union Nominations.

For Mayor.

MARSHALL O. ROBERTS.

For Corporation Counsel,

MURRAY HOFFMAN.

For Sheriff,

WM. R. STEWART,

Chairman.

SINCLAIR TOUSEY,

HENRY H. HUELAT,

Secretaries.

UNITED STATES STEEL PEN WORKS,
FACTORY, CAMDEN, N. J.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO,
STEEL PEN MANUFACTURERS,
WAREHOUSE { 400 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.
{ 60 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

SAMPLES AND PRICES OF APPLICATION. LOTS MADE TO ORDER OF ANY PATTERN OR STAMP REQUIRED.

Caution! These PENS are of genuine American manufacture, and equal in finish, elasticity, and temper to any produced in Europe. They are, therefore, sure to gain the confidence of the American public. They consists of our signature to sufficient security against foreign imitation.

For sale at retail by all stationers throughout the country.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.

Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing from one to thirty-six different tunes, and costing from $5.50 to $250 00. The most complete assortment ever offered for sale in New York. Inspection for the public invited, and pleasant companions for the invalid.

A. J. PAILLARD & CO., Importers,
21 Maiden Lane (up stairs), New York. Musical Boxes repaired.

Allcock's Porous Plasters.

Sold by the Yard or a Single Plaster.

Medicinal Qualities of the Porous Plasters.

The Porous Plasters possess the soothing, warming, and sustaining qualities of the combined plasters of the diapositeries, but from the manifold increase of porous support, they find it in these excellent plasters. An elasticity, who has great experience of their effects in local rheumatism, in chronic pleurodynt, and dispersal sarcoma and other pains, and in affections of the kidneys, &c., attributes all their sedative, stimulative, and pain-relieving properties to their curative qualities. Be aware they restore the healthy electric condition (equilibrium) of the part, and, that being restored, pain and morbid action cease. So, the demand at the great number of beneficial indications produced by one of these plasters. He affirms that headache is cured by one worn just below the breast bone; that one placed over the navel will cure hysterics, as well as dysentery and affections of the bowels.

Sold by all dealers in medicine. Principal agency
BRANDRETH HOUSE, NEW YORK.

CURL YOUR HAIR.

A sample of Prof. Robb's Curlgine will be sent free to any address. The Curlgine will curl the straightest hair the first application, into soft, luxuriant, beautiful curls. Address, HENRY ROBB, P.O. BOX 5176, Cincinnati, Ohio.

$1,000,000 Worth
OF
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at O E DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be sold for less than one dollar when one is received.

$50 Gold Hunting-Case Watches . . . . each $150 00
$50 Silver Watches . . . . each 20 00 to 35 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases . . . " 6 00 to 4 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. To be retailed by agents at one dollar each. If ONE DOLLAR each is to be sent for $1 thirty for $5.

Agents wanted, to whom an offer unequaled for cash and profit is now made. Address A. H. HOWEN & CO.,
99 BROADWAY, ROOM 7. P. O. Box 6170, New York.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
[ESTABLISHED 1840.
100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	50 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	25 00
1000 Diamond Rings	150 00 to 15 00
500 Diamond Pins	100 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Chains, Engraved Gold Bracelets	50 00 to 10 00
1000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	50 00 to 10 00
3000 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
8000 Magic Pencil and Seal Lockets	4 00 to 8 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 5 00
1000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	3 00 to 7 00
8000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Gold Thimbles, Spectacles, &c.	2 00 to 14 00
5000 Desert and Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	5 00 to 9 00
3000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
2000 Silver Goblets	6 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one may have, are first put into envelopes, sealed and mixed; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 6 for $1; 13 for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to ladies and gents to act as such. Full cash to send for circular, which gives special terms, full list, and description.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF INITIATION.

AMERICAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to denote ether time with greater accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver watches. Sold at the price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every one. It is simplicity itself. Divested of key, it winds itself. Neat, cheap, and warranted perfectly accurate; can never get out of order. No one should be without it. Each one with white enameled dial in gold or silver gilt, 50 cts. Sent by mail, postage paid to any part of the world. Caution! This invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all parties are hereby cautioned not buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under no matter what DENOMINATION OR NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

POSTHUMOUS HONORS.

Whose memory so honored as that of the celebrated Peruvian Physician and philanthropist, DR. CHARLES HOOFLAND? Throughout the whole extent of Europe, especially Germany, his name has ever been a watch-word in household word, and there are but few in our own continent who have not experienced the benefits of his skill as a medical and scientific statesman. His principal work, the Enchiridion Medicum, or Complete Guide to Health, Longevity, Nervous Debility, and all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach, and Blood, and gives the utmost satisfaction in all cases. Hoofland's German Bitters are entirely vegetable, containing no alcohol, medicinal, containing no alcohol. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, Agent, New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine a new invention, or inclose fifty cents and we will send a sample and free by mail for life, that retails easily for $6. R. L. WOLCOTT & CO., 160 Nassau street, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations. By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician. Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for Fifteen Cents. Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

Pile Remedy.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Croup, Bronchitis, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! Just received, an entire opening in each collection of new, scarce second-hand English books. Bulletins of the same sent free. Libraries and Literary Property bought for cash at ROMAN & CO.'S, Basement, 79 Nassau Street.

AGENTS WANTED.

FOR MACKENZIE'S GREAT TEN THOUSAND FAMILY RECEIPT BOOK. 82 pages. Price only 25 cents. $4. Liberal discount to Agents. Send for Circulars to MACKENZIE & CO., Publishers,
Nos. 37 and 39 South 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

YOUR LOTION HAS CURED ME OF TETTER in the hands, on my hands of thirty years' standing," writes Joseph Kirtley, Esq., of Danville, Indiana, who has been using Perry's Moss Rose Purifying Lotion. For sale by Druggists generally.
HENRY R. PERRY & CO., Sole Agents, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by them, from 5000 KNAPSACKS to a SINGLE KEPI.
No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

THE SALEM LEG.

All who desire an artificial Leg, unrivaled for comfort, durability, appearance, lightness, and cheapness, are referred to THE SALEM LEG COMPANY, 99 Hook Street, Boston, Mass., for circulars containing full information concerning this original, ingenious, thoroughly tested, and durable leg. Soldiers entitled to Government aid receive this leg without charge. Manufacturing facilities have been lately increased, all applicants are supplied with promptness.

$3 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasps—for 50 cents. Sent by mail, postage paid, for $1 00.
$5 ALBUMS—very handsome—three brass bound—two clasps—for $1 50. Sent by mail, postage paid, for $2 00.
Articles, presents, Yankee notions of all kinds. Everybody send for catalogues. W. G. WILSON, 543 Broadway, N.Y.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

MAGNIFICENT SALE.

GOLD and SILVER WATCHES, JEWELRY, &c., &c.

THE ONE DOLLAR PLAN.

The ENTIRE STOCK of our Gold and Silver Watch Manufactory, two immense Jewelry Establishments, our Musical Instrument and Sewing Machine Warehouse, our Silver Plating Warehouse, our Gold Pen and Pencil Maker, to be disposed of with dispatch,

WITHOUT REGARD TO COST.

The goods are of fashionable styles and most excellent workmanship, and are sacrificed in this manner to relieve the proprietors from embarrassment occasioned by a disastrous fire.

The result is prominently stated, also, that they are mostly of AMERICAN MANUFACTURE, and therefore greatly superior to the goods imported from Europe, which pay all the immense duties on importation. To facilitate the sale, will be charged for any article on our list, and the sum the purchaser must pay will be known when he has the article. This plan accords with the method recently become so popular in the disposing of large stocks of Jewelry and similar productions.

THE ONE DOLLAR PLAN

THE PLAN IS SIMPLE.

The name of each article offered for sale—as Gold Hunting Watch, Gold Oval Bead Bracelet, Gold Breast-Pin, Gold Ring, Gold Diamond Ring, Silver-plated Cake Basket, &c.—is printed on a card not inclosed in a sealed envelope, but folded in such a manner as to show it clearly and well mixed; then, as the cards occur in the fold of the sheet, they are numbered in the order of the sale. The cards are then separated, and each put by itself into a letter to the customer, who will see once what he can get for his ONE DOLLAR. It is by this fold with the fortune far enough forward the money according to the directions on the envelopes, and we secure the order. If the article desired should be omitted in the purchase—as, for example, a set of pearl ear-drops and finger-ring to a young miss who could not wear them, and had no one to give them to—we will send any article in the whole list from the department of the catalogue, of equal price, which may be preferred.

Answers by letters will be promptly attended to, for us. A large compensation will be paid. Send for terms, &c., including circulars, catalogues, and card by mail, and State plainly, and address

GOLDSWORTHY BROTHERS,
163 Broadway, New York.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. W. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of the Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Phthisic, Pain in the Side, Chest, and Diseases of the Lungs.

$10,000 DOLLARS REWARD is offered for a better recipe. It is composed entirely of Vegetable Balsams, and can be safely taken by the most delicate child.

DR. W. HALL'S BALSAM has over FIFTY YEARS sickles at the rest of the disease at once. The most distressing cough is frequently relieved by a single dose, and broken up in a few hours' time. The afflicted do not have to take bottle after bottle in vain. It is the only remedy where the most skilful physicians in this country and in Europe have been employed, and have failed to relieve. Such is a fact. Cases which they have pronounced incurable, and consumption, as the last resort, have been cured by the patients without a single ray to relieve them in their gloom. Have been cured by DR. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and the "VICTIMS OF CONSUMPTION" are now as vigorous and strong as the most robust among us. And these cures are not isolated ones; they are numerous, and can be pointed out in every section in this State where the wonderful remedy has been tested. Full directions will be found in the pamphlets, which are given away.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
Chatham, Conn.

To Book Agents and Canvassers,

AND PERSONS DESIRING LUCRATIVE EMPLOYMENT.

THE PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF

THE WAR FOR THE UNION.

By MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS.

Sold by Subscription only.

This immensely popular work is now issued and ready for delivery. It will have the illustrations from Harper's stamped that work as a great success, and the daily increasing demand for it makes the confident belief that history of the War can be more popular than this from the pen of the well-known Mrs. Stephens is unfounded.

Persons desiring districts to canvass must apply at once.
Address HENRY M. HITCHCOCK,
14 Chambers Street, New York.

FANCY FOWLS.

Bantams, Fancy Pigeons, Rabbits, Rose and Cayuga Ducks, Turkeys, Dorkings, Houdans, Black Spanish, Golden and Silver Sebright Bantams, Game Fowls from recent importations. 19 varieties. Swan, Brahma, Cochin, Aylesbury, Rouen

Holiday Presents.

GREAT SALE OF
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

800	Musical Boxes, each	$30 to $150
150	" with Bells and Accordeons	100 " 500
500	Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	20 " 50
500	" Cake Baskets	10 " 30
1000	" Ice Pitchers	20 " 50
500	" Cups with Saucers	5 " 20
1000	" Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 50
2000	" Castors	10 " 25
1000	" Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
1000	Dozen Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen	10 " 20
10,000	" Table Spoons and forks, per dozen	20 " 40
250	Grand Gold Hunting-Case Watches	50 " 150
1,000	Fine Gold and Enamelled Hunting-Case Watches	35 " 70
500	Gentlemen's Gold Hunting-Case Silver Watches	30 " 60
250	Diamond Rings	50 " 100
5,000	Gold Pens and Pencil Cases	4 " 8
3,000	Gold Oval Bead Bracelets	4 " 8
5,000	Jet and Gold Bracelets	4 " 8
5,000	Chatelaine Chains and Guard Chains	5 " 20
5,000	Miniature and Gold Brooches	4 " 8
5,000	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
5,000	Mosaic, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
2,500	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 8
4,000	California Diamond Breast-Pins	2 " 4
5,000	Gold Fine Jewelled Watch Keys	3 " 6
4,000	Gold and Vest Ribbon Slides	2 " 4
5,000	Gold Lockets, Engraved, Plain, Studs, Sleeve Buttons, &c.	4 " 8
5,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	4 " 6
10,000	Miniature Lockets	2 " 4
4,000	" Magic Spring	10 " 20
5,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	2 " 4
5,000	Plain Gold Rings	4 " 10
5,000	Chased Gold Rings	4 " 10
10,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
5,000	California Nugget Rings	5 " 10
1,750	Satin Ladies' Jewelry—Set and Gold	5 " 15
6,000	Satin Ladies' Jewelry—Lockets, Opal and other stones	4 " 10
20,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	5 " 15
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Second-Holders	10 " 25
5,000	Ladies' Gold and Jet Bracelets	5 " 10
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Rolls	5 " 10

ARRANGED AS FOLLOWS: Manufacturers' Row, Broadway, New York, announces that all of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, threatening to bring out the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry, originally intended for the Indian Market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT A SACRIFICE!

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., settle up a large for the principal Importers, and have received upon a Great Gift Appointment, to be divided according to the following regulation:

Certificates of the various articles are put into envelopes indiscriminately, sealed up, and, upon payment of One Dollar, are delivered to the purchaser, and not by mail, thus showing that no choice is given. On receipt of the Dollar, he sees for what article he has buyed, and then it is at his option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cent for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the articles, paying postage, and doing the business, 75 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

What the "Press" say of us.

The Lafayette (Indiana) Daily Courier, March 18, 1865, says: A better evidence, more varied or extensive assortment of jewelry can not be found on the Continent than Arrandale & Co. are now offering. Arrandale & Co. occupy a high position in commercial circles as men entirely above the common ordinary of trade. Their statements may be implicitly relied upon, both as to the character of their goods and the manner of disposal. Parties especially, in all parts of the country, are realizing handsome profits as agents, and if any of our readers desire to interest themselves in the enterprise, they may do so with perfect confidence.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, etc., by Messrs. Arrandale & Co., at No. 167 Broadway. They have an assortment of goods, on sale at One Dollar, and no other price. No one dollar catch. The list of articles they offer is very full, and the sale will continue for a certain period, and no certificates will be sold. Those required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article, which will certainly be worth more than the amount, and may be $50 or $100. An excellent mode this of investing a dollar.—Saturday Evening Post, N. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be a very very worthy of public confidence.—The Scottish Guardian, Edinburgh, June 11, 1864.

By Messrs. Arrandale and Co.'s arrangement the advantages must on the one side of the customer, for he has every thing to gain and nothing comparatively to lose. We know what he will get for his dollar beforehand, and he must not mind if he is not satisfied.—Bell's Life, London, Aug. 6, 1864.

We know the firm in question to be very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to deal with their advertisement.—Era, London, Sept. 3, 1864.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment we have heard of for ladies is the sale of certificates for the Great Gift Distribution of Messrs. Arrandale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in it, not only in filling up her own spare time but also in doing a good turn to those to whom she sold the certificates. As much as $5 to $7 per day can be made.—Dundee Courier and Argus, Sept. 6, 1864.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. are well known to us as gentlemen of the highest character.—Bristol Mercury, Sept. 24, 1864.

The British Mail of Saturday, Sept. 24, 1864, says: Messrs. Arrandale & Co., of 167 Broadway, New York, one of our lady subscribers became an agent for Arrandale & Co., and by request issued a circular to her relatives, sent us grams for her agency, to this office for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that we found all of the articles were worth treble the amount of cost to the recipients, in the course of time as close.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Rings, Studs, Pins, etc., which have been sent by Arrandale & Co. to this place for $1 each.—Aspinwall Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 15, 1865.

CAUTION.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and there acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Address their inducements, which can be had on application. Agents will collect 75 cents for every Certificate, and remit 25 cents for the same, either in postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.
In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are headquarters for the following, viz.:
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Of these we have an immense assortment, including
VIEWS OF THE WAR,
Consisting of groups selected from a complete
PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF THE GREAT UNION CONTEST
Bull Run,
Yorktown,
Gettysburgh,
Fair Oaks,
Savage Station,
Fredericksburgh,
Fairfax,
Richmond,
Harrisburgh,
Deep Bottom,
Petersburg,
Fort Morgan,
Atlanta,
Charleston,
Florida,
Port Hudson,
Baton Rouge,
Fort Donelson,
Pulaski,
Pemberton Trains,
Nashville,
Murfreesboro,
Chickahominy,
City Point,
Nashville,
Chattanooga,
Bowling Green,
Bolle Plain,
Gettysburgh Plains,
Culpepper,
Manassas Junction,
Leesburgh,
Lookout Mountain,
Harper's Ferry,
Manassas Gap,
Sc. &c.
Sc. &c.
American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, &c., &c. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibitions. Sent to any part of the country on receipt of Stamp.

Photographic Albums.

We have in stock the largest, finest, and best assortment, and we manufacture immense quantities of every variety, ranging in price from $1 to $50 each. All have the superiority of being separate in beauty and durability to any others. Sent to any part of the country on receipt of Stamp.

THE NEW ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.—See The Trade list and find out which are the most Saleable they can buy.

Photographic Materials.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different articles, and is the most complete and extensive Manual of Reference in the trade. Sent to any part of the country on receipt of Stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, N. Y.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HIGHEST PREMIUM, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to us by the late great Fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE, over all competitors, for the best instrument.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO., by the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, for the best instrument. The award for the second best instrument of this class was awarded to MASON & HAMLIN, and agent of the Belmont organ; and the third award was given to the Prince Melodeon. Thus we see that the first premium was spoak of them in the highest terms."—G. W. MORGAN.

"The best instruments of their class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The best instruments of their class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The tone is incomparable—far in advance of any other instrument I have heard."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 97 East Twenty-third Street,
New York.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

Popular songs, marches, quicksteps, polkas, schottishes, waltzes, reels, quadrilles, cotillions, with calls and figures, &c., for

Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet.

Each book contains about 100 pages. Price 25 cents.
No. 1 " 2 " 3 " 4 " 5 " 6 " 7 " 8 " 9 " 10 " 11 " 12 " 13 " 14 " 15 " 16 " 17 " 18 " 19 " 20 " 21 " 22 " 23 " 24 " 25 " 26 " 27 " 28 " 29 " 30 " 31 " 32 " 33 " 34 " 35 " 36 " 37 " 38 " 39 " 40 " 41 " 42 " 43 " 44 " 45 " 46 " 47 " 48 " 49 " 50 " 51 " 52 " 53 " 54 " 55 " 56 " 57 " 58 " 59 " 60 " 61 " 62 " 63 " 64 " 65 " 66 " 67 " 68 " 69 " 70 " 71 " 72 " 73 " 74 " 75 " 76 " 77 " 78 " 79 " 80 " 81 " 82 " 83 " 84 " 85 " 86 " 87 " 88 " 89 " 90 " 91 " 92 " 93 " 94 " 95 " 96 " 97 " 98 " 99 " 100 " 101 " 102 " 103 " 104 " 105 " 106 " 107 " 108 " 109 " 110 " 111 " 112 " 113 " 114 " 115 " 116 " 117 " 118 " 119 " 120 " 121 " 122 " 123 " 124 " 125 " 126 " 127 " 128 " 129 " 130 " 131 " 132 " 133 " 134 " 135 " 136 " 137 " 138 " 139 " 140 " 141 " 142 " 143 " 144 " 145 " 146 " 147 " 148 " 149 " 150 " 151 " 152 " 153 " 154 " 155 " 156 " 157 " 158 " 159 " 160 " 161 " 162 " 163 " 164 " 165 " 166 " 167 " 168 " 169 " 170 " 171 " 172 " 173 " 174 " 175 " 176 " 177 " 178 " 179 " 180 " 181 " 182 " 183 " 184 " 185 " 186 " 187 " 188 " 189 " 190 " 191 " 192 " 193 " 194 " 195 " 196 " 197 " 198 " 199 " 200 " 201 " 202 " 203 " 204 " 205 " 206 " 207 " 208 " 209 " 210 " 211 " 212 " 213 " 214 " 215 " 216 " 217 " 218 " 219 " 220 " 221 " 222 " 223 " 224 " 225 " 226 " 227 " 228 " 229 " 230 " 231 " 232 " 233 " 234 " 235 " 236 " 237 " 238 " 239 " 240 " 241 " 242 " 243 " 244 " 245 " 246 " 247 " 248 " 249 " 250 " 251 " 252 " 253 " 254 " 255 " 256 " 257 " 258 " 259 " 260 " 261 " 262 " 263 " 264 " 265 " 266 " 267 " 268 " 269 " 270 " 271 " 272 " 273 " 274 " 275 " 276 " 277 " 278 " 279 " 280 " 281 " 282 " 283 " 284 " 285 " 286 " 287 " 288 " 289 " 290 " 291 " 292 " 293 " 294 " 295 " 296 " 297 " 298 " 299 " 300 " 301 " 302 " 303 " 304 " 305 " 306 " 307 " 308 " 309 " 310 " 311 " 312 " 313 " 314 " 315 " 316 " 317 " 318 " 319 " 320 " 321 " 322 " 323 " 324 " 325 " 326 " 327 " 328 " 329 " 330 " 331 " 332 " 333 " 334 " 335 " 336 " 337 " 338 " 339 " 340 " 341 " 342 " 343 " 344 " 345 " 346 " 347 " 348 " 349 " 350 " 351 " 352 " 353 " 354 " 355 " 356 " 357 " 358 " 359 " 360 " 361 " 362 " 363 " 364 " 365 " 366 " 367 " 368 " 369 " 370 " 371 " 372 " 373 " 374 " 375 " 376 " 377 " 378 " 379 " 380 " 381 " 382 " 383 " 384 " 385 " 386 " 387 " 388 " 389 " 390 " 391 " 392 " 393 " 394 " 395 " 396 " 397 " 398 " 399 " 400 " 401 " 402 " 403 " 404 " 405 " 406 " 407 " 408 " 409 " 410 " 411 " 412 " 413 " 414 " 415 " 416 " 417 " 418 " 419 " 420 " 421 " 422 " 423 " 424 " 425 " 426 " 427 " 428 " 429 " 430 " 431 " 432 " 433 " 434 " 435 " 436 " 437 " 438 " 439 " 440 " 441 " 442 " 443 " 444 " 445 " 446 " 447 " 448 " 449 " 450 " 451 " 452 " 453 " 454 " 455 " 456 " 457 " 458 " 459 " 460 " 461 " 462 " 463 " 464 " 465 " 466 " 467 " 468 " 469 " 470 " 471 " 472 " 473 " 474 " 475 " 476 " 477 " 478 " 479 " 480 " 481 " 482 " 483 " 484 " 485 " 486 " 487 " 488 " 489 " 490 " 491 " 492 " 493 " 494 " 495 " 496 " 497 " 498 " 499 " 500 " 501 " 502 " 503 " 504 " 505 " 506 " 507 " 508 " 509 " 510 " 511 " 512 " 513 " 514 " 515 " 516 " 517 " 518 " 519 " 520 " 521 " 522 " 523 " 524 " 525 " 526 " 527 " 528 " 529 " 530 " 531 " 532 " 533 " 534 " 535 " 536 " 537 " 538 " 539 " 540 " 541 " 542 " 543 " 544 " 545 " 546 " 547 " 548 " 549 " 550 " 551 " 552 " 553 " 554 " 555 " 556 " 557 " 558 " 559 " 560 " 561 " 562 " 563 " 564 " 565 " 566 " 567 " 568 " 569 " 570 " 571 " 572 " 573 " 574 " 575 " 576 " 577 " 578 " 579 " 580 " 581 " 582 " 583 " 584 " 585 " 586 " 587 " 588 " 589 " 590 " 591 " 592 " 593 " 594 " 595 " 596 " 597 " 598 " 599 " 600 " 601 " 602 " 603 " 604 " 605 " 606 " 607 " 608 " 609 " 610 " 611 " 612 " 613 " 614 " 615 " 616 " 617 " 618 " 619 " 620 " 621 " 622 " 623 " 624 " 625 " 626 " 627 " 628 " 629 " 630 " 631 " 632 " 633 " 634 " 635 " 636 " 637 " 638 " 639 " 640 " 641 " 642 " 643 " 644 " 645 " 646 " 647 " 648 " 649 " 650 " 651 " 652 " 653 " 654 " 655 " 656 " 657 " 658 " 659 " 660 " 661 " 662 " 663 " 664 " 665 " 666 " 667 " 668 " 669 " 670 " 671 " 672 " 673 " 674 " 675 " 676 " 677 " 678 " 679 " 680 " 681 " 682 " 683 " 684 " 685 " 686 " 687 " 688 " 689 " 690 " 691 " 692 " 693 " 694 " 695 " 696 " 697 " 698 " 699 " 700 " 701 " 702 " 703 " 704 " 705 " 706 " 707 " 708 " 709 " 710 " 711 " 712 " 713 " 714 " 715 " 716 " 717 " 718 " 719 " 720 " 721 " 722 " 723 " 724 " 725 " 726 " 727 " 728 " 729 " 730 " 731 " 732 " 733 " 734 " 735 " 736 " 737 " 738 " 739 " 740 " 741 " 742 " 743 " 744 " 745 " 746 " 747 " 748 " 749 " 750 " 751 " 752 " 753 " 754 " 755 " 756 " 757 " 758 " 759 " 760 " 761 " 762 " 763 " 764 " 765 " 766 " 767 " 768 " 769 " 770 " 771 " 772 " 773 " 774 " 775 " 776 " 777 " 778 " 779 " 780 " 781 " 782 " 783 " 784 " 785 " 786 " 787 " 788 " 789 " 790 " 791 " 792 " 793 " 794 " 795 " 796 " 797 " 798 " 799 " 800 " 801 " 802 " 803 " 804 " 805 " 806 " 807 " 808 " 809 " 810 " 811 " 812 " 813 " 814 " 815 " 816 " 817 " 818 " 819 " 820 " 821 " 822 " 823 " 824 " 825 " 826 " 827 " 828 " 829 " 830 " 831 " 832 " 833 " 834 " 835 " 836 " 837 " 838 " 839 " 840 " 841 " 842 " 843 " 844 " 845 " 846 " 847 " 848 " 849 " 850 " 851 " 852 " 853 " 854 " 855 " 856 " 857 " 858 " 859 " 860 " 861 " 862 " 863 " 864 " 865 " 866 " 867 " 868 " 869 " 870 " 871 " 872 " 873 " 874 " 875 " 876 " 877 " 878 " 879 " 880 " 881 " 882 " 883 " 884 " 885 " 886 " 887 " 888 " 889 " 890 " 891 " 892 " 893 " 894 " 895 " 896 " 897 " 898 " 899 " 900 " 901 " 902 " 903 " 904 " 905 " 906 " 907 " 908 " 909 " 910 " 911 " 912 " 913 " 914 " 915 " 916 " 917 " 918 " 919 " 920 " 921 " 922 " 923 " 924 " 925 " 926 " 927 " 928 " 929 " 930 " 931 " 932 " 933 " 934 " 935 " 936 " 937 " 938 " 939 " 940 " 941 " 942 " 943 " 944 " 945 " 946 " 947 " 948 " 949 " 950 " 951 " 952 " 953 " 954 " 955 " 956 " 957 " 958 " 959 " 960 " 961 " 962 " 963 " 964 " 965 " 966 " 967 " 968 " 969 " 970 " 971 " 972 " 973 " 974 " 975 " 976 " 977 " 978 " 979 " 980 " 981 " 982 " 983 " 984 " 985 " 986 " 987 " 988 " 989 " 990 " 991 " 992 " 993 " 994 " 995 " 996 " 997 " 998 " 999 " 1000

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Every description at LOWEST NEW YORK PRICES. Illustrated price list free.
FREDERICK BLUME, 209 Bowery, New York.

$6 WATCHES $8
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS

AN excusive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, especially adapted for Christmas presents, of fine Silver, Gold, Hunting, or Open-face cases.

AN ELEGANT WATCH, in fine gold-plated double cases, richly engraved, with Patent Lever movement, adjusted regulator, engraved pallets and balance bridge, and compensation balance. Sent by express, Secure Timekeeper, with key, case, gents' FINE VEST CHAIN, and Locket, for $8. Ladies' watches of corresponding low prices. Likenesses, all complete, a beautiful holiday present, sent free by mail, for $1.

A RAINBOW SILVER WATCH, serviceable pattern, in heavy double cases; small size, $6 each; large size, with key case, chain, gold locket, &c., complete, sent free to any part of the country for $8.

THE IMPERIAL TIMEKEEPER, a Wonderful Combination of the Chronometer, Duplex, and Lever principles, and correct working TIMEKEEPERS, an accurately adjusted Mariner's watch, in solid silver case, with Patent Lever movement, and ruby, indicating day of month, week, &c., rendering this watch perfect for time, $15. Sent by express, with key of great value to travelers, farmers, and others desirous of having a reliable watch. Sent by express, with key and fly finely finished DOUBLE HUNTING Magic Spring 19 Line Watch, $20. Sent by express, with key. Solid Gold Hunting Case Watch, $30. Sent by express, with key. Solid Gold Patent Lever Watch, richly engraved, with Patent for Jurnee; Gemmill's Chronometer Balance, and Patent Lever movement, $40. Sent by express, with key. Self-acting polished steel Chain, Equal Balance, Jeweled Movement, Hunting Case, Engraved, at $20 each; used by the Royal Engineers and Officers of the Bengal Army in India. Sent by express. Silver or Gold case, all complete, with Case, Key, &c., sent any where by mail, for $1 each. Address, JOSEPH DILLON, No. 208 Bowery, Depot, 27 Chatham Square. Genuine AMERICAN LEVERS, $20. Sent by express. Watches, Jewelry, Plated Ware, &c., at Lowest Prices. Send for Circular.

1000 AGENTS WANTED,

Christian Men and Women Preferred,

To sell the most beautiful, useful, and good CRAYON PICTURE ART, indorsed by the Bishops and most eminent divines of every religious denomination, for use in their churches offices, and members are now canvassing for it in their congregations. Please send for Circular and Agent's Manual, and see the best chromo. Terms liberal, and exclusive territory assigned to Agents who can furnish satisfactory testimonials. For particulars, address I. COWLES, Publisher, Box 5056, New York. Office, 44 Ann Street.

GREENBACKS are GOOD—BOOKACRES BETTER.

The best tonic and agee preventive in the world. 50,000 bottles sold annually. Sold by druggists every where. Inclose Barox & Co., Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Roberts, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry,
Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The home of BOSANQUET, GIRAUD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened an Agency in the City of New York for the sale of their widely-known Jewelry, Watches, &c.; and for the purpose of making their goods as extensively known and appreciated in the United States as they now are, and have been for over 70 years, in Europe, they have determined on a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the advantage of their splendid stock. As a preliminary, they would remark that they manufacture and sell no imitation Jewelry or Electro-plating.

All are Warranted Gold of the Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant succession of the most attractive styles and patterns with which we shall keep our New York Agency supplied.

We have adopted the plan of sale now so popular, of charging a uniform price, and this price with BOSANQUET & CO. for each article, has been fixed at a very low rate. The expenses of conducting our New York Agency are saved by this mode of distribution, as Catalogues, representing the various articles. These Certificates are sold at 50 cents each, or three for $1, and ARRANGEMENTS have thus been made that the purchaser of a certificate may be certain of the payment of an additional $5. If the article named on the Certificate is not desired, the holder will oblige us, when he returns the Certificate, by stating what price in excess of the sum value he or she may prefer, and it will be sent with pleasure. We aim to give perfect satisfaction, to that end will be exerted. We solicit a trial from every one who reads this notice, as we are confident of giving the utmost satisfaction.

THE STOCK COMPRISES

Among other articles, splendid Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings set with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearls, Garnet, and other Precious Stones, Bracelets, and every description of Jewelry, comprising Fine and Ear-rings of the most fashionable patterns, Gentlemen's Scarf Pins of every variety, together with a large assortment of Gold, Enamelled, and Pearl Sets, Gold and Silver Watches of the most approved fashionable patterns, Gents' Bosom and Scarf Pins, and an endless variety of Jewelry, Diamonds, Watches, Bracelets, Necklaces, Combs, Charms, &c. In case any of our patrons are not in want of articles of jewelry, and would prefer Silverware, we will send, for any Certificate returned to us, a richly plated Silver Tea Caddy, or Butter Dish, beautifully chased and plated.

AGENTS are wanted in every part of the United States and Provinces, and to all such very liberal inducements will be offered, and, if desired, a circular of terms will be forwarded. We prefer money sent in Post-Office Orders where they can be obtained, or by Bank Draft to our order. Address all orders to our agency, which will be conducted by MESSRS. JAQUET, STEERMAN, & CO., 141 Broadway, New York.

THE PIANOFORTE WAREROOMS of HORACE WATERS, Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Second-hand pianos at low prices. Rent allowed if purchased monthly payments received for the same. Second-hand pianos for sale or to let. Sheet music at the warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS

A Household Necessity exists for the Use of DURNO'S CATARRH SNUFF,

Which, in the first stages of a cold, sets like magic. Headache, Hoarseness, Dizziness, and Bronchitis, Sore Eyes, Deafness, Bad Taste and Smell—being the result of Catarrh—all yield to its influence, and prevents all that annoys a healthy head. Its effects are pleasant and safe, always for inhaling. Sold by all Druggists.

It has the highest professional testimonials. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by mail to all parts of the United States, for 10 cents for One Box, or $1 for Four Boxes.

Address JAS. DURNO, P. O. Box 1916, New York.
Wholesale by JAMES, BARNES & CO., 81 Park Row, N. Y.

HOLIDAY PRESENT
FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Simplicity.

Originally patented May 13, 1851; Improvement patented March 28th, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with ornamental attachment, a most wonderful and beautiful combination of mechanism, simple in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, with which are combined the principles of all others, and the SEWING-STITCH more perfect and regular than by hand, and will execute every description of SEWING MACHINE stitches to each revolution of the Wheel. With ordinary use, with proper attention, it will last for a lifetime. It requires no change of stitch; no nut loosens to get out of order, and will last a LIFETIME. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. Is not liable to get out of order. Has received the highest premium at every Fair, and received the highest premium and first approval of all the principal Journals and of those who have seen it in operation.

"For the ornamenter it is invaluable; for the housekeeper, with a common needle, makes the neatest, most elastic lock-stitch."—New York Tribune.

Single specimens sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Liberal terms to canvassers. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, free.

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR DECEMBER, 1865.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBscribers, at $3 00 each, or 6 Copies for $16 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following rates: one page or less, $40; half a page, $20; quarter, $12; one half, $25; whole page, $50. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the World.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding . . . . . $1 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco . . . . . 2 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for inside of HARPER'S WEEKLY. Eight cents per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

CHRISTMAS GIFT.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen, of substantial and elegant appearance, for the money. Heretofore, a correctly unique and wonderful Novelty, which combines the principles of the Chronometer and Duplex Principles, and warranted to DISCOVER SOLAR TIME with perfect accuracy and the utmost precision. Has been tested that the most costly and elaborate timekeeper of modern manufacture. It never gains or loses. It requires NO KEY or winding up; NEVER RUNS DOWN, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a time standard, reliable, and to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Every instrument warranted perfect before leaving the shop, and one accurately proportioned from inflexible, solid pieces, and cautioned from tipping or falling, for safe transportation, under no matter what ALTERATION of climate. Each one is packed in a neat and fancy morocco case, with a Book of Directions, and the advertisement with a view to enabling the holder to set it by noting notice and with a slight allowance of hourly DIFFERENCE between the precious Timekeepers. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DILLAMORE & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 208-209 Broadway, New York.

"No matter with how much flourish and puffing other manufacturers may thrust their wares before the public, Godey's Lady's Book and Magazine continues a favorite as of old, and increases in vitality every month."—Watertown (N. Y.) Times.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE
For 1866,

It is with pleasure we are able to announce a much larger circulation for the "Home Magazine" during the year 1866 than it ever had before attained; and also a more heartily expressed approval by subscribers and the press of the high character which it has for years maintained. For next year we shall bring into its pages a still MORE VIGOROUS LITERARY EFFORT—A HIGHER, BETTER TONE—A BROADER SPIRIT—and a more earnest advocacy of all LIVING TRUTHS and REFORMS.

As heretofore, our aim will be to produce

A Pure Literature for American Homes, not too didactic and heavy, but cheerful, animated, and entertaining, drawing in very considerable part, with something always pleasant and profitable to say.

The Volume for 1866 (Vol. XXXVI.) will commence in the January Number, entitled

"PETROLEUM."

The Home Magazine for 1866 will be enriched not only with the best articles the editors can produce, but will also contain numerous original engravings.

The Leading Writers of the Country.

Our magazine is not simply a literary periodical. It takes the highest, and ranks with the best, on almost a hundred of morality and religion, always teaching the principles of virtue, of story, love, and duty, and will be "the Golden Rule" on man live to say wive or good purpose. If you have not tried it, do so for 1866.

A TRUE FRIEND IN YOUR HOUSEHOLD.

As heretofore, it will be embellished with STEEL ENGRAVINGS, ILLUSTRATIONS, FASHION PLATES, PATTERNS, FINE-TABLE STORY OF DARK SHAKESPEARE," will be mailed to any address for 25 cents. Specimen numbers will also be mailed to each single subscriber from whom we have not heard.

TERMS.—For $4 00 we will send one copy each of HOME MAGAZINE and GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK for 1866.

Address T. S. ARTHUR & CO.,
325 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own Home. Thousands can realize a hundred dollars every week in their own localities. Men and women in every household. Profits 100 per cent. Demand staple as flour. Sent by mail or express. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamps for return postage. HOPKINS & SEWARD, 64 Broadway, New York.

"This Establishment does not Advertise in the New York Herald."

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

RELIEF FOR DYSPEPTICS.
Hot Bread, Corn Bread, Tea-Biscuit, Pie-Crust, eaten with impunity, and no fear of the generally oppressive feelings produced by eating the above luxuries, if made with PERRINE'S YEAST POWDER. Sold by grocers generally, and manufactured by Taylor & Young, 180 Front St., N. Y.

FOLLAR & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 369 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail, at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & CO.'S CHAMPAGNE
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and consequently acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold in bottle or duty paid by A. W. MITCHILL, 7 Beaver St., N.Y.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
ROSWELL & WARNER'S COLORITO entire beautifully and natural. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 2 Day St., N.Y.

PHALON'S NIGHT BLOOMING CEREUS.
Produces a beautiful growth of hair on the head, whiskers, or moustache, in from 20 to 30 days. Prevents the hair from falling off or turning gray. Cures all humors of the scalp. Keeps the hair in curl in the most humid weather. Is the best dressing for the hair in the world. Sold by all druggists and perfumers.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
Measuring Card,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a PERFECT FIT.

BOOT AND SHOE EMPORIUM,
No. 575 Broadway, New York.
E. A. BROOKS, Agent.
Boots, Shoes, Rubbers, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N.B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
Bought and Sold on Commission.

SMOLANDER'S
COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT OF
BUCHU,
Cures diseases of the Stomach and Kidneys, Rheumatism, Dropsy, &c. Price One Dollar. Sold by D. Jayne & Son, and F. C. Wells & Co. New York. Bebbins & Soulden, Boston. Hoyt, General Agents.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the New Organ-Toned Piano, Equal, if not Superior, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 467 Broome St.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
469 Broadway (old) Lord & Taylor's) and 151 Fulton St.

MUSICAL BOXES.
See Advertisement on Page 793.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are counterfeit infringements and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 05 Chambers Street, New York.

25 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with catalogue of forms to agents. Address
HAYWARD & CO.,
329 Broadway, New York.

LADIES
PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS.
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemen's Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.
For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

EXHIBITION OF NEW TOYS
AND
Holiday Presents
At the Store of
STRASBURGER & NUHN,
Corner of Maiden Lane and William Street,
NEW YORK.

S. & N., in soliciting an early call of those wanting to supply themselves, are now offering for sale
Mayer's American Eau de Cologne,
Superior to Farina's best genuine: and indispensable toilet article, sure to give satisfaction.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $1, $2, $3, and $5 a set. Ivory and Pearl Bristle-Brushes, $1 50 to $20 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Cedar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. FELLING,
Importer and Manufacturer, 571 Broadway.

MOORE'S PATENT RUBBER SCRUBBING BRUSH.—THE SHIELDS prevent enlargement of the hands and joints, and rubbing off the skin; and will last for one dollar's worth of soap for one set done to any other made, and will do more work. Can be boiling and less soap. Price, $1 60 each, sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of hand measure of the first joint of the fingers.
MOORE & CO.,
171 Broadway, New York.

More than One Hundred
THINGS WORTH KNOWING.
A Hand-Book of Valuable Information for every Man, Woman, and Child. Sent free on receipt of One Stamp for postage. Address ADAMS & CO., Publishers, No. 31 Bromfield Street, Boston.

Holloway's Pills & Ointment—Rheumatism. Medicides of Idiosyncratic virtues to contend openly with entrenched joints are now limping to the graves; a still greater number are suffering the excruciating tortures of neuralgia, lumbago, and sciatica—who could be promptly and notly relieved by these remedies.

Macmillan's Celebrated Skates,
No. 346 Broadway, New York.
Send for a list, with cuts and prices.

JEWELRY
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS.
See the announcement of ARANDALE & CO'S great sale of Jewelry for Holidays on inside page. Now is the time for splendid bargains.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
TWO PRIZES AT ONCE.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL
JUST AWARDED BY THE
AMERICAN INSTITUTE
FOR SUPERIOR
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
OVER ALL COMPETITION, TO
GEORGE STECK & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS,
113 AND 115 Walker Street, New York.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the smallest, lightest, and most effective REVOLVER in the world. It combines compactness, durability, effectiveness, and power with lightness, simplicity of operating, convenience and safety in carrying; to a degree not attained by any other arm made. It carries a heavier metallic cartridge than any Revolver made of same size and weight. The Cartridge is central fire, Self-prepared. Light enough for a lady to shoot (20-ounce), six-shot, and can be thrown into the pocket.
For sale by dealers and the trade generally.
GEO. A. HICKOX, 54 Cliff St., New York.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
Offer to the Wholesale Trade Generally:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Goose" (our own make) Bi-Carb. Soda.
Soda Ash—Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
Caustic Soda—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Muspratt Brothers', and Hunter's.
Sal Soda—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
Alkalies—Paragon, Excelsior, and Double Refined, made as our own works.
Perfectly pure Cream Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Flor. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Prussiate Alka, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Snowboro Palm Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Rosin, &c., &c.
The "Extension" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are "Not Asnds." Established in 1847.
Office—159 and 158 Cedar St., New York (west side).

CATALOGUE of LANGENHEIM'S
Magic Lantern Pictures and Apparatus. Address
W. LANGENHEIM, Philad'phia.

THE WIDE WORLD.
One of the best story and Family Papers published. Single Copy, 7 cents. Sold at all Periodical Depots.

LAVADENTEM
K. Y. For the Mouth. M. C.
BURLEIGH & ROGERS, General Agents.

BEAUTY.—Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of Prof. DE BREE'S FRISER LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls at will. Has been used by the fashionable of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does not injure the hair. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1 50. Sold by druggists and dealers. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, P.O. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using DR. SEYMOUR'S RESTORATIVE CAPILLAIRE. This wonderful discovery is modern science, acting upon the beard and Hair in a minner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, Post-Office Drawer 31, Troy, N.Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

WARDS SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
S. W. H. WARD, 267 Broadway, N.Y.

MOTHERS!
That wasting form; that glassy, expressionless eye! That fitful starting sleep! That picking of the nose with the thin fingers; all tell in plainer language than pen can describe, that worms are killing your child, whom you can save by the timely use of Van Deusen's White Worm Confections, and for which we give you five good reasons for using:

1. Children eat them as they do candy.

2. They drive out worms thoroughly without pain;

3. Cleanse the stomach completely;

4. Cure bowel and teething complaints;

5. Restore health and vigor—give lustre to the eye and cheerfulness to the spirits.

Never give your children Colored worm candy.

If the merchants in your place have not Van Deusen's Worm Confections, insist upon their sending to us or where they purchase their medicines, and get them, as they will save the lives of your darling children.

VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS,
Kingston, Ulster Co., N. Y.
PRICE 25 CENTS A BOX.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 468.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE BIBLE AND THE MONK.

THIS remarkable picture carries us back to the time when the priests of the Roman Catholic Church denounced the possession of the Bible as a sin.

The highly interesting situation so well imagined and vividly realized in this picture must have been one of common occurrence at the period of the Reformation, and can not fail to be deeply and variously suggestive to every thoughtful person. It would be beyond our province, however, to attempt to illustrate all the bearings of such a subject as this. The artist's principal aim and meaning are obvious enough. The situation affords scope for representing well-contrasted emotion and three distinct types of character; while—of course assuming that the picture is addressed to a Protestant spectator—the leading intention is to show the irresistible moral and spiritual influences which in all cases of an established prescriptive creed oppose the first feeble efforts of an independent inquiry after truth. The monk is the very impersonation of that spiritual pride and arrogance which too commonly characterize the priestly profession in all ages and circumstances. Claiming infallibility, consciously or unconsciously, he stands resenting as a personal insult the attempt to defy or escape from his authority; he scouts it as a heinous sin; he is prepared to consign to everlasting perdition the tenderest and most innocent of his fellow-creatures if that attempt is persevered in. The enormities of the "Inquisition," so ominously suggested in the title, are but the logical and natural consequences of such a spirit as this. The poor girl, so interesting in her sweet, intelligent beauty and gentleness, must needs quail before the monk's domineering energy; nor can she steel herself to a mother's agonized entreaty, or be insensible to those habitual instincts of submission and reverence proper to her sex. The aged mother—too old to learn, however ignorant—is, of course only the slave and instrument of the "holy man's" will and pleasure. In representing a young female instead of a man as possessed of the forbidden Bible, the artist has doubtless wished to indicate the all-powerful influence and blind submission which priests every where exert over and exact from women, and of which we have all seen or heard such startling revelations.

THE BIBLE AND THE MONK.—[FROM A PAINTING BY MR. PETTIE.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1865.

CONVENTION OF THE OTHER COLOR.

AS faithful chroniclers, we can not deny that the various conventions of the colored people in the late insurrectionary States compare favorably with those of their white brethren. Their conduct is no less orderly; their reasoning is indisputably superior; their resolutions are of an elevated humanity and common sense to which those of the other Conventions make no pretension; while their expressions of gratitude and fidelity to the United States, and of Christian charity toward their late masters, rise in the highest degree encouraging and refreshing after the sullen, reluctant, defiant, acrid tone of the reorganizing conventions in those States.

There is no more hopeful sign of the times than these Conventions. They show that the colored men are beginning to be conscious of their duties as well as their rights. The address of the State Convention of the Colored Union men of South Carolina to the white men of the State says, manfully: "Now that we are freemen, now that we are elevated by the Providence of God to manhood, we will not always stand up, and like men, speak and act for ourselves. We fully recognize the truth of the maxim, the gods help those who help themselves." Every honest citizen who hopes for speedy peace and tranquility will say a hearty Amen to that. We are glad to see the colored men organizing and speaking, and hopeful, as to be torpid at a time when their welfare and their chances are at stake.

And it is really they who do the work of the Conventions. They are not the puppets of white men. It has been the fashion to speak of the slaves entirely influenced by their white leaders by savage, as people who must, at our own peril, be kept forever in the strictest bondage. Yet the correspondent of the New York Tribune, a paper which uniformly maligns and ridicules the colored race, says of the South Carolina colored Convention that it "has been marked not by a display of ability and decorum that has won for its members great credit even from those who met in such gatherings more than ominous forebodings of insurrection and bloodshed." We venture to believe that those forebodings are not as likely to be justified in the case of the Convention in question as in the case of its "such gatherings" as the South Carolina Secession Convention of 1860. And we have yet to find in the resolutions of any Convention of the approved color which has met in the State of South Carolina or elsewhere in that region, so manly a good sense, humanity, and Christianity as in the following adopted by the body of which the correspondent speaks:

"Resolved, That it is with deep regret we perceive a willingness on the part of some of the people of this State to believe that there is danger of an insurrection, and we take this opportunity of making it known to the world that we part company as low-minding subjects shall be strictly allowed to act law-abiding citizens.

"Resolved, That as the old institution of slavery has passed away, we cherish in our hearts no feelings toward those who have held our brethren as slaves; but that we extend the right hand of fellowship to all, and will labor with them to our special aim to establish unity, peace, and love among all men.

"Resolved, That we shall encourage the freedmen in acquiring habits of industry and obtaining education."

If the other Convention in South Carolina had been animated by a spirit as manly, as politic, and statesmanlike, the State would at once enter upon such a career of prosperity as she has never known. As events are, such assembly and such resolutions and such addresses all written by men of the other color, partial proofs at least that justice may prove to be good policy?

The president of this Convention was THOMAS M. HOLMES, a native-born slave of the late Secretary of the Treasury, MEMMINGER. He was formerly librarian of the law library of Mr. MEMMINGER and his partners. Such facts should be remembered before launching the epithet about "barbarity" and "incapacity." The reader will remember George in Mrs. STOWE'S "Dred." He was a confidential manager. There are thousands of such men in the late slave States, who were trusted for their sagacity and integrity beyond any of "white trash" there. Nor was this surprising: for although Governor HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, says in an amusing ly lofty way, in his inaugural address, that "Miscegenation must be the work and taste of other climes and other people," yet everybody knows that the clime and the people of the sunny South have succeeded in making the three-quarters of the colored population mulattoes of various degrees. That may not be miscegenation, but it is amalgamation, and they are very nearly related. Governor HUMPHREYS and his friends may spare themselves the stately strain. The court may be supposed to know some law, and the people of this country will smile if the Governor is too positive, for they know all about miscegenation in the late slave States.

It is plain from the proceedings of the various conventions of the colored race that they fully understand the logic of their situation. They are freemen, and they ask, "Why should we suffer on account of the color which an all-wise Creator has given to us?" "We ask for no special privileges or peculiar favors, we ask for even-handed justice, for the removal of such positive obstructions and disabilities as past and recent legislation has thrown in our way, and heaped upon us." "We ask for the right of suffrage, and the right of testifying in courts of law." These two things we deem necessary to our well-being and safety." They are the rights of every freeman, and are inherent and essential to every republican form of government."

This is certainly as reasonable as any thing we have lately heard in the quarter from which it comes. Whatever political disability may be imposed, say these men, let it be real and not arbitrary. Why allow those whom Mr. OLMSTED and other travelers describe as cheerful, acute and sand-hillers to vote, and exclude Captain ROBERT SMALL or Mr. MEMMINGER'S librarian? If, as the Providence Journal most aptly says, you gentlemen of the slave States, with all your Christianizing system of slavery for two centuries, have only succeeded in making this race idle, thievish, and false, suppose that we try the pagan process of treating them as men, and see what comes of that.

When we come to that conclusion we shall have a peace and union which we can trust, and not before.

AID FOR THE SOUTH.

IT is stated that in Alabama alone two hundred thousand persons are in danger of extreme suffering, if not of actual starvation, during the coming winter. It is a piteous and appalling prospect, and we trust that the same energy and humanity which originated and sustained the Sanitary and Christian Commissions during the war will find that labor work is not yet accomplished. The destitution at the South is not confined to any class or color. It is a general sorrow. Every body is famished with the circumstances of suffering, and there is no disposition in this part of the country to indulge any spirit of hostility or revenge. The same sympathy that moved so many men ago hastened to relieve the sick at Norfolk now embraces all the stricken at the South. Nor is it the folly of excessive charity or generosity to blind us to the actual necessities of the people.

The condition is exceptional, like civil war itself, and demands exceptional measures. According to the statement of Dr. STORRS at the meeting of the Union Aid Commission in Brooklyn, there are three societies which aim at special relief: the Freedmen's Aid, the Union Aid, and the Missionary Association. They are all voluntary associations, and devoted themselves to the actual subsistence and mental and moral education of the destitute Southern population. This purpose also has no hope except in our prompt assistance. The fires of war have ravaged their homes and fields. The capital of all this multiplied and variegated cultivation is that the Government does not get any thing like the whole amount which the public pays, and that the honest man pays their taxes, it is impossible to prevent rogues evading theirs. To collect so infinite a number of small taxes requires an army of agents. Nobody can collect them thoroughly as to prevent fraud would require every second man to be a detective. Of the extent to which the revenue is defrauded no one may be informed from the fact that for many months whisky has been selling for less than the tax alone. Of the cost of collecting the taxes very accurate estimate can yet be formed; we must wait for the returns from the Bureau of Internal Revenue. But it is probable that often it must be very much greater than the cost of collecting the revenue of other leading nations.

It has been found in Great Britain, which has had the whole century's experience of heavy taxation, that the true secret is to tax few articles, and to concentrate the watchfulness of the collecting agents. Great Britain now derives as large a revenue from seven articles as she used to draw from two hundred. Frauds are of rarer occurrence than they used to be, and the cost of collecting the revenue is much reduced. Applying the same system to this country, and making nothing but customs, excise, whisky, beer, land, incomes, and legacies, it is likely that in an average of years the income from each source would, with the exception of a stamp tax, be as large as it would be from the present diversified system, while it is clear that frauds would be less frequent and the cost of collection very much less. It would be quite possible to collect $250,000,000 a year from cotton, whisky, beer, tobacco, incomes, and stamps; a land tax and customs duties might pay $150,000,000 more without difficulty. With proper machinery such taxes might be collected for less than five per cent of the sum reducing the revenue, and frauds might be rendered almost impossible.

The question can not too soon realize that this matter of taxation is to be the topic on which parties will divide and elections turn. It will not take very long to determine the method in which the funeral of Slavery is to be conducted, and the ex-rebels permitted to renew their relations with the nation which they vainly tried to destroy. In a very short while those questions will become mere matters of feeling, touching which the people at large will be indifferent. But the question of taxation will strike home to the pocket of every voter, and as the people become better educated in fiscal science the successful men of the day will be they who best understand that science, and can most clearly show how to lighten the popular burdens without endangering the national credit.

HOLIDAYS.

"WHEN I return from Europe and have been a day in this country," said an experienced traveler, "the rush of life and the exhilaration of the atmosphere make me feel as if I had drunk a bottle of Champagne." This intensity of life is characteristic of America. It is both occasioned and aggravated by the circumstances of our society and by our climate. And the terrible evidence of the constant strain of the vital powers to which we are subject is the fact that paralysis is the most common form of disease. A thoughtful physician bids us expect a great increase of this disease in the coming decade—an increase which he attributes to the peculiar and prolonged excitement of the war. In the familiar passage of FRANCESCA the old chronicler accuses the English of taking their pleasure sadly; but we take our pleasure and our business and our duty almost fiercely.

But as the annual holidays upon us approaches, and the pretty books begin to multiply, and the shops to fill with new games and toys; as the Christmas-green gradually steals into the windows, and the sparkling frosty air seems to be getting ready for the Christmas chimes; as the exquisite romance which invests the season in the song and picture of the old traditions of our native tongue once more reasserts its power over our minds and hearts, we find ourselves asking why, in a land of crowded cities and restless a life as ours, we do not use the commonsense which enables us to pile up the means of securing life to enable us to prolong and enjoy it also.

The traveler who recalls the placid contentment of the exiles upon the Rhine, the Neckar, the Danube, the small circles outside the walls of Nuremberg, the pleasant counsels in the Tiergarten at Berlin, and the halls where formerly Goethe, and Heine, and Schiller, and almost the entire nightly furnishes the finest music for seven cents a concert—who remembers the gay leisure of Italian life, and where new scenes and picturesque habits of the Continent, and the universal power of enjoyment which distinguishes the European from the American, naturally wonders why we can not manage to keep a year a long trend-mill instead of pausing in our work with frequent holidays.

Indeed, we are almost impatient of the few and puny festivals we already have. We are almost ashamed to enjoy ourselves, and the musical congresses of our fellow-citizens of German descent have little influence, if no other, that they show us how simply and easily and economically people can enjoy themselves if they will only choose to do so. The true German gets more enjoyment out of a shilling than a true American out of ten dollars. There is no man in the world whose body and soul demands relaxation and recreation so much as the American.

It is therefore a matter to be urged to promote the institution and observance of holidays. We ought to disturb the incessant strain of mental and physical labor. We ought to let the vital forces gay by sparing them upon the vital forces, and withstand by wisdom the tendencies of our climate and social conditions. This can be done in no way so surely as by increasing the number of public and recognized holidays. Thus we hope the Thanksgiving which we have just observed will become a national festival, and that next year the President will follow his own good example of this year, and appoint a similar day, not indeed for special thanks, as in this instance, but for the annual harvest and happy ending of the year. The appointment of such a day as a State right belongs to the States still gladly yield to the nation; and if the States will order another feast of another kind at another season they will be the gainers. Why other season they will be the gainers. Why other season they will be the gainers. Why other ery thing that tends to popular relaxation and amusement. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. We need not fear to fall into the folly of despotisms, which give bread and games to pacify the mob, for in the old Roman sense there is no mob in this country. The French proverb assures us that he who sleeps dines. But it is an infinitely sounder proverb that he who plays best works best. If we had more holidays we should be a more cheerful, more efficient, more satisfied, and less paralytic people.

"SOUTHERN" LITERATURE.

A LATE article in the Richmond Enquirer upon literary journals is both significant and amusing. It says that it trusts "the last has been heard of Southern Literary Messengers, Southern Monthlies, Southern Reviews, and Southern Punches." It then adds, "not that we have ceased to be Southern in every thought and impulse of our being, or despair of a literature which shall be contradistinguished in its more elevated and original tone from the literature of the North; but 'the time and the hour' illicit harmony, and for the security of all investments, whether of capital or mental labor, it is much to be hoped that the grand fact of consolidation will be accepted in its political significance, and that Southern authors will at once abandon all hope of erecting petty literary centres in each State. New York is the natural centre of every undertaking, and there the South must establish its magazines and reviews." But, again, says the Enquirer, "it will take a first-class literary weekly, fashioned on English models, would pay almost any where in the South, and nowhere so much as in Richmond."

The Enquirer falls into the very old folly which it expressly repudiates. It says that there never was a sectional feeling enough enough to sustain the "Southern" reviews, miscellanies, and magazines. Then, certainly, there is not now. It was the appeal to that sectional feeling upon which such periodicals depended. A "Southerner" was expected to buy a novel, or a book of essays, or a magazine, or a paper, not because it was better or cheaper than any other, but because it was written by "a Southerner"—or defended Slavery; or sneered at the Union; or called States rights sovereignty; or was printed in Richmond or Charleston. Nothing could be more pitiful or childish. It is possible for people in a frenzy to refuse to buy any thing whatever that comes from a particular part of the world, but it by no means follows that they will therefore use what they make themselves to replace it. It was conceivable that the people in the insurrectionary States should be inflamed even before the war so as to refuse to buy Northern books and papers from the other parts of the country. But it is inconceivable that a cultivated man or woman at the South should read the Literary Messenger, for instance, because they would not buy a "Northern" magazine. It does not follow because a man abstains from roast beef that he will eat fried eels.

If the most popular writers in the country, the finest editorial talent, the shrewdest critics, the soundest thinkers, can be paid more liberally for their contributions in Richmond than elsewhere, and if the expenses of publication are less and the facilities of distribution and business experience and genius are greater there than elsewhere, then a magazine or a paper can be established there which will succeed, but not otherwise. Hatred of the North, hostility to the Union, glorification of the Resolutions of '98, cheer for "Jackson and Lee" "niggers," and protestations of devotion to "the South" are not the capital which causes literary enterprises to succeed.

We have nothing but the kindest feeling for the Enquirer, which it will unquestionably spurn, but it is time, and time, in which, by its spirit of actual circumstances, that this ridiculous "poppycock" about "the South" should cease! Whatever generous, noble, patriotic word or deed comes out of the South as the West or the East will be heartily hailed by the American people, not because it is Western or Southern or Eastern, but because it is American, and for the glory of the common country. When the Enquirer speaks of the "murderous designs upon the white population of the South," of the literary journals "of the widest circulation and most commanding influence," it is silly and absurd, as well as untruthful. And when it adds that "the mob has lapped blood too long in HARPER'S Journal of Civilization to be content with any thing else," it means, and doubtless intentionally, insults the great body of loyal American citizens who have just suppressed a malignant and desperate rebellion, and with whom this journal is in full sympathy.

In its prospectus for resuming publication the Richmond Enquirer says: "For our course in the past we have no excuses to make, and for the future no promises to give." "The part that the Enquirer will take in politics will depend in the future on circumstances." "We must keep green the graves of our noble dead," etc., etc. All this is matter of taste, and also of feeling. But the spirit from which all this springs, which inspires praise of a paper in New York that seeks "to bring the Government back to the Resolutions of '98," and which denounces the entire liberal press of the country as "leading on the mob to fresh fields of gore," is exactly the spirit from which the rebellion sprang, the spirit which justly alarms every thoughtful patriot, the spirit which checks conciliation, and which indefinitely delays the possibility of reorganization.

THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE

AMONG the city reforms which we should gladly see in New York is a new Post-office: a Post-office which should in its very structure commemorate with the importance of the city, and having a few of the most obvious and necessary conveniences for public convenience. The present Post-office in New York is unquestionably the most disgraceful public building in the country. Frantic efforts have been made to stretch a small, old-fashioned church into the necessary size. Every thing is consequently cramped to the extremest inconvenience to every body. The accommodations are not only inadequate and contemptible both for the clerks and for the public. A covered, crowded, sloppy shed, full of mud in the winter, in which the people must stand to deposit letters, or to buy small lots of stamps. It would be a sanitary improvement to make it one of the necessary places to breathe the fresh air at least while they are kept waiting.

Yet no building in the present size can be more spacious than the old church, and unless there is a thoroughly efficient and satisfactory system of city delivery, which renders a central office of comparatively small importance, there must be a change of site before there can be adequate postal accommodation.

With the site unchanged, only the Post-office is strictly a popular institution. Every body is interested in it, and it is not one class alone—even if in that which receives and mails most letters—which should altogether control its position. The building should be in some airy, accessible situation, not far from the great centres of trade, but not lost in a corner. It should be so spacious that every department should be amply accommodated, and should have such facilities for the receipt, delivery, and mailing of letters, and the other details of service, as to relieve the intolerable pressure and long waiting which are now unendurable. No clique of interested persons and no false economy should longer delay the erection of a proper Post-office in New York.

HANGING.

THERE is a great deal of surprise and complaint that such offenders as WIRZ and CHARLES DAUGHTERY are hung, while the great chiefs of the rebellion, who caused such acts as theirs, are pardoned or not pursued. "The question," says one journal, "really becomes a serious one—are all the criminals par excellence to be pardoned, while those cheap scoundrels are sternly executed?"

But it should be remembered that every person who has been executed has suffered for a crime which is not political. If DR. LIEBER, in his investigations, had such proofs of the guilt, as his proof of DAVIS's direct complicity with the tortures of Andersonville, for instance, DAVIS would have been tried by a military commission, and if convicted, would have been promptly executed. Of his moral guilt, of course, there is no question. That JEFFERSON DAVIS knew, and WILKES BOOTH knew that the Confederate prisoners were starved and frozen at Andersonville and Belle Isle, there can be no doubt. But the law will not hang a man for moral guilt. There must be evidence of actual complicity. EURANDO WOOD is as morally guilty of the rebellion and the murder of LINCOLN as JEFFERSON, but the journal from which we quote would scarcely urge hanging him upon that score.

A GEM OF PUREST RAY SERENE.

FERNANDO WOOD lately said, with exquisite humor and the point and polish of a rapier, that

"Gentlemen, had I served the corrupt interests of the Democratic party as faithfully as I have served the police of New York, for years past, I should stand to-day as the nominee of the Democratic party. (Applause.) I will subscribe myself to the corrupt interests of Tammany Hall I would have been their candidate to-day. I have been faithful to the interests of the people, and for my manhood and honors the subtle incrustment of my party, regardless of my own integrity, that I have been discarded."

When the loyal ROBERT TOOMBS, to whom the manly WOOD regretted that he was not allowed to reveal his sympathy with rebellion and its fiends, reads that, in his foreign retirement, he will probably smile.

MR. CHILDS AND THE "LEDGER."

It is pleasant to chronicle deserved prosperity, and we are very glad to learn that the remarkable success of the Public Ledger newspaper, in Philadelphia, under the direction of GEORGE W. CHILDS, the eminent publisher, is such that he is about erecting the largest newspaper establishment in the world. The Ledger has now the largest edition and circulation of any daily paper but one in the United States, and its great value as an advertising medium is traditional. Its news is copious and fresh, and its comments upon public affairs keen, prompt, and brief, and always unexceptionable in moral tone. It is a curious fact that, with the increase of size in the paper, a single daily sheet of the Ledger is now equal to a whole week's issue when it began, thirty years ago; and this buyer pays only a cent and two-thirds for what cost a cent at that time. The peculiar ability and energy of MR. CHILDS are fitly rewarded; and with his Ledger, his Home Weekly, a family paper, and his American Literary Gazette, essential to all publishers and buyers of books, he appeals to every class in the country and satisfies them all.

MRS. GASKELL

THE death of MRS. GASKELL will be a grief to many friendly hearts in this country, for there was no woman in England of whose sympathy the truest Americans were more sure than of hers. Her fame was sought by travelers from this country, not alone in favor of the author, but in respect for the woman: for the watched our career with an intelligent sympathy which few of her countrymen shared, and with a tranquil faith in the issue of a war of which she learned. Indeed the woman and the author were, in her case, peculiarly one. The wife of a dissenting clergyman, in a manufacturing town, her mind and heart were early engaged with the problem of the life of the laborer. No books in English literature are fuller than hers of a sincere sympathy with the trials of the poor, or show a finer insight into the spiritual forces which relieve them. Her acute sympathy, however, was never morbid, and there is a sweet and healthful serenity even in her profound pity for pathos.

MRS. GASKELL'S "Cranford" is one of the most delightful and humorous domestic idyls. It has a ripeness and felicity of humor which almost the most charming illustration of her power. "Sylvia's Lovers," which, in the days of the war, she dedicated to the American friends: and "Mothers and Daughters," which was scarcely finished at her death, and will be now immediately issued, showed that she had easily held her place at the head of the living female novelists.

MRS. GASKELL was the friend and biographer of MISS BRONTÉ; and we believe there can be little doubt that, although professedly different, they will be considered the two most eminent names for scope of sympathy, force of imagination and characterization, and subtlety of discrimination, among all the female and noted English women who have written novels.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

THE Thirty-sixth Congress began its session December 4, 1865. There were present at the time of assembling forty members in the senate and one hundred and seventy-five in the house of representatives, being all the number of those on the roll of the former body, and all but eighteen of those on the roll of the latter. The roll in the senate the names of no members from the States which took part in the rebellion. SENATOR COLLAMER was elected President of the House on the first ballot, and MR. M'PHERSON was elected clerk.

The Senate was called to order by Vice-President FOSTER. The credentials of MESSRS. LAKE P. POMEROY, Fremont, and JOHN P. STOCKTON, of New Jersey, being presented and accepted, the members took their seats in a body.

Bills were then introduced by MR. Sumner, and ordered to be printed, to secure to the colored people equal civil and abolishing slavery; to also negroes to vote in the District of Columbia; to authorize the trial by military courts of persons of African descent in sections where a large portion of the population is composed of negroes, and in which negroes are parties to the suits, and prescribing the rules by which the decisions of such tribunals shall be made to diminish their population form of government, to be known as the republic of Columbia; to encourage immigration, and to provide for the national debt, and to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of public lands to that end. MR. SUMNER also introduced a resolution declaring that of the adoption of the anti-slavery amendment to the Constitution, it is expedient and important to have representation in Congress on the number of voters instead of on population, and requesting the President to withhold from any loyal citizens of the Southern States.

A like House of Representatives the members were called to order as twelve o'clock by Mr. M'PHERSON, Clerk of the last Congress, who announced the absence of a quorum. When the State of Tennessee was reached Mr. Maynard, elected a representative from that State, presented a petition to make a remark; but as his name was not on the list the clerk declined to entertain it. Mr. Maynard spoke of the reading on unlimited debate took place in regard to the exclusion of the Tennessee members. Mr. Brooks, of New York, denouncing it, and MESSRS. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and WASHBURNE and WILSON, of Illinois, participating in the discussion of it. The matter was settled against the claims of the members from the rebel States.

The President and Senate were then informed that the House was organized, and MR. STEVENS introduced a joint resolution, which, after a suspension of the rules, was adopted by a vote of one hundred and thirty-three to thirty-six, to the effect that a joint committee of nine members of the House and six of the Senate be appointed to inquire and report whether any of the twelve insurrectionary States are now entitled to be represented in Congress, and that said report shall have been made no member from any of said States shall be received into either House.

RECONSTRUCTION.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON, on December 30, issued a proclamation restoring the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in the United States, which had been in force for nearly four years.

The two Houses of the Alabama Legislature met in joint Convention, November 28, and elected MR. GEORGE S. HOUSTON and GEN. WILSON REYNOLDS United States Senators. The steps, GOVERNOR PARSONS is a native of Central New York. He removed to Alabama in 1836. MR. HOUSTON, a native of Tennessee, once represented the Fifth Congressional District of Alabama, and was Governor of the State at the time of the rebellion.

General Reynolds, in his message to the Alabama Legislature, considers the present of reconstruction as practically settled. He says: "The amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery. Alabama is the twenty-seventh State to ratify the proposed amendment. The one more State is required in order to consummate the work.

Governor Humphreys sent, on the 5th instant, a special message to the Mississippi Legislature on the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery, which has been sent to him by the State of Mississippi. The Governor expressed himself favorably to the right of negroes to testify in court. He lays the vagrancy and pauperism in the State to the Freedmen's Bureau. The Legislature has passed a law excluding negroes from the judicial courts in all cases where white men are concerned.

The North Carolina Legislature met at Raleigh, November 28. Hon. S. J. Phillips was elected speaker of the House. On the 1st instant the President received from Governor Holden a telegram announcing the ratification of the Constitutional Amendment by the North Carolina Legislature.

The members of the Virginia Legislature assembled in Richmond on the 4th, organized, and received the Message of Governor Pierpoint. The Governor believes that the Legislature has no power in regard to the franchise. It required, but thinks that they should be allowed to testify in the courts. He tried and pardoned 1,500 cases asserted as white men.

The Legislature of Louisiana on the 24 instant adopted by acclamation a resolution declaring slavery forever abolished.

There having been considerable squeamishness in Texas about the ratification of the Amendment, Governor Hamilton, of Texas, has authorized the organization of special police to arrest the Secessionists to assist in the preservation of order.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE Treasury Department obtained for the month of November two fresh issues, and there will be about a million dollars a week for the next twenty-seven hundred millions. The issue of the present month will be one month over twenty-six millions of dollars. A reduction of twenty millions of dollars a week will be made during the month in the amount of legal-tender notes in circulation.

MR. CHARLES CROSBY MERCER, the supposed rebel person implicated in the murder of Mr. Ogden, in Brooklyn, was captured by Mr. Ogden, after an exciting chase in Lake Pontchartrain, by detective Wonderly and Lieutenant Hall, of the Metropolitan police of the New York police force.

The funeral of the gallant seaman, Quarter-master William Conway, who so nobly refused to land in the face of his country when ordered to do so by the treasonable Mayor of Wilmington, took place in that city on the afternoon of Dec. 3, at the Brooklyn Navy-yard.

MR. HENRY WARD BEECHER, who is well known in the history of the war, will soon be transformed into sterling silver.

It appears from the census reports that the population of the United States tribes in 1860 was 44,021, and that the Territories is 207,845. In the service of the Government during the late war 186,017 Indians.

A terrible disaster occurred on the morning of December 4, on the Erie Railway, several Italians were killed by a train of cars. Belle Haven, in Westerchester County. An express train going at the rate of forty miles an hour, ran into a gang of Italian laborers who had been detained by accident in the way to a freight car which was standing on the track. Eighteen were killed and the engineer brought the train passenger car, along the side of the same, but few escaped without injury. Seven were killed and seventeen wounded.

GENERAL GRANT, on his journey southward, arrived in Raleigh, North Carolina, on November 28, and remained there over Sunday, during which time he took his departure for Charleston. During his stay in Raleigh he had an interview with GOVERNOR HOLDEN, and with the members of the Legislature at his hotel, and, by invitation attended in a body the Episcopal Church, visited the State Capitol and carefully received in speeches of welcome from the two presiding officers.

By order of the Commanding-General of the Department of the Gulf, the Rebel General Buckner military parade, inaugurated on Powder River, Dacotah Territory, by Brigadier-General Connor, and Colonel Maynard, stationed at Fort Dane, in honor of General JOHN L. BOZEE, who fell at the battle of Chickamauga.

We have later news of the Collins overland telegraph expedition. It appears that on the 29th ult. they had been scattered in detached parties along the American and Asiatic coasts, and will spend the winter in surveying routes. Next summer, it is hoped, the work will be so far completed that the telegraph line can be employed in planting poles.

A party of two hundred Cheyenne and Apache Indians on the 26th ult. attacked one of the stages on the Colorado and Denver route, near a place called Cherry Spring, with seven persons, burned all the buildings in that vicinity, with a large amount of goods and provisions, and carried off all the stock.

Congress Block, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, was burned by fire on the morning of the 30th ult. The loss was about sixty thousand dollars.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

COLONEL DUNCAN, on November 13, signed a treaty of peace with Bhotan.

The most important event connected with Englishmen since the assassination of PRESIDENT LINCOLN, by the capture of Stephens, "Head Centre" of the Fenian conspiracy, and the arrest of many of his chief associates, as well as of all in the bands of Government," but "pity, literally like the dew from heaven, drops upon the place beneath." Expectation, were found in Stephens's residence. There remains, however, a considerable number at large, but from every part of Ireland, and Fenianism is now an open volcano, which the Government watches, but which it expects to explode harmlessly. Many arrests and prosecutions existences are finished. "I do not believe," says Bright, "that any particular danger will long exist."

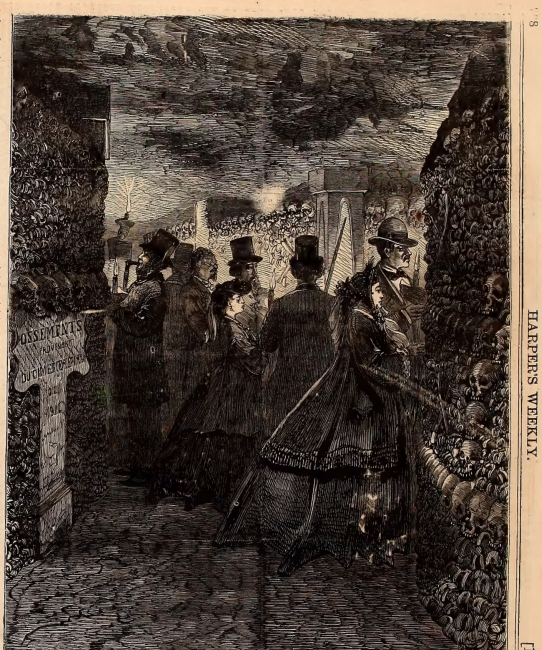
ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

The second batch of correspondence between MR. ADAMS and EARL RUSSELL, which is about to appear in quarter, is now nearly before the situation. MR. ADAMS, in the first letter, says that the Government of the United that he is decided, in view of the reasons given by his predecessor, not to make of complaint, but that attention would not be acceptable to her Majesty's Government, to which EARL RUSSELL replied that no answer to it might now be brought by the President, of umpirage between the two. To propositions of such kind the sentiment of existing differences will be considered as invited by the Government of the United States.

Shortly after EARL RUSSELL owed a dispatch, urging that the first difficulty of the present moment, and he based urges that in no case could her Majesty's Government recognize the right of a belligerent to search on the high of liability for the acts of British subjects committed beyond the limits of British waters. In a subsequent note, dated November 3, EARL RUSSELL tries to strengthen his former argument by saying that the proposition to search on the high seas his Government was negligent in their application of the laws of neutrality, and that the British Government had a right to call upon the United States to indemnify them on the ground of its supposed negligence in the subsequent conduct of the war. In a dispatch of the same date MR. ADAMS that if the British Foreign Enlistment Act should be found inoperative in its present form an Act of Congress the minister complained of might have been passed. EARL RUSSELL replied that the law between the two Acts is not of such a character as to justify the charge.

Subsequently to the above dispatch MR. ADAMS writes to EARL RUSSELL that he has no means at his disposal to submit to a Commission. EARL RUSSELL noted time for the Commission.

SPAIN AND CHILI.



The affair between Spain and Chili is growing more serious than ever. The first shots have been exchanged between the Spanish and Chilian squadrons. A boat of the Spanish ship attempted to land on Valparaiso Bay, when, being warned not to do so, they fired on the Custom-house, by whom the fire was returned. The Spaniards were driven back in confusion, with several killed and wounded, in their fleet. The Spanish Admiral has limited his blockade to Chilian ports, but those are still only open in one for foreign commerce.

PERU.

In Peru the revolution has been terminated by the overthrow and flight of PRESIDENT PRADO, and the flight from the country of President PEZET, and the assumption of the Presidency by Vice-President CANSECO, the leader of the revolutionists.

THE CATACOMBS OF PARIS—L'OSSUAIRE (THE PLACE OF BONES).

A VISIT TO THE GALLERY OF BONES.

THE CATACOMBS OF PARIS.

AMONG all the wonderful sights which the city of Paris has to show, there is one that stands out prominently in the memory of the visitor long after the recollections of the rest are dimmed and their details forgotten. We are speaking of the Morgue, where numbers of people go to look at the faces of the suddenly dead or the drowned through that great partition of glass, behind which they are laid, in waxen stillness, on the marble slabs. But there is a still more extraordinary sight, to which a few years ago, those who went to Paris for the first time had their attention specially directed, but which is now, if not forgotten, very seldom visited, since it is only having special privileges, and no individual inspection is permitted. The Catacombs of Paris, like those of Rome, were, in fact, originally quarries from which the stone was taken to build the city; or, rather, the stones for the first building having been taken from the environs, the suburbs gradually extended over the quarries, so that all that part of Paris beyond the ancient limits of the city rested on this hollow foundation.

The name of Catacombs has been given to the immense extent of quarries under the plain of Montrouge (Montrose) and portions of the left bank of the Seine, since the time when these quarries were used for the deposit of the bones collected in old cemeteries. On the 7th of November, 1785, a decree of the Council was issued suppressing the charnel-house of The Innocents, where, according to the petition of the inhabitants, the number of bodies buried during ten centuries had raised the soil to a height of more than eight feet above the surrounding grounds. This ordinance was successively applied to the other cemeteries.

It is at the entrance of the street Tombe-Issoire that the remains of former Parisian generations find their last asylum, and the portion of the quarries devoted to this sepulture bears the name of L'Ossuaire (the Place of Bones). There are two other entrances to the Catacombs—one near the old "Barrière d'Enfer" for authorized visitors; the other, which serves for casual travelers, is in the plain of Montsouris. That portion of the Catacombs lying under Paris is beyond dispute the most curious. Each subterranean gallery bears the name of the street above it; and the numbers of the houses in the street above have their corresponding numbers in the subterranean gallery, which serve to point out where the works of consolidation ought to be built in case of tumblings in, which occur in spite of all precautions taken.

In collecting the bones together in these Catacombs the skulls were placed, in conjunction with the bones of the legs and arms, in a carefully-arranged series of stacks. Many of these belonged to the victims of the Revolution of 1792, and for these a yearly service was performed after the Restoration. The streets of this strange underground city present an extraordinary appearance, and are not a little incongruous when we consider to what purpose they were adapted. They were marked with names, and very frequently bills, notices, and advertisements were pasted on the walls. M. DE THURY greatly improved this marvelous subterranean charnel-house by stopping the water that dripped through the roof, making galleries through the walls of human bones, which were in some places piled to a thickness of thirty yards; ingeniously contriving to circulate the air through the necks of bottles; cutting channels for the escape of the water; making steps from the lower to the upper excavations; and building pillars to support the roof. These Catacombs were once made the head-quarters of a gang of robbers who infested Paris.

The extent of the excavations is said to be equal to one-tenth of the present superficies of Paris; and, according to the official report issued in 1857, the remains of 3,000,000 persons have been deposited there. The skulls and bones, which are built into walls in the passages, have inscriptions above or below them stating the quarter whence they were removed.

Our readers may imagine the strange and awful effect presented by this city of the dead, when it was recently illuminated by the electric light, that M. NADAR might obtain the photographs from which our engravings are taken.

SHIPWRECK OF THE SCHOONER "ENIGMA"—RESCUE OF THE CREW BY THE BRIG "PEERLESS."

A REMARKABLE SHIPWRECK.

We illustrate on this page one of the most remarkable instances of shipwreck and preservation of life at sea which we ever heard or read of. The following is the statement of a gentleman of Matanzas, who sends us the sketch from which our engraving is made:

"The schooner Enigma, JAMES T. MORSE, Master, sailed from Bath for Mobile on the 2d October, with a cargo of lumber, touched at Charleston and sailed thence on the 19th. On the 23d, near Abaco, she was met by a heavy gale, the vessel was hove to, and the crew, tired by their exertions during the day, turned in, leaving one man on deck. At about eleven o'clock at night a heavy sea caught the vessel's fore-foot, 'tripping,' and completely capsizing her. Of the fate of WILLIAM MAHR, who was on deck, nothing is known. The master and rest of the crew cut their way from the cabin into the hold with a small hatchet, and, after incredible exertions, cut a hole through the bottom of the schooner, and through that got upon the bottom. One of the men, while working in the dark, received a heavy cut from the hatchet which nearly severed his hand. After they had made their way out the vessel rapidly settled, but did not sink, being buoyed up by the cargo of lumber. With daylight they managed to fish from the hole in the bottom several pieces of scantlings and rope, with which they made a rude frame to rest upon, cutting and setting the ends of the timber into the centre-board. On this frail support they remained until November 4, eleven days, without any food other than a flying-fish, which was providentially caught by one of the men, and a small shark, their only drink being what they caught in their hands one day that it rained. On Saturday, the 4th, the brig Peerless, Captain F. L. BOSHOFF, bound to Matanzas from Philadelphia, hove in sight, and [illegible] marter, Mr. BOSHOFF, although a heavy sea [illegible] running, lowered a boat and rescued them. [illegible] of the men had become so weak as to be unable [illegible] stand, and was slung to the lower support of [illegible] frame. He died in about two hours after he [illegible] rescued. His name was JOSEPH ANDERSON. [illegible] names of the survivors are JAMES T. MORSE, Master, CYRUS MORSE, and HENRY SHAFE, eighteen and nineteen years old. They are at present in Matanzas, well cared for by the American Consul, and are nearly recovered from their severe hardships."

THE BRITISH PIRATE SHIP "SHENANDOAH" IN THE MERSEY, LIVERPOOL.—SKETCHED BY AN ENGLISH ARTIST.—[SEE PAGE 737.]

MY COUNSELOR.

EVERY autumn flower by the wayside brought a pang to my heart. Here they were—aster and golden-rod—though August was not yet over. Ere nights and mornings were cold already, however warm it might be at mid-day. Now and then winds blew, those long, desolate, wailing, prophetic winds, such as you never hear in midsummer. My vacation was almost over. I must go back to the tranquil round I should have left unstirred. I felt tired of life as I thought of it. They say poets are born, not made; and I wonder if the same rule does not apply to school-teachers? My mother and my own will had done their best to make me one, but had failed signally. Not that I did not get good enough satisfaction. I understood my business, and was conscientious in its performance, but my heart was not in it. I hated it with a daily increasing disgust.

I was an orphan. My mother had died when I was too young to remember her—my father when I was ten years old. He had left a small sum of money, and a will directing that it should be applied to my education. He wished, as the best inheritance he was able to leave me, that I should be thoroughly well educated, and qualified to maintain myself by teaching.

So, for three years, I had been conscientiously myself," and I had the business executed. I was also so hard for me to be fettered by absolute rules and regulations, to have my time marked off by the ringing of a bell. I panted for freedom. I wanted to haunt picture-sales and libraries—to be at liberty to walk and ride and study. So was I excluded from the ordinary pleasures of young girls for flirtations and liveries. But all these girlish instincts had to be suppressed. For the best hours of my youth I was not my own. The whole of the last year I had been droning myself, for a purpose, every lesson I had learnt—every fact I inscribed in a family where the fast-days outnumbered the feast-days, done violence in every direction to my natural love of pleasure and prettiness—all, that I might have the money to pass my summer vacation in a manner that should afford an entire contrast to my ordinary mode of living.

Not that, after all this self-denial, my means were very extensive when summer came. Still I had enough to buy a few pretty dresses, and go in a quiet way to some pleasure-seeking spot. I had taken up my abode in the near neighborhood of the White Mountains, where tourists came and went continually. I had heard much and seen a little of their beauty—"the strength of the hills"—I had put out of sight, for the time, all the commonplace drudgery of my lot. I was to be the acquaintance for a while of a different sphere of life, girls of my own age—not prettier, not better bred, not more highly born, as regards it, I felt myself the peer of them all—but girls to whom fate had been kinder, who needed to take no thought for the morrow; who had never to be bleonsed, like the lilies and roses, in more than the glory of Solomon. With some of them I became friends even. I had not been without my share of something stronger and dearer than friendship when I came to Cleaton. I had had my little love-change of this gay summer from the old, weary, fettered life. And now the autumn flowers had come, and my pleasure was almost over.

Thinking of all these things I walked slowly along the mountain road. The sky was brilliantly blue. The clear air stimulated me like wine. An impulse came over me—a mad, reckless impulse as ever girl had. I had counted my money that morning, after paying my weekly bill. I had enough, I knew, to keep me there five or six weeks more. I could stay through September, and even then not take back my purses. There was yet time before the first of the month to resign my situation. Should I do it, and trust to fortune for an opportunity to earn my bread when my money was gone? I formed my resolution while I walked. I heard a small phrase—"Now for luck." That was what I would do! If I had deliberated for half a day without a doubt the item for the very thing that frightened me, perhaps I would have come to the rescue—I should have been wiser but I do not deliberate. I turned my steps straight to the house—went to my room, took off my bonnet and shawl, and wrote to the trustees my resignation of my situation as lady-in-chief of the School.

I went down stairs and gave the letter to a messenger to post, then back to my room, and laughed over my folly with a mad disregard of consequences worthy of an opium-eater.

"You leave next week, Madeleine, do you not?" asked Miss Hibbard at dinner.

Miss Hibbard was one of the girls with whom I had formed a summer friendship, chiefly made over a fete in our garden each other by our Christian names, and my listening to her stories of lovers and flirtations with considerable interest, and a considerable amount of slightly envious regret that I had no similar confidences to impart in return.

"No," I said, "I shall not go next week, or any rate. I have almost made up my mind to stay a month longer."

She looked as if she wanted to question me a little more, but was too well-bred, and I betook myself to my dinner-rose with perfect composure.

After all, my situation was not quite so forlorn as you may have inferred. If I failed to obtain employment when my money was spent, I need not starve. There was one house open to me. I could go to my guardian, and be certain of a welcome. He was not a rich man, to be sure, but his heart was as large as his purse was small, and I should be as free as his own children to sit at his board and his fireside. Not that I wanted or meant to presume on this kindness; but there was a difference between the consciousness of possessing such a possible refuge, and the terror which might otherwise have overtaken me of actual want.

I had no idea, however, of telling down ills. After dinner I wrote to this same guardian, and informed him of what I had done. I knew he understood my temperament well enough to take my words coolly when I told him that I would die if I had to go on another year in the old dull round, and begged him to advertise for a situation as governess for me, and find me one as soon as possible. Having thus thrown the responsibility of my next movements on one whom I could safely trust, I threw off with it the load of care and distress which had been oppressing me since the autumn flowers came, and became more like the girl Nature had intended me to be. The thought of returning to that old school-room with its confusion, and yet its certain routine, was unendurable—although the same things to be done, had been resting on me like the Old Man of the Sea—now that I feared it no more, the gayety and lightheartedness of being young in twenty-one years seemed to come to me, and take me by thought or care for the morrow I enjoyed myself hardily.

It was something less than three weeks when I received a letter from my guardian proposing an offer of a situation as governess in a family in the neighborhood of Bolton. The salary was liberal, and the whole arrangement very desirable. It came to me just before tea, and I thought I would answer it when I went to my room for the night. I was super to all well out on the September sunset, and somehow, before I knew it, I found myself walking alone with Judge Hibbard, my friend's father.

I have not mentioned him before. Indeed he had only been in the habit of visiting my friend for a day or two in each week, but for the last two weeks he had been there all the time, and I had become quite accustomed to see him. I suppose I was admired him excessively, but I had never thought of him, certainly, as the hero of any possible love drama. He was a widower, with only this one daughter, two years younger than myself—a man in the very prime of life, with good-looking head I ever saw—a strong, energetic, ardent, thoroughly-cultured gentleman. He had seemed to like to talk to me, and I had liked to hear him, but perfectly free from any designs on him that I presume I had been my best self in his presence. He was a keen lawyer, and this was to me a experienced no embarrassment. We talked for a while about the weather, and then he asked me where I was going. He had looked in other lands—which mirrored their crimson in the Rhine, or bathed the snowy summits of Alps and Pyrenees—while I was at school. We began to speak of more personal topics, and somehow—I hardly know how I came to venture on the foolishness—I told him my circumstances, so far, and asked his advice about accepting the situation. As he was my friend's father, I called him always Mr. Bradshaw, at whose house I purposed to take up my abode, and be able to decide whether the matter proposed to me was eligible.

"Yes," he said, "I do know Mr. Bradshaw, and I should think you might be comfortable in his family. But I should not recommend you to go there you would be more so in mine. In fact, that was what I had meant to say to you to-night."

I started with surprise, an utter unconsciousness of his meaning.

"I am sure Jeannette needs no governess. She is far more accomplished than I am. You must be jesting with me."

"Yes, Madeleine, Jeannette will marry, doubtless, and when she leaves me I shall be all alone. Is it strange that I should wish to secure to myself the pleasant companionship for the coming years? I can not hope that you have learned to love me yet, but perhaps you will consent to try, and to form an idea whether loving me would be possible —whether you could ever consent to be my wife."

I told him very frankly that his words quite surprised me—for I had never, for a single instant, thought of him in that light. I expressed my sense of the honor he had done me, and my desire to answer him the next evening.

With this promise he seemed satisfied, and we talked of other things till I began to form some idea of what manner of man he was; to see that the calm, judicious, self-possessed lawyer was but devoted him to his present position were not all his endowments; that poetry and sentiment and romance were not strangers to him, that he was a man of taste as well as of talent.

That night, alone in my room, I thought the matter all over. I had no particular fancy for governessing, yet I felt, in the depths of my heart, that to be a governess' friend would be a far pleasanter lot than to be obliged to marry a man who did not love me—whom I did not love. The sole question was—did Judge Hibbard love me, and was I capable of loving him?

The disparity in our years did not especially shock me. I was not a romantic girl, and I knew, in fact, but I felt that his longer experience of life had not made him less attractive. I had seen that he was considered one of the handsomest men in his native town, and I had been assured by my friend that he was universally loved by. I should have decided in his favor. But he had not even said so—he had talked to me of his social advantages, which might have given most young ladies a thrill of pleasant expectation, and made them harder for a middle-aged man to refuse. But I was differently organized in my disposition, and I felt like showing him that at least I was not to be purchased by them. I must not appear to be to his wife, and to love him, and then to find out that my love was superfluous or unwelcome. I had been accustomed to be loved. I had been petted in me only a well-bred mistress of his house, a well-informed companion for himself. I had a heart, a passionate, woman's heart, with a strong power of loving. It rose within me, clamoring against being defrauded all its warm and tempestuous rights of life. No, I would not marry Judge Hibbard—I would retain my freedom—I would not break myself against a rock, but would go on to the ocean. Some ship that should be mine some day, mine only.

Then I answered my guardian's letter, and accepted the situation of Mrs. Bradshaw's governess. Afterward I went to bed in a mood of virtuous self-satisfaction, expecting to sleep the sleep of the just. Instead I lay awake half the night, haunted by a strange series of loss—a vague feeling that I was missing something which might have made my life fuller, richer, better worth living. For Judge Hibbard—his position and stately honor—for the ease and elegance which would have been mine as his wife—I had not one regret. I liked such things; but I was no Circassian girl to be bought or sold. The sense of loss—the vague regret—were only for what I thought I might have had in the love of Judge Hibbard and I had loved each other. Believing that we did not, the matter became one with which I had nothing to do, and I tried to put it aside mentally.

The next evening I found myself again walking by his side. The sun had set, and the September moon was flooding the splendid mountain landscape with her silver rays. We walked for a while in silence, and then he said—

"Well, Madeleine, have you thought of that matter?"

"I have."

"And the result?"

I hardly dared meet his eyes, his face looked so eager and earnest in the moonlight.

"I am, indeed, a little afraid of acceptance," I said, slowly, half wishing, even then, that I had something else to tell him. "Next year I shall be Mrs. Bradshaw's governess."

For a little while he did not speak, and the moon shone steadfastly, the night-wind stirred my hair—a bird in a tree said going home to its nest dropped down a gush of quivering melody. The scene, so full of loveliness for me, was spoiled by my thinking me stirred my heart almost to pain. I felt the tears stealing up to my eyes, and was glad when he broke the silence.

"Well, Madeleine, I presume you were right. Of course if you had loved me you would have decided differently. Loving me, you have taken the only true course. When I remember the tenderness of your years, I wonder at myself, and the hope I had of pleasing you."

I longed to tell him that it had not been the years, but that I feared I loved him as he was, he did not love me. I had not the courage, and again silence fell between us, which after a time, as before, he broke.

"I can trust you, Madeleine," he said, with grave tenderness, "to feel a strong and peculiar interest in your welfare. It is fitter, perhaps, that I should be your friend than your lover—in such a capacity I feel that I must guard you from making any rash promises to me. I will not make me one promise—one which Jeannette made me two years ago—that you will never say yes to any suitor whom you have not tried the matter over with me? I know more of men than you possibly can. Perhaps I shall be able to save you from such terrible shipwreck as I have unfortunately come to my private friend knowledge."

I did not realize then how hard it would be to keep such a promise—his tender earnestness seemed to compel me. I felt that I owed him something—that I gave him something in return.

"Remember," he said, "I hold you solemnly bound. If you had had a father to watch over your interests you never have asked this; as it is, I am sure that I am right."

It was still a month before I went away from Conway, and Judge Hibbard remained there all that time. He did not avoid me, or I him, and his society pleased me—society constantly strengthened my conviction that he never had felt for me any of that fervor and tumult of passion of which novels, I thought in those days, no love was worthy a woman's taking.

At last I went to Mr. Bradshaw's. I had never enjoyed half so much the process of the journey, and buy me a full bonnet, and a new pair of gloves. There my mental state of as of an invalid, and a soon found that I was expected in some degree to take the place of mistress of the house to the family when she was indisposed. To this duty even the children's lessons were considered second to me, and I spent much more time with the society than I had expected. It was a great change from the dull, droning routine of my school-teaching days. I discovered that I was not only young but handsome—that, like the milkmaid in the old song, my face was my fortune.

The young heir of Clifton Bradshaw's young gentlemen friends were in the habit of dropping in now and then to inspect me at home and out of them the habit seemed to grow wonderfully. There was one very decided impression which my familiar acquaintance with the young gentlemen made upon my mind, and that was a profound conviction of their inferiority to Judge Hibbard. Not that they were not fine young fellows, every one of them—well-bred, well-bred, of sound morals forth that I knew, and quite worthy of respect. Only they did not have something which he possessed. There was an immaturity of judgment about them—a lack of experimental knowledge—a sweet ward of first love in life—a failure to understand what their work was. If I had never seen him, doubtless my eyes would not have been opened to their defects; but, unconsciously, I had made of him a standard, judged by which these younger men were all found wanting. I took some pains to distribute my courtesies among them equally, and to keep them at a distance.

But in one case these efforts failed signally—that of Mr. Clinton Bradshaw himself. It was in vain for me to keep him at a distance. Nothing short of a direct answer, I could see, would ever satisfy him. When he told me his love there was no lack of all the warmth and intensity in which I had thought the Judge deficient. His earnestness forced upon me the conviction that I was, at last, loved dearly—loved in very truth for myself. And yet, strange by enough, it failed to move me, even so much as Judge Hibbard's fewer and cooler words had done.

Mindful of the promise with which I was bound, I asked a few days to decide, and then went to my own room to think the matter over. The more I thought the more favorably I looked upon the proposal. Of this man's love for me I entertained no doubt. In his eyes I should be perfect and precious. I thought such love as his alone could put cold to awaken a corresponding regard on my own; for, finding my heart so unmoved by all these things, I began to doubt my capacity for such love. It was an opposite affection, and therefore to consider chiefly the feeling I inspired rather than that I myself experienced.

The next day I went into town, and made my way to Judge Hibbard's office. I found him a cordward thing to do, as I began to realize fully during the few moments I sat waiting in the anteroom; but I would not retreat from the promise I had given. Once admitted to my Counselor's presence, I told the matter before him in words as few and plain as possible.

"I know nothing against Mr. Clinton Bradshaw," I said; "I have had no pressure on all in my favor. The one question is," and he turned and looked at me searchingly, "do you love him?"

"That will be, of course," I said, "if I marry him."

"But you did not dare to risk the that in another case," he persisted.

"But Mr. Bradshaw loves me," I answered, driven to the last line of defense, "and I love nobody. Oh, Judge Hibbard, I am very lonely, and love is so sweet."

"Do you think he loves you better than I did?"

"At least he has told me so, and you did not. You had—" and there I stopped, feeling my face growing red.

"If I had," he exclaimed, eagerly, "would the result have been any different? Madeleine, child, do not trifle with me. If I had, would it have done any good? God knows I do love you, and did then, with all the strength of my heart. I did not talk about it, for I would not persuade you against your own heart, or make my forty-two years ridiculous in your eyes by a boyish fervor.

I knew when he said that, and I met his eyes growing pale, I wanted more, what it was that I was wanting—that in this one man only, of all the world, my heart could find absolute rest.

Do I need to tell you what answer I made to Clinton Bradshaw? After all, he consoled himself easily, and married Jeannette Hibbard when I had been for a year her step-mother.

A GUERRILLA'S DIARY.

THE cold-blooded atrocity and fiendish practices of the Border-State guerrillas during the rebellion can only be appreciated by those who have resided near the scenes of their outrages, or have been subjected to their barbarous treatment. As the commencement of the Missouri troubles, hovering in the balance between loyalty and rebellion, offered great temptations to Missouri men for enterprising marauders. She had not long to wait for their appearance, and Quantrell, Bill Anderson, Thrailkill, and a host of others, sons of either sex, made their names in letters of blood on nearly every acre of her soil.

A short time since a pocket Diary, formerly belonging to and kept by the notorious Joe Hart, fell into my possession, from which I propose making a few extracts, which I trust may prove interesting. Of the authenticity of this Diary there can be no question, as it was taken from the dead body of the grim guerrilla. It was subsequently identified by one of his men before a court-martial, and certain extracts from it admitted as evidence. It is a well-worn book, having printed headings for each day in the year, commencing with January 1st, and ending Sundays in 1863." Its leaves are crumpled and soiled, and their edges stained with the blood of him who was wont to carefully and methodically note which it tells. On the first page is recorded, in a clear but rather delicate handwriting, the name of "Joseph L. Hart, Bates County Border Rangers, of Savannah, Andrew County, Missouri, formerly of Bardstown, Nelson County, Kentucky." All the entries, one on each day of the year, were written by the same hand, resembling more the penmanship of a lady than of one accustomed to the use of sabre and pistol. On the second page, under date of January 9, 1863, are the following lines, which I copy verbatim:

"REMEMBRANCE.

"Frank I can not forget
Nor will I love you well
Your smile is evidencest
You whisper dwell
You haunt me forever
I worship you yet
Our late endearment
Will linger forever."

This interesting effusion is signed "Miss M. Lou Claybrook, Clay County, Missouri," and the name of that poetical young damsel appears more than once in the pages of the Diary. While the gentle guerrilla was indulging in his "tits enterments" the literary lady was composing her tender verses.

Another book, leaving therein these little traces of affection and false orthography which should recall her to his mind when he should be far away in the performance of those diabolical deeds, the telling of which made his "whispers a spell."

On the next page are two lines of a poem which the jolly Joseph had consumed—for he was a man of sentiment, and indulged in poetic fancies—and has reference, no doubt, to the military operations then being prosecuted in his native State, Kentucky:

"The land of my home is fitting,
Flitting from me afar."

If Joseph were now alive to complete the poem, he would probably admit that Kentucky hasn't "filled" so much as she might have done.

The entry for the 12th of April—at which time Joseph was gathering together his clan—records that they "ran into the militia and fired a few shots.—B. Wood and W. Gough were along."

The "B. Wood" here alluded to is of the brother of Fernando the First, who has acquired considerable notoriety in similar company. Joseph proceeds, with his company of cut-throats, to the vicinity of

"Rochester, Andrew County—hyred over all day—very warm—a pleasant breeze is blowing up from the Sunny South—quite warm on upper, throwing her sable mantle o'er the scene, and I am preparing to start for Hackberry Ridge."

It is a fault in our guerrilla's style of composition that he allows his fancy to descend too abruptly from the poetic to the practical. On Hackberry Ridge, he recovered by the light of his sweet-heart's eyes, and records the event as follows:

"I am with Calvert, Saunders, and Todd. Here at their stopping-place. I am for my sweet-heart, Miss A. V. Kimison. Virtie came, God bless her little soul, and we passed a pleasant day together. This, the 14th day of the 4th Dan., 1865, at Rosville. Night has come on, and I am going down to the neighborhood of St. Joseph, where there are said to be some good horses, which we need. This has been a pleasant day, and she happened so far of my life."

The fickleness of man is proverbial, and the entry made in Joseph's Diary on the following day shows that he was not free from that pleasant little vice, and leaves the impression that he has only been trifling with the affections of his dear "Virdie." He says:

"Layed over all day near St. Joseph—saw many friends, but no sweet-hearts—like it well as I had been there before me. I have been reading Washington Irving's works, and among them one entitled 'The Broken Heart,' which has caused me to determine never to expose my heart to any little sweet-heart shall not have cause to complain again."

The "Broken Heart" evidently made a deep impression upon the susceptible Bushwhacker, for after reading it he returned to his "Virdie," and then breathes forth his soul's ecstasy:

"I am now in company with my fearest sweet-heart, and Time is fast passing away on Golden Wings o'er me and her when I have best of all on Earth. To-day is a pleasant day, and the most stillness of all days that Sabbath is plainly to be noticed. Nothing breaks its Heavenly stillness except the soft rustling of the leaves above and the mournful cooing of the Turtle Dove, aided by the cheerful song of many other birds. The evening now draws and my heart is filled with sadness to think that I and my girl must soon part, and perhaps forever. Oh, sweet, sweet midnight—Holy Hour! All the world is wrapped in dream and sleep; but I am still sitting by my Virdie's side, my arm and left side stolen around her waist—delightfully I press her to my beating Heart, and one, two, three, yes, half a dozen sweet kisses I steal from her coaxing lips, and the clock's hour I bet! We part! Oh, shall I ever forget this hour! Shall I ever forget the glance of that dark Eye! the sweet, mournful smile of that Full Face! the soft thrilling pressure of that Lilly White Hand! Never! never! Never! Never!

CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK CITY.—THE GRAND

DRIVE.—Sketched by A. R. Waud.—[See Page 794.]

THE DRIVE IN CENTRAL PARK.

CENTRAL PARK, the great play-ground of New York City, was first officially proposed in a message addressed by Mayor Kingsland, April 5, 1851, to the Board of Aldermen. The aldermen were immediately to work. At first it was thought that 100 acres would be sufficient, but the people were not satisfied with this confined space; an area of 800 acres was determined upon. The Central Park is more than twice the size of either Regent's or Hyde Park in London.

The total cost of the lands taken for Central Park up to January, 1860, was about five and a half millions of dollars. The Board of Commissioners was organized May 1, 1857. Since that time the receipts of the Board have amounted to about four and one half millions, nearly all of which has been expended from year to year in improvements on the Park. This expenditure is over and above the cost of the ground.

One of the most prominent features of Central Park is the Drive, which we illustrate in our double-page engraving. This drive is a spacious Macadamized road for vehicles, with a foot-path on either side. It makes the entire circuit of the ground, commencing at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. In its serpentine course it embraces all the great architectural and scenic features of the Park: the lakes, bridges, lawns, and reservoirs. During the year 1864 one mile was added to the Drive, and the whole, extending over nine miles and a half, is now complete. The scene between the hours of three and five P.M. is magnificent. The Drive is thronged with vehicles of every variety known to fashion, and some which are not. Of late a great feature has been the large number of female charioteers.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXXII.

ON GUARD.

SAXON was fixed in his determination not to have recourse to the law. In vain the banker entreated permission to call in the aid of Mr. Nicodemus Kidd; in vain represented the urgency of the case, the magnitude of the stakes, and the difficulty—it might almost be said, the impossibility—of laying any thing before a tribunal in their own unassisted persons. To all this Saxon only replied that there were but three witnesses to Trefalden, and, however what might, he would not disgrace that old Cornish name by bringing his cousin before a criminal tribunal. This was his stand-point, and nothing could move him from it.

A little after midnight the banker left him, and, repairing straight to Pentonville, roused the virtuous Keckwitch from his first sleep, and sat with him in secret council for more than an hour and a half. By three o'clock he was back again in Saxon's chambers, and by five, which is the first gray of the misty September morning was visible overhead, the two young men had alighted from a cab at the top of Sidole Lane and were briskly patrolling the deserted pavement.

Dawn came, and then day. The shabby suburban sparrows woke up in their dewy places, and, after much preliminary chirruping, came down and hopped familiarly in the path of the watchers. Presently a sweep came out at his brushes over his shoulder, and was followed by three or four laborers going to work toward a white, that he should never come back again. Madam had been in hysterics ever since. Poor madam! Such a kind, devoted husband—and too— But there, what could one expect? Men were such brutes.

"Not all brutes, my dear Mrs. Filmer," wheezed the head clerk, tenderly reproachful.

Whereupon Mrs. Filmer blew her head, and believed that there wasn't so much difference between the best and the worst as some folks imagined.

"There's myself, for instance," said Mr. Keckwitch. "I abhor perfidy; I do indeed, ma'am."

"Ah, so you say, Mr. Keckwitch," sighed the housekeeper.

"I can prove it to you, Mrs. Filmer. If you'll get me a sight of that letter, so that I could examine the writin' and postmark, I'll go down at once to the City Police Office, where I've friends quarters that I know of; and if I don't succeed in findin' out which way your scamp of a master's gone, I give you leave never to speak to me again."

"Ah, my dear," sighed the housekeeper.

"Mean it, too, my dear Mrs. Filmer," wheezed the head clerk, tenderly reproachful.

Whereupon Mrs. Filmer blew her head, and believed that there wasn't so much difference between the best and the worst as some folks imagined.

"There's myself, for instance," said Mr. Keckwitch. "I abhor perfidy; I do indeed, ma'am."

"Ah, so you say, Mr. Keckwitch," sighed the housekeeper.

"

"Oh yes, if you like; but you'll find there's no such place."

"Did Mrs. Riviere seem to be much worse before she left here?"

"No. We thought she was better, and so did Miss Rivers."

Saxon turned reluctantly toward the door.

"Thank you," he said. "I wish you could have told me more."

"I suppose you are a friend of the family?" said the girl, inquisitively.

Saxon nodded.

"You can't tell me, I suppose, whether Mr.—"

"Fourth?"

"Ay—whether Mr. Forsyth was engaged to Miss Riviere?" and he, with some hesitation.

She screwed her mouth up, and jerked her head expressively.

"They weren't when they left here," she replied; "but you might call see how it would be before long."

Then, seeing the trouble in the young man's face, she added, quickly:

"On his side, you know. He worshiped the ground she walked upon; but I don't believe she cared a brass farthing for him."

To which Saxon only replied by thanking her again, and turned despondingly away.

He would go to St. John's Wood; but he felt beforehand that it would be useless. It was to be expected that William Trefalden would give a false address. It was, of course, a part of his plan to do so.

In the midst of these reflections, just as he had reached the further end of the terrace, the girl came running after him.

"Sir, Sir," she said, breathlessly, "I've just thought of Doctor Herbert. He was Mrs. Riviere's doctor, and he'll be sure to know where they went."

"God bless you for that thought, my girl!" said Saxon. "Where does he live?"

"I don't know; but it's somewhere about Camberwell. He'll be sure to find him."

"Yes, yes—easily. And again Saxon dipped his fingers into his waistcoat pocket. But the girl shook her head.

"I lord love you!" said she, "I don't want any more of your money—you've given me too much already."

And with this she laughed and ran away.

Saxon jingled back into his cab, and directed to be driven to the first chemist's shop on the road.

"For the chemists," muttered he to himself as he rattled along, "are sure to know all about the doctors."

CHAPTER LXXXVI.

DOCTOR FISHER.

DOCTOR FISHER dwelt in a big, stucco-fronted, many-windowed house, with gates and a portico—a detached house—in Camberwell. He stood back from the road, as if with a silly sense of its own superiority to the humbler dwellings around about—a house before whose grim portals no organ boy would presume to linger, and no beggar to set up his impertinent whine. A solemn-looking servant in a sad-colored livery opened the door and ushered Saxon to the physician's presence.

Dr. Fisher was a massive man, with an important manner, and a deep rolling voice like the pedal pipes of an organ. He received his visitor courteously, begged him to be seated, and replied politely and readily to all Saxon's inquiries. Mrs. Riviere was indeed dead. She died about a fortnight before, and was buried in Norwood cemetery. The Riviere family had removed from Camberwell about two, or it might be nearer three, months previous to this catastrophe. During the first six or eight weeks of her sojourn at Sydenham Mrs. Riviere had gained strength, and was so far improved as to be on the point of undertaking a voyage to Madeira, when she unfortunately took that cold which resulted in her death. Dr. Fisher did not attend Mrs. Riviere's funeral. He believed that Miss Riviere and Mr. Forsyth were the only mourners. He had never had the honour of meeting Mr. Forsyth, but he had heard both Mrs. and Miss Riviere speak repeatedly of their so-soon at Sydenham Mrs. Riviere had gained strength, and was so far improved as to be on the point of undertaking a voyage to Madeira, when she unfortunately took that cold which resulted in her death. Dr. Fisher did not attend Mrs. Riviere's funeral. He believed that Miss Riviere and Mr. Forsyth were the only mourners. He had never had the honour of meeting Mr. Forsyth, but he had heard both Mrs. and Miss Riviere speak repeatedly of their so-soon to be united daughter and friend. He had no objection to him as a friend to whom they were bound by many ties of gratitude and regard. Miss Riviere, he believed, was well. He had called upon her in the morning of the day following that on which her mother was buried, but not since. Her present address was Beulah Villa, Sydenham. He regretted that he had no further information to offer; proceeded that he was entirely at his visitor's service; and wished him a gracious "good-morning."

Ushered once more by the solemn lackey, Saxon pushed on at once to Sydenham.

Beulah Villa proved to be one of a series of semi-detached houses in a quiet-looking avenue, looking some fields, about half a mile from the Crystal Palace. His cab had no sooner pulled up, however, before the gate than an ominous card in the dining-room window prepared him for a fresh disappointment.

Miss Riviere had left nearly a week ago.

"She went away, Sir, the second day after her poor mother was dead," explained the new woman of the house, a cheery, kindly, good-humored-looking body, with floury hands and a white apron on. "She couldn't abide the place, pretty dear, after what had happened."

"If you will be so kind as to oblige me with Miss Riviere's present address—"

"Well, Sir, I'm sorry to say that is just what I can not do," interrupted the landlady. "Miss Riviere didn't know it herself—not to be certain about it."

"But surely something must have been said—something by which one could form some idea," said Saxon. "Do you think she was going abroad?"

"Oh, dear no, Sir. She was going to the seaside."

"You are sure of that?"

"Yes, Sir—positive."

"And yet is it possible that no one place was mentioned as being more likely than another?"

"Two or three places were mentioned, Sir, but I took no account of the names of 'em."

"You can't remember even one?"

"No, Sir—I can't, indeed."

"Try—pray try. Do you think you could remember if I were to repeat the names of several sea-side places to you?"

His intense earnestness seemed to strike the woman.

"I can very sorry, Sir," she said, "but I have no more idea of them than the babe unborn. I don't believe I should know them if I was to hear them—I don't, indeed."

"Did Miss Riviere leave your house—alone?"

"No, Sir. Mr. Forsyth went with her."

Saxon almost ground his teeth at that name.

"Mr. Forsyth is very often here, I suppose," he said.

"Very often, Sir."

"Almost every day?"

The woman looked at him with a mixture of curiosity and suspicion that showed plainly what she thought of this cross-examination.

"Why, yes, Sir," she replied, reluctantly. "I suppose it was almost every day lately."

The young man thanked her, and turned sadly away. At the bottom of the garden he paused.

"You don't happen to know to which railway terminus they went?" he asked, as a last chance.

She shook her head.

"Indeed, Sir, I do not," she answered. "I wish I did."

Saxon could even find the cabman who drove them—

The landlady clasped her hands together.

"There, now!" she exclaimed. "Why, to be sure, they went in one of Davis's fly!"

Saxon pounded up the steps again.

"You dear, good soul!" he said. "Where shall I find this Davis? Where are his stables? Where does he ply?"

She told him quickly and clearly—the second turning to the left, and then up a lane. And could not be very far off. Davis's stables.

He scarcely waited to hear the last words. Full of hope and excitement, he dashed into his cab again, and was gone in a moment.

OVER THE WAY.

Goest in her childlike purity
Over the golden sky;
Fading away in the light so sweet,
Where the silver stars and the sunbeams meet,
Over the way.

Over the bosom tenderly
The pearl-white hands are pressed;
The lashes lie on her cheeks so thin—
Where the blue veins of the eyes hath been—
Shutting the blue of her eyes within
The pure lids closed to rest.

Over the sweet brow lovingly
The golden hair is smoothed;
She was so fragile that Love sent down
From his heavenly gems the soft bright crown,
To shade her head with its waves so brown,
Light as the dimpling air.

Gone to sleep with the tender smile
Frozen on her silent lips
By the fervent kiss of the Lord so very breath,
Cold in the clasp of the angel Death,
Like the last faint fall of a wearied breath,
Whose bloom the white frost nips.

Robin—hushed in your downy bed
Over the swinging bough—
Do you miss her voice from your soft night crown,
When the dew in the heart of the rose is set,
Till its velvet lips with the essence wet
In silence are closed?

Rose-bud—under your shady leaf
Hid from the sunny day—
Do you miss the glance of the eye so bright,
Whose blue was heaven to your timid sight?
It is beaming now in a world of light
Over the starry way.

Hearts—where the darling's head hath lain,
Hush into peace!
Do you know that the touch of her gentle hand
Doth brighten the harp in the unknown land?
Oh, she will be there in the angel band
Over the starry way!

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

EVERY body is supposed to feel good-natured and charitably disposed after hearing a sermon in behalf of charity, and as the good hortative's harder continues, long after this festival, to send forth especially choice vinula, this state of mild magnanimity is expected to continue a while. There is no more fitting time to let one kindly feel how much more than the Fifth of November, the Thanksgiving and Christmas. Winter has come, and the poor are keenly feeling the pinches of cold and hunger, and so not to detract from good deeds by the knowledge that many of our city beggars are impostors; but by following a well-ordered plan of charity, as many of our churches almost every one might easily find one family, who, with very little effort, might be made warmer, happier, and better all through coming cold winter.

The Continental correspondent of the American Literary Gazette does not credit ladies with much love of books or of domestic peace. At any rate, his advice to men is, "Love books;" for enjoyment and occupation; but, "Marry a clever wife," for peace, because books are unassailable, and they are sent to an early grave. We conclude he has had some experience. Probably he gave his wife a lecture on economy with the household money one morning, and coming home at night with a bundle of books, she retorts, à la Camille. "Five dollars for Alfred's Cyclopedia, and a hundred new volumes on theft! Good gracious, Mr. Caudle, that's half our year's watermeal! And then you must give three dollars and a half for that man Agate's 'Doctrine of a Future Life,' as if all you, Agate, or any body else knew about a future life were not in the Bible, which you could get for the mere asking at the Bible Society's office. Money thrown away! Just as you threw away five dollars a year ago for Knox's Arctic Explorations. What in the world are those Arctic regions to you or any body else—they are nothing but a huge refrigerator. Darwin on the John Pyndrin? Do you know him? Did he ever invite you to dinner? Did he ever send you a complimentary ticket to a ball? Well, then, so much the worse for you to be spending your money for his book. He's a person whom all that are dead and gone. Why, Mr. Caudle, it is ten minutes past nine, and you don't seem inclined for bed. Finish Agate! Finish your own newspapers are you going to read? Do you mean to break down your health as well as reduce your self-denial to bankruptcy to supply you with gas and coal?" We suppose that at this point Mr. Caudle turned off the gas and went obediently to bed.

Apropos to Caudle's ever-ready following song, descriptive of

THE THREE-TAILED BASHAW.

You have read or have heard of that valiant of males,
The far-famous Turkish Bashaw of three tails.
Over a hundred wives owned this mighty lord's sway,
Who makes it a point that his word shall be law,
In a bad, horrible way, this three-tailed bashaw,
As a three-tailed bashaw.

At actual fighting he's not very bold,
But oh! how he rules his household!
He borrows from Satanus his method of war,
And conquers his foes with a goldacre jaw.
Oh! beware the tongue of a three-tailed bashaw,
Of a three-tailed bashaw.

If his breakfast is ready he's sure to be late,
But if it is not, why, then he's in a state!
If you argue, he swears you're Nonsense!" or "Pshaw!"
For nothing but action he's ever known law.
Oh! a hungering, hurrying three-tailed bashaw,
As a three-tailed bashaw.

While his wife puts the breakfast things back on the shelf
He sits down with the newspaper all by himself;
He reads of the battles that are made of the war,
But won't read her the story that makes him "feel ha!"
He is such an unnatural three-tailed bashaw,
As a three-tailed bashaw.

Then he goes to his office or to see the play,
And his wife breathes in peace 'cause he's out of the way;
But while he is gone she's not safe in her seat,
She finds it is like making bricks without straw
To keep house with the help of a three-tailed bashaw,
Of a three-tailed bashaw.

At his dinner, no matter how much he may eat,
He is sure to find fault with the cook and the meat;
The entrée is burned, and the lambs is raw,
And the joint isn't fit to wish dog to gnaw.
Oh! I wouldn't be cook to a three-tailed bashaw,
To a three-tailed bashaw.

On Sunday the house must be perfectly still;
He must have no children, no wife, who's more. he will.
It breaks the commandments for boys to hurrah!
Or cherry to whistle. Moses is far away from the law
Than a thoroughly orthodox three-tailed bashaw,
A three-tailed bashaw.

Young lady! not married, but meaning to be,
Accept, I implore you, this caution from me.
Don't marry your lover, unless you make you a vower,
Nor give your fair hand in exchange for the paw
Of an educated three-tailed bashaw,
Of a three-tailed bashaw.

And, gentlemen, listen, a word in your ears—
You had better encore me with laughter and cheers;
For if my words touch you, you'll find the true gist
The ladies will think that he doesn't because
He is one of those three-tailed bashaws,
Old three-tailed bashaws.

A rascally attempt was recently made to obtain the best envelope of a kind which has been genuine in one of the mills of Paterson, New Jersey. It seems that one received a quantity of envelopes with a fancy border, and was awarded a premium, by an association called the "National Protective Union. Only $10 or $20 for a ticket, giving a chance for ready wealth." Shortly after the lucky gift received a second communication, giving all the particulars, and a circular setting forth the charms of such concerns. To a poor girl it was an irresistible temptation; and she was about forwarding the $20 when a friend became cognizant of the matter, and advised her to keep her money where she could be assured of its safety.

The Strong divorce trial still continues to fill our daily newspapers with details. Public sentiment should "against giving needless publicity to such disclosures. The publication of these details encourages knowing the facts which are now laid open to the world, could invite such an exhibition is utterly incomprehensible.

In general, we are opposed to giving our readers any remedy or recipe which has not been tested by us or by some one whom we personally know. But, remedies, sympathy for his fellow-sufferers, has sent us a remedy for chilla sad fever, which have never had chills and fever, and we don't think it worth while to contract the disease for the sake of trying the remedy. It is a simple remedy, if we understand it, and those who are afflicted may reap the benefit of it. Here it is, verbatim et literatim.

REMEDY FOR CHILLS AND FEVER.

1 oz. Sulphate of Quinine.
1 oz. Columbo Root—Pine.
1 oz. Gentian Root.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Take wine glass full 3 times per Day for Robust Grown persons—Children less than the Fifth in Bowley and Tables upon full 1 time per Day after chill is Broken for 9 Days.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Gaskell, the popular English writer, whose death occurred some time since, was the wife of a Unitarian clergyman, and for several years resided in Manchester, although most of her work of her death has been written in that city. Her first novel, "Mary Barton," was published in 1848, and is said to have been written by the advice of a friend to divert her mind from the oppression of a domestic affliction. Perhaps her "Life of Charlotte Brontë" has been the most popular of all her works; and though not free from inaccuracies, its fascinating style, and the high powers of its author, will make it a work which will be an eagerly sought for as the most entertaining novel. Mr. Gaskell's last work, "Wives and Daughters," is now in press, and will soon be published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

A romantic story has recently been published—the "Love Life" of Dr. Kane. It seems that he was secretly married to Miss Margaret Fox; but the social position of the lady being inferior to that of his own family, the marriage was not publicly recognized. At his death Dr. Kane left money in trust for the support of his wife; but his relatives have withheld it from her, and brought her character into question. This "Love Life" seems to have been published for the purpose, in part, of vindicating her character.

A sort of contest has recently been going on between the French and English hairdressers—ludicrous in some of its aspects; but which has had the effect to bring forth a public various novel opinions respecting hairdressing in general. One who signs himself "An English Hairdresser," writes as follows:

"Whatever fashion may be in vogue, the darker shades of hair should be dressed as much as possible in the fashion so prevailing; while, on the other hand, the fair and golden locks should be opened up and dressed with the Asiatic-like as possible. Curl and flowing wave, not 'tortured ringlet,' should be the order of the night, and not ironfuctions. I believe the present fashion of tuft-dressing is a revival of the same in ladies generally of any style since the days of Louis XIV., when powder was generally worn, and which is perhaps the most universally becoming style that has ever been introduced. At both periods the forehead was left unadorned, no narrow-minded idea existed to be, in the former, the hair, being drawn directly back and lifted high, regardless of the many accompaniments of powder, rouge, and paint to soften the otherwise bold expression of the face. In the latter, our present, thanks to her Imperial Majesty the Empress of the French—and not less, though in a different manner, to Her Highness the Princess of Wales—there is a far closer following of Nature's guidance than has ever been adopted."

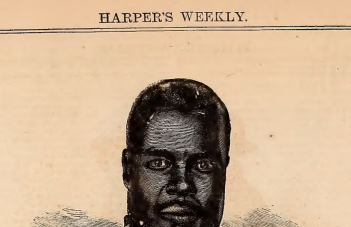
At a wedding which recently took place at Vienna, between a wealthy Jew and Jewess, a somewhat unwelcome gift was introduced among the bridal presents, which were exhibited according to custom. It consisted of a package of papers secured by a string, and on the outside the following inscription: "Inclosed is the tender correspondence between your parents and the writer." At the end appeared "Your sincere friend." On the examination of its contents the effect on the bridegroom, bride, and friends may easily be imagined. The party was soon brought to a close, and endless trouble commenced with the honeymoon. It is positively asserted that the day following the marriage the bridegroom gave instructions for a divorce from his new bride; but it is doubted if he can obtain it by the Austrian law for the time specified.

At a recent meeting of medical men in Edinburgh some statements were made in regard to a toy for children, which has since proved to be fatal. In one case, with the careful consideration of parents who are tempted to purchase them for delighted children. It was asserted that the chemical toy, called "Pharoh's Serpents," is composed of a highly explosive and poisonous compound, which is the sulpho-cyanide of mercury. Experiments have shown that one half of a sixpenny Pharoh's serpent is sufficient to poison a large-sized rabbit in an hour and a half's experience. A less dose also destroys life, but takes longer to do so. The toy, therefore, is much too deadly to be permitted as merely amusing; and seeing that it can be purchased by every school-boy, and be brought home to the nursery, it is rather alarming to think that there is enough of poison in one of the serpents to destroy the life of seven children; and we hope that the sale may be forthwith stopped as a crime with bright tin-foil, and much resembles in outward appearance a piece of chocolate or a comfit. It is certainly an anomaly in the law of the kingdom that a grain of arsenic can not be purchased except under proper restrictions, and that such articles as Pharoh's serpents, containing as deadly a poison, may be sold in any quantity, and by anybody, to children in the open street.

Education among the common people in England seems to be gaining ground. The Working Woman's College, Queen's Square, London, has recently completed its second year with a very satisfactory programme of classes. The subjects taught include arithmetic, grammar, English language and grammar, English literature and history, physiology, botany, Latin, drawing, French, and vocal music. There are also classes every evening for reading, writing and writing, and to prepare students to enter the college classes. The college affords great educational advantages to women of various employments, including teachers, dress-makers, domestic servants, and the like. The classes are taught gratuitously by ladies and gentlemen, who hope "that mutual help and fellowship may be promoted among all members of the college, teachers and pupils, by the educational work of the classes and the social life of the evening meetings." The college, provided with periodicals and newspapers, and the library, are open every evening from seven to ten, and are made pleasantly attractive to students.

ME MISERABLE! WHICH WAY SHALL I FLY!

KING CHOLERA has crossed the broad Atlantic, and is now looking out for convenient quarters with a view to pitching next spring and summer among us. Thanks to our local Government, the streets of our favored city are invitingly prepared for his presence and, by the courtesy of the owners of our wealthiest property-holders, numberless tenement houses stand ready to offer him cutting-room when he wearies of his excursions. Inhospitable as it may seem, however, most of our fellow-citizens manifest a strong disposition to unfriendliness manifested in the ceremonies attendant upon His Majesty's public reception, and many a succulent alderman and reluctant tenement-landlord, in advance of the prospective pestilence he has done so much to pave the way for, now propounds to himself the query of our caption. At whom you will, you find knots of timorous individuals discussing the probable advent of the epidemic and anxiously comparing all possible modes of escape from its dreaded ravages. Cholera is the one absorbing topic of private conversation and public print. Boards of physicians, the Monroe Doctrine, Fenian bonds—nay, even the fluctuations of the Stock Exchange, have fallen into the background in presence of the one theme uppermost in the popular mind.



It is not at all likely that cholera will develop itself during the coming winter in New York; but there is every probability that with the opening of spring we shall witness the commencement of a more devastating visitation of the disease than has ever before scourged our city. The grounds for this supposition are obvious. The excessive condensation of our population, especially in the east-side and the lower portions of the city, and the consequent defect of proper ventilation and cleanliness; the poisonous exhalations from neglected accumulations of decomposing garbage and obstructed or insufficient sewers; the vile, noisome gases liberated from the thousand and one bone-boiling nuisances, slaughter-houses, and factories of different kinds which hem in our population with a baleful belt, like sentries standing guard against the entrance of pure air; all these are not only positively deleterious by introducing morbific elements into the system; but negatively, by depriving the blood of its adequate supply of oxygen, exert a powerful influence in depressing vitality, increasing the liability to infection of those persons exposed to their action, and lessening the chances of recovery. That all or any of these inducements to disease will be abated before next spring is, of course, beyond the wildest imagining of any one conversant with the workings of our city Government. All that is left for us, therefore, is to inquire what individual precautions may be taken against the fell invader, or what avenues of flight may be free from his pursuing strides.

The question, "Is cholera contagious?" is frequently asked, and upon its satisfactory solution much depends as to the proper prophylactic measures to be adopted. Strictly speaking, this query must be answered in the negative. Cholera is not transmissible from one person to another by even prolonged contact, unless there exist a peculiar condition of the atmosphere; a statement sufficiently proven by the fact that the records of every summer in New York show a few "sporadic" cases of cholera, while the spread of the malady over certain neighborhoods only occurs at long intervals. On the other hand, however, when the particular endemic area necessary to the establishment of an epidemy is present, then cholera assumes a contagious character. In other words, the infection can not be introduced where no aerial influences favor its extension; while, per contra, we believe that even where such influences obtain, it may be denied admission by appropriate sanitary measures.

Last any one should here adduce the now exploded doctrine that "sporadic" and "epidemic" cholera are different diseases, or, at least, different forms of the disease, the former arising spontaneously and terminating with the individual attacked, and the latter possessing a specific property of contagion, we will strengthen our position by remarking that certain districts of country have always escaped this plague, despite the importation of patients from localities where it was raging as an epidemy and numbering its victims daily by hundreds. On the south side of Long Island, for instance, in the quite thickly settled stretch of land including the towns of Islip and Babylon, but four cases of cholera have occurred during thirty-five years—a period comprising three terrible visitations of the pestilence—and of these four cases two, at least, were brought from New York. This immunity, we believe, is shared by the whole extent of the south shore; but we have quoted only that portion concerning which we possess exact data. Again, in the city of Newport during two "cholera seasons" a number of cases arose, and the disease manifested a tendency to increase, while the surrounding neighborhood, notwithstanding the inducements of watering-place dissipations, entirely escaped.

And now, O patient reader! having set forth for your benefit the scientific aspect of the subject, we will proceed to deduce therefrom that sound advice which it is the duty of the journalist to offer, and at the option of the recipient to follow.

GENERAL J. W. LAMOTHE.

If business avocations or the devotional service of the almighty dollar absolutely necessitate your remaining in the city during the spring and summer months, the most scrupulous cleanliness must be enforced throughout your household as a preliminary step. Nor is this, Sir, as superfluous counsel as you may be inclined at first to consider it. We will grant that your personal ablutions are performed with matutinal regularity—that Master Jack and Miss Matilda twice daily grest the obnoxious bath tub with rebellious howlings—that your wardrobe yields resources for frequent changes of spotless linen—that the notable housewife who shares your name and income rigorously superintends the performances of the besom and duster, and insists upon the religious observance of ceremonials connected with step-ladders, hoop-skirts, slip-shod shoes, and window brushes; but we warn you against the rash conclusion that because conspicuous neatness meets the casual eye throughout your domicile, all the conditions of purity are fulfilled. Think of the "whited sepulchre," good friend, and descend to the cellar regions of your establishment. Note that small but odoriferous heap of decayed vegetables cast into you dark corner by Bridget the cook. Follow the guidance of your offended nose to where those waste scraps of meat, those two or three heads of decapitated fish, with maybe half a dozen flagrant relics of that last barrel of oysters, have reached an almost luminous stage of decomposition. Faugh! let us leave such a pestiferous climate, and ascend to the kitchen floor. What! even here? Bless us! whence comes that sickening smell, as of a charnel-house and glue-factory combined? See here! As we're alive, two barrels and a box reeking with putrid offal, remnants of past meals and Harrisonian sequestra from previous poultry, are festering at your basement door; and as we stand Mary superadds the contents of a pail of "slops." Tis, Sir! Is this what you would impose upon us as a clean abode? Will you have cause for surprise if pallid Cholera set his equal foot across your threshold as well as in the shanty or the tenement tomb? Go, and at once—procure the removal of this poisonous filth, purify your cellar with lime, prohibit future negligence of such criminal import, and see to it that the prohibition be obeyed.

If you be a sensible person, enjoying the good things of life in moderation, your diet requires but little change; but if Apician luxury characterize your banquets, a thorough reform should be effected. Discard from your hall of fare all the greasy abominations of pseudo "French" cookery; avoid rich, highly-seasoned dishes, and abjure desserts of pastry and confectionery. Satisfy your appetite with plain, nutritious viands, preferring beef and mutton to lobster-salad or pate de foie gras, and arrest the progress of your repast as soon as hunger is appeased. Above all, practice temperance in your potations; not total abstinence, unless "tee-totalism" have been your past rule; but guard against every thing approaching to excess.

There is another postulate, however, whose fulfilment depends rather upon your nervous temperament than upon your volition, but without which all other preventives are futile; and this is fearlessness. A bold heart and a calm mind are amulets of wondrous efficacy, while cowardly apprehensiveness will do more to predispose you for disease than any other two influences combined. Cholera and its congeners are blustering bullies, and will ever select for their attack the laid-hearted craven rather than him who returns their glare with a steady eye and bold front. If, therefore, you be of a timorous disposition, let discretion supply the place of absent valor, and fly the enemy you dare not coolly face; but in your flight let reflection guide your steps and prudence indicate your goal. Do not seek sanctuary in inland places, where vegetation is rank and where immature apples present a second Satanic temptation to the fall of your infant Adams and Eves; but select some quiet seaside sojourn, where robust breezes from the ocean meet and repel the land tide of infection, and where your flaccid nerves may gain a firmer fibre and more pungent tone by being, as it were, pickled in an atmosphere of brine.

Should further exhortations from our courage to your timidity be deemed advisable when the epidemic shall have appeared we will nullify them from our destined Long Island refuge. Till then, kind reader, vale!

ELIZABETH STREET, BROWNSVILLE.

We illustrate on this page the principal street of Brownsville, TEXAS. Brownsville is now the centre of great excitement. It lies on the Texas side of the Rio Grande, opposite Matamoras, two miles distant. General STEELE's head-quarters are on Elizabeth Street, and the whole town is a scene of military bustle. This place was of great importance during the late war, being, while it was in rebel possession, an important dépôt for the introduction of supplies and munitions of war by way of Mexico.

GEN. LAMOTHE, THE HAYTIAN.

Editor Harper's Weekly:

I STAYED in my paper on the Civil War in Hayti that, with FRANÇOIS JEAN JOSEPH, the rebel President, there was another pure negro in GEFFRARD'S Cabinet; "but," I added, "he was a man of real force—LAMOTHE, now an exile in Jamaica, whither he fled to escape from condemnation for complicity." The General seems to have taken this remark in ill part, as will appear from the following note which has just reached me:

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, October 6, 1865.

Mons. Jaison Belpath:

SIR,—I had occasion to read your estimate of the recent situation in Hayti. You are responsible to yourself for your opinions, and are at liberty to think of a man as you choose.

I think I ought to relieve you of one of your misconceptions. You have stated that I fled to Jamaica to avoid being condemned as a conspirator. I know who your informant is, but as you have always honored me with the name of friend, it does not seem to me that you should be satisfied with the statements of my enemies, and that the sentiment of justice requires that you should obtain information from both sides. I refer you to the deliberations of the Senate of Hayti of June 9 and July 29, 1865. You will there find that Mr. GEFFRARD violated my rights as a Senator, that the Haytian Senate protested in my favor, and that your article has gratuitously calumniated me.

ELIZABETH STREET, BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.—[FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.]

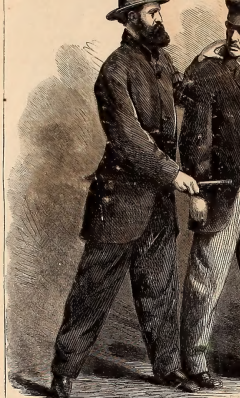
I remain, Monsieur,
Your very humble servant,
J. W. LAMOTHE.

The General is in error when he supposes that I would gratuitously calumniate him. I supposed, from the statement of Haytian papers, that I had correctly stated the cause of his exile. I regarded him as the ablest black man of Hayti, and hoped that he would succeed GEFFRARD, for he had all the qualities that the President lacked—firmness, vigor, audacity. What I feared was, lest, his power once established, his very virtues might lead him on to despotic acts.

But, if we may believe the telegraph, the fate of General LAMOTHE has been sealed. First, we are told that he has been implicated in the "negro insurrection in Jamaica; next, we are told that he was shot by the British soldiery or magistrates during the progress of the hideous massacre recently perpetrated by the English in that unfortunate island.

It is to be hoped that the English anti-slavery people will cause a searching investigation to be made into the recent acts of their military officers in Jamaica—acts which, like the Opium War in China and the slaughter of the Sheiks of India, will surely cover the British name with the execrations of the human race if reparation is not made for them. Like "the papers" which "implicated" LAMOTHE he produced, and if they are not forthcoming, I say, with Dr. JOHNSON, "Success to the next Negro Insurrection in Jamaica!"

JAMES REDPATH.



THE "SHENANDOAH."

We give on page 789 a picture of the British pirate ship Shenandoah, recently surrendered to the United States by the British Government. After a long cruise, which began October 18, 1864, and which has been terribly destructive to our commerce, this vessel returned to her home in England, and Captain WADDELL handed her over to the British authorities at Liverpool.

The Sea King, as the ship was at first called, was built at Glasgow, in October, 1863, by Messrs. ALEXANDER SYMONDS & SONS, on the composite principle introduced by them, which consists of an iron frame planked with rock elm below the water-line and with teak above. Her dimensions are 220 feet in length, 32 feet 5 inches in breadth, and 20 feet 5 inches in depth, with a tonnage of 1018 tons register, or 1130 tons builder's measurement. She was first chartered by the British Government to take out troops and a battery to New Zealand. Returning to London she was chosen by the rebel agents for a privateer. To evade the law a bill of sale was made out to Mr. RICHARD WRIGHT of Liverpool, from whom she was transferred to P. L. CORBETT, and cleared ostensibly for Bombay. She was met off Madeira by the Clyde-built steamer Laurel, which had also been purchased by a Liverpool man and had been sent from that port with the armament of the future Shenandoah. After taking on board her stores and guns, the Shenandoah hoisted the rebel flag.

Having thus started on her destructive mission, the Shenandoah, while the war lasted, did vast damage to our commerce. About the beginning of this year she turned up suddenly at Melbourne, Australia, and after receiving a fresh stock of supplies sailed for the North Pacific, where, notwithstanding that the commander was frequently told by the masters of neutral vessels whom he met on the high seas that the war was over, he refused to believe them.

Long after LEE's surrender and DAVIS's capture, Captain WADDELL sunk, burned, and otherwise destroyed whole fleets of whalers in the Ochotsk Sea and Behring's Strait. Early in November the Shenandoah appeared in the Mersey and surrendered to H. M. S. Donegal. She had no guns on deck, all her armament being stowed down below in boxes. The crew numbered 133 men. Both Captain and crew were unconditionally released.

CAPTAIN WADDY ARRESTING GONZALES.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAMSON, BROOKLYN, L. I.]

THE OTERO MURDER.

Few persons will wonder at the possibility of an atrocious murder being committed at an early hour of the night and in the open thoroughfare of so poorly lighted a city as Brooklyn, followed by the escape of the murderers. The wonder is, in the case of the murder of OTERO on the night of November 22, that the perpetrators of the deed ever were found out. Two gashes in a glove furnished the one sole clew to their detection. Fortunately this was sufficient, and we are able on this page to give our readers portraits of GONZALES and PELLICER—two of the alleged murderers.

Last summer JOSE GARCIA OTERO, keeper of a public house and billiard saloon in Cardenas, Cuba, drew a large prize in the Royal Lottery of Havana. This money he proposed to invest in a new theatre, and was visiting New York on business connected with this enterprise when he was murdered and robbed of his money. When he arrived in the city he put up at the Hotel de Barcelona, Great Jones Street. It was here that he made the acquaintance of JOSE GONZALES, who had been boarding at the hotel for some days. On the day of the murder GONZALES was much with OTERO; at 7 o'clock in the evening he left the hotel with him, OTERO having with him eight or ten thousand dollars in gold and bills, although the clerk had advised him to leave the money at the hotel for security. GONZALES advised otherwise. It was a dark night, but OTERO accompanied his companion unsuspectingly to Brooklyn. Here he was seen in EVANS's drinking house, corner of Myrtle Avenue and Canton Street about 9 o'clock. GONZALES and OTERO were at this place joined by a third man, undoubtedly PELLICER. All three drank profusely. When they left they went in the direction of the park.

In this park, surrounded by occupied dwellings, the murder was committed without attracting attention. A few minutes afterward some one passing through the park stumbled over a body which he supposed to be that of a drunken man. A closer inspection revealed that the man was dead and his body frightfully mutilated. The police, upon their arrival at the spot, found near the body a dirk, two razors, and a pair of gloves. The latter were cut across the fingers, and evidently belonged to one of the assassins with whom the murdered man had struggled.

It was supposed that GONZALES would attempt to leave the next day in one of the Havana steamers. Officers were sent to the piers from which these steamers would leave. GONZALES did not make his appearance, but PELLICER did, and his appearance excited suspicion. It was observed that the first finger of the left hand was much larger than the others, as if it were bandaged. He was asked to remove his gloves and refused to do so. He was then arrested, and wounds were found on his hand corresponding to the gashes in the gloves. He was formerly a waiter in the Hotel de Barcelona. He confessed his connection with the murder, and gave information of the probable whereabouts of GONZALES, who was arrested on the evening of the 25th at 217 Centre Street. GONZALES is a native of Madrid, thirty-five years of age. He is evidently of the lowest class of Spaniards. PELLICER is about twenty-two years old, and has a more prepossessing, or, rather, a less repulsive, appearance than his accomplice. Both criminals have been indicted, and will be brought to trial.

JOSE GONZALES Y FERNANDEZ.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAMSON, BROOKLYN L. I.]

FRANCISCO GENEZ Y SALVADOR (ALIAS PELLICER).—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAMSON, BROOKLYN, L. I.]

THE HOUSEHOLD TREASURE.—The most desirable article in a household is a good Sewing Machine. The WHEELER & WILSON is undoubtedly the best, as it is the most popular for family use; and every woman should possess one of these magical agents in the exercise of the most tedious and wearisome part of her daily work. It will relieve wives and mothers of the burden of their lives; it will provide them with a wonderfully neat, rapid, obliging, and faithful seamstress, who will require neither food nor wages, and who will execute her work a thousand times better and with more exactness than could be done by the most skillful hand. Before the magic of her fingers, little shirts, aprons, dresses, drawers, sacks, and petticoats will disappear like dew before the morning sun, and the time that was once devoted to a slow and wearisome effort to reduce the pile upon the work-basket may be spent in reading, in visiting, in gardening, or in teaching the children from books and works of nature, those lessons which are invested with a double charm from the lips of a tender mother. The music of a bright WHEELER & WILSON'S Sewing Machine, telling, in its own silvery, birdlike tones, of work accomplished, of order and neatness preserved, of nervous headaches saved, of pleasures to be enjoyed, of happiness to be prospered, is sweeter by far than the music of a grand piano.—Demorest's Monthly.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD. Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt humbug, even in the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORRIS, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

MISTRESS. "Why, Bridget, what are you doing—hailing those biscuits down to the tray?" COOK. "Yes, faith, Mum, or they'd be after lithin' the tops off your oven, Mum—this Yaste Powder's so mighty powerful."

The Pioneer Yeast Powder is manufactured by Taylor & Young, No. 186 Front Street, New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS

MUSIC OMNIBUS,

Popular songs, marches, quicksteps, polkas, schottishes, waltzes, jigs, reels, quadrilles, cotillions, with calls and figures, for the

Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet.

OMNIBUS No. 1 contains 100 tunes. Price $1 25, mailed.
" No. 2 " 100 " " $1 25 "
" No. 3 " 100 " " $1 25 "

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Every description at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price-list to

FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, New York.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. No. 481 Broadway, New York. Second-hand Pianos at from $60 to $225. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Agents wanted. Hand Pianos. Monthly installments.

HORACE WATERS.

Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing from one to thirty-six different tunes, and costing from $5 50 to $200. The most extensive stock ever offered for sale in New York. Low ornaments for the parlor, and pleasant companions for the invalid. No. 7 PALLIARD & CO., Importers, 21 Maiden Lane (up stairs), New York. Musical Boxes repaired.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry,

Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of ROSANQUET, GIRAUD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened an Agence Générale of New York Jewelry, Watches, Diamonds, Watches, &c.; and for the purpose of making their goods as extensively known as any exhibited in the United States as they now are, and have been for over 7 years, in Europe, they have determined on a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the observance of their goods. Any one, in any country, who would remark that they manufacture and sell no Second-rate Jewelry at all, is mistaken. 3m

All are Warranted Gold of the Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant succession of new and recherchés styles and patterns—styles which we shall keep New York supplied.

We have placed the plan of sale, new so popular, of charging a uniform price, and this price will invariably be $5 per article, no matter how valuable or rare it be. The expenses of conducting our New York Agency are paid by the sale of Certificates, or Coupons, entitling to the various articles. These Certificates are sold at 50 cents each, or five for $2, and each Certificate which the holder the particular article he or she is entitled to on payment of an additional $3. If the article named in the Certificate is not desired, the holder will oblige us, when he returns the Certificate, by stating what article instead of the same value he or she may prefer, and it will be sent with pleasure. Our aim is to please, and we hope to do that and will be exerted. We solicit a trial from every one who reads this notice, as we are confident of giving the utmost satisfaction.

THE STOCK COMPRISES

Among other articles splendid Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings set with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearls, Garnet and other Stone necklaces and Sets of Jewelry, Sets of Jewelry, comprising Pins and Ear-rings of the most fashionable patterns, in Pearls, Rubies, Garnets, &c., &c., top-ther with a large assortment of Silver Ware, Fine Plated Ware, Bronzes, Fancy Articles, Buttons of the most beautiful patterns, Opera Glasses, Fancy Boxes and Baskets, Jewelry of Bracelets, Chains, Musical-boxes, Hendkerchiefs, Dressing Cases, &c. In case any of our patrons are not in want of articles of Jewelry, and would prefer Silverware, we will send, for any Certificate returned to us, a richly-engraved set of Castors, or Butter Dish, beautifully chased and plated.

Agents are wanted in every part of the United States and Territories, and to all such liberal inducements will be offered, and, on application, a circular of terms will be forwarded. We prefer payment by Post-Office Orders where they can be obtained, or by Bank Draft to our order. Address all orders to our agency, which is as follows—viz.:

Mailed to any address for $1 25. Catalogue free. Address E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

FRANK LESLIE'S

No. 29, just published, contains:

COUNT ZEGAVIEFF'S DAUGHTER. A Story. Illustrated.
HOPE. A Poem.
CUYLER GRANGE. A Story. Illustrated.
THE DOG AND THE MILE-CAN. Illustrated.
THE SORRED TOAD. Illustrated.
LOOKING at the ECLIPSE. Illustrated.
LOVERS. A Poem.
CLEVELAND HALL. A Story.
A NURSE'S STORY.
WINTER. A Poem.
SELF-MADE MEN.—E. M. HOE.
A PERILOUS ADVENTURE in the WOODS of VIRGINIA. Illustrated.
THE SPIRE OF ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL, St. PETERSBURG. Illustrated.
SCENE in the MISSION CHURCH of SARAYTUCU. Illustrated.
INSTINCT. An Essay.
THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS. A Furter Game.
THE EXTRA TICKET.
THE FOOD of the ANCIENTS.
MADEID in 1678.
RELIGION in ASIA. Three Illustrations.
A DINNER in JAPAN. Illustrated.
MOONLIGHT on the WILD HILLS. Illustrated.
MYSTERIES UNEXPLAINED. Illustrated.
GAMAHES.
GRANDFATHER WHITEHEAD'S LECTURES.—ON CURSE KINDNESS.
THE FIRST SNOW. A Poem.
FAIRY LAND.
A SAUSAGE PROCESSION.
FANCY PASTIMES.
THE UMBRELLA QUESTION. Six Comic Illustrations.
And a great variety of other interesting matter.

FOR SALE BY ALL NEWS-AGENTS.
Price Ten Cents.

Annual Subscription, Four Dollars.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 and 539 Pearl Street, New York.

Window Shades,

Curtains,

Piano and Table Covers, &c., &c., at

KELTY'S, 289 Broadway.

"WE'VE DRUNK FROM THE SAME CANTEEN."

The famous Song. Words by Miles O'Reilly, and Music by JAMES G. CLARK. Every soldier should have a copy. Price 30 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid.

WM. A. POND & CO.,
547 Broadway, New York.

50 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with terms for any one to clear $25 daily, in 3 hours.
W. H. CHESTER & CO.,
No. 75 Nassau Street, New York.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS. Marks's Patents, with RUBBER HANDS and FEET. A GOLD MEDAL was awarded them, at THE BEST, over ALL others, at the late Fair of the American Institute, the Army and Navy furnished FREE by Government authority. Send for a Pamphlet. S. D. MARKS, 575 Broadway, New York City.

$25 PER MONTH, without neglecting other business. An agent wanted in every town in the United States. Booksellers, druggists, school teachers, town officers, and others, are requested to send name and address to J. MANCHESTER, 317 Avenue B, New York.

Prests. Change! Made quart cans. 100 tricks in sleight of hand, home-made, and ingredients. 1000 still in use monthly. 64 pages. Only 20 cents; 3 for $1. Catalogue free. Address E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

$6 WATCHES $8
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS.

An extensive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, especially adapted for Christmas presents, of fine finish and rich design, at greatly reduced prices.

An elegant Watch, in fine gold-plated double cases, richly engraved, English full plate jeweled movements, adjusted regulator, engraved pallets and balance bridge, fine enameled white dial, and fancy hands. Connon Timepiece, with key, case, guilt frame, and cover, with beautiful GOLD LOCKET double-hunting cases for two likenesses, all complete, a beautiful holiday present, sent free by mail for only $6.

A Massive Gentleman's Watch, servicable pattern, in heavy double cases, gold plated, same as $8 watch; with key, case, and gold locket, &c., complete, sent free to any part of the country for only $6.

The Imperial Timekeeper, a Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, containing a beautiful and correct working Timekeeper, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, guilt in case, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, &c., rendering this Watch a perfect Specie, Hunt, and Time Keeper, and of great value to traveler, farmer, and others desirous of a perfect Register. This valuable Watch is owned in Early Resident Dorcas Hewins Magic Sprung 18 Lone Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18-Carat Gold, Specimens of Solid Gold Composite, richly engraved, with Panel for Name; Genuine English Improved Lever Action, M. J. Tobins movements, Polished Lever Cap, Self-Acting Detent Escapement Click, Pivot Balance, Independent Actions, and in an exact imitation of a $200 watch used by the Royal Engineers and Officers of the British Army. Warranted one year. Price per single one, $10. Sent free by mail, with Case, Key, &c., sent any where by mail, $10. Fine Silver Lepines, Hunting Case, $15. Ladies' Gold Lepines, $20. Genuine American Levers, $25. Gold Wedding Watches, $50. Patent Levers, $35. Ladies' Fancy Enameled guilt watches, $5. All styles of Gold watches for presents. Catalogue sent free. Send for Latest Improved Illustrated Price List of Watches, 102 Nassau St., New York. (Established 1853.)

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention superior to anything ever before. A sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations. Sent by mail, securely sealed, for Fifty Cents. Address Frank Tousey, 129 Nassau Street, New York.

CURL YOUR HAIR.

A sample of Prof. Hohl's Curline will be sent FREE to any address. Curline will curl the straightest hair in the first application, into soft, luxuriant, beautiful curls. Address, with stamp, Prof. B. ROHL Parkman, Ohio.

A Good Time Coming,

For dyspeptics and those who are suffering for years with a disordered liver, or weakness of the digestive organs. You will believe that after giving a bottle of Hermans Bitters a trial. This remedy will cause a permanent cure in most cases in a very few days. They are not used as a beverage. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York.

A Fair and Delicate Skin,

Free from every blemish, is the reward of an occasional use of PALMER'S LOTION. For sale by druggists generally. HERMAN PALMER & CO., Auburn, New York.

HERNIA CAN BE CURED by using a TRUSS day and night. Dr. SHERWOOD'S is the only one that can be used in such comfort.

No. 845 BROADWAY.

100 Photographs of Union Generals cent postpaid for 25 cts.; 30 Photographs of Statesmen and Generals for 25 cts.; 50 Photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cts.; 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cts.; 100 Acters for 25 cts. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body by the Oriental Depilatory. Sent by mail for $1. Address "LA BELLE'S ORIENTAL POWDER." Mailed to any address for $1. Address E. C. HUNT, Box 5,600 South Side P. O., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

(ESTABLISHED 1850),

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLDAT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO BUY.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00
100 Gold Watches	75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
1000 Revolving Castors	$25 00 to 18 00
1000 Drinking Cups	7 00 to 3 00
5000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 15 00
5000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	3 00 to 10 00
50 0 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
8 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	2 00 to 5 00
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 15 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, guilt	5 00 to 14 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
8000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
5000 Pocket Knives	2 00 to 5 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mix d; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair trial.

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 7 for $1; three for $1; 10 for $2; 65 for $10; and 160 for $20.

Agents wanted everywhere. The best inducements to localities and persons who will act. Those not to send for circulars, but to send the money, full list and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Cut your Hair. One application will cut your hair into beautiful curls, and last 6 months. Price 50c., by mail. Address A. J. JAEGER, Lowell, Mass.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MCMURTRIE'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1325 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

BOOBS. Cards, Prints. New 16-page catalogue sent FREE. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

A LADY who has been cured of great nervous debility, after many years of misery, desires to take known to all fellow-sufferers the means by which a cure was effected. Address, inclosing a stamp, Mrs. M. MERRITT, P. O. Box 365, Boston, Mass., and the prescription will be sent free by return mail.

FUN FOR HOLIDAYS. Beautiful False Mustaches, 50 cents and $1 50 each. Send stamp for circular. Address L. M. GOODELL, New York.

Pimples on the Face

Removed in one week by the use of "UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER." Mailed so any Address for 50 cents. Address UPHAM & CO., 1 PHŒNIX PLACE, SOUTH LIBERTY ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

Consumption Cured.

CIRCULARS SENT FREE to any address. Every Person afflicted with Consumption should read them. Send your address at once to Dr. S. CURTIS, Box 2507, Post-Office, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great Oug-Price Gold Sale.

SELL NO BRASS OR SO-CALLED PLATED JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD,

OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood this is emphatically a GOLD SALE; an association of manufacturers, on a large scale, and sales of articles in gold only, in place of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Pieces, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of Jewelry, Silver Jewelry,

Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,000,000,

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you have learned what you get.

Inclosing Two Dollars Worth for $2.

EF The Press, the Public, and every one having any interest, in exchange for the least active they may get for $2, a splendid gold-plated or engraved Hunting Case Watch or Castor, fine paint, valued at $10, or a beautiful Opera-Glass, magnificent Chatelaine Chain, &c., and you have a possibility of getting a Fine Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and state whether you desire Watch, Jewelry, or Silverware, and size required, and we will be sent, with the Certificate that you can get for $2 in Gold Watch or Castor, worth $10, or a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $300. Agents wanted—our extraordinary list of articles and full particulars; also terms to agents, in circulars sent free. Address, with stamp, for circulars sent for $1; 11 for $2; 70 for $5. Address COSMOPOLITAN JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

333 and 340 Broadway, New York.

Or, if nearer you, 56 South Fifth St., St. Louis, Mo.; or 83 and 85 Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A Doctor in every Household.

DOMESTIC MEDICINE; or, The Doctor at Home. By Joseph M. Gordon, M.D. Two volumes. Royal 8vo. Each complete in itself. Beautifully bound in embossed cloth, gilt back and sides, illustrated with and explaining the Causes, Symptoms, and Means of Cure of Accident and Modern Times, each table for their peculiar physiological and pathological conditions, and Hygienic Rules. 8vo. Vol. 2 treats upon the diseases of Women and Children. Price $2 50 each.

ANATOMICAL PLATES AND DIAGRAMS,

Agents wanted every where. Address, for circulars, &c., MANUFACTURERS' AGENCY, 145 William St., N. Y.

NEW MUSIC.

Come, sing to me again......30c.
"I have heard Sweet Music speaking".....30c.
The Pilgrim of Nemphi. Rebekah.....30c.
"I love but thee." German and English words. 40c.
I can tell a secret. Comic Song.....30c.
For Piano, Reliable.....40c.
Silver Trumpets played at Fremont Ratification.....40c.
Silver Trumpets, grand processional March.....50c.
Silver Trumpets, Duet for two performers.....60c.
Mailed free. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.
In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are headquarters for the following, viz.
Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Of these we have an immense assortment, including
VIEWS OF THE WAR.
Obtained at great expense and forming a complete
PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.
CONTENT
Bull Run, Dutch Gap,
Centreville, Fenton Farms,
Gettysburgh, Hanover Junction,
Fair Oaks, Lookout Mountain,
Savage Station, Chickahominy,
Fredericksburgh, City Point,
Fairfax, Rappahannock,
Richmond, Petersburgh,
Belle Plain, Bale Plain,
Monitors, Chattanooga,
Fort Sumpter, Atlanta,
Charleston, Mobile,
Florida, Strawberry Plains,
&c. &c. &c.
American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, &c. &c. Catalogues sent on application to any address.
Albums, for containing these views, sent to any address on receipt of Stamps.
Photographic Albums.
We were the first to introduce these into the United States and we manufacture immense quantities in plain and fine binding, ranging in price from 35 cents to $75. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any other—They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of prices.
STEREOSCOPES.
The Trade will find our Albums the most Salable they can buy.
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.
Our Catalogue now embraces over Five Thousand different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Actresses, Opera Singers, Dancers, &c.
101 Broadway, 50 Cts. per Dozen. 659 Broadway,
102 Bleecker, " " 785 Broadway,
205 Bowery, " " 1,000 Assorted Views,
1,000 Copies of Works of Art,
including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c. Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp.
Any of the above sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of price.
Exact amount of $1.00, and over by mail, POSTAGE STAMPS.
Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D., will please remit one-third the amount of the order to secure attention.
☞ Low prices and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

250 RARE RECEIPTS.
☞ For a valuable consideration we have furnished to BUCHANAN & Co. a selection of CONFECTIONERY, CHOICE CHOCOLATE CREAMS for cooking, flaking, making Pastes, Preserves, Soda, Cream Nuts, &c., &c., the same being in constant use in our hotel.
"Signed" PLANTE & CO.
☞ Proprietors Metropolitan Hotel, Broadway, N. Y.
The book also contains ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY other and more economical receipts, also suggestions to host-keepers by an experienced housekeeper of the hotel. It also contains important information for women, especially mothers, not found in any similar publication. Price, 50 cents. Sent free by mail for 75 cents. Address
AGENTS WANTED. Sent free by mail for 75 cents. Address
DICK & FITZGERALD,
No. 859 Broadway, New York.

☞ BUSINESS FOR YOU!
Positively a Money-Making Occupation!
Now I — Look! — Now! — Highly Beautiful! — Extremely Popular! —Sunday Demand! —Pays Immensely! —No Peddling! —Can be done at Home or Anywhere! —Cents will Start it! —Specimen Presents! —Fine Chance For Agents! —Men, Women, Boys, and Girls, send Postage Cent for Circulars, Containing Specimen Sheet of "Print Certificate," which NAMES YOUR PRESENT.
Address
THE FRANKLIN PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Box 1495, Philadelphia, Pa.
Office, Fifth and Chestnut Streets.

☞ EDITOR giving the above 3 or more insertions—as Weekly issue—and Mail us THE PAPER, with copy and bill, as we pay copy, and sending us a marked copy, will receive a copy of this Journal, and a Specimen Sheet, which will materially reward them for the courtesy. We help those who help us.
Franklin Publishing Co.

$25 A DAY AGENTS WANTED to sell a new and wonderful SEWING MACHINE, the only cheap one sold by Agents. Address
J. D. BURNS & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

$90 A MONTH AGENTS WANTED for six entirely new articles, just out. Address
O. T. GARLEY, Cary Building, Biddeford, Maine.

Make your own Soap
WITH B. T. BABBITT'S
Pure Concentrated Potash,
OR READY SOAP MAKER.
Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in one pound cans, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds; will dissolve in a frigid solution, and make a rich, lasting Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of soft soap. No time is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.
B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHIOS? Grecian Composition will force them to grow on the smoothest face or chin in six weeks, or hair on bald heads. Price $1, or three packages for $2, sent by mail any where. Address WARNER & CO., Box 138, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! Just received and now opening a superb collection of new, recently-published books, which for duty and standard books will be sold cheap for cash at BUNAN & CO.'S, Basement, 59 Nassau street.

SANTA CLAUS.
Patent Automaton Negro Dancers, unsurpassed in design of living negroes and affording infinite amusement. Mailed, duplex, $1 50 and $2 00; Triplex, $2 50; $3 50; group, male and female, $4. The Automaton Sewing Machine for children of all ages, beautiful. Took Chest for Reward Gentlemen 50c.; $1; No. 2, $2; No. 3, $4. Orders, with receive prompt attention.
Dealers and agents supplied.
BUCHTENSTEIN BROTHERS,
103 Bleecker st., New York.

$1,000,000 Worth
OF
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.
To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.
100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each $175 00
100 Silver Watches ..... each 25 00 to 35 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases ..... 5 00 to 8 00
And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. A descriptive catalogue of these goods at ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:
Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Five for $1. Eleven for $2. Twenty-five for $5.
Agents wanted, to whom we offer great inducements. Address
A. H. LOVELL & CO.,
36 Brekman Street. P. O. Box 4310, New York.

PILE REMEDY

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of PILES and FISTULA. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. Pamphlet sent free.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

COUGHS

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is the most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and Alexandria, are to be stopped by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDENS EXPRESS. No. 65 Broadway, Manhattan Square, New York.

$3 ALBUMS—Sally bound—two gilt clasps—for 50 photographs. Sent by mail for $3 00.
$5 ALBUMS—Morocco, gilt edges, maroon bevel bound—two gilt clasps—for 100 photographs. Sent by mail for $5 00.
Stereoscopes, Varnish, Paste, Cement, Brushes, &c. Send for catalogue. Address
A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
Cor. Broadway and Canal, New York.

To Book Agents ar | Canvassers,
AND PERSONS DESIRING LIGHT, PAY EMPLOYMENT.
THE PICTORIAL HISTORY
OF
THE WAR FOR THE UNION.
By Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS.
Sold by Subscription only.
The immense demand for this work is now ready for Canvassers: already have the returns from Agents who commenced in a great measure justify the hope. Success in orders fully justifies the conclusion that no History ever sold so fast or to so large a number. Address for terms of the well-known Authoress, Mrs STEPHENS.
To those desiring Territory, we will assign a large one.
Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
No. 5 Beekman Street, New York.

FANCY FOWLS.
Pure bred fowls from recent importations. 75 varieties, Brown and China Geese, Rouen and Aylesbury Ducks, Bronze and Hamburg, Polanda, Game, Spanish, Dorking, Bantam, Fancy Pigeons. Address
BENJ. HARRIS, Elizabeth, N. J.

Gems from European Picture Galleries.
Fifty highly-finished engravings on steel, after the most celebrated old masters, in a new portfolio, $5. Send for circular or receipt of price.
J. W. BOUTON, 481 Broadway, New York.

PARLOR ORGANS.
THE HOBART PIERCE, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded us by the late World's Fair, over all competitors over all competitors for the best instruments.
A Gold Medal was awarded to MASON, HAMLIN, MELODEAN & CO for the best Reed Instrument on exhibition—and just testimonial. The award of Special Gold Medals to most of the class were made for the purpose of securing to each exhibitor a medal, and the third, we understand, given to Jones and Hamlin. ANDREW LAWRENCE, Jr., Chairman of the Committee.
"We pronounce the instruments of the class I over saw."—C. E. HERTTELL.
"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.
"The best of many specimens of any class or style of instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.
Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.
CARHART, NEEDHAM & CO.,
No. 97 East Twenty-third street,
New York.

CHRISTMAS GIFT.
A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER
ONE DOLLAR EACH.
PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.
AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A beautiful and useful present for the coming Holidays. An elegant ornament and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved Scientific principles, and will keep correct time with great accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price at which it is sold places it within the reach of everyone. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Every one should have one. Warranted perfectly correct; can be had or get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, with white enamelled dial, in gold or silver case, $1. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION—To the inventions and sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under the penalty that ATTENTION OF NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

The Improved Elliptic Lock-Stitch Sewing and Braiding Machines.
These CELEBRATED MACHINES we can recommend to the public, combining as they do all the IMPROVEMENTS which Experience has proved to be requisite in the perfection of Sewing Machines. We invite all to the perfection of Sewing Machines. We invite all to call and examine the ELLIPTIC before purchasing. Salesrooms, 577 Broadway, New York.

Home Employment
A good man wanted in every Town and County in the United States to engage in an honorable business. Profitable and pleasant. The only qualifications required are tact and industry. Address, for particulars, Dr. O. HARPER BROWN, No. 19 Grand Street, Jersey City, New Jersey.

Metropolitan Enterprise.
GREAT GIFT SALE
OF THE
NEW YORK AND PROVIDENCE
Jewelers' Association.
Capital ..... $1,000,000.

An immense stock of Pianos, Watches, Jewelry, and Fancy Goods, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.
CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed.
These envelopes will be sent by mail for 25 cents, regardless of choice, as fast as ordered, or in club rates, together with the following premiums:
9 for 50 cents, with a premium picture..... $1 00.
14 for $1, with a silver butter-knife, worth..... 2 00.
21 for $2, with a silver napkin-ring, worth..... 3 00.
30 for $3, with a gold pen and case, worth..... 4 00.
35 for $3, with a gold locket, worth..... 5 00.
45 for $4, with a gold watch-key, worth..... 6 00.
100 for $10, with a good silver watch, worth..... 15 00.
200 for $20, with a gold hunting-case watch, worth 60 00.
On receipt of the envelopes you will see what article you have drawn, and then it is at your option to pay the dollar and take it, or return it and have your money. We obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, Sewing Machine, or any article of value in return for $1, and in case you get but less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks.
Agents wanted. Great inducements to Ladies and Gentlemen of leisure.
Don't fail to send for circular, giving full particulars.
Address C. M. LUDDEN & CO.,
139 Nassau Street, New York.

FOUNTAIN PEN. No inkstand required; one filling writes 1,000 pages. Also Gold Pens, Pt. to Pt., by mail, post-paid, $1. Pens repaired for 50 cts. Send stamp for circular. G. F. HAWKES, Fountain Pen manufacturer, 74 Nassau St., N. Y.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret completed. Information of importance to ladies, and summer-time and things worth knowing, will be found in the "Book of Wonders." For copies send 25 cents in P. O. Stamps, to
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
AMERICAN POCKET TIMEPIECE.
FIFTY CENTS EACH.
The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved scientific principles, and will keep correct time with greater accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price at which it is sold places it within the reach of everyone. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Every one should have one. Warranted perfectly correct; can be had or get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, with white enamelled dial, in gold or silver case, $1. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION—To the inventions and sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under the penalty that ATTENTION OF NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

DR. W. M. HALL'S
BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS
Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping-Cough, Bleeding of the Lungs, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Phthisic, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.
Fifty-one Thousand Bottles sold for a below cough is frequently relieved by a single dose, and because up in a day or two. Those who have used it for a few days offer bottle before they find whether this remedy will afford relief or not.
This is no PANACEA-PREPARATION, but one which, if taken in time, will break up the most severe Colds. It has effected cures in numerous cases where the most skilful physicians had exhausted their skill in vain. Clergymen, singers, and public speakers will find it very beneficial as it relieves at once a hoarse, hacking cough, and prepares the throat for use. Public speakers and singers use it to clear the throat before commencing to speak or sing.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.
A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
Cor. Broadway and Canal, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.
CHEAPEST AND BEST. A Printing Press for Cards, $3; Cards, $2; and $20. Price of an Office, with Press, $15, $25, $50, and $71. Send for a circular to the LOVE PRESS COMPANY, 32 Water Street, Boston.

In those cases of scanty, retarded growth the Hair needs nourishment. Its Bulbs or Glands, through which Nourishment is supplied, are inactive. Ayer's Hair Vigor is designed to stimulate them to healthful action. It gives the Hair the nourishment it requires, and makes it grow. Thus it restores Hair on heads which have become bald from the want of this nourishment. Nothing else can do this. Nothing else has ever been found to do it. Nothing else will do it. Ayer's Hair Vigor is the only preparation in the world that will restore Hair on bald heads. Nothing else will even prevent the Hair from falling off. Nothing else will keep the Hair from turning gray. Nothing else will restore gray Hair to its original color. Nothing else will make the Hair grow upon bald heads. Nothing else will do all that can be done for the Hair. Ayer's Hair Vigor will do all that can be done for the Hair. Nothing else will do it. Ayer's Hair Vigor is the only preparation in the world that will restore Hair on bald heads. Nothing else will even prevent the Hair from falling off. Nothing else will keep the Hair from turning gray. Nothing else will restore gray Hair to its original color. Nothing else will make the Hair grow upon bald heads. Nothing else will do all that can be done for the Hair. Ayer's Hair Vigor will do all that can be done for the Hair. Nothing else will do it. Ayer's Hair Vigor is the only preparation in the world that will restore Hair on bald heads. Nothing else will even prevent the Hair from falling off. Nothing else will keep the Hair from turning gray. Nothing else will restore gray Hair to its original color. Nothing else will make the Hair grow upon bald heads. Nothing else will do all that can be done for the Hair. Ayer's Hair Vigor will do all that can be done for the Hair. Nothing else will do it.
AYER'S HAIR VIGOR
PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.,
LOWELL, MASS.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers in Medicines everywhere.

WRIGHT & SIDDALL,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS,
No. 119 Market Street, Philadelphia.
We call attention to the very excellent fat lics ex offered to Physicians, Druggists, and Country Merchants, to supply themselves with every article connected with our business, comprising
Drugs, Chemicals;
Pharmaceutical Preparations:
Essences, Extracts, Fluid Extracts, Patent Medicines;
Perfumery; Chemicals, Skins, Sponges, Corks;
Soaps, Dyes, Oils, &c., &c.
Of all of which we have an assortment that will compare favorably with any similar establishment in the country.
Philadelphia has long been celebrated as being by far the best Jobbing Drug Market in the United States; and in our House we have established a reputation for quality, and in many particulars superior, to that of any other in the city, we confidently solicit a continuance of your favors, as to quality, prices, and promptness in filling orders.
WRIGHT & SIDDALL,
No. 119 Market Street, Philadelphia.

HOLIDAY PRESENT.
FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.
The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.
Originally patented May 17, 1864; Improvement subsequent dates. The Celebrated FAMILY LOCK STITCH MACHINE, with common attachment, a most wonderful and unique combination of Practical Novelty and Ingenuity, does the STRAIGHT SEEDER, and makes beautiful, even, and elastic seam, alike on both sides, and will do the same range of work that any machine can do in the hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making several hundred stitches per minute. It will sew all kinds of fabrics, leather, seams, trims, sew by measure, &c., &c., and is capable of doing all which is done by any sort of or ones, being the strongest machine made, and will last a lifetime. Is perfectly not to get out of order for 12 years. Has taken the premium at STATE FAIRS, and received the approval of all the principal judges where it has been seen there.
In the manufacturer it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.
"It is one of the most notable, very simple, very safe and so easily understood that a child can use it."—Independent.
With single or double thread, with elasticity. Very reliable, with a common needle, makes the running stitch certainly the handiest of which we have seen.
Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, C. O. D., with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted. Circulars sent free. Circulars containing the instruments, sent free.
FAMILY SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Offices 162 Nassau Street, New York.

GREENBACKS are Good—ROBACKS are Better.

The best toilet and ages preventive in the world. 20,000 bottles sold monthly. Sold by dealers every where. Depot, Roback Brothers, Wholesale Agents, New York. C. W. Roback, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

Hives and Eruptions
OF THE SKIN, SORE THROAT, &c.
A single dose of from one to four of Brandreth's Pills, according to age and constitution, often cures; and in all cases the unavoidable itching to at once allayed after the operation. Be wise: purify your blood, and possess a skin free from eruptions, and a throat free from phlegm.
Observe: "BRANDRETH" must be in white letters on the Government Stamp.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR DECEMBER, 1865.
TERMS.
One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $3 00 each, or 6 Copies for $15 00.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.
The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements in the front Magazine at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $125; one page, $200. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
TERMS.
One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Postage prepaid to all whom.
The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:
Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 9 00 "
Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.
Terms to Advertisers—Fifteen Dollars per Page; Ten Dollars per line for each Insertion. Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements, each Insertion.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE REVERIE OF THE USED-UP "FERNANDY."

I have lived long enough: my way of life
Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honor, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not.
Macbeth, Act V., Scene III.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.
Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

POLLAK & SON, sucr. to Simon Hamburger, 601 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipe and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co.
CHAMPAGNE.
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and consumers acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold in Boxes or duly paid by A. W. NITSCH, 68 Beaver St., N. Y.

"PHALON'S NIGHT BLOOMING CEREUS."
Great Beauty Cures for the Hair
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemens' Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.
Jeffers, 573 Broadway, New York.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
Measuring Card,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a
PERFECT FIT.
BOOT AND SHOE EMPORIUM,
No. 575 Broadway, New York.
E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N.B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7.30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

TRADE  MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods or whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 93 Chambers Street, New York.

LADIES
PAPER CUFFS
& CUFFS.
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B. WAY, N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
TWO PRIZES AT ONCE.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL
HAVE BEEN AWARDED BY THE
AMERICAN INSTITUTE
FOR SEVENTEEN
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
OVER ALL COMPETITION, TO
GEORGE STECK & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS,
113 AND 115 WALKER STREET, NEW YORK.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Goose" (tour-own maker) Bi-Carb. Soda.
SODA ASH.—Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
CAUSTIC SODA.—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Musgrave Brothers', and Huntley's.
SAL SODA.—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
SESQUIS.—Paragon, Excelsior, and Double Refined.
Also all our own make.
Perfectly pure Cream Tartar and Tartaric Acid, Borax, Alum, Elec. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Terra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also Bleacher Paste, Oil, Cocoa-Nut Oil, Resin, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are "1st hands." Established in 1847.
OFFICE—116 and 118 Cedar St., New York (rear side).

Agents Wanted in every Town.
TO SELL
The Only Authentic and Official History
OF
THE GREAT CAMPAIGNS,
Thoroughly Revised by General Sherman,
AND PUBLISHED UNDER HIS SANCTION.
60,000 Copies Already Sold.
SHERMAN
AND HIS CAMPAIGNS.
BY
Con. S. M. BOWMAN AND LT.-COL. R. B. IRWIN.
1 vol., 8vo, 519 pages, Cloth, $3 50.
With Splendid Steel Portraits of MAJ.-GEN. SHERMAN, MAJ.-GEN. SCHOFIELD,
" " HOWARD, " SLOCUM,
" " LOGAN, " BLAIR,
" " DAVIS, " KILPATRICK,
And Maps, Plans, &c.
The following letter from General Sherman shows the official and authentic character of the work.
"LANCASTER, OHIO, July 31, 1865.
"C. B. Richardson, Esq.:
"SIR,—Colonel S. M. Bowman, an acquaintance of mine since 1840, and more recently in the service of the U. S., has had access to my Order and Letter Books, embracing copies of all orders made and letters written by me since the winter of 1861-2, with a view to publish a memoir of my Life and Services, and no other person has had such an opportunity to read my secret thoughts and acts. I believe him to be in possession of all material facts that can interest the general reader. I am, &c.,
"W. T. SHERMAN, Major-General."
The Press every where pronounces this the ONLY REAL HISTORY OF THESE GREAT CAMPAIGNS.
The book is written in a most pleasing and graphic style, and it comes up in the finest manner in every respect. The Portraits and Maps are unequaled.
No other Work has any Claim to Official Authority.
SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town. Exclusive territory given, and liberal inducements offered.
For full particulars, address
C. B. RICHARDSON, PUBLISHER,
540 Broadway, New York.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
BOSWELL & WARNER'S COLORITIC colors beautifully and naturally. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactory 9 Day St., N. Y.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,
Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its tales, prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Stammering
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. Mears, 617 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for Piles, Old Sores, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, all Boils and Skin Diseases, &c. 93 Bowery, New York.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. Coughs, Colds, Asthma.—The best remedy ever known for coughs, colds, asthma, and affections of the chest. One or two doses will give immediate relief, and a perseverance in its treatment cure by giving freedom to the respiratory organs. Sold every where.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—those lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Druggists. 25 cts. a box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE ev-erywhere for 50 CENTS, or THREE FOR $1 00.
Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 720, Boston, Mass.

DR. UNDERHILL'S
DEPOT OF PURE WINES
MADE AT HIS
CROTON POINT VINEYARDS.
SOLD AT NO. 7 CLINTON HALL
ASTOR PLACE OR 8TH ST.
DR. UNDERHILL'S WINES are neither drugged, liquored, nor watered, and none are sold that are not three years old.

The Magazine for the Year.
The attention of all lovers of current literature is directed to the new publication,
BEADLE'S MONTHLY,
A Magazine of To-Day.
With every facility for producing a choice Magazine, the Publishers may promise something unusually attractive and satisfactory. The best writers in Romance, Poetry, Natural Science, Useful Arts, History, Travel, &c., and the most celebrated designers will cater for the pages. To the best features of other magazines it will add points of interest quite new, novel, and delightful. The Publishers' aim will be to render it a STANDARD FAVORITE, ever welcome to readers, and as useful as it is interesting.
☞ See the January Number, now ready. For sale by all newsdealers and Bookmen. Price 25 cents per No., or, to mail subscribers, $3 per year; six copies for $15; ten copies for $26, and an extra copy to the person remitting. Specimen copies free mail for 20 cents.
BEADLE & CO., Publishers,
118 William Street, New York.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GIRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. WAREROOMS and "AGENCY," 667 BROOME ST.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
469 Broadway (adj. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.
MUSICAL BOXES.
See Advertisement on Page 798.
EXHIBITION OF NEW TOYS
Holiday Presents
At the Store of
STRASBURGER & NUHN,
Corner of Maiden Lane and William Street,
NEW YORK.
S. & N., in soliciting an early call of these wanting to supply themselves, are now offering for sale
Mayer's American Eau de Cologne,
Superior to Farina's best genuine; and indispensable toilet article, sure to give satisfaction.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $3, $4, $5, and $6 a set. Ivory and Pearl Belt-Buckles, $1 50 to $5 each. Scarf Pins, $1 to $10 each. Colias, Bracelets, &c. 36 cts. to $3 each.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 571 Broadway.

BEAUTY.—Adorn, Golden, Brown, and Silken Curls produced by the use of Prof. De Barry's FIRSER LE CHEVEUX. Unrivaled, unequaled to curl the most straight hair of infantile or the sex into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results from six years to the bald. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, D. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y.; Sole Agents for the United States.

WHISKERS AND MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face from three to five weeks by using DR. ANDERSON'S RESTAURATEUR WITH CHEVEUX. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, D. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y.; Sole Agents for the United States.

PHYSICIANS, DRUGGISTS,
And Country Merchants, are referred to the advertisement, in the inside page, of WRIGHT & HUDALL, Wholesale Druggists, of Philadelphia.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
E. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 469.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

JOHN T. HOFFMAN,

MAYOR-ELECT OF NEW YORK CITY.

It is many years since the city of New York has chosen for her Chief Magistrate a man of the position and reputation of JOHN T. HOFFMAN. He is not only a gentleman of high social position, but a lawyer of distinction, a judge of eminent probity, a representative by descent of some of the oldest New York families, a citizen of unblemished reputation, and (as will appear by our sketch) one of the few New Yorkers who have received the unanimous vote of the city for high and responsible office.

JOHN T. HOFFMAN was born at Sing Sing, in Westchester County, January 10, 1828, and is now not quite thirty-eight years of age. His father, ADRIAN RISKAM HOFFMAN, M.D., is a distinguished physician, long resident and universally respected and beloved in his county, and was the son of PHILIP L. HOFFMAN and HELENA KISSAM, his wife, whose names are remembered with affection by our oldest citizens as among the most valuable members of early society in New York, and the founders of many public charities and benevolent works.

The other sons of PHILIP L. HOFFMAN were Dr. RICHARD K. HOFFMAN, whose lamented death occurred only four years ago, and CHARLES O. HOFFMAN, of the firm of FELLOWS, HOFFMAN, & CO., well-known merchants of New York.

The Mayor-Elect entered Union College, in the junior class, in 1843, but was obliged to leave for a time on account of ill health. He graduated in 1846; studied law at Sing Sing with General AARON WARD and Judge ALBERT LOCKWOOD, and was admitted to the bar January 10, 1849, shortly after which he removed to New York City and commenced the practice of law at 63 Wall Street. His industrious habits, united with eminent ability in his profession, insured his success at the bar. His law partner, Hon. W. H. LEONARD, was called to the bench of the Superior Court, and HOFFMAN was assumed the ermine also. In 1860 he was nominated for the Recordership by Tammany Hall, and elected by about 12,000 over the Mozart candidate, and about 4000 over the Republican. On the bench the high order of his ability became at once manifest, and his unflinching devotion to justice won him the respect and esteem of all parties. In the trial of the celebrated riot cases in 1863 the firm and noble conduct of the Recorder was the subject of universal approbation, and so highly was he regarded that in 1863 he was nominated by all parties, except a small Democratic faction, and received 60,000 out of 64,000 votes—a tribute of respect unparalleled in the modern history of this factionridden city.

There was a general regret that Judge HOFFMAN should leave the bench he adorned; but his nomination for the Mayoralty was made with the avowed object of defeating a notorious "ring" politician, and to do this no man so upright, unimpeachable, and universally popular was to be found. Against his own wishes he was placed in nomination, and he boasts with good reason of his election, accomplished without the expenditure of any money, against three candidates, each of whom was backed by large and very liberally-scattered means.

Judge HOFFMAN married, in 1854, a daughter of HENRY STARKWEATHER, of this city, and resides in Fourth Avenue. His career has been brilliant and successful, and he owes his honors, not to political favoritism, but to a popularity earned by steadfast labor and untarnished honesty, united to abilities of the highest order. He is a man of striking personal appearance, with a fine face, keen piercing eye, and an erect, commanding carriage. He is an accomplished literary scholar, a thorough gentleman, has traveled extensively in this country and Europe, and his election may well be esteemed an honor to the city.

HON. JOHN T. HOFFMAN, MAYOR-ELECT OF NEW YORK CITY.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

THANKSGIVING AT FIVE POINTS.

For several years the children of the Five Points Industrial School have had a Thanksgiving Dinner provided for them by the Mission. The city presented no marrier scene on this year's Thanksgiving Day than was afforded at this establishment.

Four hundred children, prettily and tastefully dressed, went through their calisthenic exercises, under the adroit leadership of a little German girl, with surprising grace of manner and movement. One who was there thus describes the various exercises of the occasion:

"The discipline of the children, from the youngest to the more advanced in years, the oldest not exceeding ten or twelve, was perfect in every way. Their little songs and hymns were sung in admirable concert, and some of their imitations, as that of a thunder-storm, their only instruments being their hands and voices, were quite an agreeable surprise to the visitors, who applauded them warmly. There was quite a number of colored children who partook with equal zest in all the exercises, seeming to excel in the fortissimo, as they danced their glistening teeth and shook their little woolly heads excitedly. The enlivening little melody 'A Farmer I shall be,' the chorus of which was whistled lavishly by the boys, received much applause, as it deserved to do, and led on to that a little fellow of a couple of years, who had his fingers in his ears, for a new effect, forgot to stop in time, and sang out lustily when all the rest had finished, 'And a farmer I will be.' Another, who had evidently been born and bred on a farm, by modestly pulling down the visitors' coats into one about one year old, proclaimed himself 'Johnny Jim,' whose father was killed at 'Bully's Run.' When the Principal asked the children who of them had lost a father or a brother in the war, two-thirds at least held up their hands. The grand finale in the singing way was the song of the Blacksmith, a real live Smith, of four years old, in scarlet jacket and rolled up sleeves, doing the accompaniment on an anvil with his hammer, keeping most accurate time, and eliciting sparks luminescible and unbounded applause. These exercises over, the children marched down to dinner in the basement, led on by two juvenile drummers and a colored brigadier. At dinner Mr. HALLADAY, the Superintendent, presided, and the children were waited upon by the officers of the house and friends who had left their own tables for that service, as those of the Five Points children have no tables to wait again round for the infrequent Indian children and their friends or parents, and after these the doors were thrown open to all who hungered, irrespective of age or sex. Over two thousand received a good Thanksgiving dinner."

The Five Points Mission, organized by a band of noble-minded Christian ladies in the year 1850, and still under their efficient management, has become one of the leading charities of the city. The average daily attendance of poor children during the year was past two hundred and seventy-three. There is also a large Sunday-school connected with the Mission which holds two sessions every Sabbath. Seventeen hundred children have been taught in the schools of this institution during the year. There are nineteen families living in the Mission buildings, who, by the observance of the rules, form a community of singular order in the midst of their evil surroundings.

THE JAMAICA MASSACRE.

WHAT is civilization? and in particular what is British civilization? The full report of the doings of the British authorities in Jamaica furnish a humiliating answer. How humiliating, will be understood when it is known that Englishmen themselves express their shame. "Deeds have been done," say they, "both by the insurgents and by the authorities, the bare recital of which makes the blood tingle in our veins." The English authorities in Jamaica have put themselves upon a level with the savage atrocities which they undertook to avenge by the summary massacre of two thousand negroes.

We have waited, before thus speaking on this subject, for a full disclosure of the affair on both sides. What we give now to our readers is in connection with our illustration of MORANT BAY, on pages 805, and is given on authority which is purely English.

MORANT BAY, at the Southeastern corner of Jamaica, washes a poor district not much more than twelve miles square, within which there are negro settlements, stricken with poverty, which two years of drought had of course tended to aggravate. The black inhabitants are many of them Baptists, though inconsistent of the Baptist Mission. They have mixed up some of their heathen traditions with their Christian faith, and the influence of the British Government has tended to intensify rather than to alleviate the elements of barbarism which have remained.

The trouble at Morant Bay began at a Petty Sessions of the Peace held at that place October 7. There was some noise among the by-tanders, and the offending persons were summoned before the Justice. One counsel from the court, was caught, and then rescued by his friends. On the 8th a case of trespass was called on, which involved the holding of a large class of negroes. Naturally a number of this class were present. PAUL BOGLE, speaking for these, remonstrated on the main case, and was to pay the fine, but to appeal to a higher court. For this a warrant was issued for BOGLE's arrest, and a force of 27 officers for the execution of these warrants was resisted. The military was summoned to the support of the authorities. The negroes were refused access to the Court-house Square, but in their excitement they did not respect even the Riot Act, and the military fired upon them. Several of the negroes fell. This infuriated the people, who overpowered the soldiers, and helped themselves to the same means of warfare that had been used against them. In the excited state to which the negroes had been wrought we may well imagine the atrocities which followed. There were murders in hot blood, and possibly mutilation of corpses, and but little more. About 20 whites were killed and as many wounded. There was but one murder committed after this by the negroes. Governor EYRE admits that Indian and children were left unmolested, and that no attempt was made to extend the outbreak into a general insurrection.

Such were the outrages of the negroes, committed in the excitement of the moment—an excitement for which the Government was in great part responsible. To punish these outrages all the military force called together, were illegitimate so far as it was in the disturbed district, and then, with the assistance of a savage tribe of Maroons armed for the purpose, were marched through the island, shooting down negroes in cold blood, and hanging others after a mock trial. Not satisfied with this, the Governor issued a warrant for the arrest of Mr. GORDON, a Member of Assembly and a Magistrate, who surrendered himself, and was hung after a hasty court-martial. It is said that, in one way or another, two thousand negroes have been slaughtered by the Jamaica authorities.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1865.

THE PRESIDENT'S POSITION.

IN its temper, simplicity, and patriotic fidelity the Message is a model, and has been received with unprecedented unanimity of approbation. This result is due, on the one hand, to the hearty sympathy of the Union party with the aims and views of the President whom they elected; and, on the other, to the frantic hope of the traitors in the rebellion that the exists jealousies and dissensions between the President and his friends by ostentatiously patronizing him and insulting that he had deserted his friends. But the hope and the effort are vain. MR. JOHNSON has not Tylerized. He has not asked the rebellious States to take office and places without conditions. He has been steadfastly true to the emancipation policy. He declares himself, in his conversation with Mr. SHARKEY, in favor of negro equal suffrage. If his position upon these questions is not that of the Union party, what is? If it is not distinctly opposed to the whole spirit and action of "the Democracy," nothing can be. The "Democratic" plan, announced last April, was that of accepting State action as laying down its arms and send representatives to Congress, on the ground that it was not in rebellion, and had never been out of the Union. The President and the country have disposed of that folly, and forever. We feel a very comfortable faith that they will be equal to every similar sophistry hereafter.

In treating our domestic affairs the President frankly and clearly states his view of the character of the Government and the limitations of the State and National powers; and reaffirms, in a manly and noble strain, certain fundamental truths which seemed likely to be more or less faded from the national consciousness. "The American system," he says, "rests on the assertion of the equal rights of the citizen, and the pursuit of happiness; to freedom of conscience; to the culture and exercise of all his faculties." A man who sincerely believes that need not be doubted.

In his reasoning upon Reorganization the President's logic seems to us to be sound and fault. If, as he says, the sole right of the National Government is to enable the States whose functions are "suspended" to resume them, it certainly can not impose arbitrary conditions upon the resumption. For if it may it is of course the judge of the conditions, and must decide solely by considerations of the national welfare. The Presidents says: "After the close of the war it is not competent for the General Government to extend the elective franchise in the several States." Yet he had just said, in speaking of the emancipation amendment, "It is not too much to ask of the States which are now resuming their places in the family of the Union to give this pledge of perpetual liberty and peace." But why? If the States are merely in abeyance, with their powers all unimpaired, what can we do more than to enable them to resume their functions, and when they are in full possession of their powers, let them decide for themselves whether they will give such a pledge? It is not perfectly plain that if we may make the resumption depend upon their assent to a constitutional amendment which is not yet declared to be law, we may do it because we think the public safety requires it? And if we are of opinion that the public safety requires the same thing before we extend the suffrage, we have exactly the same right to demand that "pledge of perpetual loyalty and peace" before allowing those States to resume their functions.

But theories are of small importance when action is so plain and firm as the President's has hitherto been. The important point in reorganization is, that the suspended States shall resume their powers at the earliest moment compatible with the welfare of the Union. The President holds this point clearly in view. He informs the new Governors elected in those States that they will not exercise their powers until authorized by the National Government; and while he individually prefers to leave the further institution of civil offices in the suspended States to those whom he has already empowered to vote, he adds that he considers the national faith pledged to the protection of the personal rights of the emancipated class.

The tone of the Message in discussing foreign affairs is masterly. The clear and decisive statement of the position of England and the inevitable consequence of persistence in her peremptory refusal even to argue the question of the Alabama claims, is singularly able. There is no threat, no bluster. "If you choose to make your bed so, you must lie in it without fuming." The duty of the people and the duty of the United States to defend themselves against armed foreign interference in the politics of this country is plainly set forth in view of such passionless and absolute politeness that it can not fail to impress profoundly whomever it may concern.

In fine, the Message is one that will make no Union man regret that he voted for ANDREW JOHNSON. Like ABRAHAM LINCOLN, he stands singly to exercise the national will. Like his great predecessor, he has no way but the people's way; and confiding fully in them, and acting plainly his own views, he gives the practical solution of the grave questions of the hour to the people assembled by their representatives in Congress.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WHILE we are not unmindful of the great value of this document, we shall not attempt to discuss the questions with respect to the Legal Tender act which have been accepted by many as being against its constitutionality.

The Financier, in presenting a synopsis of the Report, declares that the key to the policy recommended is the supposed opinion that the authority of Congress to make the obligations of the Government a legal tender resides outside of the Constitution." If this view of the Tribune is correct, the Secretary would be right. Many takes sides with those who have assailed the Legal Tender act in various courts, and who will presently appear before the highest court of the United States for the purpose of having the act declared null and void from the beginning. The effect of such a decision would be ruin. Bankruptcy to the many. If such a decision must have been disastrous to the great cause in which our armies were engaged.

The Constitution, which gives to the Legal Tender act, the undisturbed operation of which until the ends of the war are tied up being manifestly essential. This is the language of the Report: "The right of Congress, at all times, to borrow money and to issue obligations for loans in such form as it may be content to make negotiable; but their authority to issue obligations for a circulating medium as money, and to make these obligations legal tenders, is held only be found in the unwritten law which sanctions whatever the representatives of the people, whose duty it is to provide for the Government against its enemies, may consider in a great emergency necessary to be done."..... "Their authority may be considered as a war power, value thereof;' and inasmuch as a mixed currency, consisting of paper and specie, has been found to be a temporary necessity, it would seem also to be their duty to provide, as has been done by the National Currency act, that this paper currency should be secured beyond all reasonable contingency. To go beyond this, however, and issue Government obligations, making them by statute a legal tender for debts, public and private, is not believed to be, under ordinary circumstances, within the scope of their duties or constitutional powers."

It may, perhaps, have been the intention of the Secretary to maintain that the act as a war measure was constitutional, and that its operation must be limited to the duration of the war, and this latter necessary for closing the financial affairs incidental to it, but it is difficult to arrive at the precise meaning of what is thus announced. The theory that there is any "unwritten law" to which Congress may appeal in an emergency is new and wholly erroneous. The authority of Congress is confined to the powers expressly granted and those necessary and proper for carrying them into effect. The power to make the obligations of the United States a legal tender is not derived from this and no other source, and it is much to be regretted that the Secretary of the Treasury should have used the great weight of his official position either to declare against it or to leave doubtful his views of the constitutionality of an act which continues to be as vital to the administration of his department as it was throughout the heat of the conflict. When the question reaches the Supreme Court of the United States he will find that the fog will vanish, and that the legality of the act, which yet bestows upon his department what there is of life and vigor, is clearly within the powers conferred on Congress for the purposes of war.

Before designating the particular powers of the Constitution by which the authority in question hinges it may be expedient to notice a few historical and other facts. The expenditure made by the Government in subduing the rebellion was foreseen at the outset to be, as it has been, the most stupendous known in ancient or modern times. The chief agent of the associated banks of New York admitted, during the period when the Government was conducting the war on the basis of loans made by those banks to the National Government or the banks, if not both, would fail if those loans continued. The scheme, therefore, of conducting the war on the basis of specie payments was found impracticable. There was evidently not enough specie within the reach of the Government to furnish it for the expenditure in that medium, the greatest known to history, and this because, first, the precious metals are coined solely for the ordinary purposes of commerce and not for those purposes and the wants also of a great war; and, second, because the precious metals had been habitually expelled from the country by means of the small note circulation that had extensively prevailed in all the States. There was a clear necessity, therefore, for some other description of money to enable the Government to carry into effect the several granted powers to declare and conduct war, to provide and maintain a navy and army, and to regulate commerce during war on the basis of war. The question what that money should be was settled in the preceding history of other great nations involved in war. The Parliament of England, for the purpose of the war with France, was compelled to make the bills of the Bank of England—which Mr. Pitt said was a great engine of state—in effect a tender for debts, which continued in force and effect for nearly twenty years after the war had terminated. Without referring to the expedients of a like kind of France during her revolutionary period, or to those of another important nation, the experience of Great Britain, the most opulent nation of the world at the time of her conflict with France, would be sufficient to settle the question of fact that a resort to legal tender acts is an unavoidable necessity of war.

Does not the Constitution, in conferring the power to declare and conduct war, and to provide and maintain an army and navy, give to Congress that very war power which the Parliament of Great Britain in the war with France?

We think there can be no room to question this point. Although our Government is one of limited powers, yet, with respect to the powers conferred, its authority is as full, complete, and unlimited as is that of the Parliament of Great Britain over the same subject-matter. Whatever in the experience of great nations is shown to be necessary in the conduct of war is as necessary for us as for them. The Congress of the United States, when the great emergency of war arises, is authorized to decide as a question of fact whether or not it is necessary and proper to adopt any one of the usual means for securing the finances of a nation in war adopted by modern nations, and the decision made must, on the well-known principles applied in the United States Bank case, be final and conclusive. In that litigation it was held that a bank being one of the known and usual means for carrying into effect some of the special powers granted, the decision of Congress, that it was a necessary and proper means, was conclusive upon the court.

But the Constitution itself contains ample evidence to show that the powers of the Constitution in war are enlarged by that emergency beyond those powers which are suitable to a condition of peace. The restriction in the 3d and 5th articles of the amendments, and with respect to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, show one rule for war and another for peace, which restrictive clauses imply that the power to conduct war is enlarged during the emergency of war so as to embrace whatever is necessary and proper for the safety of the country in that great struggle for its life. It is manifest that making the bills issued a legal tender gave them the required circulation and standing over the Union to make them objects of general desire, which qualities they would not have possessed if their acceptance had not been made compulsory. It is not reasonable to suppose that those who went to the field would have readily gone there if debts could have been contracted by them to individual creditors in gold and silver at home, while they were paid in Treasury notes not a legal tender, and consequently worth a large discount, measured by the precious metals. The power to make those bills a legal tender in war is as much conferred as is any power of the Constitution.

There is as much to command in the management of the Treasury Department that we regret being obliged, by the momentous importance of the subject, to differ from its head as to the legality and expediency of a power which we deem essential in the conduct of a war of great magnitude, and which others would use to our disadvantage in a struggle with them, and with unquestioned right as one of the necessities in war of modern nations.

CENTRALIZATION.

THE pleasant chronicle relates that when the doughty and pious cavalier Don Quixote beheld afar off the wind-mills quietly grinding their grist, he thanked Heaven for the opportunity, and proceeded to inflict summary and direful punishment upon those wicked and monstrous giants. It like manner some well-meaning doctrinaire, writing in the Evening Post, catches sight of a tranquil statement of this journal that the natural tendency of the times should be protected by the Government, and, commending his soul to Heaven, he sculls it and sneers at the lamentable ignorance under the solemn but sincere delusion that it is nothing but the wicked and monstrous giant Centralization which he is attacking.

The good Don Quixote was very valorous and thrust his lance vigorously into the sails of the mill, but when the winds of heaven filled them they wrenched the weapon from his hands and left him a rather sorry and absurd spectacle. So even as the mill placidly went on grinding after the defeat of the Don, the fundamental truth of our Government continues to be true whatever becomes of theories and theorizers.

The treatise upon the value and place of the local State Governments in our system to which our worthy critic refers has no readers, which he enriches with citations from DE TOCQUEVILLE and MILL, and which he properly calls the A B C of our political system, is excellent. It is true as far as it goes, but the superficial writer has yet very much to learn. He has yet to understand that the municipality in every despotism has always been found to possess what rights are guaranteed by the national authority; nor does centralization follow upon a rigorous protection of those rights. And he has yet learn the great folly of censoring from the absolute monarchy of LOUIS XIV.'s France to the Republic of United States.

Indeed, so unfitted is our vehement critic for a Mentor in American political philosophy that in a part of the same column in which the loghead of Consolidation is defied he virtually complains that the President did not insist more stoutly upon settling the question of reconstruction by himself instead of leaving it to Congress. The critic's "democracy" is of that kind which used to prefer the will of Andrew JACKSON to the Constitution of the United States. The President, on the contrary, is a democrat of the school which prefers to leave the practical and local questions of the public welfare to the representatives of the people, especially when, as now, their election of last year was based upon the very overwhelming unanimity of the country. A mind so morbidly alive to the least suspicion of centralization as that of our good critic would naturally seem to be a little more sensitive than it seems to be to the perils of power lodged in one man. Fortunately the President is not of that democratic temperament. He knows that his action has sprung from the necessity of the case, and has been purely arbitrary. He has declared not a point upon which he wishes to be stubborn.

The Emancipation Amendment is only an illustration of that national guarantee of popular rights, of justice and advantage of which we assert. And we claim that it should not only declare every man's personal rights to be secure, but that it shall take care also to make them so by giving the most ample redress for their violation. It will naturally look to the State authority to execute its will in this matter. But it will not leave that will at the mercy of the State authority. It will not again, for instance, suffer South Carolina or any State to expel MR. HOAR for seeking lawful redress in the State court; and if the State authority of Georgia is not sufficient to protect the editor of the Post in the fullest and freest expression of his opinions any where in that State, the supreme authority will hold that State authority to rigorous account, and let our friend take heart. Neither consolidation nor horrors like those of the French Revolution will follow. Experience in this country has shown that with our peculiar system the danger to popular liberty will always proceed not from centralization, but from defiance of the supreme power. And just as in daily life it is necessary to insist upon generosity and not upon selfishness, so the local instinct is in growing with us that it is necessary to enforce the national supremacy.

The distinction is very clear to a mind which is not distempered by a morbid fear of the people. The personal rights of every man in Alabama are to be under the protection of the United States as they are under that of Alabama. Shall we seem even more ignorant than now if we ask why there are not the people of Alabama have their rights in that State. But the people of the United States have also their rights there; and the State will not be ready to protect them—as it certainly has not hitherto—the United States will doubtedly will.

CURRENCY CONTRACTION.

THE Secretary of the TREASURY, in his annual report, grapples with the Currency question squarely and manfully. He adheres to the doctrine of his last Annual Report. He still holds that the only way of bringing down the price of gold and commodities is by calling in and cancelling a portion of the legal-tender money now afloat. And this he proposes to do, first, by declaring the compound-interest notes no longer a legal tender after their maturity; and, secondly, by exchanging, from time to time, long six per cent. bonds for United States notes to the extent of from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000, the notes to be cancelled as fast as received. Many of the arguments which have been urged against currency contraction he understands to refute. He says that his plan will involve no commercial crisis, because the currency contraction will naturally be gradual; that no serious diminution of the public revenues need be apprehended, as, in fact, the public revenue depends on the productiveness of labor, which will be enhanced by cheapness. Intrinsic value of the currency: that, so far as the national banks are concerned, "it is better they should be embarrassed now than bankrupted hereafter." Should no contraction be inaugurated, he predicts that the inflation now in progress will continue steadily until it culminates, within two years, in a crash more terrible than the revulsions of 1857 or 1837.

This is excellent doctrine, and does credit to Mr. M'CULLOCH'S skill as a political economist. Nothing is clearer than that gold can not fall to par or commodities to their old prices so long as we have $715,000,000 of redeemable paper-money in circulation. Nothing is more certain than that if this volume of paper-money could, by a process of cancelling or by any other process, be reduced one-half, or even one-third, gold would fall, the currency would improve, living would be cheaper, speculation would decline, and industry and trade would be placed upon a stable basis.

But in real life it is not always or necessarily consequences to discover what is theoretically right as what is practically feasible. Abstract principles are very well indeed, and we should always contend for them as nearly as we can; but they can only be adopted as an absolute rule of conduct when they are susceptible of practical application. Before the country can acquiesces in Mr. M'CULLOCH'S plan for contracting the currency to the extent of one-third within three years, the people will naturally like to have some assurance that such contraction can be effected; and that it will not, if attempted and subsequently abandoned as a failure, involve us in worse evils than now surround us. It is hardly necessary to demonstrate, for instance, that a policy which might compel the Government either to break faith with its creditors or to issue more legal tenders in 1867 and 1868 would do more mischief than can be wrought by the present depreciation of the currency. And if there be reasonable ground for apprehending that such might be the ultimate effect of the application of a system of contraction at the present time the public will be slow to approve it, strongly as it may recommend itself to the judgment as a matter of science.

Let us look at the facts. A few weeks ago Five-Twenty bonds were selling at 103, and gold was 144. Mr. M'CULLOCH undertook to fund $50,000,000 of compound-interest notes which had passed out of circulation by the effect of the interest accumulated upon them. The consequence was a decline in Five-Twenties to 99. They have since recovered one-half of one per cent. Gold, which was 147 when the negotiation was completed, is now in the neighborhood of 145. Now, according to the estimates contained in this Report, the income for the fiscal year 1865-6 will fall short of the expenditure by $113,194,000. This sum will have to be borrowed—on Five-Twenty bonds, of course. There would be no difficulty in borrowing this sum on Five-Twenty bonds at or above par during the period were no currency contraction impending. With that prospect the issue of new proposals is uncertain. People certainly will not give par for new Five-Twenties when they can buy the issue of November, 1865, with six weeks' gold interest accrued, at 99½. It may be said that the Secretary need not insist on getting par for his loan. He may accept 98, for instance, as Mr. CHASE did on a memorable occasion. This is not Mr. M'CULLOCH'S view. He says in his Report that the United States ought not to pay over 6 per cent. for money. If he began to borrow at 6 per cent. or 7 per cent. for gold he would have to pay 8 per cent. for the next loan, 10 per cent. for the next, and so on. By submitting to much shorter Secretary would increase the debt about as rapidly as the War and Navy departments decreased their expenditures. We take for granted that, so far as the $113,194,000 is concerned, the Secretary will not offer his bonds below par. Nothing can prevent their being subscribed for except the refusal of contraction. That may. If it does, there is an end, of course, to all hopes of further sales of bonds with a view to the reduction of the currency during the year 1865-6.

During the fiscal year 1866-7 the Secretary figures a deficit of $111,615,000 exclusive of income over expenditure. But before December 31, 1866, $187,549,646 of debt certificates and other short securities will mature. To pay these will require not only the whole estimated surplus, but $76,130,000 besides—to be borrowed as before on Five-Twenty bonds. The retirement of more gold bonds before one dollar of currency can be cancelled.

In 1867 and 1868 not less than $848,323,951 of Seven-Thirty notes and certificates will mature as well as $173,000,000 of compound-interest notes—say in all $1,021,323,951. The holders of these securities are entitled absolutely to demand the currency for them. On the days on which they severally mature Government must stand ready to pay out three things—either to pay one hundred cents on the dollar for its maturing obligations, or give the holders a new security of equal value, or else in value in the open market to the old one; or to confess itself bankrupt, and to let its liabilities go by default.

It does not require much financial experience to discern the fact that if, in the year 1866, there has been any material curtailment of the currency Five-Twenties will not be maintained par in the year 1867. As we have mentioned above, the first attempt at contraction—which applied exclusively to the compound notes—clogged with large amounts of accumulated interest—caused Five-Twenties to decline from 103 to 99. It is easy to see that further contraction would have a more material "shrinkage" in the prices of all commodities—including public securities—would be caused by the suspicion of the fact. The object of this purpose to meet his maturing liabilities in 1867?

We have spoken of Five-Twenties alone, but no one can doubt that seven-thirties will feel the same influence which apply to them apply with equal force to every other form of United States security. The compound-interest funding operation of October was as marked on Seven-Thirty notes and Ten-Forty bonds as on Five-Twenties. The Ten-Forties sold at 94, the Seven-Thirty notes at 97. Bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent. would sell for less than 6 per cent. bonds, as the offer of an extra interest would be regarded as a confession of insolvency. If Five-Twenty bonds can not be sold no other bonds can.

This is the practical result of the actual working of Mr. M'CULLOCH'S plan of contraction. Within thirty-six months he has $1,200,000,000 of short notes and securities to redeem in 1867 in currency. On the day these notes mature they must be paid or the Government is bankrupt. If any important contraction takes place in view to contraction, Five-Twenty bonds have been depressed to 90, it will be idle to offer them in exchange for the maturing notes. The holders can take them, but will demand their money. And if the Government manages to get itself into a predicament of this kind, capitalists and moneyed men will naturally take advantage of it. When Conn left the Government without money to meet the interest on the public debt in January, 1814, the private loan bankers deemed 12 per cent. per annum not too much to ask for a temporary loan to supply the deficiency. It is to be hoped that Mr. M'CULLOCH theories the Government into a like strait, he will find the most ardent Republican bankers ready to drive with him quite as hard a bargain.

This objection will fall to the ground if Five-Twenty Bonds should be maintained at par. Information at home and abroad as to be continually in demand in all kinds of money markets at or above par. This being the case, Mr. M'CULLOCH'S scheme of contraction would at once become feasible, and would be the wisest possible policy. But unless the Secretary can give the country some assurance that his bonds will so continue to command par or thereabouts, it is to be feared that his method of bringing us back to specie payments will be generally regarded as involving at least as much danger as it promises advantage.

THE DANGER OF A MAJORITY.

CONGRESS meets under the most favorable auspices. There are very difficult questions to be settled, but the course of the President and the Elections have fully illuminated the situation.

We trust, therefore, that Congress will be mindful of the dangers of a vast majority. The party of the Administration has two-thirds of the House. It can do what it chooses, and it should therefore choose with the utmost calmness and deliberation. To the normal action of a free government in peaceful times a vigorous and able opposition is essential. But the present Opposition is weaker. It is curiously deficient in names of distinction, while the Administration is signally strong. If the Opposition candidate for Speaker is to be considered its leader, it is very clear that, had the members from the unorganized States been at once admitted, the Opposition would have been led and its policy dictated by the old masters of the Democratic party.

The chief danger of a huge majority is not so much indifference or contradiction from the Opposition as it is crudity and extravagance of suggestion from its own members, which the Opposition may have not enough thoroughly to research and expose. In the present Congress, therefore, if the majority be wise, a part of its own number will perform the regular work of an Opposition upon such occasions. There are many legislative propositions of which the spirit is perfectly right while the method is at once injudicious. The party Opposition will attack of course upon the ground of the intention, but the true difficulty will be found to lie with the upon the point of detail and execution.

It is with questions involving such differences that this Congress will largely deal; and we look for the most searching and essential debates. The crisis in public affairs is vital, as it has often been before. The action of Congress has a consequent importance which can not easily be overstated. But no body of legislators ever had a clearer knowledge of the wishes and views of their constituents; and the dangers of the vast majority are so obvious that we readily believe so intelligent a body will avoid them as much as possible, and do only what they ought, and not merely what they can.

ERIN-GO-BRAGH.

FENIANISM seems to be in great danger of disappearing in a laugh. The American Senate of the Irish Republic have impeached and removed their President, Chief, JOHN O'MAHONY. It was a summary process. At four o'clock on a certain Friday President O'MAHONY was served with a copy of articles of impeachment, and was required to appear on the Saturday evening, and before midnight justice was done on him.

Thereupon the tempest broke. The Chicago Centre telegraphs to the impeaching body: "We intend a public demonstration sustaining action of Senate. Will we go on? Answer at length and immediately." To this request the Senate responded which, in its awful and heroic tone, might have announced an armed descent of invincible Celtic hosts upon the despicable and effete Anglo-Saxon Senate. Action is the removal of an officer charged with violating his oath and extravagant expense; and this is the announcement: "Go ahead!" Then the answer: We must meet it like wise and brave men! The Senate will do their duty to Ireland. The issue is doing yours."

The issue is, in fact, mainly endorsed by the party of O'MAHONY. They instantly raised the battle-cry, and "The Fenians of Manhattan" declare that "the attack of Senate Fenian America" in an address of the most Emerald eloquence. The Senate is denounced as "a packed conclave of malicious Irishmen," who "have prostituted the high position of Fenian Senatorship to the most ignoble purposes." The Senate is actually endorsed by the Party of O'MAHONY. They instantly raised the battle-cry, and "The Fenians of Manhattan" declare that "the attack of Senate Fenian America" in an address of the most Emerald eloquence. The Senate is denounced as "a packed conclave of malicious Irishmen," who "have prostituted the high position of Fenian Senatorship to the most ignoble purposes." The Senate is actually endorsed by the Brotherhood upon its present pinnacle of glory, while: "Foremost among its boldest, truest, and most loyal supporters stands the name of JOHN O'MAHONY, like a star in the heavens, receiving new lustre from the clouds which obscure for an instant but vainly hide its purity." And JOHN O'MAHONY is "to kick against the good." And an ardent volunteer writes in hot haste to the papers, imploring all faithful Irishmen to "Leave all to JOHN O'MAHONY—a man whose name yet can be only rivaled by the illustrious WASHINGTON, the savior of our adopted country." "Shall we forget him?" cries this enthusiastic O'MAHONIAN. "No, a thousand times no! Go in with O'MAHONY for glory or death!"

The Senate of the Irish Republic in America must look to its ways. There are plainly two sides to the question; and if once the inspiring cry of Erin-go-Shillelah! bursts out along the opposing Celtic lines the entire Senate tyrant may slumber yet a little longer before his hour of doom.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE President's Message is treated in another column.

REPORTS OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Secretary HARLAN, head of the Interior, reports that four millions and a half acres of public lands have been disposed of during the fiscal year ending June 30, of which over one-fourth were taken by actual settlers under the Homestead law. The receipts of the Land office during the year disposed of there are 12,735,925 acres.

Postmaster-General DENISON reports that his department the revenues have been $14,556,188, the expenditures $13,146,425, leaving a surplus of $1,409,763.

The money-order system has made no considerable progress during the year, having been established the year and moneys transmitted to the great amount of $3,161,122.

The Postmaster-General on this large amount of business being only a little over $2600.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. M'CULLOCH, reports the maximum of the debt in August to have been only $2,844,000,000. He is in favor of contraction of the currency. The subject is abundantly considered in the previous columns.

Secretary STANTON, of the War Department, begins his report with the following comprehensive statement: "The military appropriations by the last Congress amounted to the sum of two hundred and fifteen millions two hundred and forty thousandnine hundred and thirty-one dollars and seventy cents ($215,240,931 70). The military estimates for the next fiscal year, after careful revision, have been reduced to one hundred and fifty millions forteen thousand four hundred and sixty-one dollars and eighty cents ($150,014,461 80). The reduction is principally in the appropriations for the pay, subsistence and clothing of the army. It is proposed to reduce our military establishment to the number of troops, and over eight hundred thousand have already been mustered out of service—leaving in the service such only as are necessary." He then gives a detailed statement of the military operations of the last year during the last year. He pays a well-deserved tribute to Lieutenant-General Grant, from whose appointment he dates the greatest successes of the United States armies. On March 1, 1865, the aggregate of military force of all arms was 963,921 men, which, by the 1st of July, was reduced to the number of 1,153,000. In regard to our preparations for hostilities, in case of actual rebellion or a foreign war, the Secretary furnishes some valuable statistics. He says:

The chief reliance for defence as shown by our experience, are: 1st, troops; 2d, arms and ammunition; 3d, fortifications; 4th, transportation; and 5th, military supplies. The troops disbanded were chiefly volunteers, who, during the late rebellion, had become soldiers. Their victories, have not diminished the value of that Government to them in time of war; nay more individual remembrance equal or greater force for its retention; and none can even be disbanded with superior morale, ability or valor than those who have fought for the retention of the Union. Arms and ammunition, now manufactured by Government, are sufficient for the present peace establishment, and the discussion of the question of the expediency of abolishing the Bureau of Military Justice and Bureau of Military Commissions is also considered.

The Secretary recommends the transfer of the Union arsenals from the time of the appointment as Lieutenant-General in the army, and according to his seniority. And he discusses some novel features of Butler's share in the campaign against Wilmington, and the operations of Sheridan at Fort Fisher. He pays a graceful tribute to General Sherman and his officers.

RECONSTRUCTION.

On the 6th instant the Legislature of Georgia ratified the Constitutional Amendment by an overwhelming majority.

In Kentucky Judge Johnston, of the Jefferson Circuit Court, has dismissed the complaints against General Palmer, commanding the district, of citizens who threw down their muskets, on the ground that the requisite number of States had not ratified the Constitutional Amendment when the indictment was found, and that therefore slavery is not as yet, and therefore can be no criminal offence in such a case as this. General Palmer has issued a proclamation declaring that the Constitutional Law is in force in Kentucky, and calls on the citizens to co-operate with the civil power in permission to travel on public conveyances, to apply to the courts for redress.

Both Houses of the Louisiana Legislature have adopted a resolution declaring that the Hon. JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, elected United States Senators by the previous Legislature, are not entitled to represent the State in the National Senate, and on the 7th chose Mr. Randall Hunt to represent one of them.

On the 5th instant the Legislature of Virginia, by an almost unanimous vote, took the first step which will result in repealing the acts of the Legislature heretofore passed committing to the treasury of Maryland and Berkeley counties to the State of West Virginia.

CONGRESS.

December 5.

In the Senate, the House resolution for a special committee of fifteen on the subject of the rebellious States was laid over.—Other bills were introduced; and at 2.30 P.M. the President's Message was received and read.

In the House, Mr. RAYMOND introduced a resolution that Mr. Dodge be entitled to his seat. Mr. Dodge has always claimed the privileges of the floor, as a member-elect. Mr. BINGHAM moved into the expediency of abolishing the Bureau of Freedmen and Abandoned Lands. A resolution was passed against the republication of the public debt, with but one dissenting vote, given by Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL, Pennsylvania.—The President's Message was read.

December 6.

In the Senate, the Standing Committees were announced, and the Chairs did not differ essentially from those at last session.—Mr. SHERMAN, at the head of the Finance Committee, reported a bill to regulate duties.

In the House, a bill was introduced by Mr. THAYER to limit the civil service during the official term of the President of the United States in case of the death, resignation, removal, or inability of the President. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

December 7.

In the Senate, Mr. WILSON presented petitions of colored citizens for the Equal Rights of Citizens, and for the right of suffrage.—A committee to recommend appropriate action on the Message of President LINCOLN was appointed.—Certain amendments proposed by the Union State Convention of Tennessee, relative to the election of Senators, the location of the Rebel debt or the requisition of the National, also prohibiting slavery in the future, were read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Resolutions strongly supporting the Message were offered by Mr. W. WILSON.—An application was granted to refurnish the White House.

In the House, Mr. STEVENS offered resolutions concerning affairs in Mexico, condemnatory of the attempt to establish an empire there, and referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee.—A bill was offered to extend the Freedmen's Bureau for two years.—Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill to be reported by the Speaking Committee were then announced by the Speaker.

December 8.

In the Senate, the Standing Committees were announced, and they do not differ essentially from those at last session.—Mr. SHERMAN, at the head of the Finance Committee, reported a bill to regulate duties.

In the House, a bill was introduced by Mr. THAYER to limit the civil service during the official term of the President of the United States in case of the death, resignation, removal, or inability of the President. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

December 9.

In the Senate, Mr. WILSON presented petitions of colored citizens for the Equal Rights of Citizens, and for the right of suffrage.—A committee to recommend appropriate action on the Message of President LINCOLN was appointed.—Certain amendments proposed by the Union State Convention of Tennessee, relative to the election of Senators, the location of the Rebel debt or the requisition of the National, also prohibiting slavery in the future, were read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Resolutions strongly supporting the Message were offered by Mr. W. WILSON.—An application was granted to refurnish the White House.

In the House, Mr. STEVENS offered resolutions concerning affairs in Mexico, condemnatory of the attempt to establish an empire there, and referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee.—A bill was offered to extend the Freedmen's Bureau for two years.—Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill to be reported by the Speaking Committee were then announced by the Speaker.

December 11.

In the Senate, Mr. WILSON presented petitions of colored citizens for the Equal Rights of Citizens, and for the right of suffrage.—A committee to recommend appropriate action on the Message of President LINCOLN was appointed.—Certain amendments proposed by the Union State Convention of Tennessee, relative to the election of Senators, the location of the Rebel debt or the requisition of the National, also prohibiting slavery in the future, were read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Resolutions strongly supporting the Message were offered by Mr. W. WILSON.—An application was granted to refurnish the White House.

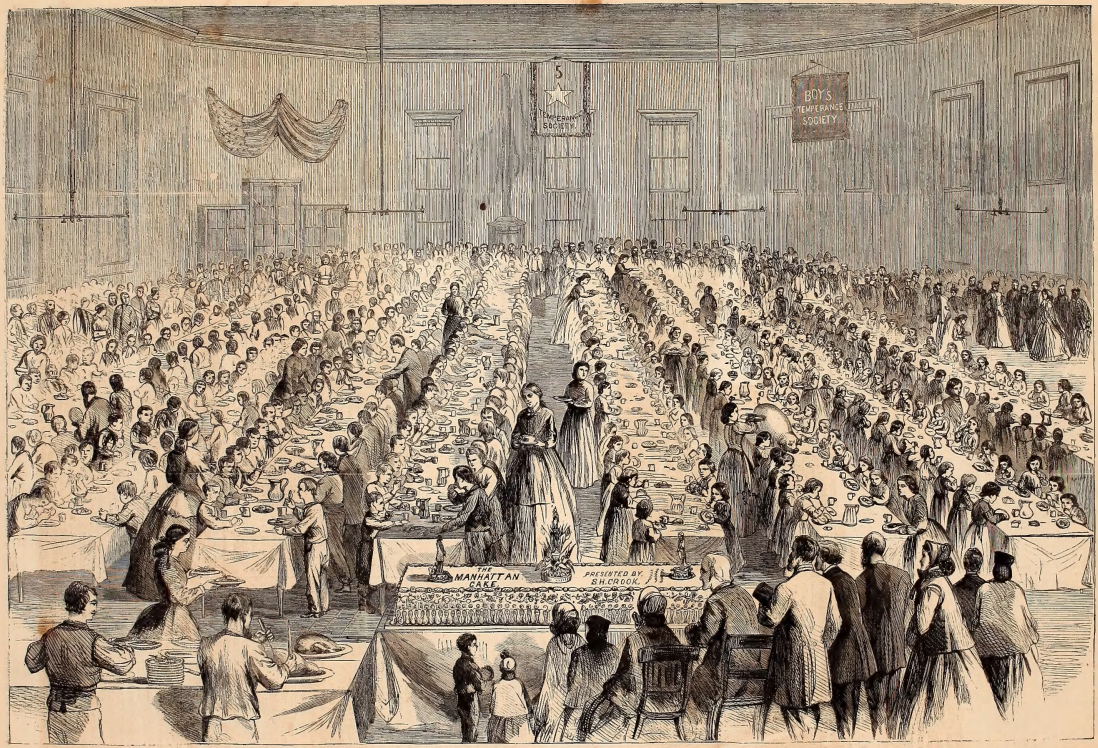
In the House, Mr. STEVENS offered resolutions concerning affairs in Mexico, condemnatory of the attempt to establish an empire there, and referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee.—A bill was offered to extend the Freedmen's Bureau for two years.—Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill to be reported by the Speaking Committee were then announced by the Speaker.

December 12.

In the Senate, Mr. WILSON presented petitions of colored citizens for the Equal Rights of Citizens, and for the right of suffrage.—A committee to recommend appropriate action on the Message of President LINCOLN was appointed.—Certain amendments proposed by the Union State Convention of Tennessee, relative to the election of Senators, the location of the Rebel debt or the requisition of the National, also prohibiting slavery in the future, were read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Resolutions strongly supporting the Message were offered by Mr. W. WILSON.—An application was granted to refurnish the White House.

In the House, Mr. STEVENS offered resolutions concerning affairs in Mexico, condemnatory of the attempt to establish an empire there, and referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee.—A bill was offered to extend the Freedmen's Bureau for two years.—Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill to be reported by the Speaking Committee were then announced by the Speaker.

NEWS ITEMS.



On the 1st instant General Grant arrived in Charleston and was received with great enthusiasm, an interesting feature of which was the demonstration made by the colored people.

The wreckers have raised a large portion of the steamer Republic, sunk off Wilmington, and will soon get Neptune, Metamora, and Huntress afloat.

The Richmond Enquirer says that the city has leased to Gottlieb & Bailey the Richmond Theatre for a term of twenty-one years, the rental being $25,000 per annum.

The Richmond Whig says that the city has leased to Gottlieb & Bailey the Richmond Theatre for a term of twenty-one years, the rental being $25,000 per annum.

Major LIEBER, of Boston, has been re-elected.

THANKSGIVING DINNER AT THE FIVE POINTS LADIES' HOME MISSION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

THE PORT OF VALPARAISO, CHILI, SOUTH AMERICA.—[SEE PAGE 806.]

THE TOWN OF MORANT, MORANT BAY, JAMAICA.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

VALPARAISO.

VALPARAISO, the principal port of Chili, which the blockade instituted by a Spanish fleet has just brought prominently into notice, consists of a long, narrow street. Trade is in the hands of the English, American, and French; and a handsome suburb on the heights above Valparaiso is almost exclusively inhabited by them. Valparaiso has become a port of great importance since the independence of Chili. There are extensive bonding warehouses, in which goods are deposited to the amount of many million dollars annually. Besides the ships engaged in the import and export trade of Chili, Valparaiso is a most convenient port for vessels from the eastern coast of the United States, of the Pacific, the western coast of North America; and they may be provisioned without even coming to anchor.

It is stated that in the French and English Government do not intervene, the European commercial establishments in that city will be utterly destroyed. The foreign trade is said to amount to eighty millions of dollars. The entire transit trade to the lands of foreigners, and all the merchandise in Chili is foreign. The Chilian Government has valuable establishments at Santiago, Talca, Concepcion, and other towns in the interior; but they have comparatively few on the coast where there are only French, English, German, and Belgians.

It appears, therefore, to be against foreign commerce rather than against Chili that Admiral Pareja is making war. It is believed that both England and France have remonstrated, and this probably is the reason that Admiral Pareja has been commanded by his government to suspend warlike operations until he shall receive further orders.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER LXXXVII.

FOLLOWING UP THE SCENT.

DAVIS'S stables were soon found; also Davis —Davis of the double stable, all varnish, all pockets, all wide-awake, with a wisp of spotted cambric crushed in his neck, a stern eye, a mouth and no legs to speak of. This gentleman—not insensible to the attractions of her Majesty's profile in her relief on a packet of medium—indistinctly remembered supplying a fly on the morning in question. It was his large green fly, and he drives it himself. The gentleman desired him to drive to the Great Western Railway Station, as he had a train to meet morning, and looked as if she had been crying. When they got to Paddington, the gentleman gave him half-a-crown over and above his fare. Then he gave all belonged to the lady. A porter took it off the cab and carried it into the station. Davis thought he should know his fare again if he saw him. He was a tall, red-haired man with only one eye. Did not hear a said to what station or by what line the lady and gentleman were going. Was quite willing, however, to go over to the South Western Terminus and do what he could to identify the porter.

So Mr. Davis shuffled himself into a light overcoat, occupied a seat in Mason's omnibus, and was forthwith whirled away to Paddington. The one-eyed porter was found without difficulty. His name was Bill. He remembered the lady and gentleman quite well. The lady left her umbrella in the first-class waiting-room, and he found it there. He ran after the train as it was moving away from the platform, but could not get up with it. Everything soon reached the owner's umbrella. However, the gentleman came back to London that same evening and inquired about it. Gave Bill a shilling for his trouble. The luggage was labeled Clevedon. He was certain it was Clevedon, because he had labeled it with his own hands, and remembered having first of all labeled it Clevy, by mistake. Of all these facts he was positive. The description of the umbrella had impressed them on his memory; otherwise he did not suppose he should have remembered a single circumstance out of the ten travelers than of the hundreds of others upon whom he attended daily.

This testimony shaped Saxon's course for him. He dismissed Davis, recompensed Bill, and by two o'clock was proceeding away toward Clevedon.

It was the down express; and yet how slowly the train seemed to go! Leaning back in a corner of the carriage, he watched the flying of the landscape, and listened to the eager panting of the engine with an impatience that far outstripped its pace at which they were going. He counted the stations; he counted the minutes, the quarters, the half hours, the "three minutes' delay at Didcot, the ten minutes at Swindon, the ten minutes at Bristol irritated him almost beyond endurance. He was in search for the rich autumnal country. He saw not, or saw without observing, the "proud keep" of Windsor standing high above its antique woods, the silver-gray Thames, with its scarred willows and wooded banks, the fair city of Oxford, with its amidst her amphitheatre of hills; and Bristol, gloomy with the smoke of many furnaces. All he thought of was to be detained to see the end of at now, was Clevedon.

Shortly after half past five he reached Bristol. At half past six he had arrived at his destination. There were flys and omnibuses waiting about the little station. He took a close fly, being anxious to avoid all danger of recognition, and desired to be driven to the best hotel in the place. There was but one, a large white house with a garden, overlooking the Bristol Channel. The day was waning and the tide was high on the beach, as Saxon looked for a moment among the flowering shrubs, lovely over to the shadowy Welsh hills far away. The landlord, waiting at the door of the hotel to receive him, thought that his newly-arrived guest was admiring the setting sun, the placid sea with its path of fire, the little cove under the cliffs, and the steamer in the offing—and Saxon was scarcely conscious of anything before him.

CHAPTER LXXXVIII.

THE ABSENCE OF OCCAM.

No Mr. Forsyth had arrived at the Royal Hotel, Clevedon, and no lady whom any person belonging to the house could identify with the description offered by Saxon. The head waiter, a middle-aged man of clerical aspect, suggested that the gentleman should call for Mr. Slatter. Learning that Mr. Slatter was the superintendent of rural police, Saxon at once dispatched a messenger to request his presence; whereupon the clerical waiter respectfully inquired whether the gentleman had dined.

But Saxon had not. Indeed, he was unaware that day, nor slept in a bed for four nights past; so he desired the waiter to see that something could be made ready immediately, flung himself upon a sofa, and, overwhelmed with fatigue, fell profoundly asleep.

It seemed to him that he had scarcely closed his eyes when a strange voice awoke him, and he found the waiter shouting in his ear that dinner on the table, and Mr. Inspector Slatter waiting to speak with him.

Mr. Slatter represented the majesty of the English law to the extent of some six feet three, and was a huge, broad-shouldered, florid, keen-eyed giant, with a soft rich voice, and a broad Somersetshire accent. He had not heard of any Mr. Forsyth at Clevedon, but he had learned that no such name had been added to the visitors' list up at the Bristol Rooms. He had, however, observed a lady in very deep black sitting alone on the Old Church Hill both yesterday and the day before. Not having been up the hill himself, Mr. Inspector Slatter could not say whether the lady was young or old; but that she was a lady there was no doubt, and that she had not been on the hill to-day. He had passed that way half a dozen times, and could not have failed to see her if she had been there. On finding out where this lady might be lodging, nothing more would be easier. Slatter could guarantee that information within a couple of hours.

So Saxon sat down to his solitary dinner, and Mr. Slatter went about his business. He would before than after the expiration of two hours he came back, having ascertained all that he had promised to learn. Miss Riviere was not to been at Clevedon. She arrived five days before, accompanied by a gentleman, and returned to London by the express train, leaving her apartments at Weston Cottage, down by the Green Beach, empty. The lady, however, came after twelve, the same gentleman had come to fetch her away to Bristol, and they had left about two hours.

Saxon snatched up his hat, bade the Inspector hold the way, and rushed off to Weston Cottage, to interrogate the landlady. He remembered in the passage by a gaunt spinster, who at once informed him she was very particular about letting to friends, and could not possibly attend to his inquiries. But Saxon was quite too much in earnest to be daunted by mere lack of courtesy; so, instead of politely requesting leave to call again at a more convenient opportunity, he only shook the door violently, and bade her "Stand back!"

"I have but two or three questions to put to you, madam, and answer them I am going immediately. Can you tell me in what direction your lodger was going when she left here?"

"If you call going to see Bristol, began the landlady, drawing herself up with a little dignified quiver of the head, "any time after twelve o'clock to-morrow."

"Gracious Heavens, madam, I may be a cousin of hundreds! Shall I find her there to-morrow?" interrupted Saxon, impetuously. "Answer me at once, I beseech you."

"Protesting all the time that it was very extraordinary, very unreasonable, very inconvenient, the mistress of Weston Cottage then replied with a certain disgraceful alacrity to Saxon's last questions. Miss Riviere and Mr. Forsyth had left her house at a little before two o'clock that afternoon. They took the express train which passed two o'clock train to Bristol. Where they might be going she knew not, and cared not to say. Having heard Mr. Forsyth mention the words "high tide" and "Cumberland Basin," she had guessed at the time that they might be going to continue their journey by water. This, however, was a mere supposition on her part, as she had only overheard the words in question while bringing the drawing-room door. Mr. Forsyth, she had understood, was Miss Riviere's guardian. He did not arrive unexpectedly. He had all along been arranged that he should return to stay to fetch Miss Riviere away. All their arrangements were only engaged for one week. Some of Miss Riviere's luggage, indeed, had never been taken up to her room at all; and was now ready in the hall a good two hours before they arrived at the door. Miss Riviere's trunks. Here the gaunt landlady's unwilling testimony ended.

By the time Saxon got back to the Royal Hotel it was close upon seven o'clock. The next train to Bristol had been gone nearly two hours, and he must now either take post-horses all the way, or drive to the Harbor Station, and so catch the up-train from Exeter at fifty-five minutes past ten. Having taken counsel with Mr. Slatter, he decided on the latter as the more expeditious route, and in the course of a few minutes had paid his bill, and dismissed the inspector, and was once again on his way.

Then came the gloomy road; the monotonous tramp of hoofs and running of wheels; the dark rows gliding slowly past in the darkness, and now and then a house brimming over with light and warmth. Next the station, with the up-train just steaming in; porters running along the platform; first-class passengers peering out coyly through close-shut windows; and the engine all glow, smoke, and impatience, panting for release. Here Saxon exchanged the dismal hotel fly for a warm corner in a dimly-lighted railway carriage, and so sped on again till the train drew up at the Bristol station, where he alighted, jumped into a cab, and bade the driver take him to the Bristol Basin.

The way to this place lay through a tangled maze of narrow by-streets, over lighted bridges, and across docks, and beside the floating harbor thick with masts, till they came to an office close against a pair of huge gates, beyond which more masts and rigging visible. There were lights in the windows of this office, the door of which a man opened in answer by a sleepy porter, who, being questioned about the boats which had left Cumberland Basin that day, said he would call Mr. Lillicrap, and vanished. After a delay of several minutes Mr. Lillicrap came out of an inner room—a small, pallid young man, redolent of tobacco and rum, and disposed to be snappish. "Boats?" he said, "boats? Very extraordinary how hard to come there asking about boats. Did people suppose that boats went out from the basin at midnight? Had they hung out a board to say? Always about! Of course boats had gone out. Boats went out every day. There had been a boat to Ilfracombe —that went at ten. Had been a Bristol trader past three; one to Swansea—at half past four; and the last boat to Portishead at two. Any others? Oh, yes! To be sure—one of the Daughter of Ocean, for Bordeaux—" a fixed point. "West Indiaman two a month" and started to-day about four."

For Bordeaux! Saxon's heart leaped at the name.

"The Daughter of Ocean carries passengers of course?" he asked, quickly.

"Oh yes, of course."

"And there is a regular steam-service, is there not, between Bordeaux and America?"

Mr. Lillicrap stared and laughed.

"To be sure there is," he replied. "The French service left Bordeaux last Tuesday week, would go from Bristol to Bordeaux to get to New York, when he can embark at Liverpool or Southampton for the rest of the question."

But Saxon, instead of arguing this point with Mr. Lillicrap, begged to know where he should apply for information about those passengers who had gone with the steamer that afternoon: Liverpool Basin, he was very much afraid, supposed to be obliging despite his irascibility, offered to send the porter with him to a certain lodging-office where these particulars could perhaps be ascertained. So Saxon followed the man down a flight of slimy brick steps across a dreary yard full of boats and packing-cases to another office, where, although it was so long past business hours, he remembered the gentleman perfectly well. The lady wore deep black, and the gentleman carried a large carpet-bag in his hand. He recollected having seen the gentleman several days before. He came down in the train, and took the omnibus passage and paid the double fare in advance. They came on board a little after three o'clock —it might be half past three—and the Daughter of Ocean steamed out about a quarter past four. If, however, the gentleman would come again to-morrow, he could tell to-morrow morning, he could see the books, and welcome.

But Saxon could not wait to see the books now. They could tell him no more than he knew already.

CHAPTER LXXXIX

THE MAN OF THE PEOPLE.

ALTHOUGH he left Bristol by the first morning express, Saxon yet found that he must perforce wait in town till evening before he could pursue his journey further. The early Continental Mail train was not due, and the boat-train reached Paddington, and the next would not leave London Bridge till eight P.M. As for the Great Western, he dared not take it so late in the afternoon that he would be in nowise a gainer by following it. So he had no resource but to patiently endure that hour's delay with as much philosophy as he could muster to his aid.

In the course of the day he was constrained to keep clear of his allies and accept no aid from without. The clew which he now held was of so slight a texture that the failure or accurate with which he should follow it up must be his own likewise. So he went neither to Lombard Street to see Mr. Bowles, nor to the news of Lorraine Crescent, nor to Chancery Lane to consult with Mr. Kenrick, nor even to Scotland Yard, having looked in at his chambers, and desired the new perturbable Gillingwater to prepare his travelling-bag. At half past dinner ready by a certain hour, the young man thought he could not spend his "enforced leisure" better than by taking a walk in the park, and so left, and learning from Mr. Behrens's own lips the true story of the Caribbean correspondence.

The wool-stapler's offices were easily found, and consisted of a very dreary, dusty, comfortless first-floor in a dismal house at the farthest end of Bread Street. On entering the outer room Saxon found himself in the presence of three very busy clerks, a tall porter sitting humbly on the extreme edge of a huge packing-case, a small boy sitting on a ruling over a long list of names and addresses, and a bulky, bald-headed man in a white hat, who was standing in a measure of wool, and who, with his hands full, his feet very wide apart, and his hands clasped behind his back. Saxon recognized him at once —keen gray eyes, iron-gray hair, white hat, and all.

"Mr. Behrens, I believe," he said.

The wool-stapler nodded with curly civility.

"My name is Behrens," he replied.

"And mine, Trefalden. Will you oblige me with five minutes' private conversation?"

Mr. Behrens looked at the young man with undissembled curiosity.

"Oh, then you are Mr. Saxon Trefalden, I suppose," he said. "I know your name very well, sir."

And he led the way into his private room—a mere den some ten feet square, as cheerful and comfortable as a condemned cell.

"I must beg your pardon, Mr. Behrens, for interfering with your business in this abrupt way," said Saxon, when they were both seated.

"Not at all, Sir," replied the other, bluntly. "I am glad you have had the opportunity of seeing me. You were a mere six days' wonder here in the City some months ago."

"Not for any good deeds of my own, I fear," laughed Saxon.

"Why no; but for what the world values above good deeds nowadays—the gifts of fortune. We don't all get our money so easily as myself, Sir."

"And a fortunate thing too. Those who work for it are happier than those who only inherit it if had far rather have worked for mine, if I could have chosen."

Mr. Behrens's rugged face lighted up with approbation.

"I am glad to hear you say so," said he. "It is a lovely morning, Sir, and as a mere matter of fact, quite true to fact. I know what work is to a man better. I began life as a factory boy, and I have worked my way up from the bottom of the ladder. I had no help, no education, no capital—nothing in the world to trust to but my head and my hands. I have known what it is to sleep under a hay-stack and dine upon a raw turnip; and yet I say I had rather have suffered what I did suffer than have dawdled through life with my hands in my pockets and an empty title inside my head."

"I hope you do not think that I have dawdled through life, Mr. Behrens," said the dawdle through it," said Saxon. "I am nothing but a Swiss farmer. I have driven the plow and hunted the mammals ever since I was old enough to do either."

"Ay—but now you're a fine gentleman!"

"Not a bit of it, I assure you. I have always been, and I am going home before long to be same school for six weeks. Rather unusual for him to take so long a holiday, isn't it?"

"Very unusual, I think," stammered Saxon, turning suddenly red and hot.

"It's especially inconvenient to me, too, just at this time," continued Mr. Behrens, "for I have important business on hand to-morrow which, though a clever fellow, is not Mr. Trefalden. Your cousin is a remarkably clear-headed, intelligent man of business, Sir."

"Yes. He has great abilities."

"He has acted as my solicitor for several years," said Mr. Behrens. And then he leaned back in his chair, and looked as if he wondered what Saxon's errand was.

"I—I wanted to ask you a question, Mr. Behrens, if I may take the liberty," said Saxon, observing the look.

"Surely, Sir. Surely."

"It is about the Castletowers estate?"

Mr. Behrens's brow clouded over at this announcement.

"About the Castletowers estate?" he repeated.

"Lord Castletowers," said Saxon, besing somewhat about the best to take advantage to approach the main question, "is—is my intimate friend."

"Humph!"

"And—and his means, I fear, are very inadequate to his position."

"If you mean that he is a drone in the hive and wants more honey than his fair share, Mr. Trefalden, I think I can do what you and I were talking of just now—work for it."

"I should be would gladly do so, Mr. Behrens, if he had the opportunity," replied Saxon; "but that is not it."

"Of course not. That never is it," said the man of the people.

"What I mean is, that he has been cruelly hampered by the debts which his father left encumbered the estate, and—"

"And he has persuaded you to come here and interceed in his cause, time? As is the old story, Mr. Trefalden—it is the story of every poor gentleman who comes to me. I am constantly coming to me imploring one week more. Lord Castletowers, he said, was a friend, and must not be left shabby. Money was promised, but had not yet come in. In short, one additional week was to put all right.

thing straight. I am no friend to coronets, as your cousin knows; but I would not desire to be harsh to any man, whether he wore a lord or a crossing sweeper—so I let your friend have the one week more. It expired yesterday. I expected Mr. Trefalden all the afternoon, and he never made his appearance. I have called at his office this morning, and I hear that he has left town for six weeks. I am sorry it be, because I must now employ a stranger, which makes it, of course, more unpleasant for Lord Castletowers. But I can't help myself. I must have the money, and I must foreclose. That is my last word on the matter."

And having said this, Mr. Behrens thrust his hands doggedly into his pockets, and stared defiantly at his visitor.

Saxon could scarcely suppress a smile of triumph. He had learned more than he came to ex8, and was in a better position than if he had actually put the question which he was preparing in his mind.

"I think we slightly misunderstand each other, Mr. Behrens," he said. "I am here to-day to pay you the twenty-five thousand pounds due to you from Lord Castletowers. Do you wish to receive it in cash, or shall I pay it into my bank on your account?"

"You—you can pay it over to me, if you please, Sir," stammered the wool-stapler, utterly confounded by the turn which affairs were taking.

"I am not sure that I have quite so large a sum at my banker's at this present moment, but I will go over to Signor Nazzari's, of Austin Friars, who is my stock-broker, and arrange the matter. In the meantime, I give you my word the amount, Mr. Behrens, you will not present it, I suppose, before to-morrow?"

"No—not before to-morrow. Certainly not before to-morrow."

Saxon drew his check-book from his pocket, and laid it before him on the table.

"By-the-way, Mr. Behrens," he said, "I hear that you have built yourself a pretty house down at Castletowers."

"Confo—idedly damp," replied the wool-stapler.

"Indeed! The situation's very pleasant. Your grounds once formed a part of the Castletowers park, did they not?"

"Yes; I gave hirelorship two thousand pounds for that little bit of land. 'It was too much—more than it was worth," he said.

Saxon opened his check-book, drew the instrument towards him, and selected a pen.

"You would not care to sell the place, I suppose, Mr. Behrens?" he said, carelessly.

"Hum! I don't know."

"If you would, I should be happy to buy it."

"The house and stables cost me nine thousand five hundred to build," said the wool-stapler.

"And yet are damp!"

"Well, I don't fancy it really nothing to speak of," replied Behrens, quickly.

"Let me see: I believe Lord Castletowers sold a couple of farms at the same time, which you buy those also, Mr. Behrens?"

"No, Sir. They were bought by a neighbor of mine—a Mr. Sloper. I rather think they are again in the market."

"I should be very glad to buy them if they are."

"You wish, I see, to have a little landed property over in England, Mr. Trefalden. I think it quite right, Sir; and, after all, you are more than half an Englishman."

"My name is English, my descent is English, and my fortune is English," replied Saxon, smiling.

The wool-stapler nodded approval.

"Well," he said, "I have lately bought an estate down in Worcestershire, and I have no objection to sell the Surrey place if you have a fancy to buy it. It has cost me, first and last, nearly five thousand pounds."

"I will give you that price for it with pleasure, Mr. Behrens," replied Saxon. "I shall I make out the check for thirty thousand pounds, and settle it at once?"

The seller laughed grimly.

"I think you had better wait till your cousin comes back before you pay me for it, Mr. Trefalden," he said. "The bargain's off, Sir, that's enough; but you ought not to part from your money without receiving your title-deeds in exchange."

Saxon hesitated and looked embarrassed.

"If you are afraid that I shall change my mind, you can give me fifty pounds on the bargain—will that do? People don't buy freehold estates in quite that off-hand way, you know, even though they may be as rich as the Bank of England; but one can see you are not much used to business."

"I told you I was only a farmer, you know," laughed Saxon, making out his check for the twenty-five thousand and fifty pounds.

"Ay, but take care you don't fling your money away, Mr. Trefalden. You're a very young man, and, begging your pardon for the observation, you don't know much of the world. Money is a hard thing to manage; and you have more. I fancy, than you know what to do with."

"Perhaps I have."

"At all events, you can't do better than buy land; always remember that. I do it myself, and I advise others to do it."

"I mean to buy all I can get in my native Canton."

"That's right, Sir; and if you like, I will inquire about those two farms for you."

"I should be more obliged to you than I can express."

"Not in the least. I like you; and when I like people, I am glad to be of service to them. You wouldn't be particular, I suppose, to a few hundreds?"

"I don't care what price I pay for them."

"Whew! I must not tell Sloper that. In fact, I shall not mention you at all. Your name alone would add fifty per cent. to the price."

"I shall be satisfied with whatever bargain you can make for me, Mr. Behrens," said Saxon, and handed him the check.

The wool-stapler shrugged his shoulders impatiently.

"I must give you receipts for these two sums," he said; "but your cousin ought to be present on the part of Lord Castletowers. The whole thing is irregular. Hadn't you better wait while I send round to Chancery Lane for Mr. Keckwitch?"

But Saxon, anxious above all things to avoid a meeting with that worthy man, would not hear of this arrangement; so Mr. Behrens gave him the formal receipts in the presence of one of his clerks, pocketed the check, and entered Saxon's address in his note-book.

"As soon as I have my news about the farms, Mr. Trefalden," said he, "I will let you know."

And with this they shook hands cordially and parted.

"I'll be bound that open-handed young fellow has got the best of this money," muttered he, as he locked the check away in his cash-box. "Confound the aristocrats! They are all either fools or knaves."

In the mean while Saxon was tearing along Cheapside on his way to Austin Friars, eager to secure Signor Nazzari's services while the Stock Exchange was yet open, and full of joy in the knowledge that he had saved his friend from ruin.

About an hour and a half later, as he was walking up and down the open space in front of the Exchange, having just left the Bank of England, where he had found all the offices closed, impatient with respect to the stock sold out by his cousin in virtue of the power of attorney granted by himself five months before, the young man was suddenly brought to a pause by a hand upon his sleeve and a panting voice calling upon his name.

"Mr. Saxon Trefalden—beg your pardon, Sir —one half-minute, if you please!"

It was Mr. Keckwitch, breathless, pallid, streaming with perspiration, and almost speechless.

"One of our clerks, Sir," he gasped, "appened to catch sight of you—gettin' out of a cab —top of Bow Church, Cheapside—followed you —ever since he came back. Mr. Behrens' directed me to Austin Friars—from Austin Friars to Exchange. Ah! here I am!"

Saxon frowned; for his cousin's head clerk was precisely the one person whom he had least wished to meet.

"I am sorry, Mr. Keckwitch," he said, "that you have given yourself so much unnecessary trouble."

"Bless you, Sir, I don't regard the inconvenience. The point is—have you learned anything of the missing deeds?"

Saxon was so unused to dissemble that after a moment's palpable hesitation he could think of no reply more prudent than to ask a question in return.

"Have none of your emissaries learned anything, Mr. Keckwitch?"

"No, Sir, not at present. I've had three telegrams this morning—one from Liverpool, one from Southampton, and one from Glasgow; all tellin' the same tale—the deeds ain't there. Mr. Keck has taken the London docks for his line; but he's done no better than other folks up to this time. If, however, you have already news of 'em, Sir, why then we can't do better than follow your lead."

They were close under the equestrian statute of the Duke when Saxon stopped short, and looking the head clerk full in the face, replied:

"Yes, Mr. Keckwitch, I do know something of my cousin's movements, but it is my intention to keep that knowledge to myself. You can, if you please, put a stop to all these useless inquiries; for I shall now retain this matter solely in my own hands."

"Not exclusin' me from assistin' you, Sir, I hope?" exclaimed Keckwitch, anxiously. "Of course, if you have found a clew, and it's your pleasure to follow it yourself, that's only what you've a rights to do; but I am a man of experience, and I've done so much in the affair already—"

"I am obliged by what you have done, Mr. Keckwitch," said Saxon, "and I shall make it my business to recompense you for your trouble; but I have no further need of your services."

"But, Sir—but, Mr. Saxon Trefalden — you can't mean to give me the go-by in this way! It ain't fair, Sir!"

"Not fair, Mr. Keckwitch?"

"Why after my talkin' all the summer through, as I have been tollin'—after all the trouble I've taken, and all the money I've spent to worm out your cousin's ways—why, you'll never have known even so much as where he lived if it hadn't been for me!"

Mr. Keckwitch," said Saxon, sternly, "whatever you may have done was done to please yourself. I presume—not to please me. Good-morning, or serve your ends. It was certainly not done for me. I do not consider that you have any claim upon my confidence or even upon my gratitude. However, as I said before, I shall recompense you by-and-by as I see fit. Good-morning!"

And with this the young man hailed a cab, desired to be driven to his chambers, and speedily vanished in the throng of Westward-bound vehicles, leaving the head clerk boiling over with impotent rage and disappointment.

"Well, I'm cursed if that isn't a specimen of ingratitude!" muttered he. "Here's a purse-proud upstart for you to step in and rob me of the man of his fair vengeance. Recompense, indeed! Damn his recompense and himself too! I hate him. I wish he was dead. I wish the whole tribe of Trefaldens. I wish they were all dead, and that I had the buryin' of 'em."

MAKING MEMORIES.

MAKING beautiful memories
To sweeten our lives in another day;
To be remembered in the years
Waiting for us in the far away.

Leafy groves, where long, cool shades
Woo unto rambling hour on hour;
To be remembered like a dream—
Leaf and bird and grass and flower.

Leaf-full hollows, old beech-tree
Where, with my penknife, thus I mark
J for Jennie, and F for Fred,
And a ring around them in the bark.

Under the white moonlight last night
Where we whispered, hand in hand,
Looking out from the pillars' shade
Over the beach with its white, white sand—

There was a picture! The far-off stars,
The near-by daisies, the sighing sea;
The good-night pressure of hands; the words
That fluttered down from your window to me.

I read the writing out under the moon:
"Good-night, my darling, my noble Fred,
I love you, and I shall dream of you—
Good-night, good-night!" was what it said.

The commonest thing of our to-day
Will sometime be a poem, a dream,
Bathed in the light of the far away,
How fair, how fair these hours will seem!

Much of this is for memories—
Which, perhaps, will be forgot;
But the word that told me you loved me, love,
Oh, that will not! oh, that will not!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

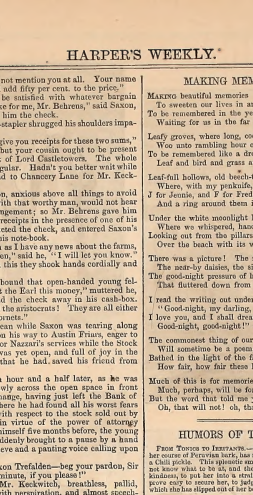
FROM TONICS TO INITIATE.—Spain, not satisfied with her loss of Cuban rule, has now plunged herself into a Chili pickle. This episode shall never evidently does not intend to let it be a Peru-sal of peace. Let us kindness, or put her into a strait-orderer. I will not have any to cause her, to judge by the dexterity with which she has slipped out of her bonds on former occasions.

PROVERBIAL WISDOM.

(Our Own Manufactures.)

Your breath you'll not sweeten by talking of honey;
Soft soap cannot be smeared on the face of a man;
Foolish friends, more than foes, are the vials of sorrow;
Not long will they vile their horrid name conceal;
You'd better a friend than a kinsman rely on.
Though a spur to your foe, think him strong as a lion;
A hand may be white that is washed upon credit;
A word may be true, though by a jester hath said it.

In the midst of the Adelaide is an isle, verdant, fruitful, and habitable, magnificent. The pasture, might meet for a gentle prelate's retreat, undergoes little to be improved, save only the enshading breeze; the pasture, or wine of the country are without ceasing the prickly solace of the peasant; and the pipy, animal incomprehended, but asthma, shares the cook of either with his infants and his spouse.



It is a lively isle, but it is martyrized by the sway of the Briton. And its name?

Oh, sad but illustrious memory of Danielle O'Brien, it is Erin!

By a queer mistake a package was lately received at the patent-medicine store, at Salt Lake, which was intended for another destination. On being opened, it was found to contain a pair of lady's gaiters, addressed to "Mrs. Brigham Young the twentieth."

FLOWERY.—"What flower of beauty shall I marry?" said a young specimen of his misery governor. To which the governor replied, with a grim smile, "Marigold."

A young lady who was perfectly thunder-struck at hearing of her friend's engagement has since been provided with a lightning-rod.

DESCENDING FROM THE GENERAL TO THE PARTICULAR.

HONEST FRENCHMAN (in the Ecstasy of his Heart). "Ah, Madame! comme les Americaines sont Belles!"

CHARMING WIDOW (appropriating the Compliment). "Ah, Mocew! com hay Frongsay song Flattisser!"

HOW TO GET OF A CHARIOT, WITH A WIFE.—Wait until she is at her toilet preparatory to going out. She will be sure to ask you if her dress will do. Tell her that the lives of nine-tenths of the women are passed in the fear that their dresses are straight, and wind up with the remark that you never knew her to wear but one. Then sense about her. Will ask you who that was. You, with a sigh, reply, "Ah! never mind." Will ask you why you did not marry her. You say, absentedly, "Ah! why, indeed?" The climax is reached by this time, and a regular row is sure to follow.

THE TROTTOLANE'S PARADISE.—The Temperate Zone.

IT is funny to see a young lady with both hands in soft dough and a mosquito on the end of her nose.

WHY is a cat going up three flights of stairs like a big bill?—Because she is a-scending.

Why is a lead-pencil like poor human nature?—Because it never does right of itself.

A good story is told of a Methodist, at whose house an Illinois preacher was entertained the night, when the time came and family prayers were suggested, in searching for a Bible, finally produced a couple of torn leaves of the good Book, with the naive remark, "I didn't know I was to have one of these times."

In what color should a secret be kept?—In violet.

Why are authors of works on Physiognomy like an army of soldiers?—Because they "right about face."

THE FLEA'S PARADISE.—Copper Linked.

"ASMITH," said four-year-old Alice, whose little head was full of Christmas, "I want to write a letter to Santa Claus.—or will you write it for me?" "Auntie" took her pen and wrote as follows at the child's dictation:

"DEAR SANTA CLAUS,—I wish you would get me a little dolly, running around, if that belongs to Christmas; and a dolly cradle, if that belongs to Christmas. If you don't, I don't want it. And an apron for my doll, if Christmas must have one. And if it don't, I don't want it. That is all I want. ALICE."

Now send it to the post-office," said she.

Santa Claus will be pretty sure to answer that letter, we think.

Paddy's description of a fiddle can not be beat: "It was the shape of a turkey and the size of a goose; he turned it over on its belly, rubbed its back-bone with a stick, and och by St. Patrick how it did squale!"

MOTTO FOR A SMOKING PHILOSOPHER.—A short pipe and a merry one.

Why is a horse like the letter O?—Because G makes it go. And what is the difference between this conundrum and my aunt who squints? One is a query with an answer; the other is an aunt, Sir, with a queer eye.

Why are pen-makers like inciters to evil doing?—Because they make people steel and point to wrong.

When is a tired man like a thief?—When he needs arresting.

Why are seeds and gate-posts put in the ground?—To prop-agate.

The Illinois fat girl, weighing six hundred pounds, has been bound over for stealing a small sum of money. The amount of cash required to bail her over will be small.

So far as heard from the matrimonial market stands thus: Old stock married off, none; old stock bought at auction, 1; widows of first-class married or soon will be, 10; widows of second-class married or soon will be, 12; young ladies married, 0; young ladies engaged to be married, 95; betrothed and gone to get consent of parentfamilies, 67; still hiding and doing 97; market brisk, up to zero previous, 11; come together again, 3—but they have to dodge present, 1; in love, but not reciprocated, 671; no one to love, 49; elopements, 1; private marriages, 0.

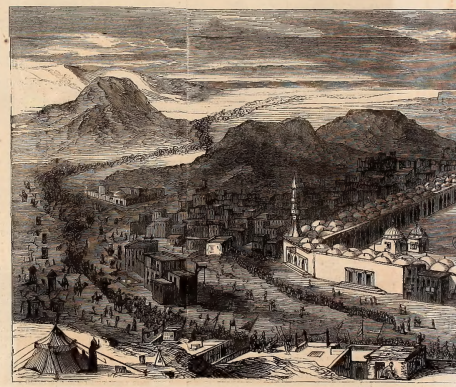
An eloquent speaker is like a river—greatest at the mouth.

That was not a bad reply of the English painter of "The Israelites in Egypt," who, on Pharaoh and his host being inquired for by his fellow-citizens, pointed to an expanse of water—"The Red Sea, my lord; they are all there."

In what circumstances is a woman that wears stays?—Stricken circumstances.

DEPARTURE OF THE SURE-EMINI.

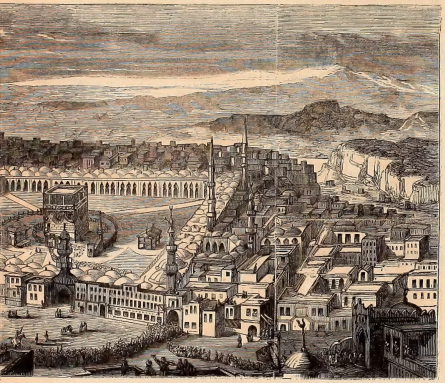
THE DESERT.



ENCAMPMENT OF PILGRIMS.

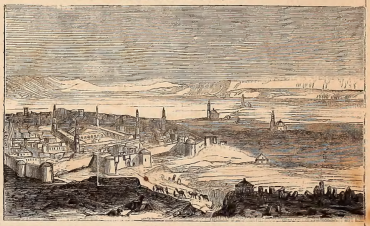
THE SACRIFICES NEAR THE VILLAGE OF MAHALLE'Y MINA.

THE VARIOUS ATTITUDES OF P

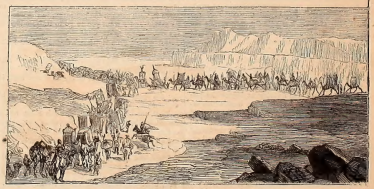


THE STARTING

AYER AMONG THE MUSSELMANS.



MECCA.



OF THE CARAVAN.

PREACHING AT THE MOSQUE

MEDINA.

THE STAMBOUL CARAVAN IN THE DESERT.

PILGRIMS ASCENDING THE HILL OF SAFA.

IECCA.—[See Page 810.]

THE PILGRIMAGE TO MECCA.

At this time, when, at the suggestion of France, a European Congress has been determined upon to investigate as to the means necessary to prevent the pilgrims to Mecca from bringing along with them that terrible pestilence from which so many European countries have suffered, our readers can not fail to be interested in the details of this pilgrimage, which is the grandest ceremony of the Mahommedan religion.

The pilgrimage to Mecca is an act obligatory upon all Mohammedans. Thus it happens that every year an innumerable crowd converges from every portion of Asia and Africa upon the same point, where it accomplishes a pestilential act of insanity. In making the number of these pilgrims three hundred thousand we understate the actual truth. There are two principal lines of procession, as the pilgrims gather about two grand centres—Cairo and Constantinople. The Cairo caravan which gathers together the Mohammedans from Morocco, Algiers, Tunis, and from the desert of Sahara as far as Nubia, has some remarkable characteristics, made up as it is of the most curious and savage types of African civilization. The Shereef, or Commissioner, the caravan, makes a grand halt at Damascus, where it is augmented by arrivals of detached columns from Asia.

For several days previous to their departure the pilgrims of the Cairo caravan gather together at the doors of hospitals and mosques, and while listen to religious harangues, followed by the adey, a sort of philatory during which the pilgrims repeat sitting in a circle. This forms the subject of one of our engravings.

In the mosque at Mecca is the Kibah, an oblong edifice of fine gray granite, 55 feet in length by 45 in breadth, and from 35 to 40 in height. It is surrounded by a covering of black silk which hangs from the roof. Cairo and Stamboul share the honor of presenting to the Kibah every year a new silk covering. This covering, or tapis, intrusted to a pavilion of velvet and gold, is placed upon a splendidly bannered camel. This is the Mahmal. The entire caravan follows this trophy, preceded by the Emir-el-Hadj, the prince of the pilgrims. The tenne, or Arabian dress, is worn by all the Shereefs accompany the Emir. The officers of the viceroy, on horseback, carry rare pieces of gold among the crowd, and in the midst of the most clamorous music, accompanied by cavalry and artillery, the column of pilgrims advances along, waiting for the desert of Suez, its first halting-place. This setting out of the caravan forms the subject of another of our illustrations. But the eastern exit of the Isthmus the Sirek-Essuez, who has charge of the gifts of the sovereigns, the Sultan, or to Mecca. At Damascus the Pashaw joins the caravan with the Emir-el-Hadj, and the column moves on through the desert of Arabia, reaching Medina. Among the forces of the route by the caravans from Bagdad, Bassorah, etc.

The pilgrimage is not accomplished without peril. The unclothed Arab, regardless alike of law and religion, plays his part on the route to Mecca. The wind of the desert lifts up scorching columns of sand. Disease, fatigue, hunger, and the death of the beasts of burden, which are for future caravans the route of those before them by a long line of corpses putrified by the heat, or rebled of their flesh by wild animals. The desert is made a place of horrors.

At length the holy city is in view. Here the pilgrims lay aside the clothes they have worn thus far and are received in two pieces of white wool, not sewed together, without any dress for the head or the feet. The Shereef, or Governor, the pilgrim's first duty, whatever be the hour of his arrival, is to go at once to the Kibah. In the east corner of the Kibah is the Black Stone, which is an object of great adoration. This is about the height of a man, and is composed of small stones well cemented together. It is said that Adam had a vision in which he beheld all his posterity, in the midst of whom the Lord appeared and demanded whether he was their God—and they all answered, "Aiwa Bely!" This confession was called an alliance, and God surprised with this he forced upon him a black stone, which Adam carried away with him from Paradise, and which now reposes in the sacred Kibah at Mecca.

After the visit to the temple the pilgrims commence their sacrifices. They purchase and slaughter a large number of animals. They broil and eat a portion of the flesh, distributing other portions among the kindred. The neighboring villages are to feed. The remnants are left exposed to the sun and infecting the whole neighborhood. After this ceremony the pilgrim is at liberty to participate in all sorts of pleasures afforded in Mecca. The sin vitiated by the pilgrim is a crowd of pestilential diseases; and it is not wonderful that such pests as the cholera spring from so fertile a source.

Most of the pilgrims go from Mecca to Medina to visit the tomb of the prophet. Medina is a city in upward of twenty thousand inhabitants—one-half the population of Mecca. Its only attraction is Mohammed's tomb.

THE CHOLERA EPIDEMIC which started last summer among the pilgrims of Mecca has traveled over a large tract of Europe. The following is its route from the sacred city.

It commenced apparently on the Arabian coast, then traveled to Alexandria, thence to Constantinople, and thence again to various ports in the Mediterranean. From the Mediterranean it crept into the Black Sea, and afterward through the Straits of Gibraltar, along the west coast of Spain and Portugal. Yet it did not make the circuit of the Mediterranean, nor did it continuously ascend the Atlantic shores of the Peninsula. Its visits were capricious and irregular. To this day it has left not only Europe, but all the eastern coast of the Adriatic and the coasts of Barbary untouched. One coast of Italy was severely visited, while the other, up to the close of October, was completely empty. Sicily escaped, but Malta has suffered heavily. For a long time, too, it seemed as if the disease could not penetrate the interior of a country, but that exception has now disappeared. After escaping from the Mediterranean, the pestilence first appeared at Seville. Then it was at Southampton, afterward at Paris, and, later still, Madrid. From Odessa, where it established itself in the autumn, it advanced, and is still advancing, northward to the Polish provinces of the Russian Empire. Its path, upon the whole, that the plague is no longer confined to the basin of the Mediterranean, but has been hovering over Central and Western Europe. The effects of the visitation have been as uncertain as its course. At some places they have been comparatively light; at others extremely severe. In Paris and London the disease was obstinate as well as fatal, and was only defeated by the severest precautions and mortality. In Madrid and Paris, on the other hand, though the virulence of the epidemic was considerable, it was of short duration, the decline being now regarded as fixed. It is now upward of two months since the cholera showed itself at Southampton, England. Its operations were unmitigable; its severity in one or two cases equally marked. In most cases, too, though certainly not universal, occurred for its succession that the disease seemed established, and one or two attacks were reported from the banks of the Thames. Yet this feeling was not maintained, nor did the malady spread. In London there has not been even the symptom of an outbreak.

JOHN REDESDALE'S SERMON.

THE first beat I ever had was Ephraim Tucker. He was a tall young fellow, with eyes like a gypsy's, rosy cheeks, and yellow hair all of a kinky curl. Clever, too, for he was clerk to the apothecary of our town, and, consequently, had a good deal to say for himself. Every one spoke well of him, every one liked him, and he, from the first day we met, liked me better than any other of the girls, though there were many richer and prettier than I in the place.

So we went about a good deal together, and where every one knew every body it soon began to be said that Ephraim Tucker was courting Clara Speer.

For the matter of that, I did not mind hearing it said, for I was a poor girl and could marry as I chose, and had hard times often to please whimsical customers, or to make them pay for work I had toiled over all night, and, worse, sometimes to be derided miles away and whom I saw hardly once in the year, but I had a mother and kind, and was a happy thought that I should be mistress of a heart and home, and, in time to come, perhaps, a mother; and I liked Ephraim, and was not insensible to or being loved and cherished by some one than on that one being Ephraim Tucker.

It was not the way a woman should love her husband; but I did not know it then, for I was as ignorant of any stronger liking as a babe at its mother's bosom.

Perhaps it might have gone on so, and I might have married him, and spoken the marriage vows more to hope or wish for, if I had kept to my work one bright summer day, when Ephraim came tapping at my door, dressed in his best clothes, to leave it. "There's a camp-meeting in the woods," he said, "and I want you to go to it. Besides, it is too fine a day to stay in."

"But, Miss Free Hollister's dress?" I said, looking at the half-done silk I was at work on.

"Plague take Miss Hollister!" said he. "She has fifty dresses, no doubt. Make her wait."

So I let be twitched it out of my hand and hung it on a peg.

"Go dress yourself," he said, and sat down to wait for me.

Well, the sun shone and the birds sang, and I longed for such a free air, and I obeyed my lover's orders we like. So in half an hour we were walking arm in arm toward the woods, chatting merrily. We never were scattered.

There had been no romance in all our acquaintance. I never expected it, and he, I fancy, never thought of it. We were a handsome couple, as I was, after all, something like a Sunday holiday-making; and when we got into the woods it was a very solemn thing to look across the bowed heads of the kneeling people in the wavering leaf shadow, and to hear the prayer that went up from the low, own temple, better than any church built by man. We knelt down with the rest and sung with them, and when the hymn was ended and the people were sinking and the exercises were suspended to give a chance for rest and tea-drinking.

Then all were amused and those who came from a distance bestirred themselves and kindled fires here and there among the trees, and by the time the twilight the flames of the burning wood—blue, gold, and crimson—and the dark figures of those about them, made a lively and picturesque scene.

We had looked at then long enough, and were going home, when a hand came down on my shoulder, and I looked round.

"You here, Clara Speer? Wa'al, I declare. How are you, Ef Tucker? Come right along to our camp and have tea with us; do now."

It was Deacon Bloom's wife; and whether we would or no we went back with her and found the deacon, all the children, and two young men waiting about a gipsy fire for the evening meal—the deacon, already seated on a log with a platter on his hunger, in a way that manifested itself in his greeting.

"How are ye, Sister Speer and Brother Tucker? Set down; charnin' meetin' we've had; refreshin' indeed. Ain Maria, the minister, is a powerful man. I never heard nothin' more spiritual than Brother Bee's discourse; addressed itself to the highest—(Ann Maria, them short-cakes will artinly burn if you don't turn 'em)—ye, annain' appeal; 'twas the sperit of the Lord moved him. Set down, wife, by the fire, and you're done we'd better set by, hadn't we? Brother Redesdale, say grace."

At their call a young man arose, and I looked at him for the first time. Can I describe him? I could tell you that he was tall and slight, had a dark, that he had black eyes, in each of which seemed to burn a flame, and mobile scarlet lips, and a cheek that flushed and paled by turns. And then you would know nothing of him. It was a face not to be described, but one that having been seen could never be forgotten.

Afterward, as we ate and talked, I could not help looking at him again when his eyes were turned away, and once I caught Ephraim staring at me, with his face hot and flushed, and his eyes glistening with anger. Not so angry though as they were a while after, when John Redesdale and I were talking together. They frightened me then, for their fire actually seemed to scorch me. He said nothing to me, however, whatever he felt, and we went home together as we went by deacon; he was very silent and surly when he spoke, and staid away a whole week to punish me, I suppose.

I felt hurt that he did not on Wednesday night I sat sewing with my little apprentice, Maggie, beside me, half inclined to cry, when some one rapped at the door, and I, fancying it was Ephraim, called "Come in!" and in walked John Redesdale.

He stood awkwardly with his hat in his hand, and his own peculiar smile on his lips in a doubtful sort of attitude.

"Are camp-meeting introductions good for any thing?" he asked. "May I come in and sit down?"

And I answered,

"Certainly, Mr. Redesdale."

My heart never beat when Ephraim Tucker entered my door, but it did when I spoke. I never felt the blood rush to my cheeks when he spoke to me, but they flushed at the voice of John Redesdale. All at a moment the room seemed brighter and life had a pier, and I wondered why.

He made a short call and went away, and I had no wish to see him again. I sent Maggie to bed and sat down by the window in the moonlight.

The church-bells struck the hours one after the other. After eleven the old watchman began to call them: still I sat there looking at the stars. And then, in the morning, I crept up stairs I had not a face, as though by doing so I could hide my heart from my own soul.

Ephraim came to see me the next Sunday. We went to church together, and he, rid of his pet, was very pleasant and waxing. I felt like one to a woman, but I suppose he thought me vexed, for he took no notice of my manner. When we parted he told me he was going to Boston on business. There were drugs to be bought and other business to be attended to, and the Doctor, old and stout, loved his ease and his arm-chair, he said. "I shall like the trip," he said. "I envy New York. If I am ever in business for myself (as I shall be, of course) I shall go to New York. Shall you like the city?"

Then he stopped and took my hand and looked into my eyes. I knew he was going to ask me to be his wife on the spot, but he said nothing. He was very prudent; I believe he was waiting to have a certain sum of money before he committed himself.

The one feeling in my heart as I went into my little work-room, swept and tidied for the Sabbath was joy that he was gone.

That fortnight during which Ephraim was absent was a little time for me. For every evening began John Redesdale with it. Sometimes we walked out together, sometimes we only sat a while and chatted. But every day he came, and, after to me, and Ephraim Tucker was only some one I longed to forget.

Whether I were wrong or right I could not judge then. The old fears and my conscience clung me between Ephraim and myself, yet he, I knew, thought and found it best to quiet my conscience clung me on that score. On the other side, I understood now that I did not love him, and that to marry one, cor-ge for another was a sin, would be wicked.

John Redesdale gave me little time to think even had I tried to do so. He wooed me with eyes and lips. He spoke to me in his heart (or at least I thought so) would have won me had I been twice pledged to any other living man.

So before I left Boston came to an end we were walking one day in the woods where we had first met, like the lovers we were, and at a fallen log, near a little stream that ran laughing through the woods, he made me stop.

"Sit down, Clara," said he, "I want to speak to you."

And I, knowing well what he was going to say, sat down a to him.

Then, holding my hands in his, he told me of his hopes and prospects—only those of a poor Methodist minister who must work against his end. A working-life: for in that church there is no life-long dwelling in one place—no parish, but change, at stated times, from one flock to another. And then he asked me if I were willing to share so poor a lot until death should part us. And I, out of my full heart, answered "Yes." And a great flood of happiness broke over my heart, and I thought earth heaven, and could weep.

That was on Saturday. On Sunday I dreamed of my new-found joy. On Monday Ephraim returned.

He came in in the evening. It had been a stormy day and was raining still, and he was wet from head to foot. The rain dripped from the brim of his hat and from his curling hair. He did not sit down, but stood with one hand on a chair-back, clutching the wood as though it were a thing he loathed.

"I want to speak to you alone, Clara Speer," he said. And I sent Maggie away. When we were alone he took a voice and like his own.

"What is this I hear about you, Clara?" I made no answer.

"Look at me, Clara Speer," he said, after a pause. "Don't hide your head like a guilty thing. If they have told me truth, you have been holding lover's walks and giving lover's kisses to John Redesdale, I'll make them swallow their words. If they tell me truth, you will keep me from being murder?"

He was furious as a madman; but I found courage at last to speak.

"We have never exchanged a promise," I said. "We are not engaged. I am not bound to you, and you know it, Ephraim."

"I know," he said, in a sort of line, "that it was all the same. Every one in the town knows it. You know it, Clara Speer. You were bound to me in honor."

At first I shrunk and winced; then the truth came to me. I grew brave. I told him how I felt to him, something of how I felt to John; and then I asked him which, as a true woman, I should marry; and while I spoke I pitied him from my soul, but I felt more than ever that I had never loved him.

He listened to me until I had done. He said no word. The rage was in his face, but pain was plainer there. I heard a gasping sob, and then the words:

"Clara, you have told me you had changed. It is hard to think you never loved me!"

And Ephraim Tucker went out into the stormy night, and the door closed behind him.

My tears fell faster than the drenching rain that fell on the church in our town, for now we were to be married in a little while, and I should share his lot for life.

The church-members were few but respectable—all steady-going farmers and mechanics and their families, save one. She was a Miss Edgar, a widow, and a prettyish woman for her age. She had money, and dressed and lived well; but there had always been a feeling between her and the rest of the town, for she had been, they said, an actress in her youth, and had what people called "bold ways;" and to be an actress from the eyes of our village, to be but one remove from the archfiend himself.

Her husband had, however, been a Methodist, and she had joined the church also, and sat, Sunday after Sunday, in her gay bonnets and handdresses far up the middle aisle.

People said she was more constant in her attendance than ever after the white-haired old minister left and John Redesdale began to preach, and twenty disagreeable stories were told me by as many people.

I cared not one whit for them all. I knew, or thought I knew, that the man I loved,

Once or twice, it is true, John went to her house to tea, but he went every time, and could not refuse that. When he called on Sunday, why should he not call on Mrs. Edgar? I was no jealous of him as the hand of Desdemona.

So I laughed at the stories when once morning, coming by a short-cut across the Commons from Aunty Brown's dressmaking house to Mrs. Edgar's, Tucker coming to meet me. I thought he would pass as usual, but he paused instead and spoke to me:

"Clara Speer, if you are not in too much haste to hear a word of friendly advice, stay a while."

"I am always ready for good advice," I answered, with a laugh, and stood still.

He took hold of my arm and put his lips close to my ear.

"Two years ago," he whispered, "you jilted me for that man, and in connection with that woman. You had your choice, but it's not too late to find out what he is yet. Watch him next time he visits Mrs. Edgar."

I laughed in his face.

"I have heard these ridiculous stories before," I said. "I trust John as I hope he trusts me."

"You are a woman to be trusted!" he sneered. "You are worthy of a lover's oath to believe me; trust your own senses. Your sanctified bit of perfection is to take tea with Mrs. Edgar on Tuesday. There's no use in my coming, and behind the arbor is a hedge. If you choose to wait and listen there afterward you may know whether the stories you hear are true or false."

And he dropped my arm and stalked away, leaving me faint with terror.

I did little work that day. The next, Tuesday, I sat with my hands folded, and asked myself the question, "Shall I go and spy again?" "Shall I watch him or not?"

And I said: "I will go, to prove his truth—not because I doubt him."

When night came—a dark night, without a moon —I put on bonnet and shawl, and crept out like a guilty thing. The way was clear to Mrs. Edgar's house, and I met no one; but when I got there I found the house all alight and heard voices on the shadow. I was ashamed of watching my own true-love at Ephraim Tucker's instance. But, for all that, I went around the garden fence until I found the hedge and the summer-house, and there I stood and listened to the prisoner neighbor for her sentence, for there were two people in the arbor—a man and a woman.

They were talking in whispers—coing, tender whispers—and at last one spoke out:

"No, John; I don't believe a word you say."

It was Mrs. Edgar's voice; but there were more John than one in the world.

Then the woman muttered something, and then the woman's cried, coquettishly: "I young and pretty! Oh, how you flatter!" And there was the noise of a slap—not a blow, for I know that women are always bestowing on their masculine friends.

More whispering—words I could not hear, listen as I would, came near, and I had said again and again, "That is enough," when I heard the words:

"You shan't kiss me! No, indeed you shin't; Mr. Redesdale! Keep your kisses for Miss Speer! You know it's all nonsense to pretend you like me best. If you must, you do—" And then I heard a romp and a kiss.

An hour after I found myself lying in the dust of the road, where I must have fallen when I fainted, and took my breaking heart home again. On the way I vowed that my lips should never speak another word to John Redesdale.

I found little Maggie sleeping like a baby in her attic, and the house all quiet, and lit a lamp in the kitchen window. The place looked ghastly to me; nothing seemed real. I found a carpet-bag, and packed in it some of my wardrobe. Of other things I made a bundle. I dressed myself for a journey, and put my little hoard, saved for my wedding-day, in my bosom. Then I sat down and wrote two notes, one to Maggie, telling her wages and giving her the clothes I left behind—the other to my landlady, with her rent, and before the night was over, on the people of the house awake, had left it far behind me, and was at the —— station, awaiting the early train for New York.

There, when the excitement was over, and I leaned back wearily in my seat and met the crowd of strange fellow-passengers, I first began to realize the awful truth, and to feel that life was worthless henceforth to me. There are women who would have taken their lives into their own hands, fuglike as I felt. I know I must strive to live while God so willed it, but the driving secret was heard now, the shortest life so long! I felt ten years older than I had felt the day before; I think I looked it also.

How I lived, where I went, would not interest you. My home was invisible, by choice, nevertheless, but I was too good a workwoman to suffer. I never saw one of my old acquaintance. I never heard the name of those I knew, even, spoken. When I read it in the columns of some newspaper.

I knew no one. No one knew me. The people I worked for called me, as odd, silent creature; soon the young women considered me an old maid. Even on the holidays, I kept at home. For Christmas Day, the man I had thought the best in the world had made me believe all seemingly good people hypocrites.

Lonely, lonely, lonely, so lonely that I thought I should die of pure loneliness for five long weary years.

At last I awoke one Sabbath morning to hear the bells ringing for church, and out of habit came the memory of other Sabbath days. I longed, for the first time, to join the worshipers, and bend my knee in prayer among them. So I arose and dressed myself, waiting for no breakfast, and went out into the frosty streets. The clocks were on the stroke of ten, and there was no time to lose, so I chose the nearest church and went in. The crowd was thick already, but I crept up the aisle a certain distance, and paused, "Room here, sister," and moved her dress to make way for me.

Then a voice said, "Let us pray," and my face was covered. When I lifted it the preacher stood in the pulpit ready to read the first hymn.

I was not sure that I was not dreaming, as I thought at first; I was awake and in my senses, yet the face, I looked on was the face of John Redesdale, the eyes that met mine his. I knew him in an instant, and he knew me. I saw it in his look—a look that came and passed so quickly that I hardly knew that it had seen it ere it was gone; and I would have left the church had it been possible. But the congregation arises ere this. All I must wait until the crowd dispersed and hide myself in that. But could I bear him and live? I did.

He stood up, with the Bible under his hand, and looked over the church, first at me, and as he met eyes again and said, "Let us pray."

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

The sermon opened with remarks upon the vice of slander. By degrees it grew familiar and touched on daily events, in which the truth was forgotten and false accusations flung upon a neighbor or a servant. And then in such a way that it seemed to every hearer aimed and to the purpose, he began a story—a true one, he said.

He drew the picture of two lovers, friends or dear that their lives were interwoven. He pointed a scene of homely happiness, with hopes of future bliss; a girl who trusted, and a youth who thought unselfish, each on preparing for the promised wife. And I, with my heart beating so fearfully that I feared it, knew that I was the girl, and own happy time he was speaking! And into this earthly paradise a serpent—Slander—crept, insensibly, and one by one he lower leaf of the trusting wife gone, without a word or message, and search as he might, could bear no tidings over.

I saw faces full of interest turned toward the preacher. I knew that to others this was more than an incident, related to force the sermon home to the hearts of those who heard it; and I knew also that, looking across that dense mass of heads, my face fire in his black eyes burning into mine, John Redesdale was speaking only to me.

Himself he has pictured growing old from sorrow in his youth, striving to do his duty, but doing it mechanically. Himself the slandered man, for whose sake hears dropped down as wretched cheeks of the old Methodist women and filled the eyes of the young maidens. Then he described the life how he had grieved in silence, knowing wrong had been done him, but not by whom or how, until a dying woman gave him a clue; a woman who had been an actress, whose beauty had turned to ghastliness, whose abandoned life was revealed openly at last, but who, on her death-bed, were rouge upon her was cheeks. And as he went on I knew he spoke of Mrs. Lloyd, and how for the first time in that which I had listened to—I, who dared to doubt him—was a preconcerted scene acted in frolic, by the woman in malice, by Ephraim Tucker to deceive me. Plainer and plainer it grew. I knew how each had been. I understood what I had done. And as that strangest sermon ended I bowed down my head and wept remorsefully, yet joyfully.

When I lifted it the worshipers had dispersed and John Redesdale stood beside me. Without a word he gave me his arm, and we went out into the street together. Quietly—for it was beautiful and eyes were upon us—until we left the crowded thoroughfare and were in a narrow, unfrequented street.

Then he paused, and, with his hand on mine, gave a gasping sob.

"I would have believed you—I would have believed you," he said. "Oh, Clara, how I have suffered!"

"And I also," I whispered.

"But you believe me now?"

I could only ask forgiveness with my eyes. And we walked on again through the still street, arm in arm.

And in that Sabbath morn life's Sabbath of peace and rest dawned for us, and in its sunlight we have dwelt ever since together.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

A Boston paper publishes a set of rules for street-car conductors, issued, we suppose, by order of the proprietors of city railroads in that orderly metropolis. The conductors are of our city may say, we infer, received similar instructions which they have followed faithfully. Yet, strange it is always well to say, that the rules are not "the last remedy"—or rotels—"may read," we quote an extract, "as follows:

"Gather, pack, and cram,
Squeeze, push, and ram!
Never let in a car yet;
Let the passengers simmer and sweat,
Let the ladies stand on the platform.
'Tis only a pleasant jam!

"Stuff, stiff, stiff!
Of place there's never enough;
If you only have fifty-four,
Another can squeeze in 'round the door,
Let them hang to the straps and wound the door;
Hurrah for the jam!

"Push, shove, and shy,
Bounce them in any way or dough!
Then rush in and gather the fare,
Never mind if you're mad, and nothing
Stay your care if some grumblers swear,
Don't mind the looks of the people.

That's enough to prove our position in a city car to be a painful one! The question whether it is a comfortable one is no concern of the private citizen. He must endure that which the law or public aristocratic so ride down town of a morning, squeezed almost to the "jelly" spoken of above, with a dozen other unfortunates, packed like sardines, and another packing you with his elbow, with an umbrella, carpet-bag, bundle, or parcels, and nothing to look at but the back of your neighbor's coat, which is an immediate proximity to your nose; you naturally long for another set of ears to hear something, for eyes to see whatever it is worth, you could care, temporarily, a consolidation of your own with those of your fellow-victims, where no one would be taken in after the seats were full; where you could read your newspaper, if you wanted to, or look out of the window if you chose; or move your arm; or stretch your limbs; or— But, in the midst of your unspeakable, you remember your place as a gentleman, as well as your own judge, for you can't see, and by dint of squeezing and pushing and struggling, you manage to reorder, and skidding along, you at length escape from the car, thankful for the deliverance!

It is regard to the comfort of people in Springfield, not long ago, had a "paper wedding," after the fashion of the wedding, tin, crystal, and silver ones now so common, and the gifts and presents were all of paper. The bride was for the slightest idea what length of time must elapse after the original marriage ceremony before the parties so authorized to celebrate a "paper wedding"—it may be one year, and then again, it may be five years or more. In fashion of these "weddings" seems to be going beyond the bounds of delicate propriety. How a refined lady and gentleman can enter into invitations for a wedding with the effect that "next Thursday we celebrate our crystal wedding," will puzzle many to find a ground for such a step than we can comprehend. If children desire to celebrate the twenty-fifth or fiftieth anniversary of their parents' marriage-day by reproducing the gifts of love, it is very pleasant. But this inviting all the friends and neighbors to the celebration of a wedding of forty years is nauseous.

In these days, when if a man is fortunate enough to find a comfortable house in New York for his family, he has to pay a small fortune for the privilege, it is curious to look back to those old times when Peter Minuits bought the whole of Manhattan Island for twenty-four dollars!

On Election day, last week, a "strong-minded" fair was seen voting at Seventh Eighth Street dressed in the "American costume." Of any lady garbed what the "American costume" is, we know not, but a pair of trousers, and her husband's—brothers will answer the description—and a coat and vest, together with a bonnet a fac-simile of the same, as it appears on the outside.) In their walk they proved a couple of youthful politicians who were "electioneering" for Mayor Wood, and Gen. Dix.

"Jim," said one of them, stopping suddenly, "were those men or women?"

"Don't know," replied Jim; "ask 'em if they'll vote." He did not learn whether they accepted the invitation or not.

Not many ladies, we fancy, care to vote; but there are so many—ladies in fashionable dress—who appear in the North and from the South—who want to earn their bread and butter in some way, that there is a great demand for employment than the "endless stitching." The employment of women in the various Departments at Washington, is a subject which has excited much considerable attention, and many men of otherwise liberal views are to be found who condemn the policy of the Government. A recent communication in one of our daily papers states, that one of the Departments at Washington, in which the numbers then that labor is degrading is added to the offensive opinion that woman's sphere is at home. The writer states that he was treating there with a lady who was simply this and nothing more, and employing them on the account of their cheapness. "I don't like it," he said he, beyond the menial clothes of almost any man with whom they are brought into personal relations. The writer goes on to describe a ribaldry, approaching to obscenity, in the of one dainty lady-clerk who carries her knitting work in her pocket, and has come to her desk. She lives days and months, and then looks sorely injured when a paper is brought her to copy, and the writer adduces the testimony of another who goes on counting her crochet-work while directions are being given her, and consecutively does her work wrongly—and a third who keeps up an incessant stream of small-talk—and of a fourth who coquettes with every man who comes near her desk. He never does any of this kind of cleric the better. But there are those who do their work with a rapidity and correctness not surpassed by men as well as women clerks, and the intonation and employment which they are audited for. Both should be dealt with according to their individual ability, being, without prejudice, fairly tested, fairly treated, and fairly paid.

A story is published in some Paris paper, giving a strange, but in one case at least, an effectual remedy for cholera, and indicating the great influence of the nervous in this disease:

In the year 1823 Professor Recamier was summoned to a bedside, where he found a dying man, the features rigid, orange all over the body, the voice changed—in fact, all the most fatal symptoms strongly characterized. After an hour's reflection, the eminent doctor remarked off the bed-clothes, and commenced flagging the patient with all his strength. The operators, for as fatigue, the blood electrified, were naturally enraged. The dying man, by the cupping efforts, started from his bed, threw himself on the doctor, who ran off hastily pursued along passages and corridors by the infuriated patient, till both reached the top of the stairs, when the breathless professor stopped, and, looking at his pursuer, exclaimed, "You are cured!"

"And how do you feel now?"

"Why!" said the astonished patient. "Feel, indeed! Why!" after a pause), "I have no more cramps! I feel as if I believe you could make me dance now. I am quite well."

Some cups of flame, and the pseudo-shortened was saved.

The streets of Bombay, India, have recently been lighted with gas. The operations of the lamplighters create an excitement among the natives every evening. The scene is thus described:

"Long before the lamps are lighted on an evening summer of calcutta the natives grouping round every lamp-post, and when the lamplighter approaches followed by a ragamuffin crowd, the most disreputable specialis, the strongest pushing the weakest in their endeavors to secure the best performance. He goes with a little preliminary trifling the lighter accends the ladder, and when the illumination is complete he descends to the delight of the crowd, which jeers at the foot of the post, and with upturned faces goes into the blaze of light, and when every now and then they clasp the post with their hands to feel if its gets hot. The lamplighter then ascends the ladder to put out his service, and they argue for hours together upon the ins and outs of the question, and when they could not, they return to their house to dream of the wonders produced by 'Sahib.'"

"Plan Speaking" is the name of a new style of parlor. As applied to men and women this is not true, if we use to "plan" in his highest sense. Yet, though we may not occasionally see the fashionable realities of head and heart, the dress and general appearance give us the first impression, and this impression according to its nature, is correct, even if we dismiss him according to his merits. Whether Goldsmith's description of the "accomplished"—definition from his dictionary, he was refuted, not because his ability was inferior to that of other candidates, but because he was not dressed for the part. The fine-feathered bird has no choice in its plumage. Its fashions know no change and no art can help it. But with the human biped it is different. The plainest dress, neatly arranged, shows method and order; rich materials, selected with judgment, and worn with taste, show good sense and propriety; a regard for fashion, not constrained to be the slave of it, but to use it as a means to an end, is a graceful and well-ordered mind. Eccentric people have affected to despise dress, but with no unanimity accordingly. Even my Bentham went about so shabby that he was often mistaken for a mendicant, and, on one occasion, in bitter bitterness, accepted alms from a stranger, who, Lady Morgan complained of Bryon's night-cap and flannel jacket, would "do well enough for a poet," and required a regular for appearance. Johnson owned that when he was fullbreast he could not treat people with the same rude indifference as when out of humor; Byron in his worst was a great dandy, with a passion for a blue coat and brass buttons, and Goldsmith was never still he was splendidly attired and had his diamond ring on; Oliver Goldsmith was a model of taste in dress, and Pope in his youth was a fop; so, says, "Recollect the time when we were white robes, on which the least spot or a plush ill-graced would have been a subject for ridicule." It was only Rear Brownrigg, who, when the Duke of Bedford was discovering on his first visit, could throw sparingly touch that garment and seriously ask, "Bedford, do you really call this thing a coat?" There are few of us so hypercritical. At the same time there are many ladies who are now disposed to admit that they do admire a man for the cut of his coat! That looking glasses are not to be broken, we will give one or two items of interest to our lady readers in regard to fashion:

"Now that the cold weather has commenced to make itself felt in earnest the fair Parisians are turning their attention to furs. Of these there is a high option, but few of all descriptions is to be exceedingly fashionable this winter, and that is the case of fur use to be worn about the arms to handsome dresses and mantles. One of the most popular styles which has yet to be applied with the fur collars to large Talmas, made of either black-cricket silk or cloth, and the fur used is Russian Sable. The collar is surrounded with a narrow border of the fur. The gray fur, which is very fashionable, and African are generally used for this purpose.

"Very narrow as well as broad bands of fur will be worn as fashionable trimmings for the dress. Sable is very festive on velvet, satin, and rich silks, which are the only materials appropriate for evening dress. Ermine, too, in very bands are arranged round the skirt in sets of three or four rows, and sometimes in a set of five, one lengthways, one row being placed up every breadth of the skirt. When there is a long train the ermine is likewise to be seen set with fur, being added down the front and round the top and bottom of the train.

Have not American women the good sense to strike a happy medium in dress? Of late years extravagance has been carried to a height extant in Paris. Only a few days decidly affirmed that $4000 have been paid for dresses by a lady of fashion, and in a piece now in representation the said dresses being precisely similar to those which wealthy ladies wear in private society. What think you of $1000 for a dress? Of $1000 for a bonnet? Of gold and laces, and a woman becomes literally a perambulating treasure.

A sensible English mother, writing to a London paper in regard to children's dress, makes the following remarks in regard to her method of clothing her little ones. Many American mothers might take a hint therefrom:

"My little girls' dresses and frocks reach to their neck, with a full body back and front, bishop sleeves, and a belt of the same material as the dress, or silk. No navy trim the little frock as you like. I usually put white and black velvet ribbon round the throat and wrists, which off each time the frock is washed. A scarlet or violet flannel under-dress is worn in winter, and a white one in a narrow white frill round the neck. My little boy of four years old dresses the same. I think English children there are so foolish to keep their poor little clothes in short sleeves and low necks in the depth of winter. Why, from first the cold as much as we do, and you can see by their blue fingers, arms, and necks how uncomfortable it is. I have lived a great deal abroad, and there you always see quite little, tiny things with high-necked frocks in the winter. It saves countless colds and coughs, besides looking much nicer in my opinion."

A European paper relates an incident to show the oppression to which the Russians are still subject from the Russian authorities. A respectable family at Warsaw was recently celebrating the marriage of one of its members. On returning from the church a police agent came uninvited and seated himself at the table among the guests. After having taken his fill of the choicest dishes and the best wines, he left and sent one of his comrades to occupy his place. Others succeeded until a fifth, at the end of the repast, ordered a young lady to take her seat at the piano, and then offered himself to dance with the bride. The company had now lost all patience, and indignantly requested the man to retire, but the police agent, who was half intoxicated, declared all the guests under arrest. The master of the house then showed him a permission for the meeting signed by the authorities, but the man, without making any reply, went and fetched a number of his colleagues, and marched the whole company off to prison. The police then returned to the house, consumed the refreshments prepared for the evening, and indulged in an orgie in the proprietor's wine-cellar. The next morning the imprisoned party were brought before the commissary of police, who, after dismissed them, advised them to return quietly home and not complain to the superior authorities if they did not wish to draw down upon themselves further unpleasantness!

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

We present, at page 813, a sketch, by Mr. J. E. Taylor, of the Freedmen's Bureau at Richmond, as seen from the intersection of Broad and Tenth streets, looking south toward the Capitol Grounds; and in the distance the roof of Crawford's Statue of Washington and the steeples of the famed St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

This new bureau for the regulation of matters connected with the freedmen was established on the 19th ultimo, by Gen. Lieutenant H. G. Wright, as its President, on the part of the Government, Judge George Fletcher on behalf of the white people, and Judge R. A. Brock for the colored people. These gentlemen meet in council every day, and to their decision are referred all difficulties between whites and blacks, and between the colored people themselves, respecting labor, contracts, etc., and all questions of importance are referred to or finally settled with the decision of titles—this being no Court of Record. In all else their decisions are unlimited and final, as there is no appeal, save in cases of the highest Court of Conciliation, subject only to the commander of this Department, General Terry. Their decisions average some five or six a day, and, up to the 25th November, they had disposed of over 250 cases. Some of the cases are of the most singular nature; the Freedmen being in the habit of running to the Bureau for protection upon any and every occasion, from the most serious to the most indicatory insignificant.

One day has been, hitherto, set apart for the distribution of clothing to the needy colored people, of whom one-fourth were generally children and the remainder aged and sick. The clothing consists of such remnants of the late army uniforms as were given to the Bureau by the Government. It would also be given to able-bodied men or women. On the 20th November, however, an order was issued by Colonel Eaton, Assistant Commissioner under Captain Frederick Martin, and the office of Colonel Merrit Ordway, Provost-Marshal-General of the Department of Virginia. This building was erected by the Confederate Government, and was used as General Winder's head-quarters.

AMELIA SULPHUR SPRINGS.

Among the many valuable mineral springs for which the State of Virginia is so justly renowned, there is, perhaps, but one that can at all compete in attractiveness with the celebrated Amelia Sulphur Springs," of which we present an illustration on page 813, and that is the White Sulphur Springs, in Green Brier County. By a careful scientific analysis these two springs are found to be identical in their chief component parts, the only difference being that the White Sulphur is, if any thing, a little the stronger of the two.

The Amelia property is situated 43 miles from Richmond, along the Danville Railroad, and about 2½ miles from the nearest depot—at Amelia—which is a most delightful village—a short and very pleasant ride from Richmond. It contains 1200 acres in all, and is bounded on the east side by Deep Creek and Flat Creek, two unfailing streams, that run the entire length of the land and unite at one extremity of it. The springs are the best that can be had for love or money, and are quite equal to any in the United States. The balance of it is high, rolling land, of above average quality, and with abundance of timber for all ordinary purposes. The estate has never been cultivated with especial reference to its mineral resources; but isinglass and plumbago are found about it in such quantities as to warrant the belief that it is as rich as any other estate in the County of Amelia, so famous for these and other valuable minerals.

The name of "Amelia Springs" were quite renowned among the fashionable world and pleasure-seekers of the Old Dominion. As many as from 500 to 1000 people have been known to be collected here in one season to enjoy the benefit of the waters and the delicious coolness of its shady groves. But now, alas! all these brilliant throngs have passed away; the once banquet hall is silent, the ball room that so often resounded with merry laughter, music, and dancing, is now a dilapidated ruin, and the cottages and rural cabins all smelling —the abode of bats. But although the majority of the old buildings are destroyed there are still accommodations enough for some 250 people, in good, substantial brick houses that cost from $40,000 to $50,000.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE FENIAN BROTHERHOOD, UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

"THE INDIAN HUNTER," BY J. Q. A. WARD OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY.

Strange to say, it was not the war that reduced this lovely and valuable spot to its present condition, but that strange apathy which seems to have pervaded every thing—the same that permitted people to sleep for three quarters of a century over gold and copper mines of countless treasure, which others are only now commencing to explore in earnest for them.

A visit to the beautiful Spring itself really creates a feeling of melancholy. Nothing can exceed the loveliness of the spot in which it is located—in a deep grove of majestic oak-trees, whose gnarled and giant limbs look as if they had braved the storms of centuries. In the centre of a very low, dilapidated stone inclosure, only some two feet high, is the world-renowned spring, at which old age and youthful beauty have so often refreshed their lips. The pump is broken and rusty, the surface of the liquid treasure is covered over with a metallic coating of brilliant colors; but sweep that away gently with the hand, and there, underneath, is the crystal fountain bubbling up everlastingly.

This property is at present owned by Mr. SAMUEL S. COTTRELL, of Richmond, but is leased to the Rev. Mr. CHENSLAW, who has just established there a young ladies' seminary. A more charming spot could not have been selected for the purpose; but it is to be hoped that such a valuable medicinal spring will again be devoted to the useful purposes for which it was intended by Nature. Considering the contiguity of the Amelia Sulphur Springs to Richmond it is hard to conceive of any thing that could more speedily repay the investment of capital than the immediate converting it again into one of the grand watering-places of the South. The suggestion assumes more importance in view of the fact that most of our physicians seem to have deliberately made up their minds that next summer is to be one of fearful epidemics, when every one will be flying for safety from our crowded cities to the healthful air of the country.

WARD'S STATUE.

MR. J. Q. A. WARD'S Statue of the Indian Hunter at SNEDECOR'S Gallery is a work deserving the most careful attention, and which will compel admiration. It is a rather colossal figure of an Indian holding his bow, and stealing, stooping, along, with a hunting dog at his side. The figure is draped around the middle with a skin. The expression of the whole work is thoroughly characteristic. It has the sinister aspect which we associate with the Indian, and the swift, crouching action. The work is in plaster, but its merit is so conspicuous that its appropriateness for a position in the Central Park ought to secure its perpetuation in marble.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT, ON SEVENTEENTH STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C.—[SKETCHED BY ANDREW M'CALLUM.]

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU AT RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—SKETCHED BY J. R. HAMILTON.—[SEE PAGE 811.]

THE AMELIA SULPHUR SPRINGS, AMELIA COUNTY, VIRGINIA.—SKETCHED BY J. R. HAMILTON.—[SEE PAGE 811.]

DR. H. CARLOS, a celebrated linguist and "Professor of Literature," has recently arrived in this country, to take up his permanent residence among us, for the purpose of teaching the French language by an entirely new and improved method. The gentleman is well fitted for the profession he has chosen. Being a native of France, having passed his youth in Germany, and resided in England for many years, he is fully acquainted with these languages; and, beside these advantages, he is a highly educated and scholarly man. He comes to us with titles from Paris, and the best of credentials, as a teacher, from London. By his method of teaching Dr. CARLOS ignores the old-fashioned and tedious grammatical routine—his pupils, from the first lesson, entering upon an easy, idiomatic, conversational style, and learning to speak the French language in the short space of three months. Strange as this may appear, the Professor has proof that he can accomplish it, and will give even better evidence of the value of his mode; for he agrees that the pupil shall be able to converse freely in the French language after giving twelve weeks' attention and study to it. Our lady readers have now an easy opportunity of shining in the fashionable and "diplomatic language." Many would attempt it; but it is generally a very tedious and troublesome undertaking, and consumes a great deal of time. There would be no harm in giving DR. CARLOS a chance to substantiate the high advantages claimed for his wonderful method of imparting instruction, and we should be pleased to record the result in our columns. The Professor may be addressed at No. 229 East Fifty-second Street.—Home Journal.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST ARE WORN. Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the BEST, send your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EMBALMING.

French process only perfect one extant, and guaranteed. The features of the deceased become more natural than otherwise. The body never decays. Funeral arrangements performed and carried out in the most satisfactory manner. Flower preserved. THOMAS DUGAN, Embalmer and Furnisher of Undertakers, 48 Courtland Street, and Factory 116 St. (Albion Building), entrance on 11th St., New York.

CATARRH.—NOISES IN THE HEAD.
NORTON'S PURIFYING ELIXIR
Cures the most hopeless case known.
Norton's Pure Pumpkin on Catarrh—out.
All who have the Catarrh—send for it.
All who think they have—send for it.
Information never before published. Send a stamp to GERRIT NORTON, 11 Ann Street, New York.

New York Club Skate, Brady's Patent, without straps, for Ladies and Gentlemen. For sale by Hardware and Skate Dealers, and by the manufacturer.
PHINEAS SMITH, 15 Cliff St.,
Price, $10 per pair. New York.

Also Boys', Gents', Farmers', Floaters', and Carpenters' Tool-Chests. Illustrated Catalogue on application.

A Single Box of Brandreth's Pills

Contains more valuable extractive matter than twenty boxes of any Pills in the world besides. Fifty-five hundred physicians use them in their practice, to the exclusion of other preparations. The first letter of their value is vet eserately appreciated when they arrive before a sudden death and continued sickness will be of the past. Set that "B. BRANDRETH" is on the Government Stamp.

We have entables of two hundred thousand cures that will on copist of $50 and $500 per $1500 and $2500 yearly, in any city of 5000 inhabitants. Principal office, 294 Canal Street, New York. Reference. Address G. H. SWEET & Co., Compilers Business Statistics, 294 Broadway, N. Y. Box 2,000. J. M. Wells, Director Broadway Dis., Jacob Miller, Director Citizens' Dis.

Instructive; Very Amusing.

The Magic Star Gems—a Centrifugal Wonder, for Children. The most useful toy ever seen. The most wonderful ever seen. One Dollar will procure a sample in a box. Dealers supplied. Address J. S. CLOUGH,
280 Pearl Street, New York.

Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing from one to thirty-six different tunes, and ranging in price from $5 to $400 00. The most complete stock ever offered for sale in this city. Also ornamente for the parlor, and pleasant occupation for the ladies. M. J. PAILLARD & CO., Importers, 21 Maiden Lane and 680 Broadway. Musical Boxes repaired.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our Improved Home Knitting Machine. Three new Kinds of Stitch. Price reduced from $50 to $25. Does more work than any other machine. Every machine warranted for five years. Will knit a pair of stockings in less than $40 which are fully licensed by Horse, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and all other sewing machines are infringements. Circular free. Address or call upon Gale & Wright, 120 Nassau, Maiden, or at No. 823 Broadway, New York; No. 326 Canal St., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 14 Kemberly Block, Gratiot, Detroit, Mich.; No. 170 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio; or No. 8 Spaulding's Exchange, Buffalo, New York.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving tresses. It can be sent by mail or express to any part of the U. S. Address THE HENDERSON HAIR-CURLING CO.,
Box 5081, 387 York Post-Office.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

Popular songs, marches, quicksteps, polkas, schottisches, waltzes, jigs, reels, quadrilles, collibuns, with calls and figures, &c., for

Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet.

CONTENTS No. 1 contains 100 tunes. Price $1 25, mailed.
No. 2 " 850 " " $1 25 "
No. 3 " 1000 " " $1 25 "

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Every description at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price list to
FREDERICK BLUME, 288 Bowery, New York.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. To let, and rent allowed if purchased. Cheapest payments ever offered. Second-hand pianos at bargains from $50 to $225. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

Persons with Violins

Who wish a good collection of Music, will find it in Wrosner's Renaissance Collection. Price $1 25.

Excellent Duets for Piano and Violin

Will be found in the "UNION COLLECTION." Price 75c.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make $10 Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention actually saving money hourly. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $5.
BY A. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

Letter A shows the base of the instrument, made hollow for the purpose of holding cold water or ether.

Letter B shows a Box containing the "Lubricating Razor," situated in the base of the instrument for the ease of convenience (a piece is broken out of the base to show this box).

Letter C represents a concave surface so arranged as to expel the blood from the anterior portion of the piles and carry up through the grooves at D D.

Letter E represents the tube by which is applied the Lubricating Balm before being used. This tube is made thicker for the purpose of withdrawing water or ether contents, or cause their re-absorption, at the same time that the COLD surfaces contract the ends of the small blood inflamed vessels so that they can not bleed; while in this state the Lubricating Balm is applied. The tube is provided to retain a healthy action to the parts, thereby preventing a recurrence of the disease.

The above engraving is a fair, full, and correct, and convenient combination for the RADICAL CURE of PILES, PROLAPSUS, and habitual CONSTIPATION, combined in a small compass; can be carried in the pocket so as to be always on hand.

DR. Full Directions in English, German, French, and Spanish accompany each.

For sale by all Druggists. Price $3 00. If not kept by Druggists, will be sent by mail on receipt of price. Circulars free.
GILBERT & SURBURG,
No. 25 Broadway, New York.

TESTIMONIALS.

DR. CAMP HOSPITAL, N. Y. H., DAVID'S ISLAND, September 18, 1865.

DR. GILBERT—DEAR SIR—I am sorry to your letter inquiring as to the success your Pile Instrument met with in the hospital under my charge. I have used it in more than through the politeness of Mr. J. H. Orr. I had at the time only two cases to apply it to, both of which were of a long standing; both patients have obliged to keep their beds from the pain and loss of blood. I applied it to one of them to relieve him of the pain, and the other to stop the loss of blood. In both cases the instrument proved a success, giving immediate relief. The patient, after using it two or three weeks, they left the hospital cured. I then recommended the instrument to others, and the use of it in case in their positions, and report the result. Yours truly, A. A. SARGENT, Surgeon U. S. Army.

From its use, I can cheerfully recommend its use from the results of the cases under my charge. Yours truly,
LEWIS GRAVES,
Late Surgeon, U. S. Volunteers, Seneca, South Fork, N. Y.

171 WATER ST., GREENPORT, N. Y.,
August 20, 1865.

This is to certify that I have used Dr. Gilbert's Pile Instrument and Lubricating Balm for external and bleeding Piles of long standing, and am pleased to say that I recommended the instrument to a friend at Islip, L. I., who was afflicted for four years with the Piles, and was in his life; and he has suffered for years. If any body wants to inquire about it they can call on me at my store on Newtown Creek, near the bridge, Greenpoint.

CLOPHENIE OIL WORKS, GREENPOINT, N. Y.,
August 20, 1865.

DR. GILBERT—DEAR SIR—It is a great pleasure I hereby acknowledge that the use of your instrument for curing Piles has proved a blessing to me. I have used it with which I was troubled for some time, after having tried in vain the use of four bottles of Sarsaparilla, I recommend to all suffering with this evil as a good cure. Yours respectfully,
BOCKMEYER at Clophenie Oil Co.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10, 1865.

DR. J. F. GILBERT—DEAR SIR—In answer to your question as to the results of your Pile Instrument, which you furnished me last spring for a member of my family, I would simply state that it was used as you directed, and proved a decided success. It relieved every case long before after they had given up all hope. They had been troubled with Piles for years, and could get no relief from any thing to your valuable remedy. If the above is of any use to you in can be used at your discretion. Hoping you well, I remain, yours, TRULY,
WM. E. CRAPO,
Firm of Chapin, Brownell & Co., 3 Spruce St., N. Y.

ON THE STRENGTH

CAST-IRON PILLARS.

With Tables for the Use of Engineers, Architects, and Builders.

By JAMES B. FRANCIS, Civil Engineer.

1 vol., 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

This day published by D. VAN NOSTRAND,
192 Broadway.

 Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

Recommendations of Corporal Fibbs:

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY IN THE FIELD,
NASHVILLE, TENN., March 14, 1864.

"THE RECOMMENDATION OF GENERAL THOMAS is decidedly countered in by me. CORPORAL FIBB HAS PROVED HIMSELF A GREAT LAY ASSISTED, AND I SALUTE WORLD MADE AN EFFICIENT COMMISSIONED OFFICER.
"U. GRANT, Lieut.-Gen'l."

"THE DEADER
"March 8, 1862. "T. SHERMAN, Major-General."

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL

THE SCOUT AND RANGER!

By CORPORAL FIBB, of Fourth Ohio Cavalry.

The most Interesting and Best Illustrated Work of the Day, and thoroughly Reliable.

Many of the officers of the Fourth Ohio Cavalry, and officers of other regiments, have come forward in a manly way to assure the publishers of the work that they can confide in its reliability, and that all its strange, thrilling, and almost incredible incidents are fully supported by facts.

Such being the case, we feel sure the public that they will experience a new sensation in the perusal of FIBB's history of his adventures in the secret service during the late rebellion—intensified by the conviction that it is all matter-of-fact, and not the product of the fancy.

It is excellently produced in octavo form, well bound, and splendidly illustrated with 32 FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, elucidating the scenes it describes. Price $2 50. Copies sent by mail to any part of the country on receipt of price, or to those soliciting to engage in its sale, on receipt of price, and extra allowance to commence.

FIRST NATIONAL MANUFACTURING AND PUBLISHING CO.
No. 115 William Street, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent free with a Sealed Circular for Fifteen Cents.
Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

CURL YOUR HAIR.

A sample of Prof. Rolfe's Curl Paper will be sent free to any address. The Curlers will curl the straightest hair into the first application, into soft, luxuriant, beautiful curls. Address, ANSON STARR, Post-Office Box 1,000, Cincinnati, Ohio.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for $3 75 or 25 c., 50 Photographs of Statesmen and Generals for 75 c., 50 Photographs of Rebel Officers for 75 c., 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 75 c., 100 Actors for 75 c. Address, H. LEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "DRAKE'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Sent by mail, free, for $1, by S. C. HYDE & CO., 48 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1235 Broadway, New York where a model can be seen.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PIMPLE ANNIHILATOR." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 75 CENTS, by A. C. UPHAM, No. 25 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

Consumption Cured.

CIRCULARS SENT FREE to any address. Every family should have an illustrated copy of this valuable Recipe. Send your address at once to Dr. S. CURTIS, Box 1007, Post-Office, Philadelphia, Pa.

GREENBACKS ARE GOOD—ROBACKS ARE BETTER.

The best tonic and ague preventive in the world. 50,000 bottles sold monthly. Sold by dealers every where. Depot, 40 Park Place, New York. Wholesale Agents, H. T. CHEW Roback, Proprietor, Cincinnati.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

Marsh's Patent Limbs with Rubber Hands and Feet. A Gold Medal was awarded them, as the best, over all others, at the Great Fair of the American Institute, 1865. Also, Marsh's Navy furnished free by Government authority. Send for a Pamphlet. 44 and 46 Prince Street, New York.

Medallic Pattern Lockets and Pictures. All sizes, to put in pictures, &c., for gentlemen, machinists, and inventors—a beautiful thing. Address, Scenic Studio, N. Y.

AFFLICTION.

WHY will you suffer the terrors and afflictions incident to a disordered state of the liver or digestive organs, when a certain remedy is within your reach? Holloway's German Bitters will cure you. If you will only discard your prejudices, and give this article a trial, you will have no cause to regret it. Your stomach will be strengthened, and will require its regular food. Your food you will be able to digest; your food satisfactorily. These Bitters are for sale by all Druggists, and are not alcoholic. H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York, Agent.

"AN ACQUAINTANCE OF OURS has been cured by Dr. Sanford's Liver Invigorator, Boston Sun, old fogy, after having been pronounced incurable by physicians in the city of Boston. Dr. Sanford's Liver Invigorator has cured all of the same trouble after having tried every thing in vain. Sold by all druggists. Depot, 162 Fulton Street, New York. Sold by Dr. Sanford, 162 Fulton Street, and H. Helmbold's Consumer Lotion. DEMAS BARNES & CO., Agents, N. Y.

Guide to Beauty, 100 pages. All should have it. Mailed for 20c. Address, Dr. SANFORD, Box 5054 P. O., New York.

Precio, Chance! Magic mails easy. 100 tricks in sleight of hand, basco-poses, and investments. 200 sold in one month. 64 pages. Only 20 cents; 5 for $1. Catalogue free. Address E. HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

THE FOURTH EXHIBITION

In New York of the NATIONAL ARTISTICAL and FEMININE PICTURES is open daily from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., and on Tuesday and Saturday evenings from 7 to 11 at the Gallery of Illustration, No. 25 Tenth Street.
Admission, 25 cents.
H. GARMANY, Director. F. J. FLUGEMAN, Sec.

Manufacturers' Announcement.

EXTRAORDINARY OPPORTUNITY!

GREAT ONE-PRICE SALE OF

Solid Gold Jewelry, Rich Silver-Ware, Watches, Diamonds, Rings, Pianos, &c.,

Including no Brass or so-called Plated Jewelry.

EVERY ARTICLE WARRANTED GOLD.

$2,500,000 WORTH

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT THE ONE AVERAGE PRICE OF

TWO DOLLARS EACH!

Without regard to Value, and not to be Paid for until you know what you will receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES,

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5 Superior Grand Piano-Fortes	$800 to $1200
50 Splendid Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to 800
250 Melodeons, the best makers	150 to 300
125 First-Class Sewing Machines	50 to 150
500 Rosewood Mantel Boxes, 24 sizes	25 to 100
250 Diamond Rings	50 to 250
250 Gold Hunting-Case Watches	75 to 250
500 Gold Ladies' Enameled Watches	50 to 200
1,000 Gold Hunting-Case Watches	50 to 200
1,000 " Open-Face Watches	25 to 50
1,000 " Silver Hunting-Case	25 to 50
500 " Silver and Gun	20 to 25
500 " Open-Face—complete	15 to 20
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	15 to 50
5,000 " Guard Chains	15 to 50
2,000 " Chatelain and Guard Chains	15 to 40
2,000 " Opera Glass and Revolving Pencils	10 to 15
2,000 " Brooches, Lava and Coral	3 to 15
2,000 " Opal and Enamel	3 to 15
5,000 " Ear-Drops, Jet, Lava, Coral, Mosaic, Opal, and Emerald Settings	3 to 40
5,000 " California Diamond Breast-Pins	6 to 25
5,000 " Solitaire Diamond Studs	12 to 25
5,000 " Thimbles, Pencils, &c	3 to 15
5,000 " Lockets, Double Glasses	5 to 25
10,000 " for Miniatures	6 to 19
10,000 " Toothpicks, Combs, &c	6 to 19
4,000 " Plain Rings	6 to 19
4,000 " Garnet or Engraved Rings	6 to 19
3,000 " Shield and Signet Rings	6 to 19
3,000 " Diamond Stone Rings	6 to 19
10,000 " Pearl and Fancy Stone Rings	6 to 25
10,000 " Gold Thimbles, Pencils, &c	3 to 15
5,000 " Ladies' Gold Jewelry	3 to 15
" Pearl, Opal, Emerald, and other stones	15 to 50
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Holders	10 to 25
10,000 " " with Gold Holders	10 to 25
10,000 " " Silver Holders and Pencils	10 to 25
5,000 Silver Goblets and Cups—all styles	6 to 12
2,000 " Pitchers and Tankards	12 to 25
2,000 " Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 to 30
2,000 " Card Baskets	10 to 15
2,000 " Egg Stands	15 to 40
2,000 " Napkin Rings	6 to 15
4,000 " Cake, Pie, and Fruit Knives	6 to 15
10,000 " Table Tea-spoons	6 to 15
10,000 " " Tablespoons	15 to 25
10,000 " " Sugar Shovels	15 to 25
10,000 " " Nut-Picks	6 to 15
10,000 " " Napkin Rings	6 to 15
10,000 Engravings in Rosewood Frames	6 to 15
5,000 " Steel Frames	6 to 15
8,000 Large Photographs in Frames	6 to 50
1,000 Fine Oil Paintings	15 to 100
6,000 Fine Pearl Pocket Knives—6 blades	6 to 15
6,000 " Stag-Handle Knives—6 blades	6 to 15
8,000 Pearl and Gold Headed Canes	15 to 25
10,000 Gold Fountain Pens and Pencils	6 to 15

CALKINS & CO., 588 and 590 Broadway, New York, are the appointed Agents of the Manufacturing Association of Manufacturers, which has been organized with the design of doing away with the enormous profits exacted from the people by jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in the various leading articles, for which the manufacturers receive on the average but $2, cost the consumer at retail from $5 to $15, and pass through three or four hands. The splendid stock of the leading and most favorable lines of solid gold jewelry, watches, silverware, &c., worth $2,500,000 at retail prices—will all be sold for Two Dollars each. The manager for the Association, for $500,000 (manufacturers' cost), or an average of Two Dollars for every article, sampled to the Association by the manufacturers.

Grand Advertisements of the various articles are well stirred, and orders are taken rapidly and systematically, and sent by mail without regard to choice, thus giving all a fair chance. Upon receipt of the advertisement, which see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to send Two Dollars and take the article, or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, or any article in the list, for Two Dollars. Every one, from every Town Dollars, and they can not get less than three for Two Dollars. Many of the articles are above retail prices, for there are no blanks; and when not satisfied, the money will be refunded. Any one can have a sample of splendid Silver Butter-Dish or Castor, heavy plate, valuable Gold Fancy Pen-Picture Monument, or Gold Album, worth $6. Send 25 cents for an envelope.

Every person will receive a large collection of useful receipts and popular songs, worth many dollars.

Persons ordering envelopes will receive them promptly by mail, postage paid, together with the following premium, as mentioned above:

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Fine New York Pen, worth $3; 10 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Goblet, worth $3; 25 for $4, with a Gold Pen and Pencil, worth $4; 35 for $5, with a Gold Watch, worth $5; 150 for $30, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $30; 250 for $50, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $50.

The coin, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelopes.

From the Press.

THE GREAT GOLD GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—We desire to caution our readers against contemplated swindling enterprises of the Cosmopolitan Manufacturing Jewelers Association of New York, advertised in the columns of the daily press, and which the purchaser finds, upon investigation, to be a transparent humbug. The public, going on the purpose of disposing of the fag ends of worthless stocks, from the manufacturers' warerooms, and which is to be sold at auction by Messrs. Calkins & Co., but is worth all it is represented to be. We understand this worthless character and reputation of the firm itself is a sufficient guarantee for the character of the goods proposed to be sold. Let such not be cast, visitors would not throw their contributions away, as all sold at auction. Let such, as they now do, not would they go away with from so bright and with satisfaction."—Sunday Atlas, April 1, 1865.

We want agents in every town and county, and in every regiment, and to those sending us cash will be allowed 25 cents on every envelope ordered by them, provided the remittance amounts to $5 or more. Agents will receive 25 cents for every envelope, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers, Headquarters, 588 and 590 Broadway, New York; or 1 Masonic Hall, South Fourth Street, St. Louis, Missouri, or 63 and 65 Washington Street, Chicago, Illinois.

Holiday Presents.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES! All to be sold at One Dollar Each!

200 Meniel Watches, each ..... $20 to $150
150 " " with Bells and Cutlass 100 " 600
300 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns ..... 50 " 100
500 " Chafing Dishes ..... 30 " 100
1000 " Pitchers ..... 10 " 50
3500 " Syrn Cups with Salvers ..... 10 " 50
2500 " Tea and Drinking Cups ..... 5 " 10
3000 " Casters ..... 15 " 50
5000 " Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets ..... 10 " 50
2000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen ..... 30 " 50
10,000 " Gold Pens, Silver and Pencil Cases, Gold Chains, Studs, Sleeve Buttons, Lockets, Bracelets, Pins, Rings, Cane Watches, Opera Glasses, Guards, Seals, Keys, Pencils, Charms, Slides, Necklaces, Ear Drops, Solitaires, Lava Goods, Coral Goods, Jet Goods, Cameo Goods, Mosaic Goods, Florentine Goods, Enamel Goods, Diamond Goods, Ruby Goods, Emerald Goods, Opal Goods, Pearl Goods, Garnet Goods, Amethyst Goods, Topaz Goods, Turquoise Goods, Onyx Goods, Agate

A MORNING CONCERT.

WIFE.—"GEORGE! GEORGE! You are not in Church!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds sold on commission.
Stocks received on PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies
For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

Galenberg & Vaupel's AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 597 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $2 to $30 each.

ADOLPHE FLAMANT & Co.'s CHAMPAGNE.
Is imported from Epernay, the principal commercial city of the Champagne district in France. Every care has been taken to produce a wine superior to any heretofore sold in the United States; and connoisseurs acknowledge it to be most delicious Champagne Wine. Sold in boxes or duty paid by A. W. MITCHELL, 31 Beaver St., N. Y.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

THE
VEST POCKET
PISTOL,
WEIGHING ONLY 21 OUNCES;
USING METALLIC CARTRIDGE.
Size No. 32.
MANUFACTURED BY
E. REMINGTON & SONS, ILION, N. Y.
 Sold by Gun-Dealers and the Trade generally.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
MEASURING CARD,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a
PERFECT FIT.
Boot & Shoe Emporium,
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

WARD & CO.,
Bankers, No. 54 Wall St., New York,
Government Agents
For the Sale of the
U. S. 7-30 Loan.
STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD
Bought and Sold on Commission.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or painted stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding Butterflies, Cravats, Ribbons, &c., in place on the shirt bottom.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its unique shape and stylish, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Whitney Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
DOREUS BROTHERS ..... Chicago, Illinois.
E. LOMAS & SON ..... Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HARDY ..... Cleveland, Ohio.
CORNMAN & CO. ..... Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CUPIS ..... 260 Broadway, New York.
WM. SUPPERSON ..... 23 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BUSHMAN & CO. ..... Detroit, Michigan.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.
See Advertisement on Page 818.

MUSICAL BOXES,
See Advertisement on Page 818.

IVORY and PEARL
Fine-Button Set, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $5, $6, $8, and $10 a set. Ivory and Pearl Pole-Buckles, $1 50 to $3 each. Scarf Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 571 Broadway.

HUMPHREYS' HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFIC REMEDY,
ASIATIC CHOLERA.
A Preventive and Cure.
PRICE, { Family Cases, 3 Large Vials..... $5 00
Pocket " 3 Small " 1 00
Sent by mail on receipt of price, and 25 cts. for postage.
Address HUMPHREYS' SPECIFIC
HOMEOPATHIC MED. CO., 562 Broadway, N. Y.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 467 Broome St.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

JEWELRY
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS.
See the announcement of ARRANDALE & CO.'S great sale of Jewelry for the Holidays on inside page. Now is the time for splendid bargains.

Holloway's Ointment. BURNS, SCALDS, WOUNDS, ULCERS, &c.—This unguent performs wonders in all external sores, whatever their first cause or present nature, by soothing the tortured nerves and reducing the inflammation. The heat, pain, and tightness are soon removed without leaving a blemish. Sold every where.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands.—Worms the cause.—those lives might have been spared, had there used VAN DEUSEN'S WORM CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Druggists. 25 cts a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

To Consumptives.
The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.
To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he considers to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GIRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

WARD'S SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and a large assortment of styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
E. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

DON'T DYE THE HAIR.
ROSWELL & WARNER'S COLOGNE colors beautifully and natural. One application, no wash, no trouble. Large bottles, $1. Try it. Manufactured at 78, N. Y.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains fifty-six beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 20 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
TWO PRIZES AT ONCE.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL
JUST AWARDED BY THE
AMERICAN INSTITUTE
FOR SUPERIOR
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
OVER ALL COMPETITION, TO
GEORGE STECK & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS,
118 AND 115 WALKER STREET, NEW YORK.

BROWNE & SPAULDING,
JEWELERS,
METROPOLITAN HOTEL BUILDING,
570 BROADWAY.
FINE WATCHES AND RICH JEWELRY of PARIS DESIGNS.
CLOCKS, BRONZES, and FANCY GOODS of LATEST IMPOTATIONS, and well adapted for HOLIDAY GIFTS.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

The Universal Clothes-Wringer,
Which took the First Premium at the Fair of the American Institute is WARRANTED the best in use.
Send for circular giving wholesale and retail terms.
E. C. BROWNING,
GENERAL AGENT,
342 Broadway, N. Y.

FENIANS, IRISHMEN,
IRISH AMERICANS,
Friends of Freedom,
WEAR THE Irish Liberty Pin.

This splendid little emblem of the noble brotherhood bonded together in the holy cause of Liberty, is made of metal heavily fire-gilt, and is very ornamental. It consists of the golden circle and the Irish harp upon the green silk (gauzed and copyright secured). Price 25 cents. By mail 35 cents. To clubs and the trade, $2 25 per dozen; $24 per gross. Address all orders to
B. W. HITCHCOCK,
14 Chambers Street, New York.

LAVADENTEM
K Y. For the Mouth. M. C.
BURLEIGH & ROGERS, WHOLESALE AGENTS, Boston.

CATALOGUE of LANGENHEIM'S
Magic Lantern Pictures and Apparatus. Address
W. LANGENHEIM, Philadelphia.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

HATS AND FURS,
BURKE,
669 Broadway (cor. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods of whatever name, and not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patent of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best materials, and give perfect satisfaction to customers. Office 625 Company No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B. WAY, N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 470.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE HOLY FAMILY.—[BY MURILLO.]

THE DOOM OF SLAVERY.

PROCLAMATION.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

To All to Whom these Presents May Come, Greeting:

Know ye, that, whereas, the Congress of the United States, on the 1st of February last, passed a resolution, which is in the words following, namely:

A resolution submitting to the Legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States:

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, that the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XIII.

SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SECTION 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

And, whereas, it appears from official documents on file in this department that the Amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed as aforesaid has been ratified by the Legislatures of the States of Illinois, Rhode Island, Michigan, Maryland, New York, West Virginia, Maine, Kansas, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Missouri, Nevada, Indiana, Louisiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Vermont, Tennessee, Arkansas, Connecticut, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Alabama, North Carolina, and Georgia, in all twenty-seven States;

And whereas, the whole number of States in the United States is thirty-six;

And whereas, the before specially named States, whose Legislatures have ratified the said proposed amendment, constitute three-fourths of the whole number of States in the United States;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State of the United States, by virtue and in pursuance of the second section of the act of Congress approved the 20th of April, 1818, entitled "An Act to provide for the publication of the laws of the United States and for other purposes," do hereby certify that the amendment aforesaid has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the said CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington, this 18th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1865, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 90th.

WM. H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1865.

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

THE Christmas greeting of this year will be more exulting than for many a year past. For for the first decade that November and December have not in the deep bosom of the ocean buried, the sun has fully pierced them, and the genial light of peace makes such a festival as has long been unknown to us.

It is just a year since the final crush of the rebellion began in the fall of Savannah, the triumphant march of SHERMAN was the overture to the rapid drama of the Spring, and between the snows of last year and of this one of the longest and heaviest storms of the world has melted back into the mass of the people without the least trouble or danger to the public tranquillity. This is but one of the incredible points in which the peculiar quality of the American system is apparent.

As the old year closes upon happy faces and merry homes the prospect of the new is not such as to threaten the duration of that condition which makes the people hopeful and gay. Every American trusts the public sagacity and heroism as he never did before. If he does not clearly see the issue of many grave questions, he has learned by ample and impressive experience that they will not necessarily be wrongly settled because the settlement is for the present hidden. If we are not prepared for every before, it is a legitimate pride. If we are more confident, it is a justifiable faith. For if there have been a true development of the people it was the late war, and if ever a people moved steadily and nobly forward it was this people who did so.

For the heroic dead, the flower of our youth which the fierce war withered, there will be a forever evergreen freshness of grief and remembrance and of public respect with every Christmas season. In our festive garlands we shall twine a leaf of rue, and in the glittering evergreen of holly and ivy see more than the red plums. For the living who returned from the bitter field there will be always an every season a Christmas welcome in all faithful hearts. And for those who so long maintained the fight against the Union and liberty there will be mingled feelings as the old dumb-show of religious feast returns. Yet among those feelings hate and vindictiveness have no share. The festival commemorates the birth of Him who died for all men, and thereby proclaimed and sealed their common humanity.

And if the Christmas light could show the late enemies of the United States that peace is born only of good will to men, we should all gladly join hands from sea to sea and raise our voice in one vast millennial chorus, the jubilant thunder of which would break all political, social, moral, and mental chains in the world. "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men!"

OUR FRENCH RELATIONS.

We observe that some people are so impatient of the presence of the French in Mexico that they cry aloud for the Government to order the French emperor out of that country. They declare that he is constantly sending reinforcements to MAXIMILIAN—that he has had no positive assurance of the hostility of this Government to his Mexican enterprise—and that to refrain from serving him with a notice to quit is to drift inevitably into war. The same authorities make the alternative very heavy by adding that, if LOUIS NAPOLEON is told with sufficient emphasis to go, he will at once order his troops upon the transports, and, offering MAXIMILIAN a free passage, will gratefully thank us and depart.

If this last point were as clear in fact as it is in assertion our choice could be promptly made. But experience does not reveal such alacrity upon the part of foreign powers to do exactly as they are ordered to do; and whether France would leave Mexico merely because the United States commanded it, is a question which will be best answered by considering the character of the French people, and by the ordinary conduct of all nations under such circumstances.

Negotiations, which we infer from the tone of the President's Message, are already subject, are probably now pending, may very readily end in a peaceful solution of the difficulty. But a peremptory notice to withdraw, to withdraw under pain of our displeasure is plainly war. Now good policy and humanity require that the United States and the belligerent very carefully before engaging in another war. One of the most signal good fortunes of our race has long been the separation of the U. S. A. not left us with a thirst for military glory, and every thoughtful citizen sees that no disaster could be greater than that which would require such a state. Then every material interest, every liberal aim of this country imperatively demand peace and domestic reorganization. And whatever the temptation may be opposed by a general war is evident. Indeed the same papers which bristle with defiance of France and recount with the very lava often attend sanguine speculations upon the proper meth od of paying the national debt, which is a serious consideration to every man. But it is less plain that, in the present condition of the lately insurgent States, a great foreign war would involve this country in the gravest complications.

Indeed the inevitable consequences of the peremptory notice which we suppose to be so plain, the infinite loss, sorrow, and confusion, whatever the event of the war might be, are so apparent, that we feel very confident the advice of impatience will be accounted at its exact value. As a matter of fact the increase of the French force in Mexico is not more than sufficient to maintain it. Indeed, if both armies and supplies were arriving indicating an intention of hostilities with this country, it might be reasonable to order them to depart. But it is not drifting into war to remain watchful and to confide in negotiations, which are conducted under a Secretary who is known to be fully alive to all demands of the national honor and safety, and who has just said: "We should regard it as a great calamity to be driven, in the cause of good government, and to the peace of the world, should any European power challenge the American people, as a party, to the defense of republicanism against foreign interference..... We rely on the wisdom and justice of those Powers to respect the system of non-interference which has so long been sanctioned by time, and which, by its good results, has approved itself to both continents."

Negotiations carried on in such a spirit are very sure to issue more fortunately for this country and for the world than a summary warning to a belligerent power which if it does not immediately do what we say, it shall be incontinently thrashed into doing it.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

We observe in many of the journals in the Southern States a tone of haughty defiance, and denunciation of the press in this part of the country, with the most reckless vituperation and exhortations to violence. Our quietly and periodicals as poisonous, malicious, fiendish, and, in a word, disagreeable to the traditions of foreign courtesy.

Now people will read what they choose. But if the great body of the population in those States suppose that we are to be driven back by calling hard names they are curiously mistaken. The habit of denouncing every paper which did not hold its tongue or speak jaunty and excuse slavery was universal at the South before the war. It was "unfriendly," it was "committing disunion," it was "trifling with the public welfare," it was "inviting the horrors of St. Domingo," to insist that every body in the United States was entitled to fair play. But all this is now as antiquated as the customs of the world before the flood. Conciliation in this country is to be effected in one way, and in one way only, and that is by the fullest and freest discussion of every public question.

There are a great many well-meaning people who think that if we only hold our tongues on all sides trade will settle wonderfully. It is a fatal error. The interests of trade can never be more vital than they were ten years ago. But they could not save us from the war, and they can not now give us peace. The difficulties that divide the country have been fought out, and now they must be talked out before we can be truly at rest. When it is fully understood that we are not to be threatened into silence, and that no question is to be considered too brittle to handle, there will be a real conciliation, and not before.

And there is one plain principle which the press and people of the Southern States must sooner or later admit. It is that no opposition involving the equal rights of men, which, as PRESIDENT JOHNSON says, is the foundation of the American system, is or can ever be a purely local question. If arbitrary injustice, shocking to the reason and destructive of the American principle, is practiced among the factory operatives in Lowell, every man in the country, in Alabama as well as in Massachusetts, is in danger. It is both his right and his duty to protest. It is the capital of Lowell to-day that it is its own affair, and that nobody has a right to criticise or censure, it should be taught, as it is certain that a man might as wisely say that a fire in his house was his own affair, and forbid his neighbors to try to save themselves by putting it out.

Is it impossible for people in the Southern States to see that a man is not "an enemy of the South" because he advocates free play in a region where unfair play has brought us to blood? Can they not understand that he is not counseling the women of the South to marry a Hottentot, a Bushman, or a Spaniard, a Turk, a negro, or an Englishman, or a Yankee, because he wishes to save a class of the population from being guaranteed a choice? Must they necessarily suppose that he is burning to "humiliate the South" because he wishes that the fundamental principles of free Government should be respected? Are we not all equally interested that the troubles of the war should be settled as soon as possible, and is there any way of settling them except by the most unreserved discussion of the whole subject?

If the people in the Southern States had hitherto known the men who differed from them upon vital questions instead of hanging them, they would not now be in the condition they are. And if they mean as they want to hang both men, they will not emerge from that condition. Republican government is practicable only with perfect freedom of speech; and when a community begins to fetter the tongue and the pen, it will end in pure despotism or in civil war. We have learned this truth at tremendous cost. Do the people of the Southern States suppose that we have already forgotten it?

And for ourselves, we certainly concede all the liberty we claim. If an editor in South Carolina or Arkansas disbelieves the American principle, if he distrusts a free Constitutional Government, if he prefers a censorship of the press, if he advocates caste and privilege, let him give his reasons. But he ought to understand that the people is not arguing with him, a man who differs from you "a blasted abolitionist," or a "miscegenator," or "a fiend," or "an enemy of the South," or any other epithet whatever. The day of mere abuse has passed. If nothing can be uttered for a policy of injustice but a volley of vituperation, then injustice is doomed. We ask for a clear field and no favor. Gentlemen of the South, put your best argument foremost, and God save the right!

BREAKERS AHEAD.

We must be very careful what we are about. The importations last week amounted to over $6,000,000 gold valuation. In the five and a half days of this week we exported of the current fiscal year they amount to $127,000,000; for the whole fiscal year ending 30th June next they will not be less than $250,000,000. This is as the port of New York alone, and is over and above all importations at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other ports, etc.

Now, the country has just gone through an exhausting four years' war. That war has cost nearly $3,000,000,000. Just that sum has been added to our debt. By that sum the nation is poorer than it was before the war began. Yet it seems that we can afford to spend more than ever on foreign importations—though the duty on such importations is from 10 to 25 per cent. heavier than it used to be, and the gold premium is averaging half a million in gold each working-day.

The seeming anomaly will not bear examination. We can not afford to spend the money we are spending on foreign importations. We could not afford it if goods were at old prices; and in fact they are no cheaper for foreign goods than we are paying two and three prices to the manufacturers of England, Germany, and France for the goods they are sending us. Foreign manufacturers are all growing rich at our expense, and are so busy that they decline new orders. If instead of spending four years in a wasteful war—which cost us about $40 per head per annum for each of the four years—we had been industriously engaged in productive labor, and had been practicing due economy the while, we could barely afford the extravagance in which we are now indulging.

Unless something occurs to check the present spendthrift tendency of the people of the United States the collapse predicted by MR. MCCULLOCH may be upon us before two years of expansion he expects shall have elapsed.

It is of nations as of men. A man may wear a bold front and keep up appearance long after his substance has departed from him. So long as private bank discounts his paper he continues to enjoy credit, and to possess so much money that the world suspects not his losses. But sooner or later the truth leaks out, and he is confessed a bankrupt. The people of the United States are not yet bankrupt, but they have lost so much money in the last four years that nothing but severe economy and a sedulous prosecution of productive industry for many years to come can prevent their becoming bankrupt ere long.

Great wars beget commercial revulsions. The British wars against Napoleon were followed by the commercial collapse of 1811; our war of 1812–14 by the collapse of 1816–17; the Crimean war by the collapse of 1857. Historians explain each of these collapses on different principles, and from their reasoning it would seem that the revulsions did not necessarily result from the war, but were the fruit of other and distinct causes. This may be; but it is a curious coincidence that in this commercial age great wars have invariably been followed by more commercial calamities, and as all transactions wars are the most wasteful of human industry and the products of labor, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the coincidence is not purely accidental.

In the year 1856 and in the early part of 1857 warnings were not wanting of the inevitable consequences of the overtrading then in progress. The crisis of 1857 was foretold more times before it came. But no one listened to CASSANDRA. Every thing was serene. Importers could not import goods enough for the purchasers. Jobbers could not keep goods enough for their dealers. Dealers could not supply the public fast enough—that public which had its pockets full of railway bonds and stocks, mercantile paper, bank and other paper evidences of debt—all of which was for the time being money, and would buy any thing, from a brownstone mansion to a red flannel shirt. Then the evil hour came, and the paper evidences of debt lost their purchasing power, the public could not pay for the goods they had, dealers failed on the jobbers, the jobbers failed on the importers, the importers failed on the foreign manufacturers, the railways failed on their bond-holders, the cities and counties of the West repudiated their debts, and the whole commercial community went down in one general crash.

There is something striking and wholesome in the reminiscence. Now as then importers can not order goods fast enough for them. Europe, steamers can not convey them in quantities sufficient, jobbers can not keep stock enough on hand, dealers are worried by the impatient customers, and the public pockets are crammed with paper evidences of debt—legal tenders, national bank notes, Seven-Thirties, gold certificates, quarter-masters' vouchers, deposit certificates, gold-notes—all of them possessing purchasing power, and almost the last effort to pay 56 cents a yard for cotton cloth, $1 a pair for stockings, and $5 a yard for Lyons silks. How long can this sort of thing last?

The Secretary of the Treasury—an old banker and a scientific financier—assures us that within two years we shall have a general collapse. We can not shoulder, and go on buying foreign goods. French importers say: "Would you have us stop importing when we can sell every yard we have on hand at 50 per cent.?" Jobbers laugh at contracting their business so long as dealers strip their store bare as often as they fill it. Dealers can not be expected to let their stocks run down so long as trade remains so brisk. And the gay old public, with its roll of money—in the form of five different shapes—spends what it has in its old free-handed way. If it could but be persuaded to increase its expenditure; to see that when you subtract two from four, the remainder, in spite of all the metaphysics and fancy financiering in the world, is two, and not four, the catastrophe might be averted. But do people believe CASSANDRA any more now than in the old Trojan days?

Wise men—the rare few who will be found floating after the storm—will set their houses in order. The Secretary may or may not succeed in contracting the currency. If he does, he will cause the collapse, as MR. CHASE caused the Wall Street collapse of April 1862. If he does not, it will come without him. That it must come, no thoughtful person can doubt, in view of what is patent to all. But meanwhile old John Public will order new spoons and cake for MRS. P. and the Misses P.; puffing his fifty cent Havana, will berate licentious presses for unsettling public confidence, and throwing obstacles in the way of a restoration of the good old times; and of all men in the world will be the most astonished when a hurricane arises some fine morning, and sweeps him from the financial surface.

THE TAX QUESTION.

It is a recent number, referring to the incongruities of the present Internal Revenue system, we mentioned, by way of illustration, the tax on printed books. We showed that books pay no less than fifteen separate taxes to the Government before they reach the reader. The subject has attracted the attention of the trade, and enterprising booksellers in the city, Boston, and Philadelphia have discovered that they can import books from England, pay the full duty, and lay them down here at less than half the cost of similar books printed, bound, and published in this country. Extensive arrangements are consequently being made for the importation and sale of English publications in this country.

It has been calculated that an average book will take one pound weight of paper.

	Cents. Cents.
This cents.	16
Other material, say	10
Labor	20
Eleven per cent. revenue tax	11
Total cost of average book in this country	201
Cost of same paper in England	8
Other material	10
Labor	20
Duty	30½
Total cost of same book imported	68½
Balance in favor of importer	33½

In England and in many other countries public education is considered a high import- since that leads and the materials of which they are made are either exempted altogether from taxation or taxed at a mere nominal rate. Under the present revenue law of the United States they pay as heavy a tax as most articles of luxury. Is this in accordance with our traditional policy and the true spirit of our institutions?

Congress is prepared, it is said, to modify the Internal Revenue law where it is found to be either ineffective or unduly oppressive. Is it too much to expect that among the taxes which are reduced will be those which increase the cost of books, and which threaten to flood the country with foreign publications to the exclusion of American literature?

THE HORRORS OF JAMAICA.

WHEN the first vague news of the troubles in Jamaica reached this country the "Conservative," or Tory papers, with malignant eagerness, hastened to declare that the outbreak was by the blacks, which they insisted were going on in that island, were but another proof of the fatal tendency of the colored race for civilization, and that we might see in Jamaica what we had to expect if we treated as human beings men whom we have been despised and outraged. But now that the truth of the Jamaica massacres spears those papers are silent. Now that by the confessions of the official report of the English authorities themselves it is impossible to calumniate the unfortunate colored race the "Conservative" press is silent. Now that it is plain that the massacres in Jamaica were the work of men of the same color as those who perpetrated the slaughter of St. Bartholomew; who were guilty of the lotine and supervised the September massacres and the Noyades of the French Revolution; who have filled Libby prison cannon and starved prisoners at Andersonville—when, in fine, it is discovered that it is the white and not the black race that is guilty of those Jamaica crimes, "Conservatism" is dumb.

The simple facts of the case we published last week, compiled from English official sources. From these it appears that there was a revolt of the colored men to resist the execution of a warrant against some of their number. The military were called upon and fired into them, killing several. The infuriated rioters then closed with the soldiers, and seizing their muskets, shot a number of them in turn with the others in pieces. But Governor EYRE himself admits that women and children were respected. Only one woman was subsequently killed, and the Governor further admits that there was no attempt at extending an insurrection. But people instantly seized the British authorities. They surrounded with a military force the settlement in which the outbreak had occurred, murdered the Baptist, a tribe of Native Americaneers, descendants of the old Spanish slaves upon the island, and advancing upon the inhabitants of Morant Bay, shot them indiscriminately and with such sickening details of horror that the Liberals of England have already appealed to the Government, and Lord RUSSELL has replied that a thorough investigation will be made.

JOHN BRIGHT publicly asserts in his late speech that Governor EYRE will yet be tried for the murder of GORDON, a mulatto Baptist preacher, who upon some suspicion was carried from his own district into one where martial law was proclaimed, and was there tried by drum-head court-martial and hung. "I fear that the fame of England," says Mr. BRIGHT, "will never recover it a deeper wound and a darker stain than it has from the recent transactions in that island." And GOLDWIN SMITH, in a letter to the Boston Daily Advertiser, writes: "As the case at present stands there is nothing whatever to prove peculiar, much less indelible, ferocity in the negro race. But the case of the island, the English officers who have been corrupted by the blandishments of that depraved society (for it is deeply depraved), and sad to say, the Governor himself, have committed such atrocities, that if the Home Government were to fail in its duty of vindicating the honor of the old country, it will be time for an Englishman who cares for the honor of his nation to look out for another home."

Are such events to be lost upon us? Are we never to learn that honesty is the best policy? Have we not yet been sufficiently taught that the "instinctive antipathy" and the "natural loathing" for an "inferior race" are luxuries too costly for any people to indulge in? What was the spring of the whole outrage, occasioned these massacres by Englishmen but the consciousness that a part of the population has not had fair play? But "Our Conscience" doctors have always shouted very lustily over the horrors of St. Domingo. But the horrors of Jamaica quite as revolting and infinitely more unpardonable.

COPYRIGHT OF FOREIGNERS IN ENGLAND.

A CASE of peculiar interest to American authors and publishers has been decided in England by the Lords Justices of Appeals. Miss MARIA S. CUMMINS, an American writer, the author of "The Lamplighter," resident in Canada during and at the time of the first publication by MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & CO. in London of a later work by her, entitled "El Fureidis," MR. ROUTLEDGE also proposed to issue the work in London, and an injunction against his publication was obtained by MESSRS. LOW. MR. ROUTLEDGE appealed against the injunction, and it is this appeal which has been now decided.

The chief ground taken by MR. ROUTLEDGE'S counsel was that an alien in Canada would be protected by a Canadian statute from holding copyright in Canada, so that anybody living residing there, an alien could acquire no copyright under British law. But Lord JUSTICE TURNER said that the question was not who were an alien's rights under the circumstances in Canada but in England; and the law was by no means clear that the alien could not temporarily bound by all laws which affect all British subjects, may rightfully acquire any personal property and maintain it by action in the courts. The injunction was therefore continued, with costs to be paid by the defendant.

It is clear under this decision that any foreign author by residing in England or in a British colony during and at the first publication of a work may acquire a copyright under British law.

P. P. C.

THE excellent DON QUIXOTE was of opinion that if his memory were as good as his wit he supposed, he could have confounded him utterly.

So our pleasant friend, the Evening Post, in very nice terms, has said what it assumed we had said, it could have made mince-meat of us in a twinkling. But owning its illusion, the Don gracefully withdraws. Naturally he says a friendly parting word for his great proto type; for a disputant who confounds the National protection of equal rights with Central tralism is a prodigy of confusion, and the knight who mistook an impregnable and useful mill for a monstrous giant.

FARRER'S FRUIT PIECES.

MR. FARRER'S paintings of Fruit, now on exhibition at GOUPIL'S Gallery, are very remarkable. The artist's name is entirely unknown to fame, and he occasioned a great deal of angry and contemptuous denunciation and of enthusiastic praise; but in these matters he does not give his child's play. He says that of a faithful representation of the most familiar objects; and it seems to us impossible that any one can like to see beautiful objects falsely represented in these exquisite portraits. Here are oranges, peaches, pears, of marvellous transparency, grapes and apples, with one gorgeous pine-apple, not of the golden hue which we usually see, but of a deep and delicious green. The artist has given the texture in the collection, and among them a cluster of pure and perfect white lilies—the Madonna flower all are evidently and faithfully drawn, and seem the apples having that hard, crude look which marks the early fruit just ripened, from which we suppose these to have been painted. There are no accessories of pretty porcelain, silver plate, or baskets in these sketches. They are good as exact transcripts of the fruit, or they are good for nothing. It is all honest work. The texture, the form, the tone, the details, are considered with care. The man who painted them loved his subjects and believed in their treatment, and the result is a series of masterly studies.

We hope that our readers will take the trouble to stop and see for themselves; and they can only help perceiving that an artist who shows such peculiar power of observation and handling in the treatment of fruit deserves thoughtful consideration in works of a higher and different character. For if the PRE-RAPHAELITE spirit and method are so truly admirable in pictures of fruit, can they be altogether false and absurd in pictures of woods and fields?

LITERARY.

"The Life of Richard Cobden," by GILBERT'S just published by the HARPERS, is a peculiarly timely and very interesting little work. It tells the story of Cobden's career in connection with the public questions of his day in a most winning and lucid manner, and may be profitably consulted by every American; for the questions with which COBDEN was identified are those that we must presently consider. Free trade, international peace, the true principles of friendly commercial treaties, and the limitation of the hours of labor, were subjects to which the Englishman devoted his rare sagacity and ample accomplishments. The present work is necessarily a sketch, but it is vividly done and justifies the opening of the life of the wisest and noble character of its hero had made upon all civilized nations.

MUSSELL, of Albany, will soon issue a new edition of the Life and Services of Red Jacket, by the late WILLIAM L. STONE, with a biography of the author by his son of the same name, author of the "Life and Times of Sir William Johnson." The biography will contain many letters now first published, addressed to STONE, by some of the most distinguished men of his time, who were on intimate terms with the veteran editor. These letters are a considerable addition to the materials for the history of our late troubles, showing at how early a period the intention of actual rebellion was matured.

MR. FREDERICK SAUNDERS'S "Festival of Song," published by HARPER & BROTHERS, is a collection of the most delightful poetry in the language from CHAUCER to BURNS, made by the cultivated, delicate, and poetical taste of a gentleman already favorably known, and superbly illustrated by the artists of the National Academy. It is one of the most truly beautiful of the holiday books.

PRANG'S various Albums and collections of colored prints of Leaves, Flowers, Scenes, and Children's Story-Books, are furnished at so very moderate a price that they will be truly called Books for the Million. In the brilliant bewilderment of Holiday selection he will not go wrong, and he will go very wrong, who passes by PRANG.

In the form of a neat little pamphlet Floral Hand-Book, containing a complete dictionary of flowers, JOSEPH BURDETT & CO., of Boston, issue a necessary companion to their "Standard Preparations." It is a "Ladies' Calendar," sure to be peculiarly prized by the youth and maidens who give and receive flowers, for it interprets their gifts.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

THE State of Alabama has been relieved of her Provisional Governor, WILLIAM MARCUS BROWN, a dispatch to Provisional Governor PARSONS and the Governor elect, announcing that the President's proclamation to that effect has arrived when the people of Alabama can safely be trusted to the administration of their own affairs, and that he therefore authorizes the relinquishment of executive functions by the Governor, and the resumption of them by the new Governor.

The meeting of the Convention of the Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery was brought up before the Kentucky Legislature on the 13th, but the resolution was laid over under the rules. It will be remembered that on the 18th December last the Legislature of Kentucky by a State voted against the ratification by a vote of 71 to 49. In the House the resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Federal Relations, approving the action of the Legislature in rejecting the proposed Thirteenth Article of Constitutional Amendment. The Legislature has passed a bill to abolish the Provost Marshal's office, and has also instituted to repeal the law providing for a civil remedy for the loss of slaves by reason of the war. A bill has been reported to repeal the Confederate practice, in regard to the requiring testimony and answers of the Courts to be taken on oath.

A telegram was received recently in Nashville, from the Legislature of Tennessee, at Washington, the ratifying testimony bill: "It is to be regretted that the Legislature has not been able to act upon this bill of such great importance in moving in the right direction."

The Senate of Missouri has deferred the election of United States Senators, in the hope that the disabilities of Ashley and Blow may be removed. Ashley, it is said, will probably be elected a Senator. Governor Jenkins was inaugurated on the 21st. The tone of his address is eminently loyal, patriotic, and hopeful. He pays a tribute to the valor of the late negroes during the war, favors their receiving the fullest civil protection, and considers that the future prosperity of the State depends on just and kind treatment, is indispensable to the prosperity of the State.

The Constitutional Amendment was ratified by the State of Ohio on the 13th. Ohio was among the early-ninth State that has taken similar action.

The bill which was passed by the Assistant-General of Mississippi to the captains of militia companies recently elected, authorizing them to call out their companies within the radius of their company lines. The order is said to have been issued by Governor SHARKEY, and is one of the strongest evidences of loyalty in its execution. It directs the suppression of "such force as may be necessary to put down all riots, insurrections, and unlawful acts of the negroes that may be made."

The Legislature of Mississippi has passed a resolution repudiating all debts, whether on account of sales of slaves, or for the payment of the Confederate, or otherwise, that were incurred by the State between the 9th day of January, 1861, and the 9th day of October, 1865. The Mississippi Legislature has recommended its vote rejecting the Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery unless certain conditions and reservations. The ratification by Mississippi was accompanied by the declaration that it is adopted "with the understanding that it does not confer on Congress the power to legislate upon the political status of freedmen."

CONGRESS.

December 12:

In the Senate Mr. Morgan introduced a bill, which was referred, conferring certain persons the right to live a citizen of the United States and the State and District. Mr. DAVIS introduced a resolution, also referred, declaring the work of reconstruction interrupted by the Executive Authority called up the House resolution for the appointment of a joint committee on the subject of the treasonable States, and moved certain amendments thereto, which, together with the resolution was passed, and adopted.

In the House, Mr. Raymond presented the credentials of Tennessee members, which, after a brief debate, were, on Mr. RAYMOND'S motion, referred to the Select Committee, by the vote of 141 ayes. A resolution giving the members the privilege of the floor, pending the decision of their case, was tabled by a vote of 90 to 63. Subsequently a resolution was adopted inviting them to take seats in the hall of the House of Representatives.

December 13:

In the Senate, a resolution was referred to pay the late Senator Collamer's salary to his widow.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution to find out the employe's in the Treasury and their compensation who have not taken the oath of loyalty was passed.

In the House, General Schenck offered a joint resolution asking a suspension of orders for mustering out the officers of the Invalid Veteran Reserve Corps, which was passed.—A bill was referred to provide for the sale of Government property.—A resolution was adopted requesting the entry for consumption of goods in bond on payments of the respective rates of duty.—On motion of Mr. STEVENS the House took up the resolution providing for a joint committee to examine into the condition of the so-called Confederate States, so returned from the Senate with amendments. The amendments were moved by Mr. STEVENS, and consist in extending the benefits of the Bounty Act of March 3, 1865, to all soldiers who enlisted prior to the war.—The Judiciary Committee was instructed to report what compensation ought to be given for property of Southern States destroyed by our armies.

December 14.

In the Senate a good portion of the day was occupied in the delivery of a eulogium of respect to the memory of the late Senator Collamer, of Vermont. Glowing eulogies upon his character and public services were pronounced by Senators SUMNER, HOWARD, JOHNSON, and others. Resolutions of respect, introduced by Mr. FESSENDEN, were adopted unanimously.—The Senate adjourned till the 18th.

In the House, several changes in committees were announced.—A bill to amend the act passed at the session of 1863-4 (the Senate concurring) from December 25 to January 1.—A bill was passed appropriating $250,000, or so much as may be necessary, to furnish and repair the President's Mansion.—A bill was introduced by Mr. HOOPER, of Mass., for the payment of invalid and other pensioners.—A bill was reported, and referred to the Committee of the Whole, making appropriations for the support of the West India Squadron, and for other purposes.—A bill, 1837, was introduced and referred, providing that the Albany bridge over the Hudson shall be a highway for the purposes authorized by the New York Legislature, and may be used as a railroad track.—The Senate bill for reconstruction was adopted to print 20,000 copies of General Grant's report.—A resolution was offered and passed declaring that treason against the United States Government is a crime punishable by death.—A resolution was offered by Senator Collamer, of Vermont, were pronounced by several gentlemen, after which the House adjourned till the 18th.

December 18:

In the Senate, a petition of Vice-Admiral Farragut and 219 other naval officers for increase of pay was referred.—The House bill, appropriating $30,000 to refit the White House, was passed.—The committee on commerce was instructed to report a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to examine into the condition of the Mississippi River, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof.—The Senate adjourned till the 19th.

December 19:

In the Senate, a petition of Vice-Admiral Farragut and 219 other naval officers for increase of pay was referred.—The House bill, appropriating $30,000 to refit the White House, was passed.—The committee on commerce was instructed to report a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to examine into the condition of the Mississippi River, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof.—The Senate adjourned till the 19th.

December 18:

In the House, a petition of Vice-Admiral Farragut and 219 other naval officers for increase of pay was referred.—The House bill, appropriating $30,000 to refit the White House, was passed.—The committee on commerce was instructed to report a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to examine into the condition of the Mississippi River, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof.—The Senate adjourned till the 19th.

December 19:

In the Senate, a petition of Vice-Admiral Farragut and 219 other naval officers for increase of pay was referred.—The House bill, appropriating $30,000 to refit the White House, was passed.—The committee on commerce was instructed to report a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to examine into the condition of the Mississippi River, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof.—The Senate adjourned till the 19th.

December 18:

In the House, a petition of Vice-Admiral Farragut and 219 other naval officers for increase of pay was referred.—The House bill, appropriating $30,000 to refit the White House, was passed.—The committee on commerce was instructed to report a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to examine into the condition of the Mississippi River, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof.—The Senate adjourned till the 19th.

December 19:

In the House

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—[SKETCHED AND DRAWN BY S. EYTINGE.]

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

Crowning the walls on the eastern side, near the Gate of St. Stephen, a fine view may be seen of this beautiful Garden, the most highly cultivated piece of ground about the Holy City. From this stand-point one can see down into it, with its dark olive foliage in agreeable contrast to the whitish gray of the surrounding rocks.

The Garden consists of about half an acre, neatly square, and surrounded by a high wall. The entrance, like most inclosures or buildings outside the protecting walls of Jerusalem, is guarded by a low doorway and massive iron door.

After loud and repeated knocking the door is slowly opened by a Franciscan monk, the guardian and gardener of the place, who is called Angelo.

This monk gardener is as surly as a mastiff on first acquaintance; but in time, as one sees more of him, he thaws out, and becomes more or less communicative.

The Garden contains eight aged olive trees, which form the oldest group of trees in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, along the foot of the mountain. The wall which surrounds these trees was built a few years ago, to prevent the enthusiastic pilgrims from destroying them in cutting and carrying away souvenirs.—One old tree, which stands to the south of the Garden, that was not included within the wall, next began to be mutilated, when the Franciscans also encircled a protecting wall about its aged limbs.

These trees are unquestionably of the highest antiquity, and are hollow, and seldom bear fruit, on account of their great age.—Their hollow trunks are filled up with stones, to make them strong against the high winds of winter, and the roots are also terraced about with stones.

At long intervals, when these trees die, the olives are carefully gathered and pressed by the Franciscan monks, and the oil thus obtained is presented to flattering ones of the church in Europe. Doubtless the roots of one of these trees were once watered with the tears of Jesus, during the night of "agony and bloody sweat," when he prayed for the last time upon this ungrateful earth—when in deep submission to the grand plan of redemption He said, "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me except I drink it, Thy will be done!"

As I sat upon a stone under one of the trees I recalled to memory the scene of that terrible night. My Latin Testament, who had accompanied me in several of my walks, stood near me, and pointed to the opposite bank of the Kedron. "See," said he, "that path winding down from the Gate of St. Stephen. It was by that path the Master descended with His disciples, after breaking bread and singing a hymn with them in the upper room on Mount Zion. Near that brook He said to them, 'Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.' And He took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy.' On that very path lay the drowsy disciples, who could not watch with Him in His agony for one short hour, although twice aroused by the suffering Master, and where, at last, knowing that His hour was come, He told them to sleep on and take their rest. It was there He told His wondering followers that the betrayer approached. Then appeared the light of torches through those olive branches, and here they heard the clamor of the multitude as they approached with staves and swords—the emissaries of the chief priests and elders of the people. And these silent trees were the witnesses of the awful treason of that night, when the professed friend and follower betrayed Him with a kiss, and of His divine forbearance when He calmly said unto His betrayer, 'Friend, wherefore art thou come?' It was here the indignant Peter, spurred by the foul proceedings against his Master, drew his sword and struck the servant of the high-priest. Here that Jesus, with a divine forgetfulness of self, said to His zealous disciple, 'Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword;' here that, with lamb-like submission, He gave Himself up, and addressed a reproach to the multitude who came upon Him, armed with staves and swords, as if He were a malefactor; it was here—oh, shameful to relate—that in that dark hour His disciples fled and left Him alone in the hands of the hardened multitude!"

I unconsciously resumed, in my own mind, the thread of what he had been saying, and I saw the dark figures of the fleeing disciples vanishing in the shades of night, and the armed multitude emerging from the grove of olive trees, with the lurid glare of their torches flashing upon that face of resignation of the central figure, and the frowning visages of the agents of the chief priests and elders, by whom he was surrounded. I could see the rays of light flickering through the foliage, and glancing athwart the gnarled trunks and branches, and the shadowy forms of the people in the back-ground. I could follow the abandoned Jesus, accompanied by the noisy multitude, across the brook and up the winding path to the gate of that ungrateful city over which He had wept, and I could discern the figure of Peter gliding along in the dark behind.

The angels in heaven must have wept that night at the inhumanity of man toward his Saviour! Sympathy there must have been in that celestial world—no earth there was none!

JESUS IN THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.—[DESIGNED BY GUSTAVE DORE.]

BY THE CHRISTMAS HEARTH.

TO-DAY at home beside the hearth,
Warm with the ruddy embers' glow,
We keep our Christmas, so unlike
The Christmas of a year ago.
When in the camp at earliest dawn
The grimy-throated cannon woke
Our slumbers, and within the east
The golden light of morning broke.

Ah! then the smoke of battle hung
Its sulphurous cloud our land above,
And bitter feud and hatred filled
Brave hearts that should have warmed with love;
But now at home beside the hearth
We keep the day with song and cheer,
While from each spire the Christmas bells
Ring out with voices sweet and clear.

Bring holly, rich with berries red,
And bring the sacred mistletoe;
Fill high each glass, and let our hearts
With kindliest feelings overflow;
So sweet it seems at home once more
To sit with those we hold most dear,
And after absence once again
To keep the merry Christmas here.

This day the Prince of Peace was born,
When hope first dawned upon the earth;
To-day with fervent hymns of praise
We celebrate His wondrous birth,
Who set the bonds of death aside,
And triumphed o'er the voiceless grave—
The risen Christ, God's holy Son,
Who died a ruined world to save.

THE TOY-SELLER'S CHRISTMAS.

You would hardly fancy that selling Christmas gifts was an occupation to breed melancholy, and yet Simeon Golding had found it so. Ever since the rush began to buy presents he had grown more and more sad; until, when the 24th of December came, and all the world was out buying things for the morrow, he felt a desperate impulse to leave his shop to take care of itself, and go any somewhere, any where, to get out of the sight and sound of all this gladness in which he had no share. You would never have taken Simeon Golding for a man of sentiment—nobody thought that of him of all the people who had bought holiday presents for ten years in his gay little shop on Broadway. If people thought of him at all, it was as an honest, dull fellow, an obliging shopman, who minded his own business, and was pretty sure to have on hand just what any one wanted—sure, also, not to forget orders or disappoint customers. If you had told them that he was an old bachelor, very likely they would have smiled, and said, 'I thought so much. His whole mind is in his business, you see. That's what makes him so careful and punctual.—It's the best toy-shop in the city."

But for a man whose whole mind was in his business this mood of Simeon's was a strange one. He scarcely knew himself how it had grown on him so overmasteringly. He had always felt something of it at holiday time—just a sense of lonesomeness. It made him remember, you know, how solitary he was when he saw so many surprises prepared—so many tokens of thought and care for wives, and children, and husbands, and lovers—and remembered that for him no Christmas gifts would wait. No gentle woman's voice would ask him "Merry Christmas!" no clamorous children would throng round him with their noisy pleasure. But hitherto it had all ended so it had begun in this vague lonesomeness; the mood had never overpowered him as it had done this year, when the shop, with its noise, almost unequal to the demands upon him, and humiliating him in the eyes of his assistants, whom he had held in awe hitherto by his superior quickness and readiness. Is it, I wonder, that we feel the presence of Fate long before the startle breaks upon that vague hints of coming events are in the air, and the strange restlessness for which we can not account is the stirring of the soul at some presence felt ere yet it is seen?

Simeon Golding was past forty. Far back in the morning land of youth lay all his old dreams, and hopes, and loves. It was strange how near they had seemed to him this year since the preparations for Christmas commenced. He needed only to close his eyes on city sights, his ears on city sounds, to feel himself a boy once more. He lived all those early years over again—years in which he was the one joy and hope in life to his widowed mother. Then came one cared for him. Then no Christmas went by without its gifts. He remembered how the very thing he most wanted to come; and how he used to earn money by stealth to be able to give her some token of merry Christmas. He saw her, looking back, so plainly—that gentle woman to whom sorrow, patiently borne, had taught lessons of sainthood—saw her sitting by the fire with pale, placid face, and hair where grief, not years, had sown threads of silver; but yet, in spite of all, with a smile always bright for him, and a heart young enough and cheery enough always to joy in his joy. Oh! what would he give now for gentle woman's voice would wish him "Merry Christmas!" no clamorous children would throng round him with their noisy pleasure. But hitherto it had all ended so it had begun in this vague lonesomeness; the mood had never overpowered him as it had done this year, when the shop, with its noise, almost unequal to the demands upon him, and humiliating him in the eyes of his assistants, whom he had held in awe hitherto by his superior quickness and readiness. Is it, I wonder, that we feel the presence of Fate long before the startle breaks upon that vague hints of coming events are in the air, and the strange restlessness for which we can not account is the stirring of the soul at some presence felt ere yet it is seen?

Simeon Golding was past forty. Far back in the morning land of youth lay all his old dreams, and hopes, and loves. It was strange how near they had seemed to him this year since the preparations for Christmas commenced. He needed only to close his eyes on city sights, his ears on city sounds, to feel himself a boy once more. He lived all those early years over again—years in which he was the one joy and hope in life to his widowed mother. Then came one cared for him. Then no Christmas went by without its gifts. He remembered how the very thing he most wanted to come; and how he used to earn money by stealth to be able to give her some token of merry Christmas. He saw her, looking back, so plainly—that gentle woman to whom sorrow, patiently borne, had taught lessons of sainthood—saw her sitting by the fire with pale, placid face, and hair where grief, not years, had sown threads of silver; but yet, in spite of all, with a smile always bright for him, and a heart young enough and cheery enough always to joy in his joy. Oh! what would he give now for ene of those well-remembered smiles, "one touch of that gentle hand! He had been nearly twenty-five years old when she died; but just as much his mother's boy as the day his father had left him to her keeping. He wondered to feel the tears filling his eyes—eyes that wept so seldom—as the memory of that great loss swept over him: the still, still face; the dear, silent lips that would never utter another; the hands folded dumbly on the breast, like a saint's in some trance of prayer; and then the open grave, the lowered coffin, and the earth dropping on it solemnly, with the pale November sunshine overhead, and the dead leaves soaked with moisture at his feet.

It was a long dark day which followed that the son of his life arose, and he loved with the one pure and perfect passion of which his human nature was capable—the ripe fruit of his whole manhood. He remembered how he had seen her first—that girl to bright and so lovely. He recalled her pliant figure, her crimsoned kindly sometimes by an interior light, like the flame which glows through the heart of a rose; and the silver sheen which was full of a brooding melancholy that stirred his heart even more than their brightness. He remembered the dark and delicate complexion, with its rich, glowing coloring; the heavyfalling black hair; the bright, wayward face, with its full, pouting lips, and its expressive, soft eyes, that yet wonderfully beguiling. How well he had loved her, without one thought whether she could return the love. Looking back, he did not wonder at this love; nor was he sorry for it—all in vain as it had proved. She had rejected his suit, and married him but with an air and manner which made him feel how utterly impossible it was that she could care for him. And then he had gone away to that little country village, and had never gone back since, not even to look at his mother's grave. He had never, as a man, wanted in his heart, and all her truth and tenderness commemorated there as on a monument!

He had never heard about her any more—that bright enchantress of his young manhood! He had never cared to. If she loved and was happy, no one else otherwise he did not want to know it: and perhaps this way he had kept a purer faith with her.

Five years he had served in another man's toy-shop, and then he had opened this one of his own. Years, in this private goes, he had spent here. And now he was past forty, and all alone, and Christmas was coming on.

He had never cared for any woman since that dark, bright vision had dawned, star-like, in his sky, and was a stranger to his forces. A man is safe from any high-down notions of constancy or sentiment. He had not resolved never to love again—or, indeed, ever given it about it at all. Only, there was just one of these men whose nature never blossoms but once. So he looked forward to nothing—nothing, that is, beyond his present life. And when he looked at himself in the glass that morning, and noted how entirely white locks of his were mingled in the plain, rugged outlines of face and figure—and thought resignedly that he was good for at least twenty years more of hard work. He would have all the money he could, and then, when he died, give it to some one who needed it, whom it would make happy. So he would dispose of his wealth in his money sometimes with tender gratitude. Who these some should be he did not yet know. He would find out by-and-by. You see he was not a man of expansive benevolence, this toy-seller. He never made any large schemes. He contributed not one jot to missions, or tract societies, or hospitals. He dealt in small things always, and he just wanted to raise himself a moment by a strong sudden impulse of heart. And the day went on, the strange restlessness he could not shake off or overcome, and the load on the burden of his solitary life pressed upon him more heavily, and it was afternoon.

He was standing behind the counter, idle for a moment, though there was no lack of customers in the shop on whom the rest were waiting. He had forgotten when he was until a voice spoke to him:

"If you please, Sir, is there any thing pretty which I could buy for a quarter of a dollar?"

There was something in the voice which sounded to him like an echo of his dreams. He looked at the speaker and recollected who it was. But he was quite sure whether he were awake. Was he twenty-five years old again and in Hillsboro? Here were the same ringlicious eyes, the heavy-falling hair, the rich tints of cheek and lip that had lived all these years in his memory. But the figure was smaller. And in his comfort were rags, tags, bags, and the simplicity of childhood was in her look. Still he was almost calm in his surprise—thought, by the name of that early vision, the spirit of the past was so strong upon him. She repeated her timid question, and he bent toward her thoughtfully in possession of his faculties, alert to the demands of the occasion.

"Is it for yourself?" he asked.

"No, for my mother. She is very ill, and we have no money that I can spare except this, which is my own. I want to so make her a Christmas present. Is there any thing that I can buy?"

He had in her some children, and could name several times her quarter, but small and simple enough to convey to us undiscriminating child the idea of cheapness.

"Any of these you can buy," he said, kindly.

She selected a tiny Parian vase, just large enough for a single rose-bud, and gave him her purse of currency. He wrapped up the vase lingeringly in a soft paper. How dear she seemed to him, he thought, to like as she was to her! Then, too, perhaps he could help her. He gathered courage from the exigency of the situation.

"Did you say your mother was ill?" he asked.

"Very ill, Sir!"

"You have other friends, of course?" And then, seeing the surprised look on her face, he explained, "I don't think I'm curious or impertinent, only you are so like a very dear friend I had once that I can not bear to part with you if there is any chance, the least chance, that I could do you any good for the old friend's sake, you know—to make your Christmas any happier."

When the book was paid for, and the change, the impulsiveness which he found in himself still, this man of forty. The girl had an unusual amount of penetration for her years. She flashed a searching glance at him, and made up her mind that he was an honest and a good man, who meant just what he said—no less, no more.

"We have no friends," she said, slowly, "except the doctor, who comes to see my mother and is very kind. My father came to New York a year ago, to get into business, and died soon after. We have lived since then on the money he left us, and partly on what my mother earned by embroidery. Now, for several weeks, she has been too ill to work."

"Then may I come to see her? There might be some way in which I could help you, and I ask it could, for the sake of that dear friend who was so like you."

"Thank you, Sir. I know my mother will be glad to see you. You will find us at No. 31 Canal-street. My name is Lucy Ingram."

"I will come this evening," he said, as he handed her the little vase. "I will not be later than I can help it, but you know, we are very busy now."

She smiled with a bright smile, Marian Varick's own smile, and went out. That smile aroused him. He remembered himself. What connection was there likely to be between this unknown Mrs. Reynolds and the Marian Varick to whom he had been so good-by fifteen years ago, in that little New Hampshire town? And yet those eyes and that hair—were there more such? And the child said he did not feel so solitary any more. He had an interest now: he too. He began to serve customers briskly by and by. Then every thing

But at seven o'clock he left the shop. Never had he seen such a thing before as it ran commenced business as to have his shop to his subordinates on the night before Christmas. But, cautious man as he was, he felt easy to leave any power apart from himself so that he could not wait for the lagging hours. Arrangements were so well established that people whom he could trust were about him—went home for a hurried supper, a hurried change of costume, and would be back and took his way across the city. Twice he stopped, once at a bookseller's, where he bought an elegant volume—one he was to himself—a small, bound, full-looking man, whom no one suspected of delicacy, to make gifts out of his own shop—and once at a florist's, where he purchased the most exquisite rose-bud he could find. He stood in Corlaer-street, and rang the bell at the door of No. 31, and inquired for Mrs. Reynolds.

Two flights up—the back room, the woman's lower-voiced, civil; and he was to go there.

Before the door of the room he paused a moment, with that strange, overmastering feeling which seems to one sometimes to be the last crisis of life. He could scarcely breathe. He did not know what he expected. He was not sure that he could control him on. He knocked at the door at last, and the girl whom he had seen at his shop opened it. Standing there on the threshold she was like—not only—a woman's face on the pillows—a face with crimson flushes on the cheeks, with great, bright eyes, and a pretty, wavy-falling hair—Marian Varick's own. Her glance met his, and the color in her cheeks deepened.

"Are you the friend, Simeon Golding, whom God has raised up for me at my sore need? Have you forgiven me the pain I have caused you?"

"There was no need to forgive you, Marian," the man said, humbly—"no need. I was glad to have known what love I was even thought of, and in vain. I have never loved any one since, and I think God left me to fill my life with my work."

"It is indeed at last," she said, "for I am counting my life now by hours. The doctor said so this afternoon, when she gave me the last dose out;" and her fond eyes rested on the girl at her bed's foot. She knows it now, and she is trying to be calm and strong for my sake."

The toy-seller glanced at the stand beside the bed, and saw the little white vase on it. She had said dared keep it till the morning. He would remember for her mother there should be none. He took his rose-bud from its wrapping of soft paper, and put it into the vase silently. The book he would not offer—it was no time for Christmas tokens other than flowers. But he might have by would bloom in another world as well as in this. Mrs. Reynolds looked at the rose with eyes that had loved and wept, and turned to her left the face.

"It was so good of you to fetch it," she said. "It makes me think of Hillsboro. You used always to bring me roses there, you know."

Yes, he knew; but to him, seeing her so changed, it seemed ages since then. She understood his far away look.

"Yes, it was long since," she answered to his thought. "I have loved other things, and lost her, and now I am going home."

He wondered to see her so calm—to see the child so calm also—to be calm himself, when the only woman he had ever loved lay dying. It was God's grace, he thought, resting on the scene, hushing their three hearts.

"Has your child any friends?" he asked, after a while.

"Only you."

"Then there is no one to whom I need give her up. Think, if you could have loved me she might have been mine. Will you give her to me now? It will make amends for all the pain. I am able to care for her. I will be faithful to your trust."

"Yes, yours was always a faithful soul," she murmured. "Marian, child, will you go with Mr. Golding when I am gone?"

For a moment a great sob strangled the girl's utterance, but she conquered it bravely, and answered to the entreaty in her mother's eyes:

"Yes, mother."

Then they were all silent, and the moments went on so fast, so fast!

The hours passed from nine o'clock till midnight. Then came the mother spoke some word of fond, lingering love to her child, or of gratitude to her other watcher; but, for the most part, all was still. At last they heard the clock in a neighboring belfry strike, and the dying woman counted the twelve strokes. A smile flitted like the ghost of her old brightness across her face.

"See!" she said, "it is Christmas, and I give you another precious gift. From to-day Marian shall be your daughter."

He took in his the girl's hand, which those cold fingers placed there, and looked down at her mother's vow. From beneath the welfare of Marian Reynolds would be his life's end and aim. She would be to him in the place of his own children he was never to see at his fireside. Having her, he would not have lived in vain. She would be to him the lonely or solitary any more. For him, as for other men, Christmas would have a meaning. There would be one for him to whom he was happy—one to whom to toil, and save, and live, as die if need were—for it meant all this to that faithful, honest soul when he had lost his adopted child, his Christmas gift, from Marian Varick's dying hand.

At last the mother turned toward the morning. The keen, penetrating cold which just precedes the dawn chilled them. A faint pink began to flush the sky. It was reflected in the face with the crimson dying on her cheeks, the light fading from her eyes, and whispered to her child:

"Marian, I shall keep my Christmas with your father in the land of the angels. Good-by, my darling!" Then, after a moment, into Simeon Golding's eyes, and said with tones so low that he had to bend very near to catch them—"My friend, you have been faithful unto death."

And then the dawn light came in—"the morn of the Nativity and but upon to begin.

Marian Varick's mother was not the night lamp. When he came back to the bedside he saw the eyes from which the light had departed, the head fallen, falling dumbly, and knew that Marian Varick, in the hush of the Christmas dawning, had gone home, and left her the Heavenly morning" had just begun to break.

THE LESSON OF SANTA CLAUS.

A society man was Mr. Acidger Krabb, and a discontented. Whether he had placed both reliance and money had depreciated; taxes were increased; business was almost at a stand-still; the banks were shrinking, and debtors procrastinating; altogether, Mr. Krabb was, as considered himself, a victim of circumstances and man. To be sure, he still had an income adequate to the support of his family in a luxurious style; but was not that income liable to the same depreciation from percentage? He owned sundry lots in desirable situations, whose value was more than quadrupled since he got them; but then, did not the rise of real estate entail a proportionate increase of assessments?

A wood-sawyer was Mr. Acidger Krabb, and discontented; and more moody and discontented than was his wont he sat, one Christmas-eve, before a full glow, at a sullen protest against the coming at all in such companionship, and divers other unseasonable matters, of his children, and astounded themselves from between the grate-bars in mute but forcible objurgation. The shadows flung by the fire-glow up their fleckering holiday dance and ranged themselves around the walls like grim black sentinels, standing guard against the entrance of any cheerful and spiteful little imps. The daughts flitted in at the crevices of the doors and windows, and perched on the volumes that filled Mr. Krabb's cabinet, and crawled down the back of his neck, and climbed up the legs of his trousers, and permeated himself with his cast-down spirits, while their present wind raged outside as of too great bulk to enter bodily.

To look at his fire showed no bright pictures of Cr. tmas merriment, no sliding panorama of Christ. was frolicsome in many houses; for him the fire-glow only seemed like a cold heart.

Mr. Krabb's mood was not improved by the noise of his children, taken place about him—was conscious, moreover, of a change operating within himself, but to name it man too timid yet in his ways to yield without a struggle: so altera pause he turned to Saint Nicholas with an air of reminiscence and said:

"All this may be very true, your Reverence; but if a man be oppressed by business cares—if C. enemy of character and reputation have carried him from those family associations on which you laid such stress—if his experience have justified him in forming an unfavorable estimate of mankind—if, in a word, years of anxious struggling against an unyielding world have worn out his disposition—how can he of a sudden throw off the habits of a lifetime and assume the sentiments you would inculcate?"

"By casting aside his overriding selfishness and thinking of others; by dwelling rather upon the blessings he enjoys than any fancied causes for repining; by prayerful earnestness of thought to open a Bank of Good-Will for Jesus," replied the Saint, laying his hand on Mr. Krabb's heart.

At the instant of the Saint's touch Mr. Krabb felt a quick and unusual warmth within his breast, which gradually spread a genial glow over every portion of his frame, and tingled to the very ends of his benumbed fingers; and it was with an almost penitential accent that he said:

"Upon my word, Sir, I believe you're right."

"Believe it?" said Santa Claus. "I know it: and so will you if you will but try the experiment. This is what a lucky fellow you are, Mr. Krabb!—and he's the good Saint's voice trembled—"that the distress and homeless misery of Christmas Eve of the bourbs made desolate by death; of letters homesteads and extinguished fires, and by grateful that no great evil has befallen you in the past, and that it has pleased Heaven to intrust you with the means of lightening the burdens of some at least of your fellow-creatures.

"But, Sir," expostulated Mr. Krabb, "in one to-day's times these, is not a man to provide for his family? It is all very well to talk of lightening other's burdens, but you know the proverb says that 'charity begins at home,' and I must beg to listen to all the appeals—"

"Hold your tongue, Krabb!" interrupted the Saint, somewhat irritably, "at Christmas time we want no meaty proverbs to excuse our egotism; but loving inquiries direct from the heart. I have no time to waste in further discussion; but, before I go, I wish to show you a few pictures, for which I crave your careful attention." As he spoke he waved his hand toward the large mirror which surmounted the mantle-piece.

All at once the face sank to a faint blue light and emitted dense wreaths of smoke which veiled the surface of the glass. When these clouds rolled away, Mr. Krabb beheld a cheerless attic, devoid of furniture, and offering, through broken window-panes and crannied roof, free entrance to the wintry blast. Three shivering children were huddled together on the bare floor in one corner, and near them crouched a haggard, weary looking woman, illumined by the dim light of one poor candle, upon some coarse piece of needle-work. As Frozen Face looked on, he watched again her benumbed fingers, or held them over the candle's flame to revive their sense of touch; and how and again she turned her head to extend the trembling little ones, and her breast heaved with a sobbing sigh, and tears coursed down her pinched and hollow cheeks and fell upon her work.

A soldier's widow, Krabb," whispered the Saint. "Her husband was killed in battle about a year ago, but the three years of his enlistment had expired a week or so before his death, and the proverbial gratitude of our grateful Republic leaves her to starve."

While Mr. Krabb listened and gazed upon the picture that where Saint Nicholas had touched him began to burn with more intensity, and as the warmth increased he saw the door of the stretched room open and another figure appear upon the scene. This figure—the exact counterpart of himself, save to a certain indefinable expression of benevolence—advanced toward the weeping woman, and seemed to utter words of consolation and sympathy for she looked up with an air of grateful surprise then hastily putting on her bonnet she left the room in company with her visitor. Not for long, however; in a few moments the stranger returned with warm clothing for the children, and followed by a man who carried a great basket, which being produced apparently inexhaustible stores of bread and meat, of vegetables, of tea and sugar, of all necessities, and even a few luxuries. Mr. Krabb's eyes devoured him, he had seen upon the backs of his own children garments very similar to those now judgingly handled in the attic, and even now by the bearer of that hamper were striking resemblance to his own countenance. He had no time to dwell upon these points, for the busy action of the talisman absorbed all his attention. The happy mother was hurrying in and out of the room bringing an armful of wood, now a basket of coals; and appearing with a few necessary cooking utensils: then hunting over the long-discarded articles, until at last a crackling fire was kindled, and the kettle set on to boil, and a table—which the bearer of the per-bearer had with much labor persuaded up the narrow stairs—spread with an abundant meal. And then to the utter wondering eyes of the children for they were roused to behold this magnificent feast, and to exchange their weary rags for comfortable attire! In sight of their eager anticipations, Mr. Krabb fairly laughed aloud with glee; but when, before partaking of the bounteous meal the family knelt, the little group knelt down and with clasped hands and upturned eyes seemed to invoke God's blessing upon their benefactor—oh, how the spectator melted in! So turned that hot tears rose to Mr. Krabb's eyes and dimmed their sight—tears, not of pain or sorrow, but of heart-felt joy and sympathy.

"Brave, Krabb!" exclaimed Saint Nicholas, as he must passed over the glass and effaced the picture. "Brave, Krabb! I knew you had better stuff in you than you gave yourself credit for. It was, Krabb, even and disinterested their sights—tears, not of pain or sorrow, but of heart-felt joy and sympathy.

"But, your Reverence," said Mr. Krabb, with a lingering tremor in his voice, "I have done a very thing. I—I wish I had, Sir. But then, you know, it wasn't really I who—"

"No matter for that at present, Krabb," broke in the Saint. "The mirror showed the promptings of your heart, and so long as you had the means will to do good the benefit to you is the same. Let us see anon her picture."

Again a breath swept over the mirror, and as its surface cleared Mr. Krabb saw the interior of a plainly-furnished room, scrupulously neat, but telling in its every detail that it was the abode of poverty between respectability and want. A chubby infant was sleeping in its crib beside the bed, and a child sitting near it with her work was a young and pretty woman, who from time to time cast tender glances of maternal pride and affection upon the slumbering charge. She appeared to be waiting anxiously for some one, for her eyes were often turned toward the door, and she started at the sound of footsteps on the stair. After a while her quick ear appeared to caught the anticipated sound, and flinging aside her work she ran to meet the embrace of a man who threw open the door and stood with outspread arms to catch her in her bounding career. Motioning him to silence she led him on tip-toe to where their child lay, and as he stooped to kiss the pallid brow she watched him with a beaming smile that spoke of a wife's and mother's love fulfilled almost to overflowing. The husband seated themselves side by side upon the rickety couch, and it seemed that she was questioning him concerning some matter which he was passing pieces across his face and he shook his head sadly.

"Your own nephew, Krabb," remarked Santa Claus: "your own flesh and blood, and all on account of his imprudent marriage. The poor fellow has had hard work of it these two years to keep up appearances on his small salary; and his wife is forced to take in sewing to eke out their little income. He has been unsuccessful in getting out West, but after a weary journey was doomed to disappointment.

Mr. Krabb's internal heat had been increasing to that extent during the progress of this scene that he felt as if his former self were being sublimated by some spiritual process. Nevertheless he met with a sense of relieved impatience that he saw the door again open, and his nephew enter the room after with a letter which she handed to the husband. Even at that distance Mr. Krabb saw that the superscription was in the well-known hand of his own, the bulk of the missive betokened an inclosure, and when his nephew drew forth from the envelope with trembling hands a roll of bank-notes, he uttered a loud exclamation, and when he saw clasped about his neck, and heard the words of thankful paying letter; and when, its perusal finished, she buried her face in the innermost recesses of his waistcoat, and sobbed for very joy, Mr. Krabb and Mr. Krabb could no longer contain himself, but started from his chair with a cheery "Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!" and Saint Nicholas laughed.

"Was it an invitation to your Christmas dinner, Krabb?" asked the Saint.

"No, your Reverence," rejoined Mr. Krabb, "only in the picture, though, you know, but, please God, I'll make it such before twenty-four hours."

"Well said, my son." And now for one more glimpse into the future to strengthen your good resolves."

The mirror showed a spacious apartment brilliantly lighted and richly furnished. Costly wines, fruits, the carpet, the furniture, were those of Mr. Krabb's own house, but so transformed by an all-pervading spirit of domestic comfort and elegance as he almost doubted their identity. In the middle of the floor was a gorgeous Christmas-tree, radiant with many-hued lamps and glittering with gilded and tinseled notices on every bough. Circling round this in running pursuit were numerous children, whose merry shouts lead the latter branches marked time gayly. In an easy-chair, at one side of the fireplace, was Mr. Krabb's brother, with his wife beside him, and with whitened hair and bowed shoulders, but with a joyous quirk in every wrinkle, which showed that his heart had not grown old. Around him the sports of his little guests. Facing him, in corresponding confidential chair, was Mr. Krabb's own sweetheart smile, and her head nodding in entranced accompaniment to the music of the dance. Occasionally some boisterous romp, in the excitement of the boisterous exercise, would clamber on the old man's knee and nestle closely there to listen to a chronicle of his feats of his youth. Then the folding-doors flew open and revealed a long vista of supper-table, gleaming with bright silver and cut crystal, and rich in evergreens and many-colored flowers. Steaming tureens of oysters were flanked by roasted fowls, and by smoking sirloins and by ice-cream reared their snowy summits above the plenty of the plain. Nor were there wanting frosted cakes and sugar-plums and bon-bons temptingly pulling crackers, to be exploded with timid fingers and with merry laughs and mingled screams of pleasure.

Elegant trophies of candied fruit to be demolished and carried off piecemeal by sticky hands.

Then the company which had concluded their games with a shout and clustered around the table, the grown-up members of the party seemed to strive in thoughtful attention to the old couple by the fireside, serving them with the choicest delicacies of the feast, and pledging them with words and looks of love and respect.

While yet Mr. Krabb's fascinated gaze was intent upon this picture of home, a change began to come, commenced to fade, growing fainter and fainter as he strained his eyes to catch their last impression, until finally the mirror showed no vestige of their tracery. He turned to where his visitor had been, but Saint Nicholas was gone; and he found himself again alone. Alone, yet with a sense of human companionship such as he had never experienced before, and with a feeling of love for all mankind, even among his fellow-men. In pleasant communion with the new thoughts and impulses that rose within him the time passed swiftly by, and it was not long ere his breast and he went into a tranquil sleep.

When he awoke next morning the sun was streaming brightly through the window. He leaped from his snug cracking merrily beneath the feet of early passers-by. A round of jubilant exultation greeted his ears as his children discovered the wealth of playthings wherewith good Santa Claus had stuffed their stockings, but he could also hear their mother's voice in moderating remonstrance lest they "should disturb papa." Herein Mr. Krabb in his changed nature took positive umbrage, and hastening up stairs with a buoyant step, called out,

"Come here, you young rogues! and kiss your father for Merry Christmas! and he will not be cross as much noise as you like. The cause to you, my dear!" he continued, kissing his astonished wife with a hearty kiss, "and may we all live to see many of 'em!"

Breakfast over—and what a jolly breakfast it was!—Mr. Krabb's first proceeding was to write a letter to his nephew inclosing a check drawn to the order of Edgar Somerset, Esquire, and then bidding him and his wife to come to dinner that day at five and bring the baby. Several other notes were indited and dispatched; and then Mr. Krabb started forth upon a mysterious pilgrimage.

His first visit was to the nursery to recount at length how Mr. Krabb found out only one, but several poor widow's, to whom his visits brought relief and happiness. Into a fit last night's warm glow he opened up little children were taught to thank and pray for him for the good he had done them; and home at dinner-time, flushed with exercise and exhilarate by his success, he found assembled relatives all on the best of terms with each other, and who greeted him with cordial fervor as he gave them hearty welcome. Then Charles and his pretty wife were there, forgetful of past bitterness, and how baby, declared by Mrs. K. to be the finest baby she ever saw, and Mr. Krabb's sweetheart in eagerness at him fore its mother's lap, and, failing an olive branch, offered him, as a token of peace and future amity, a wooden thing to play with. How it was then and there settled that the christening should take place in that very room, with Mr. and Mrs. Krabb as sponsors—how joyful, how glorious, hilarious all—it was further arranged that Charles should succeed Mr. Krabb in the junior partner. Suffice it to say that from that day forth Mr. Krabb had an altered life—that this love levels had no more room in his heart—that each night, when he laid his head upon his pillow, he thanked God and Saint Nicholas that he had been taught the blessed meaning of a MERRY CHRISTMAS.

A. L. C.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"MERRY CHRISTMAS to all, and to all a good time!" is our cordial greeting Broadway, and all the shopping streets, have become crowded with people. The ladies and foremost (as becomes Christmas), straining out upon the sidewalk, and gorgeous boas of red, yellow, and blue, in every conceivable shape, covering their necks and shoulders. It were impolitic to specify articles. Only let every body spin their eyes in the direction of the windows of the fancy-fal industries that come with the holidays.

The 25th of December is the anniversary of the birth of Christ, has long been celebrated, not only by religious ceremonies, but by popular festivities of the most joyous kind. In other parts of Europe, the commencement of the day began the evening before. The house was decked with holly, ivy, bays, and other evergreens. Mistletoe also—we have lighted. An enormous log, called the Yule log or Christmas block, was put on the fire. The larder was filled with "every thing and more:"

"Then spread wide the baron's hall
To vassal, serf, and all."

The high and low met on terms of equality; and

"A Christmas gambol oft would cheer
A poor man's heart through half the year."

During the night parties of singers went through the village, "waits" as they were called, playing and singing over-commenced in the churches; the bells pealed forth their merry chimes. Ah! what a world of merriment and mirthfulness there was! This was the commencement of a festival lasting many days.

Although Christmas in America can have lost their primitive character, and the rough merry-making of olden time has passed away, a great deal remains that enriches the day, and it is anticipated as a joyous occasion.

The German custom of making Christmas a "children's festival," and of decking it with a Christmas-tree, with wondrous fruits, is too pretty not to be popular. Somewhere in the city is established a visible Santa Claus, who, in huge cast, with pockets all puffed out, comes before the eager little eye, staggering under the burden of gifts. A tall evergreen tree is the bearing of these bags. How the little ones enjoy the mystery—half real and sometimes half pretended—of it all! When a merry, confined time hanging the stockings! How they go to bed over-excited! How they forget! How the bright little eyes keep unbottoming after they go to bed, until told that Santa Claus never comes until children are all asleep! What a delicious sleep it is! How soon the bleeding of St. Nicholas with pops or moment!

Last the children are ushered every time between the branches of the Christmas-tree. Take them out to see the beautiful things that adorn our shop windows, which are now in holiday attire. Let them have their fun, their little questions, and wait to buy every thing—but a little management will enable you to make your purchases without an little cost, if needful. As for those not children in years making with the children, bring to religious services, make them joyous and youthful, as mingling merrily in the pastimes of the little ones.

There is pretty custom among the Norwegians of giving a dinner to the birds on Christmas-day. In the morning every poor person, and every rich one who remembers a stand of corn, fixed on the top of a long pole, from which it is intended the birds shall make their dinner. Even this seasonable attention does not make a hard time for the poor, and what the birds do not eat on Christmas-day remains for them through the winter. In our city we have not gentlemen and women, would be grateful for a similar remembrance.

The present prospect is that skating will be fine during the holidays. Winter has fully come—the ice is thickening—the electric pavilion is in good order—boys are impatiently scattering on the prospect, and children of larger growth are getting their skates ready. Skates, of every kind, are in request in the shop windows.

As New-Years Day is fast approaching, ladies will want to find something "new" to say to their friends. There are new styles enough—whether they are simple enough to be truly elegant we leave our fair readers to judge—or whether they are not to be left to the gentlemen. We give a few descriptions of Parisian styles:

A dress of violet silk ornamented with a trimming of white lace over a band of velvet; the corsage is sleeves have a fringe of black and white gimlets. A more simple style of dress is that for a robe of this color would be a flounced band of silk to the edge, edged with black and gold lace, and put on three rows of it in the form of a tunic. The waistband of black and gold is trimmed to correspond, and a belt of the same is fastened with a handsome gold buckle.

A robe worn by a young lady is of white silk, with a wreath of leaves round the bottom, over the skirt is a tunic of white tulle, trimmed with a fringe of the same color, and open at the front to show the petticoat. The corsage is low in front and behind, but has tulle sleeves, which are confined at the wrist by a band of velvet, and cuffs puffing partially concealed with a network of white tulle. The hair is dressed in front in the Grecian style, and is set open as far as the loose, and again pulled up with a bow on the back of the head. The bow is of white velvet, edged with a network and fringe of white tulle. The sleeves consist of a full puffing of white tulle with a rosebud of black velvet between each puffing.

Here is a nice legal point to be decided—are they married or not married? A London paper says:

"While a couple were being married in Preston Church the other morning, the mother of the young lady, who was present, fell down in a fit and died immediately after the wedding. The officiating minister at once stopped the service, and the bridegroom hastened away to procure a doctor.

With this ring I thee wed," declared that no legal marriage had taken place. Since then, however, the matter has been considered, and it was found that the ring and the unanimous decision they arrived at was that the couple had been properly and lawfully married according to the rites of the Church. The point is a very ticklish one, and will probably have to be settled in the law courts.

The manager of some pieces of amusement in London has had an original idea. His complimentary tickets are after the fashion of the railway season tickets—entitling the bearer on a set evening. He says it will positively be refused admittance on a fine evening, as every inch of space is then required for the paying visitors who have always been entitled. The large hall presents to the eye an array of ladders, bars, ropes, and nets, which to the uninitiated it is hopelessly bewildering. Every evening commences at eight o'clock in the evening, when the classes commence, in a most substantial and practical manner. Here you see the full-bodied athletes, with iron muscle and unflinching nerve absorbed in every conceivable feat of strength, and there elsewhere, and all performing some feat of grace or strength. There are day classes for ladies and children, which promise to be very successful.

WASHINGTON MARKET IN CHRISTMAS-TIME.

In connection with the Birth-Feast of Him whom the Jews despised as one who came "eating and drinking" (even as he could not have come else in the emphasis which is laid by all good Christians upon the Christmas Dinner and the elements of its composition), we think this view may be fitly appropriate the illustrations which we give on page 828 of Washington Market at its Christmas-time.

It can not be denied that we have the best markets in the world, at least as regards the main objects of a market—namely, its plentiful supply and distribution of the most fastidious and dainty of human appetites, although our market buildings and their surroundings are not to be boasted of. That is no respect are we dependent upon any other country for the choicest of our home supplies, though for we except the single article of wine. The finest quality of salmon is obtained in abundance from our North-Eastern rivers. The East River and Staten Ferry oysters are probably superior to any obtained in European markets, and our venison and other game is of the finest flavor. Our fruits, both green and dry and poultry are more abundant and of better quality. The New York Central Railroad Company, in particular, has greater facilities for obtaining every kind of provision, and in quantities that surfeit the demand. The Hudson River Railroad, also, is well known that it not unfrequently happens that the people of neighboring towns go to New York to buy their every provisions which those towns have themselves contributed. During the Holidays especially the amount of game and poultry which flows into New York markets in a single day is almost incalculable: it can only be estimated by the millions. Of course, the supply of fish, game and other cattle is in proportion. During the week ending Dec. 26th, 1863, there were received in New York nearly 7000 beeves, about 27,000 sheep, and as many swine.

Of our large market, the Washington Market is the oldest. Its first charter bears the date of 1686 —a hundred years before the era of our independence, and long before the birth of Washington, from whom it was afterward named. At that time, of the markets now existing, there was only the Fly Market, on the Governeur. In 1855 the estimated value of Washington Market was $80,000.

MERRY
ULYSSES TH

TO ALL
GIANT KILLER

THE HOLLY-TREE BOUGH.

HOLLY, in the warmth of the summer-sunshine,
To wander alone in the sweet leafy bowers;
But I love in this season to mingle the glow
Of social delight 'neath the green holly boughs.

Then gather it quickly, the berries and sprays,
And hang it up high on this festival day;
Let wine, mirth, and music, unitedly flow,
All soberly, under the green holly bough.

THE YARD OF BRAID.

SOMEWHERE in Broadway, but Dame Trot could neither tell you what street or what number, lived a hose-shored, dingy li the shop—and now I see you have taken me up short, and send it that Dame Trot is an old woman. Not a bit of it. Between Dame and Madam, this last September; a slender little woman, with a fresh color, brave eyes, and that quick curls that have a bewitching air of having combed themselves in spite of her, and of doing it beautifully; and that is one of the few women that let foolish hand-mirrors alone. Her name is Nellie; and to commence my story rightly, it was twelve o'clock Christmas eve. John was asleep, and very sad thing that could have come into his dreams was that his wife was sticking at that hour; so what Dame Trot was at full liberty to flourish the dressing-gown complete, minus one yard of braid, under his unconscious nose, as perfectly fit for which John had wished, but which, not being the Prodigal Son, he had no thought of bestowing on himself; and a thing of dissatisfaction to John, and if she could have hung on the tree also a certain black and white plaid shawl and velvet cap for herself, why then Nellie would have had her heart's desire, and gone to bed the most contented little woman in New York city. The yard of braid for the gown she store are open early on Christmas morning, and to stitch that on was not ten minutes' work. The real difficulty would be to excuse herself to John for leaving him on a holiday; and events smoothed that away; for after breakfast on Christmas morning John, with a very visible embarrassment and hesitation,

"I am going out for a while, Nell. I have an engagement." And John, who never had an engagement without her, John who did nothing without telling her, this John went out without further explanation.

Now was the time for the braid, and a quick run down to the little dressing-store at the corner. But Mrs. Nellie was pursued all the way by a sense of discomfiture and wonder, which so preoccupied her that she asked for a very different-sounding article of braid, and coming out, had very nearly stumbled on John himself. John did not see her, but was tangled in a sort of struggle all trying to get over the cross-walk at exactly the same time; and owing to this tangle she could not tell, but it seemed to her clear of it, and passed her, quite unconscious of her, and saying with a light laugh, "I told my style that I had an engagement." That he had, poor John. Oh, John! only two years married, and—

"She is not pretty, either," said Nellie, looking after the trim waist and the jaunty little round hat. "That color is paint, and as bold as you please! Oh, John! that I should live to see it!"

She was standing the while on the door-step of the little store, behind a string of calico and handkerchief-dangling from the door, and she stepped down a woefully thin hand, a child's hand, took hold of her dress.

"I say, missus, where is he? Does you know where he be?" asked the child, a ragged creature. I mean by that her garment, a dingy-colored flannel order that ecth children always wear, was so miserably rent in waist and skirt that you could see her thin shoulder-blades and her poor little body through a gash, half-starved child, shivering with cold, and with the unmistakable expression of one that is used to blows and curses.

"Where is he?" repeated the child; "Sant Claus, I means—him as has the work to offer, as you familiar." the one what brings broken dolls to children. There he some such one. Pull said on; I've been three ounces down the alley. Perhaps 'ouse-there's rich lots of us; but if I find him noble I'd get shoes or a doll; wouldn't I!

"If you have any pair that you could" cried Nellie, forgetting to watch John and the round had around the corner. "Where you come from?"

"Drunk!" answered the child, indifferently.

"Oh!" gasped Dame Trot, "where is your father, then?"

"Drunk! they're all drunk, I tell you, returned the child, with the same indifference. "Don't you know where babies come? Do you think I could fetch him?"

"I think I can," said Nellie, taking the little claw-like hand in her own. "Do you come home with me, and more than likely we'll find shoes and a doll, and perhaps something else besides."

Just then, "Bless my soul!" cried some one behind them, "Mrs. Sweetly! Merry Christmas to you, and how do you do?" This was a smirk, somewhat hard-looking man, with his arm full of bundles; Mr. Calsten, who was busy as much at Christmas he could be had for money, and was taking it home.

"I am late in the day, Nellie—I mean Mrs. Sweetie," said Calsten, who had once been sweet on Nellie, very sweet, in answer to her astonished look at him and the bundles she faced about. "The fact is, I forget about Christmas till my wife made a row this morning about Harry's empty stockings; all well with you, I suppose?"

"Very well," answered Nellie, nervously. She always had a lingering suspicion that Calsten was sweet on her yet.

"And the little Sweetie—how's—didn't mean a pun—on my honor! or is it a she? Come to think of it, suppose you give him or her this; Harry has more than is good for him—or I am—having a doll, with a wreath on its head, tucked up in a bedstead, under a blue silk coverlet, into her arms. "Good-by! Oh, I say! you pull something or other, and it will say papa or mamma; I forget; but you'll find out. Good-by."

"Well, now," said Mistress Nellie, looking first after him and then down at the doll, with a laugh; "what will John say to that, I wonder?" and there is three words; her unhappiness, that she had for a moment forgotten, was back upon her. John displeased, John cross, John laughing over it! How was that to be believed?—and yet she had heard him. The cheery Christmas morning had turned out, with the wind and a pelting rain driving sleet; but Dame Trot walked slowly. She was in no hurry to get home before John. She had the heart, just then, to have sewed the braid on before his eyes, and let him find out for himself for what purpose she had so unnecessarily disgruntled that he was! If she had been Mrs. Calsten, as she might have been, and ridden in her own coach, she couldn't have driven faster. She have needed to stint herself in beef-steak and sugar for a month to come to make up the money for the once set ashore, that was nobody's business but their own. Perhaps it might be worth while to make inquiry at the passport office, or the English Consulate. He should do so himself if he were looking after any friend of his own.

So Saxon thanked the fat Englishman for his advice, and went to the Consulate. The Consul advised him to go to the Prefet, and the Prefet, after keeping him for more than an hour in a dismal waiting-room, referred him to the Superintendent of the city police. This functionary, a busy, inquisitive, self-important personage, entered Saxon's name in a big book, promised that he would communicate with the authorities of the nearest office, and desired Monsieur to call again to-morrow between two and four.

Then the day dragged slowly by, and when at night he laid his weary head upon the pillow Saxon felt as if he were farther off than ever from success.

The next day, Saturday, was spent in the same unsatisfactory way. He wasted all the forenoon in hunting up one Philip Erlesmith, the name of the Daughter of Ocean, who was lodging at a little modest boarding-house on the opposite shore of the river. This Erlesmith at once remembered to have seen William Trefalden and Helen Riviere among the passengers. They had been in deep mourning. They landed with the others at the Quai Louis Philippe. He had never spoken to either, and knew nothing further about their destination. This was all that he had to tell.

Then Saxon went back to the quays, and inquired about the steamers that would sail next week for New York. He found that none had left Bordeaux since the Daughter of Ocean had come into port, and that the first departure would take place on the following Tuesday. By the time that these facts were ascertained it was late enough to go to the superintendent's office. There, however, he was requested to call again to-morrow, the police having as yet been unable to come at any satisfactory results. The vagueness of this statement, and the air of polite indifference with which it was conveyed to him by a bland official in the outer office, convinced Saxon that it was little to expect success from the hot his own unaided efforts. That night, having eaten only moderately until the excitement about the quays and streets and public offices of Bordeaux, he lay down to rest, almost in despair.

CHAPTER XCI.

SAXON STRIKES THE TRAIL IN A FRESH PLACE.

"WILL Monsieur have the goodness to write his name in the visitors' book?"

Saxon had finished his solitary breakfast and was looking dreamily out of the window of the salle-à-manger when these bland words fell upon his ear, and he turned and preferred the stereotyped request. Scarcely glancing at the motley signatures with which the page was nearly filled, the young man scrawled his own.

"Tres!" said the waiter, as Saxon completed the entry with various headings, "Monsieur is Swiss?"

"I am. What of it?"

"Nothing, Monsieur — except that Monsieur speaks with the purity of a Frenchman. There is a Swiss Protestant chapel in Bordeaux, if Monsieur would wish to attend the service."

A new possibility suggested itself to Saxon's mind.

"Is there any English Protestant chapel?" he asked, quickly.

"Mais, certainement, Monsieur. On the Pavé des Chantrons. One may see it from this window."

And the waiter pointed out a modest white building, about a quarter of a mile away.

Saxon's hope abounded with bounds renewed. The English Protestant chapel! What more likely than that Helen should find her way there on her sunny Sunday morning? What more probable than that the English chaplain should be able to help her? How did she know to turn not to think of this before? Finding that it yet wanted nearly two hours to the time when service would be held, and that the chapel was not to be seen by Saxon went at once to wait upon him. An old woman, however, opened the door to him, and informed him with many courtesies, that her master was absent for six week's vacancy, and that a strange gentleman had undertaken his duty in the mean while. As for the strange gentleman's name, she had not the remotest idea of it. It was "quelque Anglais—un nom extraordinaire difficile."

"If you will direct me where to find him," said Saxon, "I can dispense with his name."

"Mon Dieu, Monsieur, he is staying at Drouny!"

"Where, then, is Drouny?"

"Ah, c'est loin, M'sieur."

"What do you mean by far? How far?"

"More than two leagues, M'sieur. But he will be here to perform the service at half past ten, and Monsieur can see him if he is so early."

Forced to contain himself with this prospect, Saxon then chatted a while with the garrulous old femme de chambre, and learned that Drouny was a little village in the heart of the wine-country north of Bordeaux; that the strange clergyman, being a delicate health, was staying at the old the vintage-time should come round and enable him to enjoy the benefit of the grape-cure; that her own master was the best man in the world; that the chapel was très bâtie; that the attendance at this season was very scanty; that the voluntary contributions were much less than they should be, and so forth, till he succeeded in effecting his escape.

At length half past ten o'clock came round. His thoughts were busy with the things of the world, and he felt that he had no power to abstract them. He felt that he could no more lay down his burden upon this sacred day than he ought to lay it down than he could lay down his personality; so he remained outside the door and watched the congregation passing in. But he watched in vain. Among the women came no Helen Riviere—among the men no William Trefalden. By-and-by he heard the psalm-singing through the half-opened windows, and now and then a faint echo of the voice of the preacher. Although, after a service that seemed to him as if it would never end, the worshipers came out again and went their several ways, Helen entered Saxon's name in a big book, promised was not among them.

A fragile-looking young man of about six or seven and twenty received him politely, pointed to a seat, and begged to know in what manner he could have the pleasure of being useful to him.

Saxon had no difficulty in telling his story. He had told it so often, and always with the same reserves on one or two points, that he was come to his lips with the readiness of an established formula.

He was in search of two friends who, he had reason to believe, had lately arrived in Bordeaux. His gentleman was a stranger to them in person, and he was intimately acquainted with the family of the lady. Her name was Riviere. She was about seventeen or eighteen years of age, and dressed in deep mourning. He was the bearer of very important intelligence, and had travelled from England solely in order to find friends, if only he were so fortunate as to obtain some definite information concerning them. He then he concluded with an apology for the trouble that he was giving, and the time that his nurse's eye occupied in the task.

The clergyman, sitting with one hand over his mouth, and his eyes fixed attentively upon the ground, heard him to the end without, in a very quiet clear voice, said,

"Will you tell me with your name?"

"Certainly. My name is Trefalden."

"Is Trefalden also the name of your relative?"

Saxon hesitated.

"I do not think that he is traveling under that name," he replied, with some embarrassment.

"Do you mean, Mr. Trefalden, that your friend is traveling under an assumed name?"

"I mean—that is, I believe—he is traveling under the name of Forsyth."

The clergyman pressed his fingers nervously against his lips.

"A strange coincidence," he said.

"If you know any thing, for Heaven's sake do not hesitate to tell it!" cried Saxon, impetuously.

"I am bound to hesitate," replied the clergyman. "I do not know what your relation may be—"

"If it be your duty to help the helpless and baffle the unrighteous, you ought—believe me, sir, you ought to tell me!"

The young clergyman looked at him fixedly and after a moment's pause, replied,

"I do not know you, Mr. Trefalden. I also believe that I am engaged to marry those two persons mentioned in Drouny."

Saxon changed color, opened his lips as if about to speak, checked himself, stood up and sank down again. Then he said, in a low deep voice,

"I am glad to find that I am in time."

"To be present at their wedding?"

"No—to prevent it."

The clergyman looked as if he had half-anticipated this reply.

"If I am to refuse to perform the ceremony, Mr. Trefalden, you must give me with an adequate reason," said he.

Saxon was nearly tried between his desire to screen the good Trefalden name and the obvious necessity for stating his case plainly.

"If plain and unvarnished truth be said, presently, "will you promise not to betray it?"

"Unquestionably."

Saxon looked at him as if he would fain read his very heart.

"You are an utter stranger to me," he said, "but I think you are a man of honor. I will trust you."

And then, having looked out into the chapel and seen that there was no one within hearing, Saxon sat down and related all the story of his cousin's perfidy.

CHAPTER XCII.

MR. GUTHRIE'S TESTIMONY.

THE clergyman's names was Guthrie. He was lodging at the house of a widow, in the parish of Drouny, as the old femme de charge had said, for his health's sake, and, according to the statement which he gave in return for Saxon's confidence, a gentleman came out from Bordeaux to visit him in the evening of the forthcoming Wednesday—i. e., the evening of the very day that the Daughter of Ocean landed her passengers at the Quai Louis Philippe. This gentleman said that his name was Forsyth. The object of his visit was to request Mr. Guthrie to perform the ceremony of marriage between himself and a lady then staying at the Hotel de Nantes in Bordeaux. The lady was engaged to marry them on the Saturday, and this matter disposed of, Mr. Forsyth, who was a remarkably agreeable person, made some pleasant remark about Drouny, and asked if there were any apartments to be had in the neighborhood. He then added that the lady whom he was about to make his wife had lately lost a near relative, and would be glad to escape from the noise and bustle of Bordeaux to so retired a spot. Mr. Guthrie then volunteered to accompany him to a little chateau near by, which was to be let furnished, and Mr. Forsyth engaged the first-floor on the spot. There was not any difficulty about the matter, as the proprietaire was unwilling to let any part of his house for less than one month; but Mr. Forsyth, who was apparently as rich as he was agreeable, offered a fortnight's rent in advance, and promised that, although the lady would probably not remain there more than a week, the whole month should be paid if her occupation of the rooms caused Monsieur le proprietaire to lose a more advantageous tenant. The next morning he escorted Miss Riviere to the chateau, handed her out of the carriage, rolls, and having introduced her to Mr. Guthrie, and recommended her to that gentleman's attention and solicitude, he leave.

Mr. Guthrie had at that time no idea that his new acquaintances had only arrived in Bordeaux that day, as they had actually landed at Drouny from England. He first learned these facts from Miss Riviere herself, on exceedingly excited when she further informed him that they were about to proceed to New York by the next steamship. He remonstrated. If Miss Riviere had not spoken of their plans so simply, and both in such profound sorrow for the loss of her mother, Mr. Guthrie would have suspected a clandestine match; but as it was, he only wondered as passed from her lips to their acquaintance, and then dismissed the subject from his mind. On the Friday Mr. Forsyth came down to Drouny with Miss Riviere, and, at her desire, postponed the marriage till Monday. It seemed to Mr. Guthrie that Miss Riviere was perfectly acquainted with the wife of Mr. Forsyth. The love was unquestionably on his side; but she appeared to regard him in the highest possible respect, and to look up to him in all things. Having so recently lost her mother, however, it was natural that the young lady should be anxious to wait as long as might be practicable before contracting this new tie. As the arrangement now stood, Saturday was to perform the ceremony privately at the Chateau de Peyrolles on Monday afternoon, and the happy married pair were to embark on board the American mail steam-packet Washington for New York direct on Tuesday morning. Mr. Guthrie added that he had found himself much interested in Miss Riviere. He had lent her some books, called on her several times, and hoped that he could so alleviate the monotony of her brief sojourn at Drouny as to merit a smile while Mr. Forsyth, through respect for her grief and her solitude, had with much delicacy kept aloof from the Chateau de Peyrolles, and had, in fact, not been down once from Bordeaux since Miss Riviere's arrival there. Mr. Guthrie believed that Mr. Forsyth had since been engaged upon business to Angouleme.

And here the clergyman's testimony ended.

CHAPTER XCIII.

THE CHATEAU DE PEYROLLES.

A TINY white building in the French medieval style, with a pair of eight glistening and tinguisher turrets, a wholly unreasonable number of very small windows, and a wooly courtyard with massive wooden gates, was the Chateau de Peyrolles. The house was white; the palaeios were white; the gates were white. In front of the chateau-gates and ghost-like trellising it would be difficult to find, even in the south of France, a spot upon which the sun fell slight—eminence, it overlooked a wide district of vineyards; and stood islanded, as it were, in the midst of a sea of vine-leaves, which stretched away for miles on every side. Here and there rose a cluster of village roofs, surmounted by a landmark of church-spire; here and there lay peaked roof of some stately chateau; but the village of Drouny was the nearest habitation. A long straight road, bordered on each side by tall poplars, swept through the heart of this district, passing close beside the gates of the Chateau de Peyrolles, and vanishing away into the extreme distance, like an avenue in a perspective drawing.

Along the road these vines heavy with black grapes coming down in most places to the wayside, with trellis-work and thick patch of cornpeas in between—Saxon drove from Bordeaux to Drouny that memorable Sunday afternoon. He had hired a light carriage and four good, spirited horses from his hotel, and so went over the ground at a brilliant pace. The Reverend Angus Guthrie, who had made his afternoon's course of the very briefest, accompanied him. They spoke but little, exchanging now and then a word or two on the coming vintage, or the weather, which had become heavily overcast within the last hour or two, and threatened a storm; but as the road lengthened behind them their observations became fewer, and then altogether ceased.

"This is Drouny," said the clergyman, after a silence of some half-hour's duration.

Saxon started and looked out of the window.

"And that little white building?"

"The Chateau de Peyrolles."

A strange feeling of agitation and reluctance came upon him.

"Now that we come to the point," said he, "I feel like a coward."

"Let me counsel at it," replied Mr. Guthrie; "you have a painful duty before you."

"Still, you do not think she loves him?"

"I do not, indeed."

"I wish to Heaven I could be sure of that!" said Saxon, earnestly; so earnestly that the clergyman looked up at him like a man who is suddenly enlightened.

"In any case, Mr. Trefalden," he replied, "you could only do what you are now doing. Mercy under these circumstances would be cruel injustice. Shall we alight here? Perhaps it would be better than driving up to the chateau."

The postillions had pulled up before the door of the village auberge; so the travelers got out, and went up the private road on foot.

"You said that you would even better from yourself, being a clergyman j'" said Saxon, as Mr. Guthrie rang for admission.

The clergyman shook his head.

"Certainly not. I could only repeat what I have been told; you can tell what you know."

"True."

"But, if you prefer it, I will see Miss Riviere first, and prepare her for your visit."

"Thanks—thanks a thousand times."

An elderly woman opened the door, smiling and courtesying. Mam'selle, she said, was in the grande salon "en pensoire;" so Mr. Guthrie went up, while Saxon waited in a little antechamb on the ground-floor.

He was cruelly nervous. He tried to think what he ought to say, and how he ought to begin; but he could not put the words together in his mind, and when the clergyman came back at the end of ten minutes, it seemed to him as if he had not been there as many seconds.

"I have given her your card," said Mr. Guthrie, "and she says that you are Mr. Forsyth's cousin. Go up to the first landing, and through the door that faces you as you ascend the stairs. I will wait here for you."

He went up, his heart beating painfully against his side; and then he paused a moment outside the door.

"I'd as soon be shot!" he muttered to himself as he turned the handle and went in.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

NOT BEFORE IT'S WANTED.—Two German inventors announce that they have discovered a scheme for making wire without gauges. Now that the gauges are so high, why don't our scientific men find out some way of making wire without wire?

A MUSICAL TURNEPT.—The authorities of a prison in Canada advertise as follows: "Wanted, a respectable man to act as a turnkey and to play the violin." Such an arrangement made, can play the organ, and sing base, would be preferred."

The two kings that rule in America—Jo-king and Smoking. Vive la Republique!

When a cat's mind's perfect he ought and yet have something to do. He is but a cat's paw.

Why is a clock the most modest piece of furniture?—Because it covers its face with its hands and runs down its own work.

Johnny says he always has the headache after misbehave. He thinks he doesn't eat enough of them, and will try not to have the headache next Christmas.

In the Limerick paper an Irish gentleman, whose lady had absconded with him. Was evidently the public against trusting her: "My wife has eloped from me without reyne or reason, and I desire no one to trust her on my account, for I am not married to her."

EPITAPH ON A MISER.

Reader, beware immediate here of pelf!
Here lies the parent of thieves, and himself.

"My dear," said a lady to a wee child, whose hands were filled with painted cuttles which some friend had given it, "throw away those things and wash your face." "But, mamma," responded the child, "if they are not dirty, how can I take out the varnish?"

"THE TUG OF WAR."—A Frigate's Tender.

Why is U the gayest letter in the alphabet?—Because it is always in fun.

Why is matrimony like a besieged city?—Because there is no way to get out, and those who are out want to get in.

A certain deacon being accustomed to move while asleep in church, was heard to say, "I also following polite note." "It soon —is requested not to commence snoring to-morrow until the sermon is begun, as some persons in the neighborhood of his pew would like to hear the first."

No matter how long you have been married, never neglect to court your wife.

A lady, a regular shopper, who had made an unfortunate circumstance over all the stockings in the store, observed that nature was long enough.

"I want," she said, "the longest hose that are made." "Then, madam," was the reply, "you'd better apply to the next engine-house."

It is a lucky thing to have a place in the house—it is good for one.

The following question is being argued in the debating societies throughout the rural districts: "Which is the most distressing, a broken leg or a broken arm?" In most accounts the relatives were away ahead.

A QUESTION OF TURNED HEADS.—How would the negro women look if they used Colgate Hall Wash to dye their woolly heads yellow?

A wide-awake minister, who found his congregation going to sleep and dreaming before he had fairly commenced, suddenly stopped and exclaimed, "Brethren, this isn't right! I'll tell you a man half a chance. Here I am getting along a piece, and then if I ain't wrestling to go to sleep myself! but don't believe I get commanded give a man a chance."

Why are wheat and potatoes like the ideals of old?—Because the former have ears but see not, and hear not, and the latter have eyes but see not.

THE FOPE'S OPINION OF THE FREEMASONS.—More "free" than virtuous.

"Oh, mother, do send for the doctor!" said a little boy of three years. "What for, my dear?" "Why, there's a gentleman in the parlor who says he'll die if John don't marry him—and she says she won't."

What is the difference between a Catholic priest and a Baptist?—One may use candles and the other dips.

It is supposed that the object of the bridal party who lately went up in a balloon from New York was to see the fun downstairs.

A MODEL FIRE.—The seal-in-wax.

A paper in a neighboring city reports that there is a grocer up town who is so mean that he was seen to catch a fly of his counter, hold him by the hind legs, and look in the cracks of his feet to see if he hadn't been stealing some of his best sugar.

Nothing so much destroys our peace of mind as to hear another express an intention to give us a piece of his.

THE WATCH-CRY.—"Take care of your pockets!"

A woman said to a police-court, the other day, that before marriage her husband promised to be total abstinent with her, but now she was every day drunk by him.

CHRISTMAS—GAME AND POULTRY IN WASHINGTON MARKET.

CHRISTMAS—BEEF AND MUTTON IN WASHINGTON MARKET, NEW YORK, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 823.]

PARIS FASHIONS FOR DECEMBER, 1865.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR DECEMBER.

In describing the fashions which are now in vogue in Paris, first let us speak of bonnets, for no article of dress holds greater sway over the female mind. The latest form is that styled the Pamela. The shape is somewhat peculiar, for it is cut short off the cheeks; still, when seen encircling a youthful face, it has a very charming appearance. Like most of the bonnets for the present season, the Pamela has very few ornaments upon it. There may be, perhaps, interspersed among the trimming some small ornaments of either gold or silver, or some gilt or steel chains. One rather pretty example of this style of bonnet should be noticed. It is of black and rose-color velvet, trimmed with merely a few small black feathers, and with black strings. The strings of the Pamela, starting from the bandeaux, encircle, as it were, the cheeks. Another of these bonnets is of violet-color velvet, trimmed with white blonde and a few small silver ornaments. The inside trimming consists usually either of a band of velvet fastened with a gold clasp, a band of silver plait, or else a few folds of velvet with a little bird or two or three pheasant's feathers.—Although the Pamela would seem destined to become the mode, the bonnet styled the Empire is still very generally worn. The material is now invariably of velvet—blue velvet, for instance, and white tulle with a star, which may either be of jet or of silver, on a fold of the curtain, which, by-the-way, is worn extremely short; or blue and black velvet, with a dentelle Cluny bordered with pearls, and with a string of pearls inside: in place of pearls small chains of gold or silver are frequently worn. Empire bonnets are likewise of black velvet, bordered with white plush, and with strings of white moire. It may be remarked, en passant, that moire strings, which are very elegant, bid fair to be the prevailing fashion for winter bonnets with Parisian ladies. They are also of black and violet velvet, trimmed with white tulle, with a short scarf of black lace falling over the chignon, the inside trimming consisting simply of a little humming-bird surrounded by roses.

For morning toilets the robe of foulard silk, which, together with the jupon, is invariably of a dark color—such as black and violet, black and white, black and brown, deep reddish brown, and dark, warm gray—is a good deal worn. These dresses are trimmed with black taffeta, and at times with the dentelle Cluny—a white lace, which is just now much in fashion, and which is used for trimming both dark and light dresses. Cloth dresses are being very generally adopted for walking costume, in preference to knickerbockers and linseys. One novelty has sprung up in Paris within the last few days—a thick woolen stuff of the natural color of the wool. It is admirably adapted for winter wear, and promises to become largely in request.

A PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS IN SYRIA.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

No. 1. Dress of light blue striped tarlan, trimmed with ribbon of a darker shade and thread lace. The jacket is short behind and a short tail behind. The band of ribbon on the style of the Empire, with little cuffs and a small wreath of striped lace.

No. 2. Lavender-color dress, either in silk, linsey, or an other material. The bottom of the skirt is trimmed with the Pancha, and is in green velvet, with cuffs of folds. At the upper part, on one side, is a little bird. The side is a band of silver plait with rosette fixed upon the velvet.

No. 3. Dress of pone-color Pekin satin, with wide black stripes and a plaited flounce. Jacket, Zouave, with black velvet trimmed with fur. Bonnet of black velvet bordered with guipure plaits; energy of the same material.

No. 4. Dress of gray poplin, trimmed with black velvet, buttons, and black silk lace. This dress appears to be extremely simple, the headdress being merely thrown back.

A PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS IN SYRIA.

One engraving on page 829 represents one of those casualties of Eastern life which only a few travelers have witnessed; and yet the locust plays such an important part in many districts, that the consumption, destruction, and even ultimate preservation of the harvests form an ordinary episode in the avocations of the people.

There are several varieties of locusts. That which belongs to Asia, and may be called the migrating locust, differs from the species, in the conformation of the head, the oval form of the eyes, the straight, thin mandibles, and the comparative size of the posterior claws. The male is rather smaller than the female, and of a yellow color.

The insects of this family are one of the most terrible plagues not only of Egypt but of all Asia, the Archipelago, and Oriental Europe. Every two or two months, from Cairo to Damascus, the artist from whose sketch our illustration is taken accompanied a detachment in journey during the season when the locusts are expected; and in the plains of Esdraelon and maritime Phœnicia the scene was unbolded by the swarms which, attracted by the fertile valleys, regarded no obstacle to their passage, but even scaled the faces of the travelers in the fury of hailstones, and lay in thick masses on the road beneath the horses' hoofs.

The locust is regarded by many of the Orientals as a forerunner of war or pestilence, and it is recorded that they had not appeared since the days of Syria for nearly fifteen years when, scarcely a month after their arrival, cholera and typhus reached the whole coast of the Mediterranean and the shores of the Black Sea. The rapacity of the locust is in the larva state in which characteristics it for when one the work of destruction is accomplished the insects die and cover a large extent of country with their decaying carcases, causing pestilential maladies of the worst description.

In the course of the voyage of the travelers with a caravan their party stopped for some days on the slope of a mountain overlooking the plain of Esdraelon; to the left was Mount Tabor and the little Hermon, and afar off the mountains of Samaria, while facing them at the end of the plain could be seen the range of Upper Galilee, the highest peaks lost in the haze; although such was the clearness of the air above the plain that even distant objects could be seen with singular distinctness. The country is a remarkable sound was heard, which resembled the hum of a great sea-shell, and the rays of the sun were obscured by a vast widely-extending cloud of locusts, which broke suddenly above the valley, upon which the insects dropped like a shower, and covered the ground with their yellow bodies, which moved and undulated like foam upon water.

Unless a high wind prevails, and the locusts are driven toward the sea, there is no remedy but to submit to the stripping of every green leaf from the trees, and the utter disappearance of every blade of grass from the earth, which they leave as bare as though it had been scorched with fire. In the valleys the cause of the locusts is effected in a very primitive manner: viz., by the people—men, women, and children—making fires among the dried branches, and wooden drums or boxes, on which they beat, while they sing a sort of monotonous chant of a religious character, at the same time spreading themselves over the plain, in order to drive the insects. It is a singular circumstance to witness this ceremony from a neighboring height, where the gestures and the costumes of the people, and their wild songs, are strangely interesting.

BERNETT'S COCAINE has received universal indorsement. No other preparation possesses the remarkable properties for conditioning and strengthening the hair, and rendering it dark and glossy. It cures baldness and eradicates dandruff. It has stood the test of time and competition.

TO LADY READERS.—An entirely new method of learning French cheaply, quickly, easily, thoroughly, and to speak it fluently in three months, by DR. H. CARLOS, Linguist and Professor of Literature, 229 East Fifty-second Street.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all points occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 66 Broadway. Rates charged for rate.

Holiday Presents.

500,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU WILL RECEIVE.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	Each.
16' Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$125 00
100 Gold Lever Watches	75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
1000 Revolving Castors	$15 00 to 18 00
1000 Drinking-Cups	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Oval and Cased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
1000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
8 00 Maple Spring and Hair Mattresses	8 00 to 15 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 6 00
10 000 Gold Pens, in Ivory Holders	3 00 to 4 00
6 000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons	5 00 to 10 00
5 00 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 24 00
5000 Butter Knives, per pair	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
1000 Other Articles	5 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, the first gift or valuable drawing, sealed in envelopes, and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and delivered or sent by mail, as per chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then send us your money to send what you will take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of 25 cents; three for $1; 11 for $5; 65 for $25; and 100 for $35.

Agents wanted, to whom the most liberal inducements to be given. A splendid Illustrated Catalogue to be sent for circular, which is worth several times, full list, and specimens. Address H. H. VERMILYE & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

ESTABLISHED 1850.

FRANK LESLIE'S

Chimney Corner.

No. 51, just published, contains:

The Senator's Daughter. Illustrated. Chatty Travels. A Story. Illustrated.

The Old Clock Mine. Illustrated.

Sulphides, or Australian Mound-Building Turkey. Illustrated.

Wood's Patent Steam Engine. Illustrated.

Statistics and Singulars. Illustrated.

A Sister's Story. A Sketch.

A Thought of the Sibb. A Poem.

Cleveland Hall. A Story. Illustrated.

Aid Widdersehen.—a Police Adventure. Illustrated.

A Night on the Ice. Illustrated.

A Spanish Landscape. Illustrated.

Ladies' Column. Illustrated. Portrait.

Social Use of the Imagination. An Essay.

Ladies' Column.

A History of Perfumery and the Toilet. Continued.

Ladies' Column.

The Evening of a Rich Tartar's Sabbath. Illustrated.

Modern Egyptian Jewels. Illustrated.

Jems of Art. Illustrations.

Bessie's Dance.

Jems of Art. A Poem.

Concerning the Goose.

Mrs. Partington's Letters—the World before Adam's Time.

The Foxy Prince.—a Fairy Story.

The Three Wishes.

Family Treasures.

The Present of a Box of Trufs. Six Comic Illustrations.

Also a number of other interesting matter. For sale by all News Agents. Price 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4. FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl St., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED.—Wanted, active and intelligent Men or Women to canvass for Benson J. Lossing's "Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." It is a valuable work, selling at sight at a cost of over $50,000, and will be ready for delivery in January. Title-pages and circulars are now ready for use, and the engravings are from original designs by the Author, who has traveled over the battle-fields, and sketched from the ruins of the old forts, and from the most complete and reliable data in the Government archives at Washington, and in the Governors of all the States and the leading officers of the Army and Navy. Liberal terms given to agents in every county. We give our Agents EXCLUSIVE territory to operate and pay a liberal salary. Applications must be made to be sold exclusively by subscription, and will furnish circulars containing full particulars. Address as above. Refers GEORGE W. CHILDS, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW MUSIC.

Come, sing to us again.

"I have heard sweet Music stealing."—Song.

The Humming Thrush. Schubert.

"I love thee."—Song. Composed by Sam Lucas.

I am not sing the Old Songs. Charles Dickens.

Silver Trumpets, played at Rome on Christmas-Day. 50c.

Silver Trumpets, Harmony in the Dome. 50c.

Silver Trumpets, Harmony in the Dome. 50c.

Mailed free. FREDERICK BLUME, 289 Bowery.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy

DR. WM. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Influenza, Whitening, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Pathetic, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.

Dr. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS strikes at the root of disease, and by its wonderful power over the lungs, is frequently relieved by a single dose, and breaks up in a few days the most obstinate cold. The afflicted should not delay, after hearing before they find whether this remedy will afford relief or not.

THIS IS NO FANCIFUL REPRESENTATION, but one which, if the Proprietor DARE SAY IN THOUSANDS, OF CASES, has effected cures in numerous cases where the most skillful physicians had pronounced the case hopeless, have been employed, and have exercised their skill in vain. Cases which they have pronounced incurable, and emaciated BEYOND A SUSPICION BEYOND A DOUBT, leaving the patients without a single ray to enliven them in their gloom, have been cured by Dr. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and the "VICTIMS OF CONSUMPTION" are now as vigorous and strong as the most robust young men. And these cases are not few, but numerous, and well known, and can be pointed out by any community where this great universal remedy has been introduced. Such cases are to be found in almost every household.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. J. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors, Chatham, Conn.

EMBALMING

French process only perfect one of art, and guaranteed. The features by this process become more natural than otherwise. The body never decays. Funeral arrangements perfected and carried out in the most satisfactory manner. Jewelry guaranteed. THOMAS BURGUIN, Embalmer and Furnisher Undertaker, office at residence, Brooklyn and 104 St. Charles Place, entrance on 122 St., N. Y. City.

Recommendations of Corporal Pike:

"HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY IN THE FIELD, "CITY POINT, James River, Va., March 8, 1865.

"THE RECOMMENDATION OF GENERAL GRANT is sufficient to recommend any article. GEN. GORDON GRANT has proved himself a brave and energetic, and I believe honest and reliable officer.

"U. S. GRANT, LIEUT.-GENERAL."

"TRUST THE REAPER.

"MARCH 8, 1865.

"W. T. SHERMAN, Major-General."

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL

THE SCOUT AND RANGER!

By CORPORAL PIKE, of Fourth Ohio Cavalry.

The most Interesting and Best Illustrated Work of the Day, and thoroughly Reliable.

MANY of the officers of the Fourth Ohio Cavalry, and officers of other regiments, have written to us, that there is no sure the publication of this work that they can confide in as being reliable, and that they can recommend to all as the most interest in incidents are fully supported by facts.

Besides being this sure, we can assure the public that they will experience a new sensation in the perusal of Pike's History of the Fourth Ohio, as well as the service during the late rebellion—intensified by the conviction that it is all true—as described by one of our history as it is to the people. It is splendidly embellished with seven fine, well finished, and splendidly executed Steel Engravings, TAGETHER WITH A PATTRIOTIC PORTRAIT OF GEORGE WASHINGTON. Price $2 00. Sample copies will be sent by mail, postage paid, to any address, on receipt of price, and exclusive territory assigned.

FIRST NATIONAL MANUFACTURING AND PUBLISHING CO.

No. 115 William Street, New York.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for $1. Catalogue 25c. Photographs of Rebel Officers 25c. Photographs of Rebel Officers 25c. 100 Photographs of Rebel Officers for $1. Address as for 25 cts. Address G. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

Allcock's Porous Plasters

CURE LUMBAGO, PAINS OF THE SIDE, VARICOSE VEINS, SORE CHEST, &c.

An Electrician, who has had great experience of their effects in local rheumatism, in its dolorous, and deprostrated nervous affections in pains, and in affections of the kidneys, &c., &c., attributes all their subtle, stimulative, and pain-relieving effects to their electric qualities. He asserts that they restore to the healthy electric condition (equilibrium) of the part, and that being restored, pain and morbid action cease.

A LAME BACK.

BRANDRUB HOUSE, NEW YORK, Nov. 29, 1859.

T. ALLCOCK & CO.: Gentlemen,—I lately suffered severely from a lame back and neck. Having heard your Porous Plasters much recommended in cases of this kind, I procured one, and the result was all that I could desire. A single Plaster cured me in a few days.

Yours, respectfully, J. G. BRIGGS.

General Agency, Brandreth House, New York.

Sold by all Dealers in Medicines.

Self-adjusting Patent Steel Collars, Patented May 11, 1858, and Feb. 14, 1865. Are the best and cheapest collars in the world. Every collar is stamped "Patent," "Patent Feb. 14, 1865," and "Sold by first class dealers everywhere." Examine carefully and see that every collar is thus stamped. FALCON & FOWLER, INVENTORS, Patentees and Manufacturers, 71 Nassau Street, N. Y.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

AMERICAN POCKET SHARPENER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most wonderful invention of the age. Can be carried on the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to sharpen any razor made with greater accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price at which it is offered will bring it within the reach of every one. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Every thing, and warranted perfectly accurate; can never get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, white metal case, 50 cents; gold case, $1 00. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION.—The invention is the sole property of the American Sharpening Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering to sell any imitations, under a name, or what ASSUMPTION OF NAME. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, West Troy, N. Y.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Steamship Dispatch-Boats, and all Persons who wish to easily, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular out free. Sheet of Type, Cuts, &c., 25 cents. Address GOLDING & CO., 36 Dark Street, Boston.

Ladies and Gentlemen, use the Patent Fasteners. Sent by mail for 25 cents. G. Weaver, 503 Broadway, N. Y.

ROSE BLUSH—a delicate, natural color for the cheeks; will not wash off or injure the skin; warranted. Mailed for $1 75. Address Geo. Blackie & Co., 751 Broadway, N. Y.

$1,000,000 Worth

Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

160 Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each $125 00
8 00 Silver Watches ..... each $20 00 to 25 00
100,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases ..... " 5 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. The method of disposing of these goods is ONE DOLLAR each, by mail.

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes, and sold at 25 cents each; one envelope will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms and premiums. Address A. J. SCOVILL & CO.,

36 Beekman Street. P. O. Box 4270, New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry, Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of BOSANQUET, GIRARD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened an Agency in the City of New York at No. 37 Maiden Lane, Jewelry, Watches, &c., and for the purpose of making their goods as extensively known and appreciated in the United States as they now are, and have been for over 50 years, in Europe, they will dispose, as a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the advantage of their splendid goods. As a guarantee, they would remark that they manufacture and sell 200 instruments daily of a WATCHING, kind.

All are Warranted Gold of Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant succession of new and tempting articles of purchase with which we shall keep our New York Agency supplied.

We have adopted the plan of sale, now so popular, of charging a uniform price, and this price will be one dollar for each article, whether high or low in value. All the expenses of conducting our New York Agency are paid by the sale of Certificates, or Coupons, representing the various articles. The Certificates are sold at 5 cents each, or five for $1, and each Certificate will state the holder the particular article he or she is entitled to on payment of the additional $1. If the article named in the Certificate is not duly sold, the holder will obtain, when he returns the Certificate, a Watch, Jewelry, or Silver of the same value he or she may prefer, and it will be sent to the person. On sale it is found that the article is distant and will be executed. We select a trial from every one who reads this paper, as we are confident of giving the utmost satisfaction.

THE STOCK COMPRISES:

Among other articles splendid Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings set with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearls, Garnets, and other precious stones; Bracelets, Lockets, Necklaces of Jewelry, comprising Pins and Earrings at the most splendid assortment of Jewelry ever offered to the public, together with a large assortment of Gold, Enameled, and Silver Vinaigrettes, Scent-Boxes and Pencil-Cases, Artificial patterns, Gents' Bosom and Scarf Pins, and an endless variety of Fancy Articles, including Opera-Glasses, Dresses, Cloaks, Canes, &c. In case any of our patrons should wish to purchase Jewelry, and prefer to select for themselves, we will send, for any Certificate returned to us, a richly-engraved Catalogue, with prices attached, from which selection can be made.

AGENTS are wanted in every part of the United States and Territories, to whom all such reasonable facilities will be offered, and, on application, a circular of terms will be forwarded. Any one can send for as many Orders where they can be obtained, or by Bank Draft to our order. All orders and letters must be addressed to, and be conducted by Messrs. JAQUET, STERLING, & CO., 37 Maiden Lane, New York.

I HAVE HEARD IT HIGHLY EXTOLLED, and have seen its wonderful effects," writes Martin M. Johnson, of Cumberland, Md., of DR. GLOVER'S GOLDEN METIC LOTION, the great medicine for the skin.

Sold by Druggists. Depot, 355 Canal St., New York.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret complete. Information wanted to dealers and buyers, and receipts for selling work knowing, will be found in the "Dion or Wonder." For copy send 25 cents to author, DION, Box 1,000, Boston.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TONIC PILLS and Nerve Invigorator Powders. It gives perfect ease and comfort. Elegant Pocket-Case, $1 00. Sold by Druggists. Depot, 355 Canal St., New York.

$4000 Capital required. A well-known N. Y. publishing house will make a private investment in a first-class and good capacity. Address Capitalist, Herald Office, N. Y.

$3 ALBUMS—finely bound—one gilt clasp—for 50 cents; postage, 6 cents (or $2 50 per dozen).

$5 ALBUMS—very handsome—three brass bound—for $1 00; postage, 10 cents. Sheet Music, 2c. per 24 pp. Articles, postcards, Yankee notions of all kinds. Everybody call for catalogue. S. FRENCH, 151 Nassau Street, N. Y.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! FINISH BOOKS! Just received and for sale the largest collection of new, recent second-hand English books. Orders by mail solicited. Catalogue sent free for each of SUNAN & CO.'S, Basement, 79 Nassau Street.

LIFE for the HAIR.

From the high recommendations of our best physicians, combined with the expression of

"Try it and you will like it."

LIFE for the HAIR is a Success.

It is beyond comparison with any other preparation, either in Europe or America, for restoring gray hair to its original color. It imparts to the hair, in both old age and youth, the wish for hair, stops its falling out, keeps the head clean and free from dandruff, and heals any irritation of the scalp. Sold by all druggists. Call at any office in the United States where any information as to the treatment of the hair will be freely given from 1 to 2 P. M.

LIFE for the HAIR. A CHEVALIER, M. D.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

Have Just Published:

RICHARD CORDEN, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade. His Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MORLEY. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

NOTES FROM A BRAZILIAN DIARY: A Narration of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of HENRY WARD BEECHER. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lectures. By A. D. MAYO. Illustrated. A New Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville. By Rev. J. W. Mears, 1864 and 1865. By A. D. AMORY, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

THE STORY OF THE GREAT MARCH: Diary of General Sherman's Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas. By Brevet Major George WARD NICHOLS, Aid-de-Camp to General Sherman. With a Colored Map and numerous Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, uniform, containing Major-General SHERMAN'S Official Report of his Campaign, and Quartermaster and Commissary Reports, &c. Twenty-second Edition. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA: Showing where Petroleum is found; how it is Obtained, and at what Cost. With Hints for those in any way Concern. By WILLIAM WINGATE. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above books by Mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the Price.

Manufacturers' Announcement.

EXTRAORDINARY OPPORTUNITY!

GREAT ONE-PRICE SALE OF

Gold Only Jewelry, Rich Silver-Ware, Watches, Diamonds, Rings, Pianos, &c.,

Including no Brass or so-called Plated Jewelry.

EVERY ARTICLE WARRANTED GOLD.

$2,500,000 WORTH

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT THE ONE AVERAGE PRICE OF

TWO DOLLARS EACH!

Without regard to Value, and not to be Paid for until you know what you will receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES,

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5 Sapphire Grand Piano-Fortes	$800 to	$1200
50 Solid Gold Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to	800
200 Melodeons, for Church use	100 to	250
175 Firebrace Sewing Machines	50 to	150
100 Brownell Medical Boxes, 24 sizes	75 to	500
250 Shotguns	24 "	50 to 100
500 Diamond Rings		50 to 200
500 Gold Hunting-Cased Watches		75 to 200
1,000 Silver Hunting-Cased Watches		50 to 100
1,000 Silver Hunting-Cased Watches		25 to 50
1,000 Gents' Gold Vest Chains		15 to 30
1,000 " Opera Chains, Specials		25 to 100
500 " Sleeve and Collar Buttons		5 to 10
500 " Studs—complete		4 to 10
2,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains		10 to 30
5,000 " Lined Bracelets		5 to 20
5,000 " Chatelain and Guard Chains		12 to 40
2,000 " Solitaire and Sewing Brooches		10 to 30
2,000 " Brooches, Lava and Coral		8 to 25
2,000 " Opal and Enamel		8 to 30
10,000 " Ear-Drops, Jet, Lava, Coral, Mo-saic, Opal, Shell, Emerald Settings		6 to 40
5,000 " California Diamond Breast-pins		6 to 25
2,000 " Solitaire Diamond Breast-pins		10 to 50
2,000 " Thimbles, Pencils, &c		5 to 15
10,000 " La Dell, Pocket Guards		8 to 20
10,000 " Sets of Studs		6 to 10
5,000 " Toothpicks, Cruets, &c		6 to 15
5,000 " Plain Rings		6 to 10
5,000 " Set of Diamond Rings		8 to 25
5,000 " Shield and Signet Rings		8 to 25
10,000 " Mosaic Garnet Rings		6 to 15
10,000 " Fancy Shoe Rings		8 to 25
5,000 " Sets Ladies' Jewelry		25
50,000 Sets Ladies' and Gents' Jewelry, Pearl, Opal, Lava-stud, and Gold-mounted		15 to 75
10,000 Gold Pens, with Gold Holders		10 to 25
5,000 " " with Gold Holders		15 to 25
5,000 " " with Gold and Silver Cases		10 to 20
5,000 Silver Gilletts and Cups—all styles		6 to 12
5,000 " Pencils, with Wire Holders		3 to 10
5,000 " Fruit and Cake Baskets		20 to 50
1,000 " Card Cases		15 to 30
5,000 " Egg Stands		18 to 40
5,000 " Cake Baskets		20 to 50
5,000 " Cakes, Pie, and Fruit Knives		8 to 25
10,000 Sugar Shell and Sugar-spoons		5 to 15
20,000 " " Tablespoons		10 to 25
8,000 " Forks and Knives		15 to 30
1,000 " " Nut-Picks		12 to 20
5,000 Sets Silver Napkin Rings		8 to 20
10,000 Engravings in Rosewood Frames		6 to 10
5,000 " " Gilt Frames		8 to 15
5,000 Large Photographs in Frames		8 to 20
5,000 Sets Gilt Dressing-Cases		20 to 50
5,000 Fine Pearl Pocket-Knives—6 blades		6 to 10
2,000 Fine Pearl Gift Pocket-Knives		10 to 25
5,000 Gold and Gold-headed Canes		15 to 25
15,000 Fine Photographic Albums—splen-did		5 to 25

CALKINS & CO., 658 and 660 Broadway, New York, are the appointed Managers for the Republican Association of Manufacturers, which has been organized with the special object of placing every article manufactured exactly as exacted from the people by jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in their goods, making articles, for which the manufacturer receives on the average but $2, cost the consumer at retail from $6 to $12. Only a few passed through three or four hands. This splendid stock of the leading and best-known-make articles of solid gold and silver, watches, silverware, &c., worth $1,250,000, at retail prices—will be sold by CALKINS & CO., agents of the Republican Association, at $250,000 (manufacturers' cost or an average of $2 for each article), subject to examination before buying.

SEALED ADVERTISEMENTS of the various articles are well printed, and when ordered are taken out under examination, and must be paid without regard to choice, for the articles at $2 each. On receipt of the advertisement you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to send Two Dollars and take the article or not, as you please. Any one obtaining a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, or any article of equal value (and, WARRANTED, you will get every TWO DOLLARS, and they can not get less than three times the value of the money paid for any article at these prices, for they are not blanks; and when not satisfied, the article sold for whatever it may be, can be returned, and the splendid Silver Bitt-Bridle Cluster, luxury plate, valued at $15, or a FIFTY-DOLLAR Watch Premium, will be sent worth $5. Send 25 cents for an envelope.

Lists of the articles with the entire selection of useful remedies and popular ed-ucation, with many dollars.

Persons ordering envelopes will receive them promptly by mail, postage paid, together with the following premium, upon a card for each envelope:

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Solid Gold Scarf-Pin, worth $3; 11 for $2, with a Solid Gold Scarf-Pin or Ring, worth $7; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit-Knife, worth $5; 25 for $4, with a Silver Pencil, worth $6; 35 for $5, with a Gold Pencil, worth $10; 50 for $10, with a Gold Double Watch; 100 for $20, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelopes.

From the Press.

THE GREAT GOLD GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—We desire to endorse every thing and nothing else in the advertisements of the Cosmopolitan Manufacturing Jewelry Association with the "enterprise" so often advertised in daily papers, and which the purchaser finds, upon investigation, to be more a lottery affair, getting up for the purpose of disposing of the big ends of worthless stocks, from the jewelry, and watch establishments in the U. S. We are assured by Messrs. Calkins & Co. but to worth all it is represented, and that the method this well-known agency has imparted to the firm itself is a sufficient guarantee for the responsibility and honorable character of the gift enterprise. We are sure the public would not throw their contributions in this affair, and we add 95 blanks in three, so they may not find the gift away with them to delight evil minds.—Saturday Evening Post, April 1, 1865.

We want agents in every town and county, and in every neighborhood, and to these acting as such will be allowed 10 cents on every envelope ordered by them, provided their remittances amount to one dollar. An envelope will be sent gratis for every envelope, and retail to cents to, either in cash or postage-stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers, Headquarters, 658 and 660 Broadway, New York; or 24 Eagle Street, Albany; Fourth street, St. Louis, Missouri, or 85 and 85 Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

CHRISTMAS GIFT.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE PERFECT TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A beautiful and useful present for the coming Holidays. Correctly constructed on the most approved Scientific principles, and warranted to keep Accurate Time with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. It is of convenient size. It requires to be wound up only ONCE EVERY SIX HOURS, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a remarkable article. Approved by the Press. Just introduced into this country from Europe. Sold by Druggists, Retail Liquor Dealers, Agents, &c. Put in a neat case, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt cases, and sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Orders by express or mail. Safe delivery guaranteed. Beware of lawyers, schemers, and humbugs who will attempt to evade or swindle you out of your money. Buy a watch (with a slight alteration of name) entitled to every premium. Trade supplied. Orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAMERE & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 536-539 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing from one to thirty-six different tunes, and ranging in price from $6 to $600 00. The most complete stock in the United States for sale by NEWMAN & CO., 54 Maiden Lane. Also, Fine ornaments for the parlor, and Choicest cigarettes and tobacco.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents everywhere to sell the Celebrated Lock Stitch Sewing Machine. Three new kinds. Under-a-d super feed. Reversible feed. Only machine making the genuine Shuttle stitch. Only machine sold in the United States for less than $40 which will not rip. Address JOHNSON, CLARK & CO., 343 Broadway, Cincinnati, O., or Boston, Mass. All other cheap machines are infringements.

Wanted, Agents for the Empire Sewing Machine, 505 Broadway, New York; No. 298 Canal-st., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 14 Bromfield-st., Boston, Mass.; No. 170 West Fourth-st., Cincinnati, Ohio; or No. 92 Baltimore-st., Baltimore, Md.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

Popular songs, marches, quicksteps, polkas, schottisches, waltzes, jigs, reels, quadrilles, &c., &c., with words, tunes, and figures, &c., &c.

Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet.

CONTAINS NO. 1 contains 700 tunes. Price $1 25, mailed.
" 2 " 700 " " 1 25 "
" 3 " 800 " " 1 25 "

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Every description at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price-list to HORACE WATERS, 481 Broadway, New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention for which we have letters patent. Or, a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6. Sy'n. L. WYNNE & CO., 160 Nassau-st., New York.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

Marks's Patents, with Rubber Hands and Feet. A Gold Medal was awarded them, as the best, over all others, at the great Fair of the American Institute, 1865. Also, the heavy hand-feet by Government authority. Send for a Pamphlet. MARKS, 629 Broadway, New York.

Immense Holiday Sale

Of watches, diamonds, jewelry, silverware, gold pens, pencils, &c., &c. Call and see them, or send for a $1 price article. Catalogues mailing for these articles or 25 cents for No. 6 or $1 for No. 20. Agents wanted. Gold watch worth $30 to say one ordering 100, or a fine $10 watch for same. Address, with stamp, for circular, terms, and money in the world. J. TOWNSEND & CO., 25 John-st., New York. Box 5,506.

PROCRASTINATION!

Why put off your ears? If you are suffering with the Dropsies, Liver Complaint, or weakness of the Digestive Organs, do not delay, but send to-day for a copy of Hoofland's German Bitters. We positively and unconditionally say that no person can take these Bitters according to them and be poor. For sale by all druggists. They are not a Spirituous Liquor. C. M. HOFFLAND, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York, Agent.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin. Sent by mail, securely sealed, for 75c. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by R. S. UPHAM, 25 Tremont Building, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1335 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

Pimples on the Face

Remove with a Single Application of that Unequaled Remedy, "PIMPLE BANISHER." Mailed to any address for 50c. Sold by druggists. Address, with stamp, J. R. HARRIS & CO., No. 25 COURT LANDS-ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

Consumption Cured.

CIRCULARS SENT FREE to any address. Every family should be in possession of this valuable Recipe. Send your address at once to DR. S. CURTIS, Box 2267, Post-Office, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE FOURTH EXHIBITION

In New York of FRENCH, ENGLISH, and FLEMISH PICTURES, at the Gallery, No. 497 Broadway, is open Monday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 10 at the Stereoscopic Room, No. 15 Twenty-third Street.

E. GAMBART, Director. F. J. PILOTEAU, Sec.

SERPENTS DE PHARAON,

OR,

SERPENT'S EGGS.

The latest scientific whim-wham.

Very pretty and eminently inoffensive little "Jim-crows."

Sent by mail or express.

HILLIER & SAVAGE, 105 Canal St., New York.

Fifty cents a box, post-paid by mail. Liberal Discount to the Trade. AGENTS WANTED.

HOLIDAY PRESENT.

FIRST PREMIUM

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING MACHINE $5

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 16, 1865; Improvement patented June 5, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with its many attachments, is the most powerful and elegantly-constructed Novelty, in SOUNDNESS in operation, DURABILITY, and WORK, ever offered to the public, even with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD OF ALL KINDS. Makes the DOUBLE-STITCH SHUTTLE-STITCH perfect. Regular then by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making SIXTEEN STITCHES to a revolution of the Wheel. Will GATHER, HEM, HEMMER, RUFFLE, SEW, SEW BRAIDING, &c., &c. Is easily learned, and is not liable to get out of order. It has taken the PREMIUM at STATE FAIRS, and received the approval of all the scientific journals and of those who have used it.

The Price-maker is in valuable: for the household it will supply a want plain." —Godey's Ladies' Book.

"We single it double thread, it silently put very rapidly, with a noiseless motion, makes the running stitch exactly like hand-sewing."—Scientific American.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Sight delivery guaranteed. Send stamp for circular. Agents wanted, to whom liberal inducements, rent free.

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

Office 102 NASSAU STREET, New York.

S—T—1860—X.

Drake's Plantation Bitters.

They purify, strengthen, and invigorate.

They create a healthy appetite.

They are an antidote to change of water and diet.

They cure nine cases of dyspepsia in every dozen cases.

They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.

They prevent miasmatic and malarious diseases.

They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.

They are a sure cure for consumption.

They cure diarrhœa, cholera, and cholera-morbus.

They are the best tonic and most delightful.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are unlimited nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, Gentian, and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. They are recommended by physicians and clergymen as a genuine stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels, Saloons, &c. Be careful when you call for them and see the private U. S. stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

F. H. DRAKE & CO.,

81 Park Row, New York.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HORNER PREMIUM, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to-day, the last great Fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE over all competitors for the best instruments.

"The first premium of $100 is awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM & CO. for the best Reed Instrument, Melodeon or Cabinet Organ, exhibited at the Fair."—Tribune, October 11.

"I am speak of them in the highest terms."—G. WASHINGTON.

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEN. ERNEST HOWARD.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.

"We have pronounced them the best instrument of any similar instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM & CO.,

No. 97 East Twenty-third st., New York.

English Magazines, Periodicals, and Newspapers.

WILLIAM & ROGERS, 20 Nassau-st., N. Y. (established 1841), supply on subscription every Magazine, Periodical, and Newspaper published in Great Britain or on the Continent of Europe. Price-List for 1866 now ready.

In these cases of scanty, retarded growth the genius of Spencer's Pulmonic Balsam of Tasmanian Honey stands his best friend to excite the blood. Measles, &c., by its use, are robbed of their terrors. (Sold by all druggists.) The History and a small sample of this Balsam sent to any one on receipt of stamp. address JOHN RAWLINS, 8 Broadway, New York.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own Homes. Thousands can realize a hundred dollars weekly. No capital required except the time found in every household. Profits 100 per cent. Business new. Particulars sent free. Secure a valuable discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of 3 letter stamps. Address HOPKINS & BROWN, 611 Broadway, New York.

Make your own Soap

WITH B. T. BABBITT'S

Pure Concentrated Potash,

OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other manufactured for the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, and 10 pounds, with full directions for making a kettle of soap in making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 pounds of Hard Soap, or 20 pounds of Soft Soap. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,

64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

Pile Remedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. Price $1. Gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to relieve Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

$6 HOLIDAY $8 WATCHES.

An extensive variety of superior watches for Ladies or Gentlemen, specially adapted for Christmas presents.

A beautiful double-case Silver Watch, small size, excellent timekeeper, with chain, key, and gold locket to match, sent to any part of the country on receipt of $6.

An elegant gold-plated engraved double-case Watch, fine timekeeper, with chain, key, &c., to match, sent to any part of the country on receipt of $8.

IMPERIAL WATCHES, with Independent Compass, Calendar, Alarm, Thermometer, Seconds, Repeater, Centre-motion, beat, and time indicator. A variation of $300 and upward. Sent by express or &c., $40, $50, $60, $70, $80, $90, $100.

Fine double hunting-case 4-jd-plated Watch, $12 each. Silver hunting Lepine, $15. English silver Lepine, $20 each. English Duplex, rich movements, gold engraved and jewelled, warranted and finished equal to gold-case, $25, $35, $40. Gold and silver watches of every description. Catalogues sent free. Orders by express or mail promptly executed. Address orders, CATELL, BROTHERS, Importers, 102 Nassau St., New York. Established 1852.

BUSINESS FOR YOU!

Positively a Money-Making Occupation!

Now! Now!—Now! Now!—Highly-Beautiful!—Entirely Popular!—Ready-Steady-Immediate!—Fifty Cents!—Is no Traveling!—Can be done at Home!—A Few Cents will Start it!—SUCCESS PROMISED!—Fine Chance for Active Men, Women, Boys, and Girls—and Everybody.—Ignite Cents for Circulars, Containing Particulars, and a "Prize Certificate," which NAMES YOUR PRIZE. Address

THE FRANKLIN PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Box 1498, Philadelphia, Pa.

Offices, Fifth and Chestnut Streets.

27 Ectrons giving the above 5 or more insertions—In Weekly issue—before it's and 2's, set up in cogs and ladies as per copy—sending one proof—to the Publication office—a copy of the CRAFT, and a SPECIAL PRESENT, which will be duly rewarded them for the extra trouble to those who help us.

Franklin Pub. Co.

Youth and Beauty Restored

To the grey-headed by the use of Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.

DEMAS BARNES & CO., N.Y., General Agents.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY, 1866.

CONTENTS:

WINTER.

With Two Illustrations.

THE BRITISH ROUTE FOR A PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Illustrations: Victoria Bridge—Montreal—Rocky Mountains—Night Camp; Watchdog for Cover—The Winter Line—Fort Edmonton—Mouth of the Saskatchewan.—Swamp formed by Beavers, with Ancient Home and Modern Dam—Cutting up Buffalo—Often triumphantly crosses the River.—The Assiniboine Valley—Lower Fraser—Mr Mountenance of the Pacific Railroad.

A DAY AT TRENTON FALLS.

With an Illustration.

MORE VERSES.

The Winners who crowned Anastasius at Court.—The "Medical Student."—The Writer who sweet Thee Back Without a Sigh.—The Actual Sufferer.—The Belligerent Widow.—Young Lady whose Affections have been Trifled with.—Young Gentleman who Stood with Reason.

THE HOLIDAYS.—CHRISTMAS TO NEW-YEAR'S EVE.

AN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIR.

FIVE MINUTES LATE.

With an Illustration.

ARMADALE. By WILKIE COLLINS.

Book the Fifth.

CHAPTER X. Miss Gwilyn Diary.

CHAPTER XI. Mischief to the Flounder.

FATTED WORDS.

SHORT AND SHOTS.

A NEW ENGLAND TRAGEDY.

LOVE'S ROADS LEAD TO ROME.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS.

THE CUSS OF IDLE.

MONTHLY MIGRATIONS AND SOJOURNINGS IN MUDDY.

RECOLLECTIONS OF LORD PALMERSTON.

With a Portrait.

THE WORLD OF SCIENCE.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

LITERARY NOTICES.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $3 00 each; or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of Brief-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following rates: Each line, nonpareil type, each insertion, 25c.; agate type, 50c.; minion type, 62½c. Advertisements to be paid for in advance. Circulation of the Magazine is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00

One Copy for Six Months 2 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five at $3 00 each; or 6 Copies for $20 00. Postmasters considered as agents.

THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent by express at the risk of the owner, for $2 00 each, free of freight.

Cloth Cases for preserving Volumes 1 00

Title and Index to each Volume 10 00

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

Terms to Advertisers.—One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE GREAT FENIAN FIGHT.

How are you, "Harp of Erin?"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York.
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies

For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS

FOLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 602 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions, Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

THE
VEST POCKET
PISTOL,
WEIGHING ONLY 3½ OUNCES;
USING METALLIC CARTRIDGE,
SIZE No. 22.
MANUFACTURED BY
E. REMINGTON & SONS, ILION, N. Y.
 Sold by Gun-Dealers and the Trade generally.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with these set forth in the United States Dispensatory:

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED
EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract
Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks

Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.

It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Ladies and Gentlemen
Residing out of the City should send for our
MEASURING CARD,
And take their own measure, and we will send them a PERFECT FIT.

Boot & Shoe Emporium,
575 Broadway, N. Y. E. A. BROOKS, Agent.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N.B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR

The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

It made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Unique," "Bows," &c., in place on the Scarf.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR

This Collar, showing a space for the gravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., Agents,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
HOWES BROTHERS ..... Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOOMIS & BRO. ..... Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYES & HANCH ..... Cleveland, Ohio.
LAMMERZ & CO. ..... Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CAPEN ..... 955 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. PATTERSON ..... 7 Penn St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BURNHAM & CO. ..... Detroit, Michigan.

Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. C. BATES, 277 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SCHILBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for Piles, Old Wounds, Scrofula, Salt Rheum—all Blood and Skin Diseases, &c. 99 Howery, New York.

DEAFNESS
And Discharges from the Ear Radically Cured
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract

OTTINE.

Price $1.50 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists. WEEKS & POTTER, Druggists, No. 170 Washington St., Wholesale Agents.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

JEFFERS,
No. 573 BROADWAY.
THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE
Ladies' Good Boots and Shoes,
Also Gentlemen's Embroidered Slippers,
CAN BE HAD AT LOW PRICES.

DECEMBER, 1865.

Closing-out Sale
AT Reduced Prices.

From this date an abatement of 20 Per Cent.
Will be made on the whole of our unbroken
Assortment of Winter Clothing
FOR MEN AND BOYS,
In both the
CUSTOM AND READY-MADE
DEPARTMENT.

DEVLIN & CO.,
BROADWAY, CORNER OF GRAND ST.
BROADWAY, CORNER OF WARREN ST.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment are the surest and safest medicines yet offered to the public. They have effected more real blessings in the nursery, sick chamber, and hospital, than the combined action of all the Apothecaries' Drugs. For the cure of scalds, burns, bruises, and skin diseases the Ointment is unrivalled, while the Pills are a sure antidote to dyspepsia, &c.

To Consumptives.
The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.
To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he considers to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address
REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Revolver exceeds all others for compactness, effectiveness, durability, power, and safety in carrying. Is light (14 oz.), small (only 7 in.), with larger metallic cartridge and more powerful charge (40 to 60 grains of powder) made of same size and weight. Send for circular. GEO. A. HICKOK, 84 Cliff street, New York.

MELNECVAVI
For the Mouth, Teeth, Gums, and Breath.
MERRY
BURLEIGH & HUGHES, Wholesale Agents.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GIRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—where Even might have been spared, had they used VAN DERBURGH'S VERMIFUGE COMFITS. Children are not fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DERBURGH BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH!
TWO PRIZES AT ONCE.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL
JUST AWARDED BY THE
AMERICAN INSTITUTE
FOR SUPERIOR
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS.
OVER ALL COMPETITION. TO
GEORGE STECK & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS,
118 AND 115 WALKER STREET, NEW YORK.

BROWNE & SPAULDING,
JEWELERS,
METROPOLITAN HOTEL BUILDING,
570 BROADWAY.
FINE WATCHES AND RICH JEWELRY of PARIS DESIGNS.
CLOCKS, BRONZES, and FANCY GOODS of LATEST IMPORTATIONS, and well adapted for HOLIDAY GIFTS.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

50 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with terms for any one to clear $25 daily, in 3 hours.
W. H. CHIDESTER & CO.,
No. 75 Nassau Street, New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN HAIR-DYE.
Upon the receipt of $1 I will send a recipe for making Hair-Dye, by which any person can dye his or her own hair, at a very trifling cost. Also Indelible Writing Ink for marking clothes. Can be made and used by any one, and is superior to any dye or ink known. Address
F. A. PITCHER,
Box 856, Philadelphia, Penn.

LARGE PROFITS can be made by active men in the Small Same Plan Business. Complete outfits of tools and stock furnished by M. J. MICHAUX & SON, 101 Union Street, Boston. Send for Price-List.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

A UNION SOLDIER'S DISCOVERY.—Send $1 to WILLIS & CO., Alamo, Indiana, and receive by return mail a valuable receipt, warranted to cure dysentery and chronic diarrhœa without the aid of doctor or medicine.

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to six weeks, by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, Post-Office Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

BEAUTY.—Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of PROF. DE BREUX'S FRISEE LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex in ringlets or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Has been in use for the last 3 years by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, P. O. Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

Wanted, Agents Everywhere,
To canvass for MACKENZIE'S GREAT 10,000 FAMILY CYCLOPEDIA. Send for circular and terms to T. ELLWOOD ZELL, Publisher, 17 and 19 South 6th St., Philadelphia.

EMPLOYMENT.
Let every man in the United States who has lost either an arm or leg address 25 cents for sample to A. F. BELCHER, Box 45, Philadelphia, Pa.

CATALOGUE of LANGENHEIM'S
Maple Leaves Fine Cut Chewing Tobacco.
W. LANGENHEIM, Philadelphia.

MUSICAL BOXES.
See Advertisement on Page 831.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not bearing this trade mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction if properly put on. Office of the Company, 96 Chambers Street, New York.